Mr. Coyle: Then we are going to have to have a lot more evidence come in here on competition between the two firms. I don't know, you have to—if you strike out Paragraph XLVI and let them introduce other evidence, I think we are going to lose our stipulation on the section of the country, too, and we are going to end up as proving, trying to prove or proving that either the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is the section of the country or, in the alternative——

The Court: I think that would be—if you can stipulate to that now, I think you can stipulate to that.

Mr. Coyle: This is part of the stipulation, I think that this flows from the stipulation.

The Court: Well, I don't know whether it does or not. But I can't see how you can preclude that evidence. I don't know how I can preclude that evidence.

[fol. 1745] Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, these concerns advertise throughout the area, each of them sought new sites for new stores throughout the area.

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

The Court: Counsel, first of all the general statement that they are competing in the same area is a general statement.

The Court: And it is true. And I think you have agreed that there is generally the competition in this area, to-wit, the Metropolitan Area, among all of these defendants.

Mr. Alsup: Generally, yes.

The Court: But then you want to come down and prove that as between the two defendants that there is so much competition actually between the two defendants.

Mr. Alsup: On the retail store level.

The Court: On the retail store level, that's right.

Mr. Coyle: I don't see the relevance in that——

The Court: Well, suppose I rule against you then, then it will have to go in.

Mr. Coyle: I don't see what relevance counsel claims for that evidence, unless he is really trying to prove that they don't compete with each other in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, I don't see what else that would be directed toward.

[fol. 1746] The Court: Well, I think that I am going—I am afraid that that evidence should go in, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Well, that may be, but——

The Court: I am not saying it is determinative of the case. But I am just saying——

Mr. Coyle: I don't see the relevance, your Honor, unless you are going to strike Paragraph XLVI, and probably strike the paragraph relating to the line of commerce and section of the country.

The Court: Well, is it necessary to strike the line of commerce?

Mr. Coyle: And section of the country?

The Court: I wouldn't think the line of commerce was involved at all here. There is no dispute about the line of commerce being groceries, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That's right, I meant the section of the country.

The Court: Well, you are over-complicating a simple situation.

Mr. Coyle: I think——

The Court: Well, I think you had better think it over tonight and see if you can't resolve it. If you can't, I will resolve it.

But I will again re-read the Brown Shoe case.

And I thought, I was under the impression that that [fol. 1747] type of evidence was in the case.

Mr. Coyle: It was in the case because we didn't have a stipulation as to the section of the country, that is why we had to exclude each section of the country. Once you prove the section of the country that these firms are competing with each other in that section of the country, then you don't have to——

The Court: I understand, counsel. You have covered it. But if the stipulation was a mistake on the part of counsel, this is to remedy a mistake. This is nothing more than I would do for you.

Mr. Coyle: I have no quarrel with the court's power to remedy a mistake and I think we should——

The Court: The question is how to do it, how to do it.

Mr. Coyle: That is right, how to do it and not delay the trial.

The Court: That's right, yes.

Now, would you state, Mr. Coyle, that—suppose the evidence showed that there was absolutely no direct competition at all—I am just, for the purpose of argument, I am saying this, as between Shopping Bag and Von's, not one competitive area as between them. Would you say that was important evidence?

Mr. Coyle: I would say without these stipulations [fol. 1748] it might be important evidence.

The Court: Well, that is just the point exactly. Now we finally brought it down to the crux. That is the point.

Mr. Coyle: It might be, I wouldn't necessarily——

The Court: It might or might not.

Mr. Coyle: It might or might not. If the other side were putting evidence of that type in and taking the position that it were important, I would want to have the privilege to meet that.

The Court: Well, I wonder if we took an adjournment now and you gentlement got together, if you can't work this out.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: Do you suppose you can?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know.

The Court: You can at least try, can't you?

Mr. Alsup: Certainly, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I am disposed—gentlemen, I want to say again when I read that paragraph over, that I was concerned about it, not from one side or the other, because in reading the briefs they seemed to run a little bit contrary to my interpretation of Paragraph XLVI.

Mr. Alsup: I hope, your Honor, I would never agree that a store in Santa Monica competes with a store in [fol. 1749] Lancaster.

The Court: Well, I think you and I, Mr. Coyle, say that he has agreed to that, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: He has agreed that the chains competed down there.

The Court: Including the two defendants.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, competed intensively.

The Court: Intensively with each other. Now that can't mean but one thing to me, it is just plain old mid-Victorian English. It means that he stipulated that Von's and Shopping Bag were competing store by store with each other. That is in effect what it amounts to.

Mr. Coyle: Enough of them were competing——

Mr. Alsup: What it meant to me, your Honor, was that where they did compete, they competed vigorously or intensively. It does not mean that they competed extensively.

I draw the distinction between intense, which to me means vigorous, and extensive, which means all-embracing.

The Court: Well, it is really a difficult thing to understand, counsel, and I am afraid that whichever way the higher court ultimately rules on that, you would like it to be final, you wouldn't want to have to send it back for further hearing.

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor.

The Court: So I suggest you gentlemen go out now [fol. 1750] and have a conference and see if you can't work this out.

In the interest of justice, I will certainly permit an amendment. I hope you can do it so that you won't have to call too many witnesses.

If you can't, I may have to strike it and try that issue.

Keep in mind, Mr. Coyle, that nobody is questioning the line of commerce. That is not involved.

Mr. Coyle: No, but the section——

The Court: The line of commerce has been stipulated.

Mr. Coyle: The section of the country I am afraid might be in question.

The Court: I don't think so, I don't think it is. I think counsel will still stipulate with you that section or the area—whatever you want to call it—the section is the Metropolitan Area of Los Angeles, the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and that as a whole all grocers are in competition with each other.

But that does not connote that they are in competition, squared off Shopping Bag against Von's.

I think you can work out a stipulation that will take care of it, and limit us to hearing that evidence, for whatever value it may have, whatever it may be worth—I don't know at the present time what value it will have. It [fol. 1751] seems to me you can work that out.

So if it is satisfactory now, we will take an adjournment.

Mr. Coyle: Fine.

The Court: And you can see what you can do.

Mr. Alsup: Fine, your Honor. Thank you.

The Court: Be prepared tomorrow to go on.

If you have difficulty, I will just say this, in the last resort I will probably have to just take that out of the pretrial order and go on with the trial.

Mr. Coyle: I will talk to counsel, your Honor.

The Court: I am sure you gentlemen—you are both, I take it you admit you can be termed experts in this line of endeavor.

Mr. Coyle: Mr. Alsup does, your Honor; I am still a layman.

The Court: An expert certainly should be able to resolve a simple matter.

Mr. Alsup: I think it is remarkable, your Honor, how many things we did agree on.

The Court: I think you have done a splendid job, counsel. And I say again no criticism is intended whatsoever as against either one of you. I can easily see how this misunderstanding could occur.

And I may be in error in the way I read this par- [fol. 1752] ticular paragraph.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor——

The Court: But since counsel for the government takes the same position, it may be that we are right.

Mr. Alsup: That is the reason I move to amend, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Alsup: While I didn't read it that way, I want to protect myself.

The Court: All right. We will stand in recess until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow.

(Whereupon, at 4:30 p.m., Tuesday, June 11, 1963, court was in recess until 10:00 o'clock a.m., Wednesday, June 12, 1963.)

COLLOQUY BETWEEN COURT AND COUNSEL

The Clerk: Case No. 336-60, United States of America vs. Von's Grocery for further court trial.

The Court: All right, gentlemen. Did you work out the problem?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, we didn't work it out.

The Court: All right. I will settle it. I will allow testimony on this score. I won't waste any more time, it is a waste of patience and time. I will allow testimony.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I made a motion for an amendment of that paragraph. May that motion be granted?

The Court: Well, I can't make counsel stipulate to that. I am not permitted to do that, but I guess when you get to the Supreme Court they can make findings that are final.

But they certainly did allow testimony in that case as to the competition between the—at least it indicates to me which would be between the individual defendants—and in this case between Von's and Shopping Bag.

Now whether it is persuasive in the case or not, that is another matter. But I will allow testimony on it.

If you have got affidavits in the file, all you have to do is, you have put in evidence already on it, the both of you.

[fol. 1757] Mr. Alsup: That's right.

The Court: So I don't know what I can do about the pretrial order, I suppose just strike that paragraph, I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, the pretrial order, in paragraph 6 of the pretrial order, it has been admitted that they were competing.

The Court: Well, can't I allow them to amend their answer at this stage?

Mr. Coyle: I am not saying anything, but I just point that out.

The Court: Well, I am not going to exclude testimony, if they want to offer it. They have already offered it, as a matter of fact, on the question of whether or not there was —what the words "intensive" and "extensive" mean, only the dictionary knows, as far as I am concerned, in a case of this type. I don't know what it means. "Intensively," can you tell me what it means?

Mr. Coyle: I said strong yesterday.

The Court: Yes, but what does extensive mean?

Mr. Coyle: It means strong.

The Court: Well, what does intensive mean?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what intensive means if it doesn't mean strong.

[fol. 1758] The Court: Intensive means penetrating. Extensive means broad.

So I suppose intensive penetration can kill you as quick as extensive, in competitive fights.

So I am going to allow testimony. The answer, you say, admits that?

Mrs. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: What paragraph?

Mr. Coyle: Paragraph 6.

The Court: Will you find it for me, Mr. Clerk.

What is the date of filing, I can find it quickly then.

Mr. Alsup: There was an amended answer—I have a copy of it.

The Court: All right, lend it to me, will you, please.

The Clerk: This may be either the amended or the unamended paragraph 6, is it?

The Court: It is the original answer, this is the answer to the complaint.

The Clerk: Yes, I have the copy here too.

The Court: Well, this just says—you say paragraph 6?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: That apparently is—it says "The defendant [fol. 1759] is without knowledge or information"—

Mr. Coyle: Read the last sentence, your Honor.

The Court: The last sentence.

Mr. Coyle: The last three lines.

The Court: You do, counsel, you admit it in your answer.

Mr. Alsup: I admit intensive competition, your Honor, and where there is competition we say it was intense.

The Court: Well, I don't know what intensive means. What does it mean?

Mr. Alsup: It meant vigorous to me, your Honor.

The Court: What?

Mr. Alsup: It meant, where they did compete they competed vigorously.

The Court: Where they did compete, but you don't say that, do you?

Mr. Alsup: Well, your Honor, consistently throughout this case, in our statement of facts and contentions of fact and law filed after that, in our preparation of our exhibits, we had always intended to show that there was a little overlap between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores——

The Court: I understand that there was some competition in certain areas, directly and specifically. But I thought you wanted to offer, and have offered testimony that in some areas there was no competition between these two [fol. 1760] groups.

Mr. Alsup: That's right, they weren't located near enough to serve the same customers.

The Court: But counsel has taken the position that you have precluded yourself on that issue. Isn't that your position?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Well, what do you want to do?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, as I indicated yesterday I would like to—I move to amend paragraph XLVI of the pretrial order. I think——

The Court: How can you do that with your answer standing the way it is?

Mr. Alsup: The pretrial order, your Honor, supplements the answer.

The Court: It supplements the pleading, yes, that is true.

Mr. Alsup: It would only be to supplement, to point out——

The Court: How do you want to amend it?

Mr. Alsup: I would amend it by adding, your Honor, that the defendants contend there were a few Shopping Bag stores located where they could compete with Von's stores.

The Court: Is that different from the language you gave me yesterday?

[fol. 1761] Mr. Alsup: I gave you some language——

The Court: You said yesterday "But defendants contend that there were not—" Wait a minute, I wrote it out very hurriedly—"Defendants contend that there was not substantial competition between Von's and Shopping Bag as such—" I wouldn't permit that because that is too general and it doesn't state, I think counsel is right on that score, that is too—why don't you put it down to what the facts are, that in some cases there was competition between the stores and in other cases there was not.

Mr. Alsup: I think that is a very good statement of it, your Honor.

The Court: There is always a simple way to do a complicated thing.

You object to that, do you?

Mr. Coyle: I object to amending the pretrial conference order, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I am overruling you now, here and now. It is going to be amended.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, may I ask Mr. Vaughn to prepare some specific language and submit it?

The Court: Well, this comes under the stipulated facts, doesn't it? So it will have to come out of there. I can't amend stipulated facts. Isn't this under the admitted facts?

[fol. 1762] Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I can't do anything about that. So we will just do this—paragraph XLVI——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor suggested yesterday some very good language——

The Court: No, I am going to change it. I am going to come back within the line of the language of the Supreme Court, that they competed generally in the section—what do you call it?

Mr. Alsup: Within the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

The Court: Within the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and then—in other words, that there is a general competitive situation in the entire area period.

Mr. Alsup: But that evidence as to particular competition between particular Von's and Shopping Bag——

The Court: I am going to allow it, I am going to allow it. You have already put it in.

Now how much weight it will have I don't know, I don't know how much weight it will have because the ultimate decision is: May there be a substantial lessening of competition? That is the sole issue.

So we will just strike out—if counsel objects I will just strike the entire paragraph.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object to amending [fol. 1763] the pretrial conference order.

The Court: I have overruled you. You might just as well give that up, counsel. You have been overruled on that. It is going to be amended.

Mr. Coyle: My position is clear——

The Court: All right. Then you don't care to participate any further, you are just making an objection, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Then we will take over and we will do it without your help and assistance.

We will let it stand—in fact I will strike out the whole of XLVI, since counsel will not agree to it. I was going to have it read that: "In 1958 the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area, including the two defendants in this action, competed intensively in the general—in this particular trade area," in other words.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I would agree to that.

The Court: I thought you were not agreeing.

Mr. Coyle: I hadn't heard the language, your Honor. I would agree to that.

The Court: All right. Now let's see if we have it.

We strike out the words "with each other and with other grocers and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and—" through the word "and."

[fol. 1764] So it will be "competed intensively in the retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area."

Now do you agree with that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Let me look this over, your Honor.

The Court: You had better write it out because I don't want to take advantage of you. But time is beginning to waste.

Mr. Coyle: "In 1958 the 20 leading chain supermarkets in the Los Angeles area, including the two defendants in this action, competed intensively," striking out "with each other."

The Court: "And with other grocers and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and—" through the word "and" and I am putting in "retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area."

Mr. Coyle: "In the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products."

The Court: Do you want me to leave that in?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right, I will do that. So we will strike out then——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, that would create confusion if that were done because the words "purchase, distribution and retail sales" used in this paragraph XLVI modify [fol. 1765] "grocers and firms."

The Court: I don't see that it makes any difference. The sole question here is, on the horizontal level what happens to the competition, isn't that right? We are not concerned about what happens on the purchase of groceries in other states or how it affected other people, is that correct?

We are concerned solely with the question of a horizontal competitive situation. Is that the issue in the case?

Mr. Alsup: That is the issue in the case.

The Court: Is that right, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Then what difference does it make?

Mr. Alsup: No difference, your Honor, so long as this evidence is to the extent of overlap, if any is admissible.

The Court: Well, they had to purchase to sell.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So I am going to leave it that way, counsel. Now are we in agreement now?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I don't want to push you into an agreement if you don't agree, gentlemen.

So it will now read, paragraph XLVI of the pretrial [fol. 1766] order now reads:

> "In 1958 the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area, including the two defendants in this action, competed intensively in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area."

Once again, is that satisfactory?

Mr. Alsup: May I take a moment, your Honor?

That is very satisfactory, your Honor, since counsel has agreed that the competition he is talking about is on the horizontal retail level, actually as you know——

The Court: Well, that is going to be the decision of the court on what the horizontal situation is. That is what I have to decide and that is what it is going to be.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. As you know, we have contended the relevant section of the country as to the purchase of groceries and related products is not the Los Angeles area. It has to be nationwide.

The Court: Well, that is what you gentlemen call peripheral, is it not? Is it not, or is it?

Mr. Coyle: I call it peripheral.

The Court: Well, it is an admitted fact in the pretrial order that they are engaged in interstate commerce. There is no question about that. All of these matters have to do with commerce you are agreed upon.

[fol. 1767] Mr. Alsup: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: So I have no problem about finding the interstate commerce feature.

It is solely a question of whether or not there may be a substantial lessening of competition. That is the whole issue in the case, as I see it.

Mr. Alsup: We have taken the position, your Honor, that suppliers are not in the case, because the purchase, being nationwide, the relevant market under this Temple Electric case decided a year ago is nationwide, I think we are in complete agreement on that.

The Court: Are you in agreement, Mr. Coyle? Is that agreeable?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think we should add two words there, "competed intensively among themselves."

The Court: No, I won't do it. You put it back right where it was. You really must think the court is naïve.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, but I don't know what it means to say——

The Court: I am just telling you my ruling is simply going to be, counsel, that I am going to allow this evidence. If you object to it it is already in—it will be in—I am going to allow the evidence as to what the competitive situation was between Von's and Shopping Bag.

[fol. 1768] Now what persuasion it will have in the case I don't know. But I am going to allow it in evidence.

Mr. Coyle: I understand that, your Honor, but I was just wondering about this one stipulation, the way you changed it now, does this mean that these chains competed among themselves?

The Court: It means—counsel, to me it means simply that everybody in this area, in the metropolitan area were competing in this line of commerce. That is what it means to me, generally competitive.

In other words, if Von's closed down in all the spots that it had, I assume Safeway or somebody else would immediately move over into that area, somebody would. In other words, there is a general competitive situation throughout the country.

Mr. Coyle: Could we put the word "generally" in there then?

The Court: Well, I will be glad to do that. That doesn't help you at all, that weakens your situation. Is that what you want?

Mr. Coyle: All right. We will leave it the way it is.

The Court: All right.

Will you prepare—since you are the one that created the problem, Mr. Alsup, prepare a written order with [fol. 1769] that amendment.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right, gentlemen.

Now let's proceed. And I expect you to have your witnesses here ready to go, because there are no adjournments in this court because of absent witnesses. I have learned long ago that you can't let the lawyers look at the clock and say, well, your Honor, I ran out of witnesses so we will have to adjourn.

So we don't adjourn. Proceed.

The Clerk: Your Honor, I have concluded marking the defendants' exhibits.

I have marked Defendants' Exhibits A to Z inclusive, and AA to AW inclusive, except that counsel informs me that Exhibit No. AH will not be offered or used.

(The exhibits referred to were marked Defendants' Exhibits A to Z, AA to AW inclusive for identification.)

The Court: Do you want to offer them now, counsel, at this time, or do you want to wait until your case, how do you want to do it?

Mr. Alsup: However your Honor prefers.

The Court: Whatever suits you gentlemen, it is all right with me.

Mr. Alsup: I gather Mr. Coyle——

[fol. 1770] The Court: I take it that a motion—you of course, you may have a motion at the end of the plaintiff's case, I don't know.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, normally I would, your Honor, I want a complete record.

The Court: Well, maybe we had better do it that way then.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I transgressed a great deal yesterday on the court's time. I hope——

The Court: No, you didn't, you didn't trespass. We accomplished a great deal.

At least we found one problem in the pretrial order and I think we have solved that.

And I re-read the case again last night and I am tempted to disagree with both of you on some of the things in the case, and to agree with both of you.

I think the case, the Brown Shoe case on the facts, on the holding is very far reaching. But it doesn't cover the facts in this case.

Mr. Alsup: That is true, your Honor.

The Court: So the principles do cover this case, but there is a vital difference in that case and the thread or the theme running through even the horizontal case. To me it appears to be that the court could never get out of its mind the fact that this was a broad, national situation where the [fol. 1771] vertical was causing a great damage, and with it the court even says in one place here, the size, the national size of it.

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Apparently would affect the horizontal situation.

So the area really, while they were considering cities of 10,000 and their adjacent vicinities, they were really considering it, in my opinion, on the holding on the whole national setup. That is what it amounted to, despite the finding that they talk about.

And I am amused at parts of it about samples. Apparently you can come to conclusions that because a situation existed in St. Louis it would exist in Milwaukee also, I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I believe they had 24 cities.

The Court: Yes, but the court plainly said that in some of the cities there was no evidence. And I was just wondering—I notice I marked one finding by the court that was rather amusing to me who has been trained in the old school of findings, and that was that—if I can find it, here is the finding at 340 by the Supreme Court which says:

> "* * * Each competitor within a given market is equally affected by these factors, even though the city in which it does business may differ from St. Louis in [fol. 1772] size—" and et cetera.

There is just a finding out of the clear blue sky.

But it is the Supreme Court.

And incidentally, before I leave the case I might say that I re-read again very carefully this portion of the decision which lists some of the factors to be considered under the horizontal aspects of a merger.

And that was, it says on page 334:

> "* * * Thus its validity in the face of the anti-trust laws will depend upon such factors as the relative size and number of the parties to the arrangement, whether it allocates shares of the market among the parties, whether it fixes prices at which the parties will sell their products, and whether it absorbs or insulates competitors * * *"

This is just some of the situations that did exist in the Brown Shoe case. Whether they will here or not, I don't know.

Go ahead, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, counsel have taken issue with the statement we made that Shopping Bag did not compete with its articles of incorporation. Its retail stores are still there to serve the public. They are still competing.

In this case it is of particular importance because our evidence will show there were very few overlaps between [fol. 1773] the stores of Von's and Shopping Bag.

The Court: How far a distance do you consider it necessary to be before there is an overlap?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor——

The Court: Generally speaking. Of course I realize there can be no hard and fast rule, but generally speaking, the distances.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I am told by Mr. Von der Ahe that it varies from a mile to a mile and a half, and in some cases and some areas up to two miles. And in some cases in isolated areas it could even go to as far as 5 or 25 miles.

The Court: Now, let's see——

Mr. Alsup: But generally speaking, to answer your question specifically, most of the witnesses, the Government witnesses and ours indicate a mile and a half to two miles distant areas.

The Court: Well, that would depend upon the population of the place, wouldn't it? In other words, if you were, say, in Beverly Hills where the traffic is becoming unbearable, a mile might make a big difference.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, indeed, your Honor.

The Court: Whereas if you were out in an open area where the lanes of traffic were relatively free, then it would be a different situation, wouldn't it?

[fol. 1774] Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor. Mr. Von der Ahe has pointed out that his Reseda store when it was built had a drawing area of about five miles, as I recall. New competition moving into the area has greatly reduced——

The Court: Well, doesn't the traffic situation reduce?

Mr. Alsup: Very much so, your Honor.

The Court: All right, go ahead. But it would seem to me that it would.

Mr. Alsup: Counsel is saying that the courts have not confused the fact that a company, in effect, its instruments of competition remain in effect and it doesn't affect a merger. And they cite the United States vs. the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers case decided by the Supreme Court. The problem in that case, your Honor, was that the largest wholesaler in the area took over the big independent retailer, distributor of milk.

The Court: Is that the damage suit that you are talking about?

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor, that is the——

The Court: That was the United States against——

Mr. Alsup: The Sherman Act, and Clayton Act proceeding.

The Court: I see. I was thinking of the other Maryland [fol. 1775] case that came down right about the time of the Sunkist case.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. And as we say in this case, since there was little overlapping between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores, since the Shopping Bag stores still remained to compete, and since counsel concedes that competition is vigorous, as we understand it, and since they further concede the test of a violation is not the lessening of competition between the acquired and acquiring concerns, it is the effect on competition generally, and all of these——

The Court: Does counsel concede that? Do you concede that, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: Concede what, your Honor? I don't know what that was.

Mr. Alsup: The test is not the competition between the acquired and acquiring concerns, it is the effect of the merger upon the competition generally.

Mr. Coyle: I say I concede that the Brown Shoe opinion said that when the act was amended no longer is competition between the acquiring and acquired the sole test, the court——

The Court: Well, I remember those words "the sole test," but I was wondering if you went along. Counsel said that he thought you conceded that the competition between the two merging parties was not of serious consequence.

[fol. 1776] Mr. Coyle: Counsel says I concede a lot of things, your Honor.

The Court: All I am trying to do is get an answer. Don't give me these State Department answers, please. I would like an answer when I ask you something.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, my position is that these chains in this area competed with each other, Von's and Shopping Bag, Von's and Ralphs and Von's and all the others, they all competed with each other. That is what makes this section of the country, the line of commerce, and that is part of the case. They competed with each other and they competed with these other chains, they are all competitive factors in general competition throughout this area.

The Court: Well, that is a declaration, general declaration of policy that could apply to the whole world.

Go ahead, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: I may point out, your Honor, that——

The Court: What I am trying to do is pinpoint an issue and I get no answer at all on it.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, he is talking about——

The Court: You can say no, you can say you disagree, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I disagree.

The Court: And if you say that you disagree that settles it.

[fol. 1777] Mr. Coyle: I disagree with counsel.

The Court: All right, proceed.

When I used to try cases I never hesitated to tell somebody I disagreed with them, the court included.

Go ahead.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, counsel's next argument which we believe is per se argument is this "increase in concentration."

While we deny there has been an increase in concentration in this area, we do want to point out that you don't determine concentration simply because a number of small mom and pop stores disappear.

The A & P, for example, you know once had 15,000 small stores. It now has 4,000 stores.

The Court: Where?

Mr. Alsup: Supermarkets.

The Court: Where?

Mr. Alsup: Throughout the country.

The Court: That is what I thought you meant.

Mr. Alsup: Homer Mitchell commented to me recently, my partner, he said that it reminds me of two men watching a steam shovel and one of them said to the other, "Look at that mechanical monster——"

The Court: Yes, it put a lot of people out of work, there is no question about that. I have seen that in my lifetime. [fol. 1778] Mr. Alsup: And—may I finish, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: And he said that it put a thousand men working with shovels out of jobs.

And the other man said, "Be realistic. It has put 10,000 men working with spoons out of jobs."

The fact is, your Honor, the public has put a large number of small mom and pop stores out of business. It isn't the chains, the supermarkets, it is just public demand.

The Court: Well, I suppose a lot of people are out of work that didn't have to deliver every day.

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

The Court: So modern changes, as bad as they are, I guess we have to accept them, explosion in population, explosion in everything, we have to accept it I guess. It has its benefits and it has its setbacks.

Mr. Alsup: That's right, your Honor.

But as our evidence shows some—any number of stores, single store operators have succeeded. One of the Government witnesses, for example, was asked about our witness Mr. Crawford who runs a very successful single store at Five Points in El Monte. And he said very definitely that is a very successful operator, "Some have it, some don't. I [fol. 1779] guess I don't."

But your Honor, there are very, very many who do, as our evidence will show.

Basically, your Honor, we feel that the Government has advocated nothing here but per se test, substantial competitive factor, increase in concentration without any real examination into the economic realities, which examination, we are convinced, will demonstrate—or the affidavits will demonstrate—that this merger does not violate Section 7, does not have any tendency whatsoever to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

The Court: Well, the burden is on the Government to prove beyond, by a preponderance of the evidence. I take it that is the rule, is that right, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Right, your Honor.

The Court: Proceed with your burden.

Mr. Alsup: Thak you, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, we have a witness coming in but he hasn't shown up yet. I presume——

The Court: Well, I just rang the bell on that. You have no witnesses present?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I will——

The Court: I will let the defense put on its case. I am not going to be adjourning to wait for witnesses. I don't care if he is a professor of Hongkong University.

[fol. 1780] You have no witnesses?

Mr. Coyle: We have a witness but he hasn't gotten here yet, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that is just too bad then. Do you rest your case, do you?

Mr. Coyle: No, I don't rest my case, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I am about to rest it for you.

Mr. Coyle: I am going to say one thing, your Honor, right now.

I am not agreeing to this change in paragraph XLVI.

The Court: You are repudiating what you said a while ago?

Mr. Coyle: I am doing what counsel has done, I am standing, I am not agreeing to this change.

The Court: I thought you said a while ago you agreed to it.

Mr. Coyle: I did, your Honor, but I don't now.

The Court: You are repudiating it.

Mr. Coyle: I have changed my mind, your Honor.

The Court: I see. You have changed your mind.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: All right. I will strike the entire paragraph from the pretrial order.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 1781] Now, your Honor, we have, if your Honor please, yesterday when we submitted these various affidavits we neglected to mention that there are three affidavits, one from Mr. DeSilva, one from a man named Linden and an affidavit or statement from the Bureau of the Census, all of which were filed January 15th. And we had intended to offer them.

The Court: Well, you certainly may. You are offering them now?

Mr. Coyle: We are offering them now. They were filed January 15, 1963.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Alsup: No objection, your Honor.

The Court: Admitted, they are admitted.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, the witness has——

The Court: Let's get this done first. The exhibits are numbered what?

Mr. Coyle: They are not exhibits, I don't think they are exhibits. I think they will be copied into the transcript.

The Court: I know, but they are affidavits—they are the ones that are included in that——

Mr. Coyle: No, no.

The Court: Have they been filed with the clerk?

Mr. Coyle: No, there were several filed with the clerk.

[fol. 1782] The Court: Well, I want some way to identify them, that is the reason.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor please, we have been identifying them by name. We offered several other affidavits.

The Court: All right. What are their names?

Mr. Coyle: DeSilva, Linden and a census certification.

The Court: Now where do you wish those put into the record, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: With the other affidavits.

The Court: All right. Now, are there any depositions to follow each of those, Mr. Alsup?

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor, we did not take those.

The Court: All right. The reporter understands then they are going into the record.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I call——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I would like to check the census figures which he has to make sure——

Mr. Vaughn: We have never seen that census, Mr. Coyle, you never showed it to us.

The Court: Well, show it to him.

Mr. Coyle: It is right here.

The Court: These documents were supposed to be shown [fol. 1783] to counsel prior to this time.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure they were, your Honor. Perhaps they overlooked them because there were many documents shown to them.

The Court: If they were filed I am sure they must have been served.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

Mr. Alsup: Was that filed January 15, 1962 or 1963?

Mr. Coyle: 1962, January 15, 1962.

The Court: Any objection, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. I have an objection to this. I may be in error, but I do not believe this is what was filed with their motion for summary judgment. The document does not identify who the four largest were, the eight largest, the twelve largest, the 16 largest, the 20 largest, and any of the years in question. Refers to '48, '54, '58, it seems to me entirely meaningless.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, the witness never identified the four largest.

Mr. Alsup: Well, we know, your Honor, there have been great changes in the identity of the firms.

Mr. Coyle: That goes to weight, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: I am saying, your Honor, they have another exhibit comprising exact sales data and so forth from the [fol. 1784] firms in this area by the FBI which identifies the firms.

The Court: Well, I would admit them, counsel, but there again I think it goes to weight.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you, your Honor.

The Court: They are admitted.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I call Mr. Kenneth Craun.

The Court: Come forward.

Kenneth Craun, called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?

The Witness: Kenneth Craun.

Direct Examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Craun, would you state your place of business, please?

A. 11943 South Paramount Boulevard, Downey.

Q. And what is your occupation, sir?

A. Grocery.

Q. How long have you been in the grocery field?

A. Approximately 25, 26 years.

Q. Would you tell us some of your experience in the grocery field?

[fol. 1785] The Court: You mean what is his experience?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, outline his experience and background.

The Court: In a general way, what has been your experience?

The Witness: I have worked in the store, over-all for the store, I have run this market for 26 years, with the exception of three years I was in the Service. I feel I know a little about it.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. In operating the business is it necessary for you to keep informed as to marketing conditions?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. How do you do this?

A. Well, by periodicals, by visiting surrounding markets, other markets in surrounding towns and in my own town, to keep up with what they are doing.

Q. And do you discuss your business with other members of the industry?

A. Yes, I do, frequently.

Q. On the basis of your experience and your observations have you formed any opinion as to whether the number of grocery operators in the area are increasing or decreasing?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question, your Honor, on the ground it is immaterial and—— [fol. 1786] The Court: I will allow it. It is expert opinion, I take it, and the realm of experts, they can go all over the ground.

I will allow you to answer. Have you formed an opinion?
The Witness: I would say the number are increasing.
The Court: Based on what, on your observation?
The Witness: On my observation.
The Court: Go ahead.
Mr. Coyle: I didn't hear the answer.
The Witness: They were increasing.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. The number of what is increasing?
A. The number of markets is increasing, the number of major markets is increasing.
Q. The number of major markets?
A. Major markets.
Q. And have you formed any opinion as to whether the total number of markets in the area is increasing?
A. There have been some independents close up in that area——

The Court: Now, when we say area, what area are we talking about?
The Witness: In the Downey, Norwalk, Bellflower area.
[fol. 1787] The Court: Downey, Bellflower, Norwalk.
The Witness: Yes, sir, in my area.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What about the general Los Angeles area? Have you formed any opinion as to the general Los Angeles area?

Mr. Alsup: Object, your Honor——
The Court: First of all, is he familiar with it? He may not be. This is a rather big county. There are people living in this county that have never been on the other side of the county.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Are you familiar with conditions generally in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?
A. Yes, I am. And I do know that from a statement made by Certified Grocers, which is an absolute fact, that there has been numerous independents closed for one reason or another.

Q. Were you familiar with the operation of Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What was your opinion of their operation?

The Court: In what way, counsel? That is calling for too general a conclusion, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: What was your opinion as to their general financial solvency?

[fol. 1788] Mr. Alsup: I object——

The Court: I will sustain it. You haven't shown any foundation for that.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Were you familiar with the history of the Von's and Shopping Bag to the extent that they were expanding or opening new stores?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What was your opinion as to that, sir?

A. I thought they were expanding with, normally, I know they opened a new store in Downey, Von's Company did. The Shopping Bag Company did. I knew they were expanding by observation. I see this all around our area.

Q. Were there any other chains comparable to Von's and Shopping Bag in the area?

A. In our area?

Q. In your area, and in the general area.

A. Yes, Ralphs, Safeway, Boy's, All American, McCoy's, Food Giant.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether you are at an advantage or disadvantage in competing with these chains?

Mr. Alsup: I object on the ground it is too general, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I think we will save time, counsel, it [fol. 1789] is a rather general question but I believe we will save time. I will allow him to answer—because we are exploring the whole economic front and I suppose that if it comes in as evidence, I can disregard it if it is based too far on hearsay.

Go ahead, counsel.

The Witness: Would you restate that question, please?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether you are at an advantage or disadvantage in competing with these chains?

A. I am at a definite disadvantage.

Q. In what respect are you at a disadvantage?

A. Well, there are several. No. 1 is advertising. No. 2, locations. Locations are not available to the independent operator at this time, such as shopping centers.

And the purchasing of some of the commodities, I would say over 50 per cent of the commodities that are used in our total sales.

Q. What commodities, what would they be?

A. Well, mainly produce and meats.

Q. All right.

A. Bakery products.

[fol. 1790] Q. In what respect are you at a disadvantage with respect to those?

A. We cannot buy our merchandise on the same basis that they can, in that they are buying for—at this particular time for approximately 80 stores. And it puts us in a definite disadvantage. There has been times when our men that do buying for us have been unable to procure merchandise, due to the fact that it has been bought up by the majors, in large quantity.

And the merchandise that we do buy, therefore, costs us considerably more.

[fol. 1791] Q. Are there any other items other than produce that you are at a disadvantage?

A. Yes, many.

Q. Do you have any—do you know or do you have any information as to—

A. We are paying approximately three cents a pound more for beef than the majors. And bread, we are paying at least 5 per cent more for this product than the majors. And that would be about it.

Q. Can you give any specific examples with respect to any of these products?

The Court: By that you mean what, counsel? I don't understand the question.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Specific examples of purchases of these products.

A. There is one example that is of record.

Our poultry products this last particular year, in December, we bought a rather large shipment of fresh turkeys, in which the Von's Company bought some of, they were on the same truck.

After our load—we understood we had the whole load—we were told that 10 cases of those——

The Court: I won't listen to this. This is pure rank hearsay. It would be a waste of time. This is not opinion, this is just hearsay testimony as to facts.

[fol. 1792] Mr. Coyle: No, he is testifying as to something that happened to him.

The Court: He was just about to say what somebody told him, that is hearsay.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, I think it is—

The Court: Yes, it is hearsay. I won't hear it, what somebody told him.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Craun, would you relate this incident which is developed in the deposition before the court, and leave out what somebody told you?

A. I didn't know I said what somebody told me. I am sorry.

A truckload of this product——

The Court: You just answer the questions now and don't become a lawyer. Just answer the questions.

The Witness: I'm not sure, your Honor, what——

The Court: Just answer the question.

The Witness: Please state the question again.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Would you relate the incident with respect to these turkeys which was developed in the course of a deposition?

A. We ordered a load of turkeys from the International Poultry Company. These turkeys were delivered.

[fol. 1793] I received them, checked the invoices, and found that part of the load belonged to the Von's Company—10 cases of them, to be exact.

Looking on the bills, I found that they were billed at the rate of 39 cents a pound. We were billed at 41.

We immediately contacted the company——

The Court: This is pure, rank hearsay. But if counsel wants to let it go in, it is all right with me.

Mr. Coyle: He is stating what he read on an invoice.

The Court: Well, counsel, you can't testify what you read in a Sears, Roebuck catalog, unless—go ahead, go ahead—it is pure, rank hearsay is all it is.

He is entitled to give his opinion, based upon hearsay evidence, yes. But he can't testify as to hearsay.

Go on.

The Witness: After much bickering with the company and explaining why they could give Von's this price over our own, we finally received credit back and were billed then at the same rate that Von's Company was.

We were told that they bought from this company in such large quantities, that that was the reason, they pooled all of their stores combined, bought so much more than we [fol. 1794] did, that was the reason for the differential in price.

Mr. Alsup: I am having trouble hearing the witness, your Honor. I missed the last part.

The Court: Please speak up, Mr. Witness.

Would you read it——

Do you want it read back, the last answer?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, I would like the last part of the answer.

(Answer read.)

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, it is so clearly hearsay, it seems to me so much of it, we might as well let it go in.

The Court: Well, counsel, as you know, there is a wide distinction—if you want to let hearsay go in, it is your privilege—but there is a wide distinction between testifying as an expert based upon hearsay matters that they have learned through the course of their training, but when they start to talk about what somebody told them, it is pure hearsay.

Go ahead, if you want to let it go in.

Mr. Alsup: I move to strike the last part.

The Court: I will strike it, what he was told.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Craun, have you formed any opinion as to whether [fol. 1795] the large chains in the area are increasing their shares of the grocery sales?

Mr. Alsup: I object, your Honor, on the ground it is immaterial.

The Court: I will allow him to answer.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, Mr. Craun——

The Court: What his opinion is. I will give it such weight as it is entitled to.

The Witness: My opinion is that they are.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Have you been aware of other mergers and acquisitions in the retail grocery business in this area?

A. Yes, sir. The Alpha Beta merger, the Food Giant, and Fox, Mayfair, one that is pending——

Mr. Alsup: I am sorry, I can't hear you, Mr. Craun.

The Witness: The one that is pending, Kroger, Market Basket.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether these acquisitions will affect the independent grocery retailers such as yourself in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1796] Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I think foundation ought to be laid for that type of question. I object to it.

The Court: Well, what foundation, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Well——

The Court: He has testified he is familiar with the general area.

Mr. Coyle: He has been in business 26 years.

The Court: He has been in the business for 26 years, his opinion is based on hearsay.

Mr. Alsup: And he is talking about large chains, some which have merged and some of which have not.

The Court: Well, I will allow him to answer.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What is your opinion, Mr. Craun?

A. Will you restate the question?

Q. What is your opinion as to whether mergers and acquisitions such as the Von's and Shopping Bag, will affect the independent grocery retailer such as yourself in the Los Angeles area?

Mr. Alsup: I object, your Honor, on the ground it is too indefinite.

The Court: Well, as a matter of fact, it is a question I have to decide. He is not going to decide it for me. I will have to make that decision.

So actually you are asking him to make a decision for [fol. 1797] the court, really, aren't you?

Mr. Coyle: I have asked him for his opinion as to——

The Court: I will allow him to do it. I don't have to follow his opinion. I can make my own independent judgment, I guess.

Mr. Coyle: I would say that is right, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

The Witness: Yes, sir, in my opinion it will, definitely.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. In what respects?

A. Well, now, in this particular merger we have two markets in our particular area operated by one company that will—it is two sources of supply to the community, to this particular community, run under one head, practically overnight, by this merger.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions of this witness.

The Court: Cross examine.

[fol. 1798] Cross-Examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Craun, you testified that some independents, single store operators have closed up in you area, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall testifying, when your deposition was taken on April 16, 1963—I refer to page 17, counsel, lines 17 and 20——

> "Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Craun, that there are more single store operators in the Downey area today than there were in 1950?
> "A. Yes, I guess there are."

Do you recall so testifying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you wish to change that testimony now?

A. I believe that between 1955 and 1963 there has been growth in Downey and the surrounding community, and possibly more markets that are—definitely more chains.

Q. And more independents, you so testified?

A. And some have closed.

Q. Yes. But there are still very, very many stores in the Downey area to serve the population, isn't that true, Mr. Craun?

A. There are sufficient.

[fol. 1799] Q. Isn't it a fact that from your reading, your study of the industry, the biggest complaint you hear in the grocery business today is not that there are too few stores, but there are too many?

Mr. Coyle: Hearsay, your Honor.

[fol. 1800] Mr. Coyle: That is hearsay, your Honor.

The Court: No, he is testing his opinion. That is based on hearsay.

You know, I recommend to all your lawyers, just once in a while you dive into Wigmore and read some of it. It seems to be that lawyers nowadays have an antithesis to learning the rules of evidence. Why, I don't know.

Mr. Alsup: Do you wish the question read?

The Witness: Yes.

(Question was read.)

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, Mr. Craun, you testified that as the result of the Von's and Shopping Bag merger, Von's now has two stores in the Downey area?

A. Correct.

Q. And you were referring to the Shopping Bag store in the Stonewood Shopping Center, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how far away from your store is that?

A. About a mile and a half.

Q. That Store was there before the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, it was.

Q. And are you referring also to the Von's store on [fol. 1801] Paramount Boulevard?

A. Yes, sir. Paramount and Florence.

Q. Incidentally, this Shopping Bag store in the Stonewood Shopping Center, that is in North Downey, isn't it?

A. Next to my home, yes, sir.

Q. But not to your business.

A. Not to my business.

Q. And you testified you were referring to the Von's store on Paramount Boulevard.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far did you say that was from your store?

A. That is approximately two miles.

Q. And that store was in existence at the time of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, isn't that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen any lessening in competition since the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag took place in March 1960 in your area, Mr. Craun?

A. In my opinion, for my own business, no.

Q. Mr. Craun, you testified at your deposition that your sales in 1960 were $725,000.00 a year, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that in 1961, after the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, they increased to $750,000.00 a year, is that [fol. 1802] correct?

A. The approximate figure, yes, sir.

Q. And in 1962 they maintained their level at $750,000.00 a year, isn't that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, directly across the street from your store, Mr. Craun—and, incidentally, your store is about seven or eight thousand square feet, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a large store of Alpha Beta, isn't that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And when was that store opened?

A. It was originally a Raisin's, and it was opened approximately eight years ago.

Q. And there are other stores in the Downey area which you compete with?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a Ralphs store at Rosemead and Firestone?

A. That is correct.

Q. When was that opened?

A. That store was opened about 1958.

The Court: May I interrupt, counsel, and ask him a question?

[fol. 1803] Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: From your experience in 25 years, what have you observed with respect to stores of other chains opening, when, say, one chain opens a store, do the other chains begin to come in to compete, or what have you observed?

The Witness: That seems to be the trend.

The Court: You understand what I am getting at.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: In other words, Standard Oil opens a filling station on one corner and then another oil company opens another one on another corner. Is that true in the grocery business?

The Witness: This seems to be very true in this business.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Is there a Great All American Market in your area?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And where is that located?
A. At Rives and Firestone Boulevard.
Q. I see. How far is that from you?
A. Approximately one mile.

The Court: Is that the All American, counsel, that owns Alpha Beta?
[fol. 1804] Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor.
The Court: What is the name of the company that owns Alpha Beta?
Mr. Alsup: It was known as American Stores, then it changed its name to Acme Markets.
The Court: Acme Markets.
Mr. Alsup: Greater All American was organized back—that was organized by a man named Blaine Hutchinson in the early '50's, who left Alpha Beta to start his own business.

Q. Now, is there a Boy's Market in your area?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where is that located?
A. Approximately one-half mile.
Q. South on Paramount Boulevard?
A. South on Paramount Boulevard.
Q. And you testified that there was a discount house that recently opened in your area?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Udisco?
A. Yes, sir, Udisco.
Q. Do they carry grocery products?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you read predictions in these trade papers that you referred to, Mr. Craun, that the discount houses are [fol. 1805] likely to put the supermarkets out of business by 1970 or 1975?
A. I have read opinions of certain people that think along those lines.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, just for——
The Court: That is purely speculative. I will not pay any attention to it. It is a waste of time. What the trade paper says about ten years from now, I probably know as much as they do, don't you think I do, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: You know more, your Honor.

The Court: No, I wouldn't say that. But I don't — it has any weight at all.

Mr. Alsup: I don't think the latter did and I apologize for asking it to your Honor.

Q. Mr. Craun, have there also been a number of drive-in milk depots selling groceries as well as milk that opened up in the Los Angeles area in recent years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any in your area?

A. Yes.

The Court: How about the wagons that are going around now selling to the coffee squads and keeping people from working? Do they sell groceries, too, now; are some of them beginning to sell groceries?

[fol. 1806] The Witness: Not to my knowledge.

The Court: Aren't some of the wagons that are going around on the streets now, haven't they developed in recent years that they have a grocery line?

The Witness: Not that I have noticed, your Honor.

The Court: You haven't seen those?

The Witness: No, sir.

The Court: Do either one of counsel know about those?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know about it, your Honor.

The Court: I wonder why I have so much time to see these things, I don't know. I don't understand it.

Mr. Alsup: I have got to the point, your Honor, in the last three years that whenever I take a drive I look at every grocery store I see.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Alsup: These drive-in milk depots——

The Court: It might be of interest to you to know that— I don't know how substantial it is but there are quite a number of these wagons that have a small line of groceries and produce, coffee and things of that kind.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, I have seen those, your Honor.

Q. You mentioned these drive-in milk depots, does the Rockview Dairy have any in the Compton area?

A. The Downey area?

[fol. 1807] Q. I mean the Downey area.

A. Yes, sir, they have two.

Q. Is this a new development in the last three years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These drive-in milk depots, are they permitted to sell the milk at cheaper prices that you grocers are, by the State law?

The Court: Counsel, you are getting over in the hearsay department yourself, aren't you?

Mr. Alsup: I think this is a matter of common knowledge.

The Court: Is it? All right. If it is common knowledge it is an exception.

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. And have you seen these drive-in milk depots operated by Rockview Dairy in your area?

A. Yes.

Q. When did they open up?

A. The original one has been open about seven or eight years. A new one opened within the last three years.

Q. Is milk an important draw item for grocery stores?

A. I wouldn't say it is a draw item, it is a must.

The Court: How much longer will you be, counsel, with this witness?

[fol. 1808] Mr. Alsup: I think five minutes.

The Court: I think we had better take the recess.

Before we do, I want the record clear on this paragraph 46.

As I understand it you are asking to be relieved of the stipulation included in paragraph 6 of the pretrial order, is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: That was 46, your Honor.

The Court: 46, rather, yes. Is that what you are doing?

Mr. Alsup: That is what I would desire, your Honor.

But I would like to make any position clear on it. I do not agree with the interpretation which counsel have put on it. But in view of the——

The Court: In view of the fact that a dispute has arisen, and there seems to be a misunderstanding, I am not going to hold anybody to a stipulation.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you, your Honor.

The Court: And that would apply just as well to the other side. So I will not hold you to that stipulation, since you claim that there is a misunderstanding.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you.

The Court: That is the ruling of the court.

Mr. Coyle: I have a statement I would like to read.

[fol. 1809] We can't agree to any change in the pretrial conference order. We do not believe that there has been any showing of manifest injustice which would warrant a change in the pretrial order.

The paragraph in question is plain in meaning, in no way ambiguous. It is a straight statement of fact which repeats an allegation in paragraph 6 of the complaint, which has been admitted by the defendant in paragraph 6 of their answer. The facts were true when they were admitted and they are still true——

The Court: Counsel, you are making a speech.

Mr. Coyle: Well——

The Court: Court will stand in recess for ten minutes.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 1810] Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, when the court adjourned I was about to make a supplemental objection to the pretrial conference order——

The Court: I have already ruled, counsel. You should have made your objection a long time ago.

You have gone out and worked up a long document and brought it in to read it. After ruling, you know it is really too late to object.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think——

The Court: I gave you ample opportunity, in fact, to discuss it fully.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think I have been objecting for the last two days and I am objecting now, your Honor.

The Court: Well, you are reading a long document, your objections are fully in the record.

What is it you want to read now?

Mr. Coyle: That is all I want to say. There has been no showing which justifies change in the pretrial conference order at this time.

The Court: You mean in your opinion.

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: Because I have ruled to the contrary.

Mr. Coyle: We object to any amendment to the pretrial [fol. 1811] conference order.

The Court: All right. You are overruled.

It is stricken because it is obvious to the court that there has been a misunderstanding between counsel as to the paragraph 46, and I am not going to compel any counsel at any time in this court to stick by a stipulation if they were mistaken when they entered into the stipulation, in the interest of justice and arriving at truth.

I am going to rule that is now stricken from the pretrial order.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Mr. Craun, you testified that your sales increased from $725,000.00 a year to $750,000.00 a year from 1960 to 1961, and they remained at that level in 1962. Do you recall testifying at your deposition—I refer, counsel, to page 63 at line 26, as follows:

> "Q. Did you or did you not, after the merger, make the same rate of profit on your volume of sales as you did prior to the merger?
> "A. Yes."

Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you recall this:

> "Q. And is it not a fact that after the merger you increased your volume of sales?
> [fol. 1812] "A. Somewhat."

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, this is something that is beyond the scope of direct.

The Court: I take it it is for impeachment purposes only, isn't it?

Mr. Alsup: Surely, your Honor.

The Court: I will allow it for that purpose only.

Mr. Coyle: He is not going to impeach——

Mr. Alsup: I have just one more question and answer to read——

The Court: Well, I agree with you that if it is not impeachment, it is not proper. I thought it was for the purpose of impeachment.

Mr. Alsup: Exactly, your Honor. He testified that the independent is at a disadvantage.

The Court: That is what I thought. And I thought you were now trying to show that his opinion is not supported. Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. And do you recall this question:

"Q. And the same was true of the merger, so far as the American and Alpha Beta was concerned, isn't that so?

[fol. 1813] "A. Yes."

You recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you referred to some——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I don't see how that is impeachment at all.

The Court: Well, I have ruled that it is, counsel. I think that is the end of it.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. You testified that a single store operator faces disadvantage because Von's and Shopping Bag can advertise in the metropolitan newspapers.

A. Yes.

Q. Shopping Bag advertised in the metropolitan newspapers before the merger, is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And Von's advertised in the metropolitan newspapers before the merger, didn't they?

A. Correct.

Q. You said that they have the advantage in locations, in getting into shopping centers.

A. Yes.

Q. Both of those concerns, before the merger, could get into shopping centers, isn't that correct?

A. Correct.

[fol. 1814] Q. And you stated that they have some advantage in purchasing of commodities?

A. Yes.

Q. Did Shopping Bag, as a 38-store chain, have that advantage—if it was one—before the merger?

A. Yes, they had that advantage.

Q. Did Von's have?

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

The Court: Any redirect?

[fol. 1815] Redirect Examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. When you testified that Von's Shopping Bag had advertising advantages, what do you mean, Mr. Craun?

A. Well, they can advertise in the metropolitan papers, one ad covers the complete chain. In the local papers one ad covers the complete chain. Where an independent, it takes the same ad, the same page for one store, as against 80.

Q. Now, you have testified as to these new stores opening in Downey over a period of time. What has happened to the population of Downey in the past 15 years?

A. Downey has increased very much.

Q. And these new stores that have come into the Downey area, have they been predominantly chain stores or independent stores?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, that is so vague and indefinite, "predominant"——

The Court: I will let him answer.

The Witness: Yes, it has been chain stores.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Has it been predominantly chain stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, insofar as numbers are concerned, have there been more independents or more chains?

[fol. 1816] The Witness: More chains.

The Court: But independents are still coming in, aren't they?

The Witness: Two Speedy Markets have come in.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. How big is Speedy Markets?

A. They are quite small, more like a delicatessen, liquor store type thing, with some grocery items.

Q. And have the chains increased their share of business in the Downey area over the years?

Mr. Alsup: I object, no foundation has been laid——

The Court: How would he know, counsel?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Do you know?

A. In my opinion, they have.

Mr. Alsup: I move to strike the answer, your Honor, and object on the ground——

The Court: I will leave it stand, but I probably won't give it very much weight.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, you have referred to these various stores in the Downey area. What is the trading area from which you draw your customers, in terms of miles?

A. About four miles.

[fol. 1817] Q. Have any come from beyond the four-mile area?

A. Not too many.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

The Court: You have parking facilities, I take it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Alsup: May I have just a couple of questions, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. You don't have very large parking facilities, do you, Mr. Craun?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, that is pretty vague, that question, "very large."

The Court: Well, counsel——

Mr. Alsup: I will withdraw the question, your Honor.

The Court: I will ask him. How big a parking facility do you have?

Now he is going to have to use "large," "small," or something else.

The Witness: We have, for our size of store we have ample parking.

[fol. 1818] The Court: How many parking spaces do you have, when it is full?

The Witness: Approximately 50.

The Court: Anything further, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: One further question, your Honor.

Q. You testified that Von's can now make savings in its advertising costs because one ad covers more stores.

A. Correct.

Q. Those savings that Von's has been able to make have not hurt your gross, and they have not hurt your net profits, right?

Mr. Coyle: That is argumentative, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I think it is.

Mr. Alsup: I will withdraw it.

That is all.

The Court: All right. Step down.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I would like to call Mr. Richard Dick at this time.

RICHARD DICK, called as a witness by and on behalf of the plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?
[fol. 1819] The Witness: Richard Dick.
The Clerk: How do you spell that?
The Witness: D-i-c-k.

Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Would you state your residence address for the record?
A. 1300 Indian Avenue, South Pasadena.
Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Dick?
A. Grocery.
Q. What grocery are you affiliated with?
A. Dick Markets, Inc.
Q. Where are they located?
A. 6015 North Figueroa, that is Los Angeles.
Q. What is your position with that market?

The Court: What is that address?
The Witness: 6015 North Figueroa.
I am vice president of the corporation and assistant secretary. And I act in a capacity as manager for the market.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. How long have you been in the grocery business, Mr. Dick?
A. At this business address, I have been there 19 years.
[fol. 1820] Q. How long have you been managing the store?
A. I have been managing the store for the last 12 years now.
Q. Have you found in your capacity in the grocery business that it is necessary to keep informed as to market conditions?
A. Yes.
Q. How do you do this?
A. Well, I read manuals, periodicals, that is one way of finding out what is going on. I talked to salesmen, to the businessmen in the industry. We exchange ideas and talk over things that are happening in the industry. And between them I get a pretty good idea of what is going on.

Q. Do you visit other stores in the area?

A. That's right.

Q. Where are some of these stores located?

A. Oh, I have talked to people in stores in Reseda, I have been to different luncheons where they have stores all over the city actually.

Q. Have you, on the basis of your experience and observations, have you formed any opinion as to whether the number of groceries, operators of grocery stores in the area are increasing or decreasing?

[fol. 1821] A. I would say the small stores are decreasing. The larger stores are increasing.

Q. On a net basis have you formed any opinion as to whether the total number of stores are increasing?

A. I would say they are decreasing—

The Court: Counsel, you will have to speak up louder because we are having difficulty hearing you.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry, your Honor.

Q. Have you, from your experience, have you formed any opinion as to whether you are at a disadvantage or an advantage in competing with larger chains?

A. Well, I am definitely at a disadvantage.

The Court: That is your opinion?

The Witness: In my opinion, sir.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What do you base your opinion on?

A. Well, I base my opinion on several things. In respect to listening to counsel talk about Certified as buying, I belong to Certified and I buy from Certified. I have very little choice. I couldn't operate without Certified.

But buying direct is a better arrangement, if you are capable of buying direct. I can't buy direct in any quantity that will do me any good.

But in a respect of that nature—now you are talking [fol. 1822] like a Safeway or Ralph's or Von's, with warehousing of their own, they definitely have advantages that I don't have in Certified.

In my opinion, my opinion is if they didn't, they would belong to Certified.

Q. What items do you buy from Certified, sir?

A. Mostly dry groceries.

Q. Where do you purchase other items?

A. Well, if you are talking about produce, we buy produce on the produce market downtown, that is here in Los Angeles. And cold cut meats and things of that nature are bought from different houses scattered throughout the city.

Q. These are items that Certified doesn't handle?

A. All I am speaking of now, generally, yes, they don't, Certified does not have them.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether you can buy produce and these other items as cheaply as the chains do? I am referring to the items you don't buy from Certified.

A. No, I——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, no foundation has been laid for this question, a man who is a single store operator, has been all his life——

The Court: Well, you know the thing I don't understand—perhaps I am just not far enough along in antitrust [fol. 1823] understanding, but I thought the issue here was whether or not there was a substantial lessening of competition by reason of this particular merger.

Mr. Alsup: That is right.

The Court: Now you are asking an independent grocer to testify because he is small and can't use the power of purchasing, if a chain has a better advantage.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I heard many, many hours of comment yesterday by Mr. Alsup as to the great advantage that these independents get from Certified.

The Court: That doesn't mean that I accept what Mr. Alsup says.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: I listened to him, but I don't have to accept anything he says any more than I accept everything you say.

But what is the relevancy of this testimony? I would like to know. I am not fully——

Mr. Coyle: We have a tendency here towards concentration in these large chains in which we are developing that the independent is at a disadvantage in attempting to compete with them, and if they grow larger the independent is placed at a greater disadvantage. And this is a relevant consideration.

The Court: I see. All right. Well, I think it goes without [fol. 1824] saying that—I don't think counsel would dispute you, maybe I am mistaken, that the chain has advantages such as the power of purchasing, larger amounts, greater amounts, and the facilities of warehousing, the advantage of greater advertising and those things.

Mr. Coyle: I would like——

The Court: Are they disputable items?

Mr. Coyle: I should hope not. I don't think they are, your Honor. But I think counsel wouldn't agree to those things.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle, we have agreed on a lot of things——

Mr. Coyle: Is it stipulated——

Mr. Alsup: We have stated in all of our affidavits, your Honor, our witnesses testified the chains have certain advantages.

The Court: Can we arrive at a stipulation, I don't want you to do it if you don't feel you should.

Mr. Alsup: I think then we get in conflict, your Honor, because our witnesses say the chains have certain advantages and single store operators have certain advantages and the picture——

The Court: Well, we can't stipulate to everything. I was just wondering if there wasn't something we could stipulate to.

[fol. 1825] Mr. Alsup: The facts are clearly set forth in these affidavits.

The Court: All right, go ahead. But I don't think it is subject to contest that 80 stores have a better buying advantage than one store. I don't think it is.

Mr. Coyle: I think that——

The Court: I think just plain common sense would tell one that.

Mr. Coyle: I should hope that is so, your Honor. But I don't get that from counsel.

The Court: All right, go ahead.

There is one thing that I learned early in life, and that is that lawyers, practically all lawyers do it, but I never did—never fight until you get in the ring. And don't fight over something that is valueless.

Go ahead, proceed with the battle.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Have you been aware of acquisitions and mergers of the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles area?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to the effect which acquisition such as the Von's-Shopping Bag acquisition will have on the independent grocery retailers in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I don't know what acquisitions or mergers he is talking about. I think the question is confusing and ambiguous.

[fol. 1826] Mr. Coyle: Let's ask the witness if he can state some of the acquisitions, other than Von's and Shopping Bag.

The Witness: Yes, I think I can.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Will you state them for the record?

A. You mentioned before, the Acme-Alpha Beta merger.

The Court: Has that actually taken place?

The Witness: Yes, it has, your Honor.

The Court: I see.

The Witness: And, oh, there have been acquisitions by Fox and Food Fair, whether that has completely finished or not I don't know. Their advertising will be so.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Any of the other chains that have made acquisitions except Mayfair?

A. No, there has been an acquisition—I have just noticed recently—of Kroger coming in from Market Basket.

The Court: You mean they are trying to, they haven't come in yet, have they?

The Witness: No, they are talking about how they are going to exchange their stock.

Mr. Coyle: I think they have signed an agreement, your Honor.

The Court: Have they? Has the Department approved that one, too, counsel?

[fol. 1827] Mr. Coyle: No, as I said yesterday——

The Court: I believe you are investigating that, you say.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: So that is embryonic at the moment, isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, that's right. I think that they have signed an agreement, subject to a stockholders' meeting.

The Court: All right. Go head.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to the impact which these acquisitions will have, including the Von's-Shopping Bag, will have on grocers, retail independent grocers in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes. My opinion would be that if they continue to make acquisitions like that in time it will be mostly large stores combined together to compete among themselves, let's put it that way.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I move to strike the answer as not responsive to the question.

The Court: I will let it stand.

May I ask a question?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Is this going to increase competition?

[fol. 1828] The Witness: I have to answer that this way, your Honor——

The Court: Well, can you first answer me "Yes" or "No," and then explain?

The Witness: Yes, it will increase competition, but only in this state. As the competition, or chains increase, it puts such a burden on independent stores I think that they will lose that competition entirely.

The Court: In other words, what you are saying, your opinion is that the competition will increase, but it will increase between the chains.

The Witness: That is right.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What will that increased competition do to the independents?

A. It should eliminate them and I think it is eliminating them now.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Dick, what were your grocery sales in your store in 1962?

A. I believe it was one million and close to four hundred thousand.

[fol. 1829] Q. Do you recall testifying in your deposition, Mr. Dick, that your gross sales in 1959 were $1,377,000.00?

A. I believe those were the figures we used.

Q. Your sales have increased?

A. No, we have not. You are talking about today, this year?

Q. I thought 1962, in 1962 they were one million four hundred thousand, you testified.

A. No, sir, not to my knowledge. You only asked me about——

Q. In fact——

The Court: Well, he said this, a million and close to four hundred thousand, that is what he said. He didn't give a specific answer.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Dick, what is the trading area of your store?

A. I would say the trading area of our store probably ranges in the area of about three miles.

Q. Do you believe that is different than most?

A. It is not like all others, I will answer that way.

Q. Do you recall testifying at page 10 of your deposition taken on April 17th, that you believed the average trading area of a grocery store is a mile to a mile and a half?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1830] The Court: I take it what you are saying is that yours is different.

The Witness: It is in an older area of town, your Honor, and we are not concentrated in population like some areas are in the city right now. In other words, people come a little farther to shop.

The Court: What do you attribute the—I take yours is a successful business, isn't it?

The Witness: I think it is, yes, sir.

The Court: What do you attribute your success to, the merchandise to sell or the personality or the way you handle the public?

The Witness: I would say it is more of a personal nature and we have a management factor where we are much closer to our customers.

The Court: You rely heavily upon the contact, personal contact with the customer, do you?

The Witness: Yes, we do, sir.

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, there is a Kory's store a little way north of you, isn't that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. That is about two or three blocks at the corner of York and North Figueroa?

[fol. 1831] A. Correct.

Q. And it is open 24 hours a day, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. How many hours do you stay open?

A. We are open from 9:00 in the morning until 10:00 at night.

Q. Going a little bit further north, Mr. Dick, isn't there a new drive-in milk depot?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. When did that come into your area?

A. In the last four or five months, I would say, six months.

Q. Do you know at what prices their sell their milk?

A. It is cheaper—I have never been in there but I have been told it is cheaper than what we sell our milk for.

Q. Have you been by the drive-in milk depot?

A. Yes, it is on a corner.

Q. Have you noticed they advertise rather wide range of other grocery products?

A. Not a wide range.

Q. Sausage?

A. Not in this one.

Q. Bread?

A. Bread, milk, potato chips.

[fol. 1832] Q. Beer, delicatessen items?

A. I did not see those advertised.

Q. This drive-in milk depot situation is a relatively new development in this area in the last three years, is it not?

A. In my area, yes.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I don't see the relevancy of this at all to the prior testimony of this witness.

The Court: Well, I think probably, counsel, it is a peripheral thing that is just showing the general conditions. I take it that is what he is doing, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: That is right, your Honor. And we have shown it through other affidavits, so I will drop that line of questioning, your Honor.

Counsel, I would like to refer to page 46 of the deposition of Mr. Dick.

Q. You recall testifying on April 17, 1963, Mr. Dick, and I quote:

> "Q. You haven't seen any lessening of that competition since the Von's merger with Shopping Bag, have you?
>
> "A. I wouldn't think so.
> "Q. It has been more vigorous, if anything, has it not?
> "A. It has to be, yes. That is a trend."

[fol. 1833] Did you so testify?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Coyle: I don't see any relevancy to this here. He has testified to that.

The Court: Well, it is in.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, you have indicated, Mr. Dick, that in your opinion a single store operator has difficulty in surviving. Do you recall testifying—I can't find my reference, I am sorry, your Honor—with reference to a Mr. Al Goldstein, former executive of the Boy's or Food Giant, who decided to become a single store operator last year?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall saying——

Mr. Coyle: What page is this on?

Mr. Alsup: I am sorry, page 49.

The Court: Is this impeachment, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: It seems so, your Honor. He says that the single store operator can't compete. He testified as to people who are entering the business and successfully competing.

The Court: I see. All right. Go ahead.

[fol. 1834] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. "Q. You have no knowledge that he is a single store operator at the present time?

"A. Yes, yes, yes, I will go that far. I never saw the statement you are making at all. Frankly I think that Al Goldstein would like to own 100 stores.

"Q. I am sorry, I didn't hear that.

"A. I would think that Al Goldstein would love to own 100 stores. It is true that I have heard that he has a store in Burbank.

"Q. A single store operation?

"A. A single store. Now, we are talking about personal money. That is probably the extent of what he can do at the present time, I would assume, otherwise he would be a lot bigger than he is.

[fol. 1835] "Q. Do you expect Mr. Goldstein to be successful in this operation and grow?

"A. I can't see why he should not."

Do you recall that?
A. Yes.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object to counsel—read the next question and the next answer also.
Mr. Alsup: No objection.
Mr. Coyle: Do you want to read it?
Mr. Alsup: "Q. Did you see in the trade papers that Mr. Goldstein had stated that he didn't like to be an executive——"
Mr. Coyle: I am sorry, I meant the following question.

"That store is directly across the street from Von's store in Burbank, is it not?
"A. I don't even know where the store is at. I just heard that Al Goldstein had taken over a store from somebody in Burbank. That is the extent of my knowledge."

Now what all of this proves, I don't know.
Mr. Alsup: It proves a single store operator——
The Court: Well, never mind, I will decide what it proves, counsel. You don't have to help me on that score.
Mr. Alsup: I am sorry, your Honor.

[fol. 1836] Q. You were asked by counsel about other acquisitions and mergers and you testified that Acme, American Stores had acquired Alpha Beta. You recall that was some time in 1960 after the Von's-Shopping Bag merger?
A. Yes.
Q. And prior to the time that Acme acquired Alpha Beta, it had not done business in this area, is that right?
A. Acme? Yes.
Q. Now, you said that Food Fair has taken over the remaining stores of the Fox chain.
A. Yes.
Q. Do you recall that?
A. Yes, I have heard that.
Q. Do you know anything about the Fox organization, about how it got started in 1954?
A. No, I do not know the history.

Q. You do know that they expanded very rapidly between 1954 and 1961, and then got into financial difficulties and bankruptcy, don't you?

A. That's right, I do.

Q. How many stores did they get up to, about 50 or 52?

A. I know they had over 30 stores. How many more, I don't know.

Q. Where a number of these stores sold off to single store [fol. 1837] operators out of the bankruptcy?

A. I heard that, yes.

Q. And Food Fair came in and is running the remaining 18 out of the bankruptcy court, isn't that correct?

A. I believe that is so.

Q. And you referred to the proposed acquisition of Market Basket by Kroger?

A. That is right.

Q. That has been announced in the trade papers?

A. Right.

Q. Now, Kroger is not doing business in this area at the present time, are they?

A. No, they are not.

Q. Is Kroger generally reputed to be the fourth largest chain in the nation?

The Court: Well, counsel, I think that is pretty well known. I don't know that this is proper cross examination.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

The Court: As a matter of fact, as I have been listening to you two gentlemen, I have just been checking over the pretrial order and I find most of the things that you are going into have all been stipulated to in the pretrial order and it has been stipulated, for example, that in the last 20 years there has been an increase in the size of the indi- [fol. 1838] vidual retail grocery store in the Los Angeles area, and in the same period there has also been an increase in the size of the individual grocery store, retail grocery store, in the other parts of the United States, and since 1940 there has been a decrease in the number of grocery stores that operate in the Los Angeles metropolitan area and during the same period there has been a decrease in the total number of retail grocery stores in the United States. I mean these things have all been stipulated to.

Mr. Alsup: Absolutely, your Honor. I would say a large part of those exhibits go to the very things that were stipulated to in the pretrial order.

[fol. 1839] The Court: Well, his questions, I thought he was trying to prove—and that part is admissible—that opinion evidence, in their opinion there had been—and I haven't heard yet just what he said. I am not clear as to what he said about substantial lessening of competition, other than to say that he thought the competition would increase rather than lessen, didn't he say that, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: I think that he said that the competition from the chains would increase and the independents were then going to go out.

The Court: I think that is what he said, that he thought in due time the independents would probably decrease.

Mr. Coyle: And that the chains would then have the market.

The Court: I see. All right.

But when we get off on all this other matter, it seems to me that we have a stipulation that they will decrease.

Mr. Alsup: The number of stores?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I have no further questions.

The Court: Anything further, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: I have three questions.

[fol. 1840] Redirect Examination

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Your personal contacts that you referred to, personal services to the customers, is that your way of competing with the chains?

A. One of the ways, yes.

Q. Now, you have talked about these new people, are they a serious factor in the competition in your area?

A. Not at all.

Q. Now, you have mentioned that a number of Fox stores have been sold, were a number of these stores sold to some of the chains in the area?

A. I can't answer all of this because I haven't seen their records.

Q. You don't know——

A. I don't know that.

Q. —as to whether they were sold to independents, do you know that?

A. Being exact, no. I have heard that some of their poorer stores were taken by independents. But the bulk of it or the nucleus of their operation was taken over by the chains.

Mr. Coyle: No further questions.

The Court: Step down.

(Witness excused.)

COLLOQUY BETWEEN COURT AND COUNSEL

The Court: I am just wondering, Mr. Alsup, if you [fol. 1841] couldn't stipulate that in lieu of this paragraph 46—admit rather than stipulate, you admit it and I will accept the admission and that will end the matter.

If you will admit the way I put it a while ago, that in 1958 the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area competed intensively in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area.

You have already admitted that heretofore, so——

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. I admitted that.

The Court: Well, if you admit that it solves the problem. Then there is no problem left. That takes care of it.

You don't object to him admitting that, do you, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: He can admit anything he wants to, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that is subject to the control of the court, I am afraid.

How many more witnesses do you have this afternoon?

Mr. Coyle: I have no more witnesses, your Honor.

The Court: Is that all your witnesses?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Have you put in all of your documentary?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I am prepared to close. [fol. 1842] The Court: Do you want to check over, or are you prepared to close now?

Mr. Coyle: We will check over the documentary——

The Court: Well, I will give you an opportunity if you wish to.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, before the Government rests its case we do have the deposition of John Marshall, one of their witnesses, that has not yet been received by the court.

The Court: They haven't offered it, have they?

Mr. Vaughn: No, that is correct. But they have offered the affidavit of John Marshall——

The Court: Oh, this is the deposition, you wish to follow that?

Mr. Vaughn: This is the deposition which I would like to have transcribed into the record after the affidavit of Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Coyle: I am a little puzzled, because I thought it was already in.

Mr. Vaughn: No, it is not.

The Court: Well, it may be put in and follow the same procedure. It will be filed with the clerk and the reporter will be instructed to copy it succeeding the affidavit of—this is the deposition of whom?

Mr. Vaughn: John B. Marshall.

[fol. 1843] The Court: Succeeding his affidavit, is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, yes, sir.

And in addition, if I may, your Honor, Exhibits A through G on the defendant's list of exhibits were all exhibits to Mr. Marshall's deposition. I would request that they be received in evidence.

The Court: Well, I assume they should be.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. There was one Government exhibit attached to this deposition.

Mr. Vaughn: There may have been. I am only offering the ones we attached to the deposition.

The Court: Well, do you want to offer the other one?

Mr. Coyle: We will offer the other one, your Honor——

The Court: Then all of the exhibits attached to the deposition will be admitted in evidence and they are Government's 1 and A, B, C and D, you say?

Mr. Vaughn: A, B, C, D, E, F and G, copies of which have been supplied to the clerk.

The Court: All right, they will all be admitted.

(The documents referred to were marked Defendant's Exhibits A to G, inclusive, and were received in evidence.)

The Clerk: What is the Government's number?

Mr. Coyle: Look at Government's 1——

[fol. 1844] The Court: I thought he said Government's, it can't be 1, so it is 1 to the deposition, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: So it will have to be—we will leave it in the deposition——

The Clerk: It is not in the deposition.

The Court: It is admitted.

The Clerk: There are no exhibits with the deposition.

The Court: Where are they, where are they?

Mr. Vaughn: May I inquire if you received the original of Mr. Marshall's deposition? I only have a copy.

The Court: One at a time, please. I can't follow three people at once.

Mr. Coyle: I will have to check it over the noon recess.

The Court: Then when you find it we will admit it.

The Clerk: We will file the original then?

The Court: Yes, the original will be filed.

The Clerk: This is a copy.

The Court: All right, find the original and we will file the original.

The Clerk: Yes.

(The document referred to was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 for identification and was received in evidence.)

[fol. 1845] The Court: Anything else, gentlemen?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. We will check it over the noon recess.

The Court: Well, you can close your case and if you find that through any inadvertence you have overlooked something I will allow you to reopen and put it in, of course.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Then we will close.

[fol. 1846] The Court: Now, counsel, you realize I have not read all of the affidavits.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And I have not read all of the material that is before the court.

But you indicated you might have a motion. I think if you want to protect your record you had better make it.

Mr. Alsup: I would like to make a motion to dismiss, your Honor, but request that the ruling on the motion be reserved until after we have been able to put on our case.

The Court: Can I reserve it under the rules at this time? I don't think I can, can I?

Mr. Alsup: Then I would like to withdraw our motion, your Honor, ——

The Court: You would like to what?

Mr. Alsup: I would like to withdraw our motion, your Honor, because I think it is very important in these cases to have a very complete record.

The Court: Well, I will tell you this much, from the very pretrial order itself, counsel, I don't think I could grant your motion. And from the testimony because the issues—I have read enough in the affidavits and I have read sufficient of the material on file to where there is a question [fol. 1847] presented to the court at this time that is a little different from what it will be after the full case is in.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: For example, at this point I have to take everything in its most favorable light to the Government.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And on that basis—I don't want to anticipate you, but I will probably have to deny your motion.

I am not indicating it will be any different later on, but —what is the rule on the motion?

Mr. Alsup: I have a very poor memory, yo · Honor.

Mr. Coyle: 41, your Honor.

The Court: 41?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I would like to withdraw the motion in any event.

The Court: Counsel, that is entirely up to you, if you wish to make your motion, do so.

Mr. Alsup: No, because I fully intend to proceed with our case, your Honor, I desire to do so.

The Court: I don't think I have the power to reserve on that motion.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I withdraw—I do not make the [fol. 1848] motion.

The Court: All right. We will stand in recess until 2:00 o'clock.

(Whereupon at 12:03 o'clock p.m., an adjournment was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m. of the same date.)

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1963, 2:00 P.M.

The Court: All right, proceed.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, we found out when court recessed that the original deposition of John B. Marshall was already on file with the court.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Vaughn: And Government counsel has found the one document we referred to as an exhibit to that deposition and has marked it as Plaintiff's Exhibit 73, which I understand is in evidence.

The Court: Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Coyle: That is fine, your Honor.

The Court: It will be admitted in evidence.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's 73 in evidence.

(The document referred to was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 73 and received in evidence.)

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I offer in evidence the affidavits of the following single store operators who are witnesses for the defendant:

W. H. Crawford
J. R. Dahl
Cecil Dobson
Reynold Elkin
Joseph Goldberg
[fol. 1650] Albert Goldstein
Harlos Gross
Paul A. Hines, Jr.
John H. Irwin
O. W. Richard
Mrs. Leila M. Roberts
Robert Sherry.

The Court: All right. By the way, counsel, are you going to supply—I believe you have, have you not, —have you supplied, have you noticed what counsel has supplied me?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And you have also done the same, is that correct? These are Plaintiff's Exhibits 1 to 71?

Mr. Alsup: Well, your Honor——

The Court: They are copies, is that right, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: So that I have these for my use.

Mr. Coyle: We also have interspersed the affidavits dealing with the particular exhibits, in other words——

The Court: Are all of the affidavits in here?

Mr. Coyle: All of the affidavits relating to the exhibits are in there, yes, your Honor.

[fol. 1851] The Court: Relating to the exhibits, but not all of your affidavits.

Mr. Coyle: But not the statements from industry witnesses.

The Court: That is what I thought.

Mr. Coyle: Just the ones introduced in evidence.

The Court: So I will have to resort to the original file, or to the exhibits to get that.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor would like them in the binder——

The Court: I don't want to put you to a lot of trouble, counsel, but you have it here already.

Mr. Coyle: It is not—it is not inconvenient.

The Court: Would it be inconvenient—I like to mark them up and I cannot mark up the original file.

Mr. Coyle: This will be a copy of Exhibit 72.

The Court: All right. Then you are passing to me a copy of Exhibit 72 which contains all of the affidavits which are now in the present Exhibit 72?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor. They are not affidavits, to make the record clear.

The Court: Of the narrative statements.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Clerk: Do you want to mark that a copy?

The Court: Yes, mark that a copy.

[fol. 1852] You see, in this way I can make pencil marks on it, which I can't do on the original file.

Thank you very much.

Now, I have also here a copy of Exhibit 24.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: And Exhibit 24 is the advertisements of Von's competitors retained in Von's weekly file from June 11, 1959, to February 4, 1960.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Submitted by defendants in response to paragraph 3 of plaintiff's motion for production of documents.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now, are these in evidence?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. These are copies.

Mr. Coyle: It was just too voluminous to put in the other——

The Court: Now this is not the original, this is a copy?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Fine. And I may mark it up.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Fine. All right, counsel. Go ahead.

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I offer these affidavits [fol. 1853] of these single store operators in evidence. May I approach——

The Court: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Alsup: I have here what is labeled an office copy——

The Court: I would like to have it, if I may.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, indeed, your Honor.

(The document was handed to the court.)

The Court: This will be marked Defendants' Exhibit what, Mr. Clerk?

The Clerk: This will be Defendants' Exhibit AX.

(The exhibit referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit AX for identification.)

The Court: Now this is to be copied into the record also, is it? Or just——

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. That is what we anticipate.

The Court: Counsel, do I understand that also in addition to Exhibit 72, that——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, that Exhibit 24 was offered the other day.

The Court: Yes. That is what I thought. It is not to be copied in the record—there is nothing to be copied into the record from this, as I understand, is that right?

[fol. 1854] Mr. Coyle: No, that is right.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Alsup: As I understand it, your Honor, the only thing that will be copied in the record is the affidavit itself.

The Court: That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, the affidavits and the statements.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit AX is admitted.

(The exhibit marked Defendants' Exhibit AX was received in evidence.)

The Court: Yes. Will you mark my copy, please, Mr. Clerk.

You know, counsel, while we are on the subject, the more I think about it, I suppose that I ought to read all of this material, and then at the end of the case if you desire to file any additional memorandum to emphasize or summarize any of the testimony or any of the material in these exhibits you are welcome to do so. But I would like it done at a very reasonably early date.

[fol. 1855] Mr. Alsup: We have endeavored to do that, your Honor. You know we have summarized the documents which we have filed with your Honor and the documents, the testimony of the industry witnesses.

The Court: Yes. I thought you might have others, more than that though.

Counsel has introduced certain others that have not been summarized in his brief, as I understand it.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. These two witnesses we added on this morning we also have statements.

The Court: Well, that won't be necessary, of course.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: I have heard the testimony.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: But all of the affidavit evidence you have has been summarized or averted to in your brief.

Mr. Coyle: Oh, no, your Honor. My understanding was that we are going to summarize——

The Court: You can if you wish. What I am saying is you can if you wish.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, but the——

The Court: Yes, I want you to understand it is not compulsory.

Mr. Coyle: I see, your Honor.

[fol. 1856] Mr. Alsup: I next offer in evidence, your Honor, and assume it will be Exhibit AY, the affidavits of the industry witnesses, defendants' industry witnesses who operate from two to nine grocery stores as follows:

Eugene Gelson.
Nathan Gilbert.
Marcus Godfrey, Jr.
Joe B. Goodnight.
Yoshi Inadomi.
Arthur C. Jones, Jr.
A. J. Miller.
O. J. Sloan.
Daniel H. Wilson.

The Court: It will be—Mr. Clerk, is that AY, is that right?

The Clerk: Yes, sir, Defendants' AY.

The Court: It will be admitted.

(Document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit AY and was admitted in evidence.)

The Court: That too is to be copied into the record, as I understand.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. Thank you.

The Court: I only want to say one thing in advance. I hope that you put your best foot forward on these copies [fol. 1857] because some of the lawyers seem to feel that if they can give the judge a real bad copy he can't read he might rule in their favor. But I don't work on that theory. And I hope the copies are legible.

Mr. Alsup: I trust your Honor it is very legible. We are proud of these affidavits.

The Court: I am talking about planning, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: I might say, your Honor, that you have the copy that we intended to keep for our own files. So it will be legible.

The Court: All right, thank you.

Mr. Alsup: I next offer in evidence, your Honor, Defendants' Exhibit AC, an affidavit of defendants' industry witnesses who operate ten or more grocery stores in this area, namely:

Sam Alexander.
Claude W. Edwards.
Charles Futterman.
George F. Fitzpatrick.
Joseph P. Hughes.
Roger Laverty, Sr.
Richard Ross.
Neal D. Ramsey.
Ted. R. Wood.

The Court: As a matter of fact, you have summarized [fol. 1858] all of these in your, as I remember, some of them—you have summarized all of these, haven't you?

Mr. Alsup: I summarized those and I summarized the Government's industry witnesses and the depositions of the Government's industry witnesses, your Honor.

The Court: That is what I thought. Now that is ten or more, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: These are ten or more.

The Court: I wonder if you would help me out and go back to AX, how many do they own, one or more?

Mr. Vaughn: One.

The Court: AX.

Mr. Alsup: One store only, your Honor.

The Court: One store only.

And AY is one to 9, was it?

Mr. Alsup: Two to nine, your Honor.

The Court: Two to nine. I have it. Thank you.

Mr. Alsup: I offer Defendants' AZ, being the operators of ten or more grocery stores I have just referred to, your Honor.

The Court: Admitted.

(Document marked Defendants' Exhibit AZ was admitted in evidence.)

Mr. Alsup: I might say, your Honor, in connection with the affidavit of Joe Hughes, which is in the last exhibit, [fol. 1859] there are attached some forms from, order forms, from Certified Grocers.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Hughes is chairman of the board of Certified, as well as an operator of grocery stores. And those exhibits which are attached to his affidavit need not be copied in the record. I think they have been otherwise identified as our Exhibit H.

And I would offer that Exhibit H in evidence.

Mr. Coyle: That is Exhibit I, I think.

Mr. Vaughn: No, we changed that.

Mr. Coyle: I see.

The Court: So long as the reporter understands.

The Clerk: Your Honor they are now offering Exhibit H?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Clerk: Is this the one you are referring to?

Mr. Coyle: Are you making the offer now?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: I object to this exhibit, your Honor. It doesn't prove anything.

The Court: If it doesn't prove anything why object.

Mr. Coyle: It is irrelevant.

The Court: What are these, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: They are order forms issued to members by [fol. 1860] Certified Grocers which indicate the very wide range of——

The Court: What they can purchase?

Mr. Alsup: ——products which the members of Certified can purchase.

And Mr. Hughes' affidavit—I don't have a copy of it before me now, your Honor, I have given you my copy—points to the wide range of products which members of Certified can purchase.

The Court: Well, I think I will admit it for whatever weight it may have on general conditions in the industry.

In other words, it may have some persuasive force, it may not. I don't know.

I assume that the thoughts you get concerning the area the better you are able to judge whether there is a lessening of competition.

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I next offer as defendants' next exhibit in order—what is that?

The Clerk: BA.

[fol. 1861] Mr. Alsup: BA, the affidavit of three of the officers of Von's Grocery Company, namely:

Theodore A. Von der Ahe
W. R. Hayden
Charles Von der Ahe.

Mr. Von der Ahe is the president. Mr. Hayden is executive vice president and former president of Shopping Bag, and Charles Von der Ahe is the chairman of the board of Von's Grocery Company.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think I should point out that we deposed Mr. Von der Ahe and the deposition should be copied into the record.

The Court: After each, the same as we have heretofore done, after the copying into the record of the affidavit, then at that point copy in the deposition.

Mr. Alsup: You deposed Mr. Von der Ahe three times.

Mr. Coyle: The deposition on the affidavit was the last one we deposed.

Mr. Alsup: Very good.

The Court: Now, gentlemen, so the record will be clear at this point, I think it is clear, but let's be sure.

It has been understood throughout these proceedings leading up to pretrial and after pretrial and now that where these affidavits have been offered, that there is no [fol. 1862] objection and that counsel has had available, to both sides, to them the opportunity if they desire to cross examine by proceeding on deposition, is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: With this reservation, your Honor, that there may be objections as to weight or hearsay statements——

The Court: I am not talking about that. I am talking about the opportunity to cross examine.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: No one has been deprived of that. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Whether it has weight or whether you want to object to it is another matter.

Go ahead.

The Clerk: Do you want counsel to identify which of the three depositions you are speaking of?

The Court: Yes, I think you should.

Mr. Vaughn: For your assistance counsel, it would be to the deposition to which you referred, the May 23, 1963.

Mr. Coyle: I have a problem here, which officers' [fol. 1863] affidavits are submitted.

Mr. Alsup: At this point Theodore A. Von der Ahe, W. R. Hayden and Charles Von der Ahe.

The Court: Did you get those, Mr. Clerk?

The Clerk: Well, the——

The Court: Get the first one first. Let's get them out and be sure we have them.

The Clerk: Yes.

The Court: That is what we want to be sure of.

The Clerk: I thought he said there were three separate depositions of Von der Ahe.

Mr. Alsup: There were, but counsel refers just to the last one.

The Court: He gave the date May 23, 19——

The Clerk: Here is one taken on May 4th.

The Court: That is not it. Give him the date again. It is May 23, is it?

Mr. Vaughn: 1963, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: Do you have a copy?

Mr. Vaughn: We have the original. As a matter of fact—I apologize, we do have the original.

The Court: All right. The original is now filed with the clerk.

That is the original, Mr. Clerk.

The Clerk: The original of the deposition of Von der [fol. 1864] Ahe.

The Court: Which one, which Von der Ahe?

The Clerk: Theodore A.

The Court: All right.

The Clerk: Taken May 23, 1963. It will——

The Court: That will be copied into the record succeeding where his affidavit is copied.

Mr. Coyle: Correct, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: That deposition has not been signed and notarized. If counsel wishes we will have it——

The Court: Do you wish it, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Alsup: In connection with the——

The Court: Now, the next deposition, the next affidavit—we must get all three of them.

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor, they did not depose any of our industry witnesses.

The Court: The other two Von der Ahes they did not?

Mr. Coyle: We did not depose the other two Von der Ahes.

The Court: All right.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibit BA, is that admitted?

[fol. 1865] The Court: Yes.

(The exhibit referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit BA and received in evidence.)

Mr. Alsup: Attached to the deposition of Mr. Von der Ahe, your Honor, are certain exhibits. And I think we have supplied copies of those exhibits to Mr. Figg and had them marked Exhibit I collectively. And I offer those as well.

The Clerk: This one?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object to those. There are pages and pages——

The Court: But, counsel, if they are part of the deposition and the deposition is going in, how can I understand the deposition without these? I don't think—what was this, on cross examination or direct examination?

Mr. Coyle: Direct examination, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: Direct examination.

The Court: Well, I suppose technically he is right. Upon what theory can we put it in evidence, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, the Government witnesses consistently stated in their affidavits, just as Craun and Mr. Dick testified this morning, they have to be aware of market conditions in the area.

The Court: Is this what the opinion is based on, is that [fol. 1866] what you mean?

Mr. Alsup: In part, yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, of course——

Mr. Alsup: They refer to trade papers, each of them——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I don't object to the trade, to the opinion——

The Court: Well, the basis of his opinion, you know you can always state the basis of your opinion, even though it is hearsay.

Mr. Coyle: But it is hearsay, it doesn't go into evidence, your Honor.

The Court: Well, it goes into evidence but it is not substantive evidence of the events or acts. It is merely the basis for the professional opinion, that is all.

Mr. Coyle: It is not evidence of any——

The Court: That is correct, that is correct. So it is not probative evidence of the facts recited here. It is only what is in support of his opinion. That is all. That is the exception to the hearsay rule.

Mr. Coyle: I think the exception is the opinion, but not the hearsay material. Some of the hearsay material——

The Court: Well, you are getting down to the rule in a condemnation case where some of the State courts have held that he can't give it on direct examination but on cross it [fol. 1867] can be elucidated.

But I think I will admit it here, not as probative evidence of what it contains, but merely what he considered in formulating his opinion. For that purpose only.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit I in evidence. H was admitted, your Honor?

The Court: Yes, that was admitted.

The Clerk: Defendants' H and I in evidence.

(The exhibits marked Defendants' Exhibit H and I were received in evidence.)

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor indicated yesterday that there may be some of these that we would like you to read as a whole, some of these affidavits—I know it imposes a great burden upon you but——

The Court: No, I don't think that is necessary. I think I decided the best thing for me to do, the quickest thing is to read them myself.

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I would like to turn it over now to Mr. Vaughn who understands the facts of the figures and charts and statements, to produce the balance of our evidence.

The Court: Very well.

[fol. 1868] Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I don't know how well I understand the facts and figures and charts, but I will give this a try.

The Court: Now, on the facts, you are talking now about charts, I take it.

Mr. Vaughn: Well, in part. First I would like to start out by offering in evidence the affidavits of defendants' other industry witnesses. These are people who do not operate grocery stores but are suppliers or otherwise engaged in or connected with or intelligible about the retail grocery business.

The Court: They are suppliers of grocery products?

Mr. Vaughn: They are suppliers of grocery products, market consultants and others engaged in the trade.

They include:

Coker.
Charles Chamberlain.

And if I may approach the clerk, your Honor, I have the original and one copy of those affidavits.

The Clerk: I have marked this Defendants' Exhibit BB for identification.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit BB for identification.)

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, we object to the affidavit of the witness Childress because he relates to an incident occurring outside of the Los Angeles Metropolitan area, which would be outside——

The Court: What is the incident, counsel? Tell me. Do you remember what it is?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, availability of the shopping center. He says that he had a location in a shopping center offered to him outside the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, that is not what the affidavit says at all.

The Court: What does it say?

Mr. Vaughn: It actually is a rebuttal affidavit, your Honor, of one of the Government witnesses, Mr. Paul Palmer who has a four-store chain called Country Cousins.

He said in his statement, which purports to summarize his testimony, that small concerns have a difficult time [fol. 1870] getting into shopping centers.

Mr. Childress is a real estate broker admittedly in Ventura, who signed up a shopping center which Von's also wanted and gave it to Country Cousins.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, but it outside——

Mr. Vaughn: And it is rebuttal, because Country Cousins is a concern which operates in Los Angeles metropolitan area. And while specifically it refers to Ventura, I think it is probative and of materiality in connection—particularly in connection with Mr. Palmer's testimony.

The Court: Where is his affidavit? I can't find it.

The Clerk: It is 39, your Honor.

The Court: There is no 39. There is a 38 divided by 39 here, is that the page?

The Clerk: I see the page isn't numbered itself. It has a tab on it which says 39.

The Court: Oh, I see, I see.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, those affidavits were originally prepared not in that form, so the documents do not run in consecutive numbers. That is why we used the tabs.

The Court: Well counsel, what probative value does this have?

Mr. Vaughn: It shows that Mr. Palmer's statement about firms and concerns not being able to get into shopping [fol. 1871] centers was, to this extent, not true.

The Court: Well, it doesn't affect this area though.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

The Court: It is outside of this area.

Mr. Vaughn: It may be so, but we are going into whatever understanding here, and we feel though that this evidence is of materiality because Country Cousins does business in Los Angeles area, the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

If your Honor feels that it is irrelevant for that reason we will withdraw it.

The Court: Well, I am afraid it goes outside—if we start to broaden the scope of the area for one purpose we may run into collateral matters for other purposes.

So I think I had better sustain the objection on that.

Mr. Vaughn: Very fine, your Honor.

The Court: I don't think it has a great deal of weight anyway, frankly.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we also object to——

The Court: Just consider that the objection has been sustained to Childress and I won't read it.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: I have already read it anyway. So I won't read it again.

Mr. Coyle: We also object to certain publications or [fol. 1872] excerpts from publications contained in the affidavit of Mr. Roy King.

The Court: Why are they in there, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know of any excerpts from publications in his affidavit.

The Court: Who is this we are talking about?

Mr. Vaughn: Roy King.

The Clerk: The bottom tab.

The Court: Yes, I have it, 45, Mr. King.

Would you point out to me where they are? I don't find them.

Mr. Coyle: I think I was wrong in that area, your Honor.

The Court: All right, fine.

All right, these will be admitted in evidence then. This is marked now exhibit——

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit BB in evidence.

(Document marked Defendants' Exhibit BB was received in evidence.)

Mr. Coyle: Now your Honor, I would like to offer the affidavit of Mr. William Dover. I have the original and one copy of that and ask that that be marked Exhibit BC.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit BC for identification.

The Court: Going back a moment to BB. When you use the term "other industry witnesses", is there any one classification I can put on here?

[fol. 1873] Mr. Vaughn: No, but the first in the categories are suppliers.

The Court: Suppliers and what else?

Mr. Vaughn: If I may see the original of that—the first five were suppliers.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Childress is out.

The Court: Just give me the category of the others, suppliers and what?

Mr. Vaughn: I can't, there is no category in which the rest of them will fit.

The Court: I will just put "Suppliers and." All right.

The Clerk: BC is marked for identification.

(The exhibit referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit BC for identification.)

The Court: BC—any objection?

Mr. Coyle: No.

The Court: Admitted.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit BC in evidence.

(The exhibit marked Defendants' Exhibit BC was received in evidence.)

The Court: That is the affidavit of Mr. William Dover.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Dover is presently a market consultant. [fol. 1874] But at the time he was with the Los Angeles Examiner Research Department. And he prepared the map which is over on the right-hand side of the courtroom showing the stores of the 37 leading chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area as of June 1961.

I would like to offer, in conjunction with Mr. Dover's affidavit, Exhibits J and K referred to on our exhibit list.

Exhibit J is a statement or a report in narrative form from which is depicted graphically on the map which is Exhibit K.

The Court: The old saying, one look is worth hours of work, it certainly is true, isn't it.

Mr. Vaughn: It certainly is.

The Court: You don't have any way—is that going to be introduced as an exhibit?

Mr. Vaughn: I have just introduced it, your Honor.

The Court: That is what I thought. So if I need to look at it I can get that and look at it.

Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: Admitted.

(The exhibits marked Defendants' Exhibit J and K were received in evidence.)

[fol. 1875] The Court: I don't know that I want to take this with me. This is just a list of names and addresses.

Mr. Clerk, this is an extra copy, is it?

The Clerk: No, that is an original.

The Court: All right.

The Clerk: Do you have another copy?

Mr. Vaughn: We did have another copy, if your Honor would like it.

The Court: I don't know where I will store all this material, counsel. Maybe you had better comply with the rule and file the copy, if you have a copy.

Mr. Vaughn: All right. Would you like an extra copy of all our exhibits?

The Court: No, no.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, we do not have an extra copy of the map and it would cost several hundred dollars to make. I hope we won't have to make an extra copy of that exhibit.

The Court: I certainly won't, counsel. I for one have always believed in frugality in trials. If I had my way about it, there would be a slim record that would go up on appeal.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibits J and K admitted in evidence.

The Court: Counsel, I don't think you need to bother [fol. 1876] with that copy at this time. If you have an extra one you can give it to the clerk at a later time.

Mr. Vaughn: Very well, your Honor.

I also see that I overlooked Mr. Kruger's affidavit. He was one of the other industry witnesses.

Our Exhibit AF which I would like now to offer in evidence. Exhibit AF—Mr. Kruger was an employee of Kroger Company in 1957. He came to Los Angeles at the behest of his employer to look at three grocery chains which Kroger was interested in acquiring.

They were Von's, Shopping Bag and Alexander's. He did a survey of each of the stores of those chains. And these are the conclusions, among other things, that there were no Von's and Shopping Bag stores in competition with each other in 1957, with the exception of two stores in Whittier.

And as to those, there were other stores that were in more important competition than Von's and Shopping Bag were with each other. That is his report, Exhibit AF.

The Court: In other words, this is what he would have testified to if he had appeared here and testified.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct. The affidavit supplements that to some extent.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: That is going only to weight, your Honor. [fol. 1877] The Court: That is right, counsel. It may have no weight, but if it has any weight it is for the court to decide what weight it may have.

Mr. Coyle: Also to relevancy, because it was previous, some three years before this acquisition took place.

The Court: Well, you talk about the Supreme Court says you must get all the conditions leading up to and following. Isn't that what the court says?

Mr. Coyle: Industry structure, your Honor.

The Court: That's right. Well, this is a part of the industry, isn't it?

So I will admit it.

The Clerk: Defendants' AF admitted.

The Court: It comes in two things, it comes in the line of commerce and it also comes in the metropolitan area. So it is in both categories.

I will admit it.

Mr. Vaughn: I also might say this, Mr. Kruger obviously wasn't paid by Von's to make that survey. He was doing it independently.

(The exhibit marked Defendants' Exhibit AF was received in evidence.)

[fol. 1878] Mr. Vaughn: Now, as Exhibit BD, I would like to offer in evidence the affidavit of Dorothy D. Corey. Mrs. Corey is the president of a concern known as Facts Consolidated, doing market research, a market research organization.

She has prepared a number of maps and exhibits and so on which are referred to in our affidavit.

The Court: Any objection, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, the Corey exhibit, also the Kruger exhibit, are subject to this other objection that they go into this store-by-store competition, which was covered by paragraph 46 of the Pretrial Order, and also by the admission that the defendants made in paragraph 6 of their Answer.

So we do object, we feel that this evidence is inconsistent with their answer, now that the pretrial order has been amended.

The Court: I will admit it.

Mr. Coyle: We also have a deposition of Mrs. Corey that ought to be placed in the record.

The Court: You may waive your objection, counsel. Do you want to put it in?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so, your Honor.

The Court: All right. You may put it in. It will be copied in, this affidavit of Dorothy Corey will be copied in the record and following will be the deposition taken [fol. 1879] when she—what date did she give it?

Mr. Coyle: It was a week ago.

The Court: I see. All right.

The Clerk: The affidavit is Exhibit BD, which is in evidence.

(The exhibit referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit BD and received in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, Mrs. Corey in her affidavit refers to a number of exhibits, Exhibits M through R all relate to a study which Facts Consolidated did for Von's and Shopping Bag in October and November of 1959—I beg your pardon, they were retained by O'Melveny & Myers to do a survey to determine the extent of overlap between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores that were nearest to each other in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

What she did was go out and interview people in the Von's and Shopping Bag store parking lots and determine where they did most of their shopping. She then tabulated that in her report, which is Exhibit M.

She then prepared maps—and if I can move over here I can find a copy——

The Clerk: Everything but N is a chart, isn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

She then prepared these maps which are Exhibits M [fol. 1880] through R which plot by dots the location of the customers of Von's and Shopping Bag stores which she surveyed, hopefully depicting the drawing areas of these particular stores, and I think showing that the draw areas of these stores were, in most cases, distinct.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, in deposition we established that each of those dots represents more than one customer, more than one customer interview as part of the sample, but it didn't represent——

The Court: It is nothing but a sample poll, is all it is, isn't that what it amounts to?

Mr. Coyle: That's right, but the dot doesn't represent one customer, it represents a number of customers, 20 or 30 or 40 customers in a given area.

The Court: Well, this is a sample, a sampling program, wasn't it?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: So you can't tell how many it may represent, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: I think you can tell how many it represents because it was sampling customers of a given store and they were figuring customers as to the total number of customers that a store has. If it is a sample then each of those interviews would be representative of a portion of the total patronage of a store.

[fol. 1881] In other words, if the store had 3000 customers and you interviewed 300, then each sample would represent 10 customers.

The Court: I don't follow you, I just don't follow that.

Mr. Coyle: Well, these samples are projections.

The Court: I understand that, but you say they represent——

Mr. Coyle: They did show that one customer would come from that area, but on a projection basis it would represent 20 customers.

The Court: How can you come to that conclusion? I mean, how do you arrive at that?

Mr. Coyle: That is the way projection samples are made. For example, if the sample represents one-tenth of all of the customers of the store, then you interview——

The Court: That part I understand. But I understand you are saying that if they interview one person and then you project it out, prognosis, I guess is what it is, by saying, that, well, that represents so many customers for that area. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: I think that is what it means, yes, your Honor. In other words, it doesn't show that this store is just drawing one customer from that area. It shows that this store, they are projecting this on many customers.

[fol. 1882] The Court: Is that your interpretation, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: Well, I think I will let Mrs. Corey's deposition speak for itself on that score. Obviously they didn't plot the location of every Von's and Shopping Bag customer. They took a sample. And it may be that a particular person living at a particular address is representative of the general community from which other customers are drawn——

The Court: That I understand, that part would be in keeping with what I have been thinking.

But when you start to pin it down to a certain number, then I don't quite understand it.

Mr. Vaughn: Mrs. Corey, as she testified, made no determination of the percentage of samples of the total number of customers; she knows how many she sampled, but she does not know what the total universe was, that is, how many total customers of any Von's or Shopping Bag store had.

But she very adequately explained in her deposition that it was irrelevant for her to know that because it is the size of the sample, not the size of the universe which governs the validity of the sample.

Mr. Coyle: She also testified that the sample was project-able, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. Well, I can see how it may be project-[fol. 1883] able, but on that basis it is a little difficult—in other words, let me see one of those, will you, Mr. Clerk, please.

[fol. 1884] I certainly want to understand it before I start to look at it.

(The exhibits were handed to the court.)

The Clerk: That is Exhibit R.

The Court: Exhibit R. I am looking at now and I find red and green markings.

Now, the red I take it are Von's is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: The green are what?

Mr. Vaughn: Shopping Bag.

The Court: Now it says "Table Depicting the Residences of Von's and Shopping Bag Stores as of December 1959," showing there was little if any overlap in the draw areas of Von's and Shopping Bag stores located in Monterey Park.

Now I take it you say that her deposition shows, both the affidavit and deposition show—there is both an affidavit and a deposition.

Mr. Vaughn: Correct.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: —show that she went throughout these neighborhoods interviewing customers.

Mr. Vaughn: She stood in the parking lot of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores and asked the customers, obvious customers of the store who were in the parking lot various [fol. 1885] questions along the line of, "Where do you do your marketing, where do you do most of your grocery shopping?"

The Court: Now, if there were a thousand customers in a Von's store and she interviewed——

Mr. Vaughn: She interviewed about 300.

The Court: About 300. All right. Then she would take—suppose she got 10 from one area, she would project that out by multiplying 10 times, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: She would put 10 dots on the map at the intersection closest to their residence. In other words, let's suppose that I was interviewed in one of those parking lots and I said that I lived near the corner of Bowling Green and Sunset. She would put one dot at Bowling Green and Sunset.

Now Mr. Coyle is making the argument that that may represent more than one customer.

The Court: It certainly may, and probably does. But I am trying to find out how the projection works, how it works.

Mr. Coyle: If she had projected it, each dot would have, she would have figured out a ratio——

The Court: That is the point, how do you arrive at that ratio. You take the number of people that she interviewed and ratio it to the number of customers.

Mr. Coyle: The total number of customers of the Von's [fol. 1886] store.

The Court: And then from that you conclude that if she hit 10 from one area, that would account for one-tenth.

Mr. Coyle: That is right.

The Court: I see now. Now I understand you.

Mr. Vaughn: But there is no evidence in the record as to how many customers any of these stores had. This is only intended to reflect a pattern of buying in this particular community, not to go down to the last customer and the last dot and show where he lives, but only to give a graphic representation of where most of the customers of these stores——

The Court: It is a sampling to indicate the location of the customers.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: My point is only that one dot indicates more than one.

The Court: Well, it could be, that's right. I quite agree it could be, but just how many I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: And there is testimony in the record that Von's has between three and six thousand customers at Von's stores, so—— [fol. 1887] The Court: By the way, counsel, how do they arrive at how many customers a store of this kind has?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know. Mr. Von der Ahe can testify to that, he testified to that in his deposition——

The Court: Well, they obviously have some method of checking people, I guess.

All right, these will be admitted in evidence.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that is substantially the testimony of Mrs. Corey.

The Clerk: Those are Exhibits M, N, O, P and Q and R in evidence.

(The exhibits referred to were received in evidence as as Defendants' Exhibits M, N, O, P, Q, and R.)

The Court: It might turn out, as a famous poll did back in—the magazine took a poll and showed a complete clear-cut election of Mr. Hoover in 1932. But I think that was the end of the Literary Digest, was that the name of it?

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

Mr. Vaughn: We suggest that these people have learned something since that time, your Honor.

The Court: Maybe it is not to be so sure.

(Laughter in the court room.)

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, Mrs. Corey's affidavit also [fol. 1888] refers to Exhibits S through Z. Those exhibits are prior studies done by Mrs. Corey for Von's, which reflect a number of things about the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, including the draw area of various stores and the intensity of competition in the area generally, the number of stores Von's has to compete with, their number and location and the like.

These have a two-fold significance which shows what it shows. It also shows that the sampling methods which were employed by Mr. Corey in her study for the previous exhibits were substantially similar to those which she had performed in the past and on which Von's and other grocers relied.

The Clerk: S and T are book exhibits. The others are charts.

Mr. Vaughn: No, they are all book exhibits, I am quite sure.

The Clerk: I see.

Mr. Vaughn: The red books there.

Mr. Clerk: I have it U, V, W, X and Y—here they are.

Mr. Vaughn: And, your Honor, we can furnish additional copies of any of these which you might want.

The Court: Well, I don't think it will be necessary, counsel.

Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

[fol. 1889] The Court: They will be admitted.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibits S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, and Z.

(The exhibits referred to were received in evidence as Defendants' Exhibits S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, and Z.)

Mr. Vaughn: Now, your Honor, we tried to approach this problem from another way, and in that connection I would like to offer in evidence under the letters BE the affidavit of Victor Hinson, who is also an officer of Von's.

The Clerk: I have marked Defendants' Exhibit BE for identification.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: We object to the exhibits, but not to the affidavit itself.

The Court: What are the exhibits?

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, Mr. Hinson had the store managers of Von's and Shopping Bag stores which the government said were competing make a list of all of the persons cashing checks at the Von's and Shopping Bag stores, the first 200 persons on a given Saturday and Sunday or over a given period of time.

He then got their addresses from their checks, had his secretary put a pin in these maps at their address. Sometimes he couldn't get—he had too many addresses for the [fol. 1890] number of pins he had, and sometimes each pin represents more than two. But it is intended again to show the pattern and to show that there was no substantial competition between Von's and Shopping Bag stores prior to the merger.

The Court: Any objection, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: We have four of these maps in addition to the lists of checks from which these were prepared. And all of those are lists of addresses—I should say of customers as Exhibit AA, the maps, three of which are over there and one over here (indicating), are Exhibits AD through AE.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, the basis for our objection to this is that it was introduced to show there was little or no competition between Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger.

Our objection is based on the fact that this study was taken subsequent to October, October and December of 1960, which was fully eight or nine months after the acquisition. Obviously there was no competition afterwards. But this doesn't show that there was no competition prior to the merger.

People naturally would go to the Von's or Shopping Bag stores to cash their checks. This was subsequent to the acquisition.

[fol. 1891] The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: And they are purporting to show that this is subsequent to the acquisition, people living in the vicinity of the Shopping Bag stores—Von's and Shopping Bag stores it was then—went to that store to cash their checks, which would indicate that they wouldn't have gone to the other store prior to the merger. Well——

The Court: No, there is nothing—again, it is nothing more than a sampling——

Mr. Coyle: But it was taken subsequent——

The Court: I take it is is just a trend of people, on the theory they are habit-forming, that people go back to the usual place, and even if you change the name of the store they will go back. I take it that is the theory.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes. If I may be heard on this, your Honor——

Mr. Coyle: That is not what it shows, your Honor. The theory of this exhibit is that people who reside in the neighborhood of the Von's store don't go to the Shopping Bag store and cash their checks.

And it was taken after the Shopping Bag stores went out of independent existence.

The Court: Well, the best it could do would be to go to weight, it seems to me, and that would be whether or not the court would decide that human beings are such that as [fol. 1892] a matter of habit they would go back to a Shopping Bag store, even after it had been changed to the name Von's.

Mr. Vaughn: The name wasn't changed, your Honor.

[fol. 1893] The Court: I am saying that even if it had been changed to the name Von's, the people would more or less by habit go back to the same store, wouldn't they, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what people would do, but I know——

The Court: Well, you are a person, you know what you would do, you would go back usually to the same store, wouldn't you?

Mr. Coyle: No, I wouldn't, if two of the chains merged, I would know enough to know that the store closed, that it wasn't the same store.

The Court: That isn't the point, though. But if you went to cash a check, you would go back to the same place that you had known, wouldn't you?

Mr. Coyle: No, these people have check-cashing cards, that is where they got the addresses from anyway, you got it from the cards.

The Court: Well, at best it would prove, it seems to me, an indication, merely a survey showing the trend of human beings, what they were doing in the area.

Mr. Coyle: There is no trend to it, it would show what they were doing at a given time, which was eight months after the acquisition. It shows that eight months after the acquisition the people who lived closest to the Shopping Bag store, formerly Shopping Bag store, went back to the [fol. 1894] Von's-Shopping Bag store to cash their checks because it was closest to their residence.

The Court: I don't know how it shows that, I don't follow you.

Mr. Coyle: That is what it shows, it plots, it shows that people can cash checks, the addresses of the people who cashed checks at the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

The Court: That is what I understand.

Mr. Coyle: But it took the plot of people who cashed these checks nine months after——

The Court: I understand that, too, but I am talking about the question of—for whatever weight it has indicating the habit of the people. Do you think that people change their habits just because they read in the newspapers that there had been an amalgamation of two corporations?

Mr. Coyle: Certainly they do, a housewife isn't going to go five miles away to shop at a Von's-Shopping Bag store when there is one two miles away, your Honor.

The Court: Well, you may be right, I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I mean housewives know when these acquisitions taken place, they know they have the same line of merchandise at both stores.

The Court: Where do you get your haircut? Suppose [fol. 1895] they change the name of the barber shop and had the same barber there, would you go——

Mr. Coyle: That is personal service.

The Court: Well, is personal service involved here?

Mr. Coyle: I am certainly not going to pass a Shell Oil station to go to another Shell Oil station that is maybe five minutes further on.

The Court: Well, I don't know whether you would or not. I have done it.

Mr. Coyle: That is slightly different, there is a different service station operator involved.

The Court: What is the grounds of your objection?

Mr. Coyle: My objection is that this study purports to show shopping habits prior to the acquisition——

The Court: You mean after the acquisition.

Mr. Coyle: It was introduced to show shopping habits prior to the acquisition.

The Court: I don't think it shows that.

Mr. Coyle: That is my objection.

The Court: Well—

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I think Mr. Coyle has a point that goes to the weight of these exhibits. Obviously we couldn't create all of these exhibits before this lawsuit was filed. I think we did pretty good to have Mrs. Corey [fol. 1896] prepare before the lawsuit was ever filed.

I think it is subject to the objection which Mr. Coyle has made, I think the objection should go to the weight.

The Court: Well, I think I will admit it. And I am frank to say the weight, though, may not be too great. I will consider it in the light at the time it was made and in view of counsel's statements I see now your point. It may well not be persuasive of any probative fact.

Mr. Vaughn: Well, there was still Von's and Shopping Bag. I don't know how many of these housewives know there was a merger between Von's and Shopping Bag. I can assure you my wife didn't know until I told her.

The Court: Well, the reason I raised the point, counsel misunderstood me. He thought I was saying that the name had been changed on the store.

I was talking about a suppositional situation where you actually change the name. In other words, there is an acquisition and then you put the name of the acquiring company on the stores. I am wondering even then what customers would do if a store was nearer, whether they would still go to the store farther away and say, well, now that it is owned by the same people I will go to the closest store.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree, your Honor.

The Court: I don't know.

[fol. 1897] Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, the advertising was changed immediately. They published single ads and I am sure that housewives read those ads——

The Court: That could be quite a problem, quite a problem. All right, I will admit it for whatever weight it has.

The Clerk: The affidavit and the four charts?

The Court: And the four charts.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibit BE which is the affidavit. And the four charts——

The Court: Now four charts, I was just talking about one chart.

Mr. Vaughn: No, there were four charts.

The Court: Do they do the same thing?

Mr. Vaughn: The same thing in different areas.

The Court: They will be admitted.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibits BE, AA, AB, AC and AD.

(Documents marked Defendants' Exhibits BE, AA, AB, AC and AD were admitted in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: And AE.

The Clerk: And also AE.

(Document marked Defendants' Exhibit AE was admitted in evidence.)

The Clerk: What was that again now?

[fol. 1898] Mr. Vaughn: AE is the list of names and addresses which was worked from AB through AE on the maps.

The Clerk: Oh, there are five, that's right. This one here is AA.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

The Clerk: That includes AE. Admitted.

The Court: What is this thing you are referring to?

The Clerk: Hadn't you looked at it?

The Court: No. I would like to know what it is.

Mr. Vaughn: Those are lists of names and addresses that were supplied, that Mr. Hinson supplied, supplied to him by the store managers from which he——

The Court: It is nothing more than supporting data, I take it.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, supporting data.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: I have no objection where it goes in or not. I think it is supporting data.

The Court: All right. It is in for that purpose only.

Mr. Vaughn: Now your Honor, I would like to offer as Exhibit BF the exhibit of Roy L. Bouque. This is a sticker which I would like to have——

The Court: With one guess I can guess he is an economist, I take it.

[fol. 1899] Mr. Vaughn: He is a market, market consultant. With the firm of Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery. He has conducted a number of—he has done a number of things for us in this case in an effort to deal with a number of issues.

The first thing that he did was—first of all let me explain that all of this over-all evidence, is subject to certain clarifications, in my opinion. You cannot precisely determine the overlapping area of any given store with any of these surveys. You can get a general impression.

Perhaps the best people to tell you about what these overlaps are are people in the industry, like Mr. Von der Ahe, who has chosen the stores, the sites, many of them in the past, and who knows where his customers come from.

But in order that we could give your Honor every conceivable approach to this problem we had what I think can be fairly classified as theoretical studies. They have concluded, based upon evidence which was satisfactory to them, and which is convincing to me, that each store had a drawing area of from one and a half to two miles. They plotted that on the map.

Then in an effort to—and here is the Garden Grove area—in an effort to—blue is the Shopping Bag and red is the Von's—in an effort then to determine what the drawing area of the store is they considered competing stores of the major chains.

[fol. 1900] They then considered, on overlay No. 2, barriers to traffic which might exist in this theoretical draw area of one and a half to two miles—I might say that those circles around here (indicating on exhibit) represents a draw area of one and a half for the inner circle and the outer circle is a draw area of two miles.

Now these areas to traffic they considered as complete barriers to traffic flowing to a particular store, unless there was evidence to indicate to the contrary——

The Court: By barriers do you mean congestion or something of that kind?

Mr. Vaughn: No, I mean freeways, to which streets dead end into freeways, you can't get through. This is also true in some instances of railroad tracks and rivers, and other barriers, all of which are noted and described in the affidavit, and are depicted on the maps.

They then also took census data—and this shows the various census tracts, the number of people living in the census tract, the number of dwelling units, and they tried to determine how many people were actually living in an area which could be served by both the Von's and the Shopping Bag Stores, taking into account competition and the barriers to traffic.

And they have come up with counts, all of which are revealed in the affidavit and its appendix.

[fol. 1901] Finally, this is done—as you know this case has been on file for about three years, your Honor—and we came to a point where this was pretty out of date. So we had them prepare a final overlay which shows the competing stores which have come into the area since the merger, or since December 1960 actually, which is the final overlay (indicating on exhibit).

By the way, the purple squares are discount houses which sell food. And this shows competition that has come into the area since the merger.

The yellow squares are stores operated by concerns which could not be regarded as major chains.

I also should say that we could not put on this map all of the stores that are in the particular communities of the Von's-Shopping Bag Stores, the task was just too great. So we limited ourselves to stores of major chains, and wherever possible, stores of small concerns.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I object to this exhibit on the ground that—these exhibits on the grounds that the witness Bouque didn't do the work, didn't supervise the work, had nothing to do with the work, and the work was all completed prior to the time he made his affidavit. It was done by two men from New York, Dr. Fabian and another doctor from New York who did the work. And this man Bouque——

The Court: This man who?

[fol. 1902] Mr. Coyle: This man Bouque, B-o-u-q-u-e, who furnished the affidavits—rereading from the deposition, page 10 of the deposition, line 25:

"Q. Who made the original assumption that there was a possible trading area of one and a half to two miles?

"A. As to the individual who made this particular decision I would assume it was made on the basis of a team operation. That is the way we do our work, that you have a man in charge who is the principal in the firm or a partner supervising the job and other staff men. Based on the facts that they gather from observation and from talking to people and from reading and studying, from these facts they develop their conclusions and made their assumptions.

"Q. You say it is generally agreed by the retailers. How many retailers were interviewed in connection with this project?

"A. I am not familiar with the exact number.

"Q. Do you know whether they had a sample or made a survey?

"A. I know that they talked with various retailers about this during the course of the examination. I know the staff was out making interviews. The exact [fol. 1903] number I don't know. These interviews were made by Dr. Fabian.

"Q. Is Dr. Fabian from New York?

"A. Dr. Fabian was from New York.

"Q. And he is employed by Lybrand, Ross Bros. and Montgomery?

"A. He was employed. He is no longer with the firm at this time.

"Q. You state that you have familiarized yourself with their records. How many retailer interviews have you read, did they make reports of these retailer interviews?

"A. None that I am aware of. There is such a mass of data in the file that it fills a couple of file drawers, three file drawer cabinets.

"Q. And in familiarizing yourself with the working papers you never ran across any of these retailer interviews that they made?

"A. No, I did not."

This is the witness that they are introducing in these exhibits, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: As a matter of fact, your Honor, unfortunately both men who were responsible for this project in 1960 are no longer with Lybrand, Ross Bros. and Mont- [fol. 1904] gomery, they reside in New York and they are not available to us. But this was a team effort, they had a team working on it.

Mr. Bouque is a partner of the firm and he testified on deposition further as follows:

"Q. You yourself made no survey or no study in connection with the field work that was done in 1960 because you weren't associated with the project at that time, is that correct?

"A. Since the time I have become involved in the particular studies under discussion here I have reviewed the working papers, familiarized myself with the reports, reviewed the conclusions that were drawn and the assumptions made, and am in complete concurrence with the facts shown by our staff at the time as presented in the affidavit."

He also points out in different instances in his testimony that this is the way accounting firms ordinarily work. You don't have one man do everything, this is a team effort and comes out as a study which the firm—which the partner—Mr. Bouque is a partner in the firm—which the firm stands behind. And I think it ought to be admitted for that reason.

The Court: Well, let's just examine it a moment to find [fol. 1905] out if it is admissible under the rules of evidence.

In every case that I can think of involving accounting most of the work was done by people who do not give the final opinion. The man who gives the opinion goes over facts and figures which are made by others. Isn't that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, sir, and I have cases here——

The Court: And the opinion is based upon many, many items of hearsay.

Now, in eminent domain cases, even there they have assistants who go out and check the distances, check the locations, check many, many things. Many of these expert appraisers take the stand—I remember one that hadn't even been out to the property. Yet their opinions are admissible in evidence.

It seems to me that this question is, first of all, is this man an expert? If he is not an expert, then his testimony is not admissible.

[fol. 1906] Mr. Vaughn: I think he established during the course of his deposition and other wise that he is a management consultant who customarily worked in management consulting fields for Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery to solve any number of problems that might arise that might be referred to them by their clients.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I don't think that this man was qualified as an expert. This is an accounting firm, not a market research firm.

The Court: Some of these accounting firms, you know, do business—for example, I can give you one name—I won't name them—who do, for example, the hotel and restaurant business, who do practically all that type of work. Their opinion as experts, although they are accountants, would be probably better than some of the hotel executives that run hotels.

Mr. Coyle: That may be so.

The Court: In fact they are called in to find out what is wrong with hotels.

Mr. Coyle: This man was not a partner of this firm when that survey was taken——

The Court: That wouldn't matter, counsel. He could still be an expert.

Mr. Coyle: He didn't review the files, he didn't go through anything here, he didn't know what use were made [fol. 1907] of them, if any was made, he wouldn't know the basis for establishing these barriers, he just signed an affidavit that the firm prepared.

The Court: Is this a compilation of information based upon an exhaustive research by the firm.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: It is based upon research that was done under Dr. Fabian's supervision. He is the man that supervised this. He is the research expert who set up this whole program and supervised it. And he would know the basis for all these various conclusions and opinions.

The Court: Well, what you are trying to say, counsel, is that this man is not an expert?

Mr. Coyle: One, he is not an expert.

Two, he didn't do the work, he didn't supervise the work, he had nothing to do with the work. He came in after the work was completed and accepted the conclusions of his predecessor.

The Court: Well, we even permit the government to put in charts of people that sit in the court room here and listen to testimony and then they prepare these charts of what has been testified to which, as far as they are concerned, is pure hearsay. They have no personal knowledge of it. And they let experts get on the stand and explain all those charts.

[fol. 1908] Mr. Coyle: I have no problem with the experts getting on the stand and testifying to charts they have supervised——

The Court: Where is the prejudice in this? Let's find if there is any prejudice. Is there any prejudice here as to your side in this? This document AF, is that what we are talking about, BF?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: What is the prejudice?

Mr. Coyle: The prejudice is that it is hearsay testimony. We took the deposition, we couldn't get an answer from the man, couldn't get answers from the man because he didn't know the work.

Mr. Vaughn: I think you got all the answers.

The Court: Now you say you couldn't get the answers.

Mr. Coyle: No. I asked him how many retailers there were in the area, what were his conclusions based on that a retail chain has a drawing area of one and a half to two miles, and he said he didn't know.

Mr. Vaughn: That is not entirely correct. He said he knew interviews were conducted but he couldn't tell you the specific details about it.

Mr. Coyle: Or how many—he had never seen any of the interview reports, he just talked it over——

[fol. 1909] Mr. Vaughn: He said that he based the two-mile draw area on specific documents as well, the studies, documents that are in evidence here——

Mr. Coyle: He said Dr. Teborn Fabian based it on Dr. Corey's studies.

Mr. Vaughn: I will accept that amendment.

The Court: Is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct. Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery as a firm not working on this project relied in part upon surveys conducted by Facts Consolidated which showed that the vast majority of the customers come within two miles of the store. And it seems to me that if that assumption is incorrect in any case the government is certainly free to show that the draw areas are greater.

The Court: That isn't the question, counsel. The question is whether or not this is a trustworthy document within the meaning of the evidentiary rule, if it meets the test.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

The Court: And it is a question, if all this man has done is just sit down and just go over papers of other people, it does raise some questions.

Mr. Vaughn: It seems to me the——

The Court: Now on an accounting job they are allowed to go over all the books and records, but they are not [fol. 1910] necessarily original records.

Mr. Coyle: But that is a different thing, accounting.

The Court: What is different about it?

Mr. Coyle: Accounting is different. You don't have to make these value judgments.

The Court: Why, that is all accounting is. Don't ever let anybody tell you differently. Accounting is not mathematics, it is labeling. All accounting is is labeling.

Mr. Coyle: That may be.

The Court: You can take $5.80 and wreck a set of books by just labeling it wrong, $5.80, put the wrong label on it and put it in the wrong account and you will never get your books back in balance.

I know a lot of people think to the contrary, but believe me, accounting is labeling.

Well, have you both said all you care to say on the subject?

Mr. Vaughn: I would like only to point out, your Honor, that the cases establish that there is a great liberality——

The Court: There has to be, there has to be.

Mr. Vaughn: In antitrust cases. I think that these documents ought to be accepted subject to Mr. Coyle's objections going to their weight.

[fol. 1911] Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, our objections don't go to weight.

The Court: No, he is objecting on the ground that this man is not presented really as an expert. I think that is his main objection.

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: He is a compiler, he is a compiler. What he is saying is that he has compiled without being an expert.

[fol. 1912] Mr. Coyle: He has hardly even compiled. There are a few figures that he compiled, but generally he didn't compile, he took their conclusions, the conclusions of Dr. Fabian.

The Court: The only trouble about documents of this kind, I don't know whether there is any prejudicial error in it or not. I can't tell without reading it.

Since we don't have a jury it seems to me there ought to be a great liberality in connection with these documents. And I assume that it certainly would be unfortunate to admit a document and have this case reversed because of some admission of some document. The clients would have a pretty expensive ordeal to go through again.

I suppose the way to slow these antitrust cases down is to take away all the deductions so that the expense of the case would not be deductible and charge the cost to the Government. Then maybe we wouldn't have so many of these cases.

You think there is prejudice in this, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I think there is prejudice in hearsay evidence.

The Court: That doesn't follow at all.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, may I——

The Court: There are many, many times hearsay evidence goes in and has no effect on the trier of facts at [fol. 1913] all.

Mr. Coyle: As I say, I think this is again as to that same issue that we have been objecting to all along.

The Court: Well, on that score I will overrule you because I am admitting it on——

Mr. Coyle: I understand that, I understand that. But to that extent I don't think there is any of this exhibit which is prejudicial.

The Court: Oh, all right. I will admit it then.

Mr. Coyle: But on the other hand it is hearsay evidence.

The Court: I will admit it.

Mr. Coyle: I didn't say that——

The Court: I will admit it then, your main objection goes——

Mr. Coyle: I object to this because it is hearsay evidence.

The Court: Your main objection goes to—you change your grounds awful fast, counsel. A moment ago you gave me the impression that you were basing your objection mainly on the fact that it related to evidence having to do with competition between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

Mr. Coyle: You asked me whether I thought it was prejudicial.

The Court: And you gave me an answer.

[fol. 1914] Mr. Coyle: I said any hearsay evidence is prejudicial.

The Court: That just isn't so. Much hearsay evidence has no weight at all, couldn't be prejudicial. That may be the situation here.

Mr. Coyle: If this has no weight——

The Court: Just because it is hearsay doesn't mean it is prejudicial. I think I will—you have convinced me it should be admitted. I think I will admit it, you have convinced me it should be admitted.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibit BF in evidence.

(The exhibit heretofore marked Defendants' Exhibit BF was received in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, that is not all that that affidavit deals with. The maps, we have shown your Honor one. All of the rest of them are substantially the same.

The maps are Exhibits AG, AI, AJ, AK, AL, which deal with different areas. I would offer those exhibits.

The Court: Now are those the over covers that——that is all one exhibit, isn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: No, we have in all——

The Court: That is one exhibit with all of the over covers, that is one exhibit?

Mr. Vaughn: One exhibit, yes, your Honor.

[fol. 1915] The Court: What exhibit is that?

Mr. Vaughn: This particular one is AK. The remainder over here have been marked by the clerk.

The Court: Now, as I understand it this all relates to competition between the stores.

And it is being admitted only on that issue.

Mr. Vaughn: Only on that issue, correct, yes, sir.

The Court: If I understand you correctly, counsel for the Government, you are contending that the court has to decide this on the competition of the entire area.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: So I am going to allow it in evidence for whatever value it may have. I may decide with you, I don't know, I can't tell.

The Clerk: Are the five charts admitted?

The Court: They are admitted.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I might note that we do have a deposition of Mr. Bouque, perhaps——

The Court: That will be admitted also and copied into the record succeeding the affidavit.

Mr. Coyle: I think it definitely shows the hearsay nature of this evidence.

The Court: It may well be that this man's testimony is such, from what you say it will have very little weight, if he has just compiled some things—I don't know [fol. 1916] until——

The Clerk: Will the deposition referred to at this time be copied in, Mr. Bouque?

Mr. Coyle: That is Roy Lawrence Bouque.

Mr. Vaughn: Now, your Honor, we will supply you with another document.

[fol. 1917] Mr. Vaughn: Now your Honor, we will supply you with another document.

During the course of the deposition, Mr. Coyle, ultimately, after we had—I am not criticizing Mr. Coyle because I understand his problem—Mr. Coyle asked Mr. Bouque to provide him with a document which would state whether or not these barriers to traffic were regarded as complete barriers to population going to particular stores. And Mr. Bouque was not able to answer that question in each individual case.

The Court: Now wait a minute, counsel. You have got me confused. You say prevent population, you mean——

Mr. Vaughn: Prevent people from going to, shopping in a particular store.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Vaughn Mr. Coyle's question was would these barriers to freeways, to railroad tracks and other be regarded as complete barriers to people going to this store, and making the determination which was reflected in these exhibits.

The Court: I will anticipate that he said they weren't, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: Well, Mr. Bouque said he didn't know in every case.

So Mr. Coyle said, will you supply us with a letter which would state the facts.

[fol. 1918] And Mr. Bouque has then gone back and reviewed each one of these maps and made his determination. And he has sent a letter, which is addressed to me, which says that they were regarded as complete barriers in every case, unless otherwise noted in a discussion with respect to a particular store in the affidavit.

And Mr. Coyle's question was——

Mr. Coyle: This is what I anticipated, your Honor, that the witness' testimony, if it was read——

The Court: This is just a complete conclusion is what you are saying, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: It indicates—the letter is not by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, is not even signed by this witness.

The witness himself testified that he didn't think these barriers should be complete barriers.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that is a misunderstanding——

Mr. Coyle: You will have to read the deposition.

The Court: Let me see the letter, pass the letter to me, Mr. Clerk.

(The documents were handed to the court.)

The Clerk: The affidavit BF, and five charts, AG, AI, AH, AK and AL——

Mr. Vaughn: I produce this letter, to be fair this helps Mr. Coyle. This is for Mr. Coyle, he was trying after two [fol. 1919] days of depositions——

The Court: I don't think, counsel, it has much weight. I will tell you very frankly it doesn't impress me as having the weight of a neutrino—you know what a neutrino is.

Mr. Coyle: I wasn't objecting to it either, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I will admit it, for whatever weight it may have.

Mr. Vaughn: I was just trying to be fair to Mr. Coyle.

The Court: All right, counsel. I know you want to be fair.

The Clerk: Is it intended to be an exhibit?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, I will—I am willing to offer it as an exhibit.

The Court: It is admitted. Mark it and admit it.

Mr. Coyle: I would suggest it might be copied in after the deposition.

Mr. Vaughn: That would preserve our exhibit list.

The Court: That may be done. Mark it as an exhibit to be copied in after the deposition.

The Clerk: It is Exhibit BG in evidence.

(Documents marked Defendants' Exhibits BF, BG, AG, AI, AH, AK and AL were received in evidence.)

[fol. 1920] The Court: Counsel, I think we had better take a recess. It is 3:20. Let's give the reporter a rest. How much time do you want, ten or fifteen minutes?

Let's make it a 15-minute recess.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 1921] The Court: All right. Proceed, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: To stay with Mr. Bouque, but to move from the theoretical to the statistical, there is no question of the theoretical approach to the problem, there is no question that Mr. Bouque made surveys.

Also Mr. Bouque's affidavit refers to certain statistics concerning the sales, number of stores and market shares of the leading concerns in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Those exhibits which for the most part Mr. Bouque relied on for years for individual companies, which were obtained by the FBI, as counsel for the Government said, and turned over to the defendants under court order, those exhibits are Exhibits AM, AN, and AO, which I now offer in evidence.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we have no objection to that.

The Court: Very well. They will be admitted.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibits AM, AN, and AO in evidence.

(The documents marked Defendants' Exhibits AM, AN and AO were received in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: They purport to show by it the various shares of the market of the leading chains in 1960, taking them all the way back to 1948. That is Exhibit AM. And also the percentage of shares of the market for various [fol. 1922] groups of chains for the years 1950 through 1960, depicting both in tables and graph form.

Now, Mr. Bouque has one more map dealing with one more aspect of his study which determines the broad area of discount houses, which is the evidence as shown, which are a relatively new form of competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Mr. Bouque, with the aid of the security department, took the—well, I am ahead of myself.

First of all, Von's on its own, independent of this case, as I understand it, wanted to know what the draw area of various discount houses were in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

So they went into the parking lots of three of those discount houses and they took down the license numbers of cars in those parking lots.

Then they took a sample of those license numbers and found out the addresses of the people who owned the automobiles.

And they came up with a conclusion which has been depicted by Mr. Bouque graphically on this map, showing by a line stretching out from the discount houses involved the distances which people traveled from their homes to the discount houses.

The Court: Where are the discount houses located?

[fol. 1923] Mr. Vaughn: This is one down here in the Long Beach area (indicating on exhibit). This is a Big A discount house out in the Valley (indicating). And this, I believe, is a CMA discount house down in Anaheim.

And these lines run to the various homes of the individuals whose cars were seen in the parking lots.

Now, Lybrand felt that the sample which was used by Von's security people may not have been adequate. So they went out to the same discount houses and did the same thing. This time they wrote down many more driver's license numbers and vehicle numbers and plotted the information they had obtained from that source out, using again the Department of Motor Vehicle for that information, the draw areas of these discount houses.

I might point out that this time the information obtained by Lybrand generally substantiates what Von's people found in their earlier survey, and shows the discount houses that sell food have a broad and wide drawing area, and that a very substantial number, 75 per cent or so of the customers, I believe that is the correct figure, your Honor, come from within this six-mile draw area.

The Court: Is the evidence going to show here what kind of food is distributed by these discount houses?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor, it will.

The Court: Very well.

[fol. 1924] Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I would say that this exhibit doesn't prove very much in this case because there is no indication whether these cars were driven by people who are buying food, buying clothes or——

The Court: That's right, counsel. I thought of that immediately. It doesn't show very much concerning the food business.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

[fol. 1925] The Court: So as to weight, it doesn't have too much weight.

Mr. Vaughn: Well, that is correct. At least these people were accessible to the discount food markets.

The Court: They were accessible to them, and whatever that was I don't know yet, how big a department in food they have.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. This map I referred to is Defendants' Exhibit AP.

We offer that in evidence.

The Court: That will be admitted—any objection? I take it you are just talking about weight now rather than objection.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: It will be admitted.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit AP in evidence.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit AP.)

Mr. Vaughn: I would like now to turn to the affidavit of Godfrey Lebhar, Godfrey M. Lebhar, L-e-b-h-a-r, which we are offering separately in part because we feel that this is the most important expert opinion and document affidavit in the case.

The Court: You mean on your side, counsel, or in the entire case?

[fol. 1926] Mr. Vaughn: In the entire case, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, we took Mr. Lebhar's deposition in New York. I would like to have that——

The Court: You are certainly entitled to that. So it will be copied, the affidavit will be admitted and copied into the record as heretofore prescribed and then the deposition filed.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. Unfortunately, we don't have the signed original here, I just have that——

The Court: I take it there is no objection on that score?

Mr. Vaughn: I will stipulate it may be introduced.

The Clerk: This is one that has never been filed.

Mr. Coyle: It has never been filed, as far as I know.

The Court: Do you have a copy of that affidavit? If it is that important, you ought to have several copies, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: Of the affidavit?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, we have got many copies of the affidavit.

The Court: I notice this is the first one you haven't [fol. 1927] passed me a copy—I see, here it comes.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibit BH, your Honor.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit BH.)

[fol. 1928] Mr. Coyle: And there were five exhibits to the deposition that I would like to have marked and introduce them.

The Court: Do you want them marked as one exhibit?

Mr. Coyle: I think those probably ought to be marked separately.

The Clerk: Are these documents which are not on your list?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Clerk: I will have to give them new numbers. They will be 74, 75, 76 and 77 and 78.

Mr. Coyle: Why don't you mark all of them.

The Court: You want them separate?

Mr. Coyle: It probably would be more convenient.

The Court: Yes.

The Clerk: They are admitted, your Honor?

The Court: They are admitted.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibits 74, 75, 76, 77 and 78 in evidence.

(The exhibits referred to were marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 74, 75, 76, 77 and 78 and were received in evidence.)

The Court: I usually like to end a case for the record what they are. Maybe counsel can do it, just some brief indication for the record what they are.

[fol. 1929] Mr. Coyle: Government's Exhibit 74 is a table comparing the chains of less than ten stores with the chains of ten or more stores in terms of total number of stores operated in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Government's Exhibit 75 is a comparison of the number of grocery stores and percentage of all grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area between the 40 chains with the most stores in 1953 and the 24 chains with the most stores in 1962.

Government's Exhibit 76 is a table showing the number of grocery stores operated by chains expressed as a percentage of all grocery stores operating in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

And Government's Exhibit 77 is a table showing chains operating in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in the period of 1953 through 1962.

And Government's Exhibit 78 is Mr. Lebhar's——

The Court: I didn't know there was another document, is there 78?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, you marked it.

The Clerk: I did.

The Court: All right. Government's 78 is admitted.

Mr. Coyle: That is Mr. Lebhar's deposition.

The Court: They are all admitted.

The Clerk: Governments Exhibits 74, 75, 76, 77 and 78 [fol. 1930] in evidence.

The Court: Counsel, now do you wish those copied into the record, is that what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: I haven't said that, your Honor. I don't think it is necessary to copy them into the record.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Vaughn: We have objections to all of those exhibits.

The Court: I have already admitted them. You are coming around rather late.

Go ahead, I will withdraw the admission and hear your objection.

Mr. Vaughn: The objections are they are argumentative and that they misstate facts.

Mr. Coyle: They are all referred to in the deposition, your Honor, by the witnesses.

Mr. Vaughn: And the objections were noted in the depositions.

The Court: Well, you say, when you say they misstate the facts, that is a question that goes to the trier of the facts, doesn't it?

Is this——I don't have the deposition, but these facts that are set forth here, these figures, these comparisons they call them, whose figures are they?

Mr. Vaughn: They are figures taken from Mr. Lebhar's [fol. 1931] tables by the Government. And the Government treated certain exhibits based on the tables.

The Court: I know, but did he testify to these?

Mr. Vaughn: He was asked about them and he was able to testify that certain figures were added up correctly. And that is about all he was able to do.

Mr. Coyle: And that they came from his work papers, his affidavit.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I really think our objection is directed primarily to the documents, and the only way I have of identifying is to say 1 and 2——do you know what number that is?

The Court: I will pass them back so you can——

The Clerk: That is 75.

Mr. Vaughn: 75.

The Court: 75.

Mr. Vaughn: The Government has two columns there——

The Court: You had better identify it for me.

[fol. 1932] Mr. Vaughn: 75 is correct.

They have attempted to compare there the 40 chains with the most stores in 1953, their number of stores, and the 24 chains with the most stores in 1962.

Now, that isn't misleading because the first column refers to Mr. Lebhar's tables. Those are all concerned with two or more stores.

While the next column refers in Mr. Lebhar's tables to all concerns with 10 or more stores.

I think I have stated that correctly. So you are comparing apples and oranges, and it is too argumentative.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, we are just restating Mr. Lebhar's affidavit. That is exactly what the affidavit says.

Mr. Vaughn: It gives the impression that there were fewer chains in 1962, that is, concerns with two or more stores, than there were in 1953. And that is contrary to Mr. Lebhar's testimony.

Mr. Coyle: It shows just what Mr. Lebhar's figures show.

The Court: Well, I can't tell, counsel, without resorting to the testimony. And I think that is probably a question for the trier of the facts, isn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, I would be willing to have my objection noted in the record.

[fol. 1933] The Court: All right. I will admit them. These are all admitted, including 75.

The Clerk: That is 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78——

The Court: I can't tell by looking at it whether it means anything at all. It would have to be correlated in the testimony to what he has testified to.

(The exhibits referred to were received in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibits 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78.)

Mr. Vaughn: I looked at the——

The Court: All right. It can't hurt you.

Mr. Vaughn: We have one other affidavit, and only one other. And that is the affidavit of W. D. Hayden. But counsel have not read the revised affidavit of Mr. W. D. Hayden, and they have asked us to postpone offering it until tomorrow, which we are willing to do.

We do have certain other exhibits which have no affidavits. Those are Exhibits AS through AW, reflected on our exhibit list.

The Court: Suppose we, counsel——Mr. Coyle, as he calls these off, unless you object, I will admit them. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Call them off, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: AS, which is Plaintiff's——

[fol. 1934] The Court: Now, go slowly because the clerk has to mark them.

Admitted.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit AS.)

[fol. 1935] The Court: Now, identify what they are, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: AS is plaintiff's answer to supplemental interrogatories 6-A through 6-D of Defendant Von's Grocery Company.

The Court: Let me see that.

(Exhibit was placed before the court.

Mr. Vaughn: We asked them who might be affected by this merger and they set up a list of every grocery store in Los Angeles County and Orange County.

The Court: This is an answer to what?

Mr. Vaughn: Defendants' answer to plaintiff's supplemental interrogaroties.

The Court: This is just a list of every store in the area?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: It doesn't prove anything, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: I think it proves where each store is.

Mr. Coyle: We have no objection to it.

The Court: All right. It is admitted.

The Clerk: AS admitted.

[fol. 1936] Mr. Vaughn: Exhibit AT is defendants' answer to plaintiff's interrogatory No. 2-F, which I offer in evidence.

By the way, I notice on Government's Exhibit 72, we have to go through these one by one.

The Court: You don't have to do it now, you can get familiar with them and you can offer them all at one time, if you wish, counsel, and you can specify which ones you object to. Let's try to correlate some of these things.

[fol. 1937] Mr. Vaughn: I would be happy to, your Honor.

The Court: You don't need to do it any further. Go ahead and offer them all.

Mr. Vaughn: AU, which is Certified Groceries 1962 annual report.

AZ——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we object to that.

The Court: You object to that?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: On what ground?

Mr. Coyle: On the ground it is self serving, a self-serving answer to one of our interrogatories. It is an answer to our interrogatories. That is not evidence, your Honor, we want to put in.

The Court: Well, it would only be evidence, counsel, if you offered it.

Mr. Vaughn: We can do that, your Honor.

The Court: Well.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Von der Ahe, Theodore Von der Ahe.

The Court: Do you think it is necessary, counsel, to require this?

Mr. Coyle: I understand he is going to be a witness anyway.

The Court: I know, but if we can save any time on this wouldn't it be better to do it? Is there any harm coming [fol. 1938] to you to admit it, if you apply the rules of evidence so we do not have to, but it—

Mr. Coyle: It may be so, your Honor.

The Court: But do you have any serious objection about this?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: What is the problem?

Mr. Coyle: It is a self-serving statement.

The Court: Well—

Mr. Coyle: It is not evidence.

The Court: That isn't my point. The rules of evidence, as I understand them, it doesn't hurt to use this method, even though it may be self serving, rather than have him get on the stand and go through all of it.

Mr. Coyle: He is going to be on the stand anyway. If you want to admit the document now I will ask him about it tomorrow. That is all right.

The Court: You know, I usually allow self-serving declarations in defense in criminal cases, which is contrary to the rules. I always thought that if a man could acquit himself by a self-serving declaration he is entitled to be acquitted.

Mr. Coyle: I think you should admit the pleadings, have the pleadings introduced by the parties that made the pleadings as evidence, if you are going to do that.

[fol. 1939] The Court: Now, you have mentioned another ground. You are talking about self serving, these are self serving, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I will admit it in evidence.

The Clerk: That is AT in evidence.

(Document referred to was admitted in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit AT.)

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, the next one is AU, the last one of the documents which contain various information including merger data.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: No objection.

The Court: Admitted.

(Document marked Defendants' Exhibit AU was admitted in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: And the last one which I think I overlooked before is Exhibit L which contains physical data taken from records which concern doing business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, Safeway, A & P, American Stores, Food Fair, Mayfair, Lucky Stores.

I offer that Exhibit L in evidence.

The Court: Any objection?

Mr. Coyle: No objection.

The Court: Admitted.

[fol. 1940] Mr. Vaughn: Thank you, your Honor.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit L in evidence.

(Document marked Defendants' Exhibit L was admitted in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: That is all we have.

The Clerk: Your Honor, the court didn't actually rule on AN series, you didn't say they were admitted.

The Court: Yes, I marked them.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' AN, AT and AU.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think we objected to those anyway, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, may I turn the lectern back to Mr. Alsup.

The Court: Yes, indeed.

[fol. 1941] Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I call Mr. Theodore A. Von der Ahe.

THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?
The Witness: Theodore A. Von der Ahe.
The Clerk: Would you spell your name, please?
The Witness: V-o-n d-e-r A-h-e.

Direct examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Von der Ahe?
A. At 5220 West Second Street in Los Angeles.
Q. And what is your business or occupation?
A. I am the president of Von's Grocery Company.
Q. And would you state what your educational background is?
A. I went to Loyola High School, I went to Loyola University, I studied law at night and I received a Bachelor of Law degree and Master of Law degree.
Q. And what is your experience in the grocery business, [fol. 1942] Mr. Von der Ahe?
A. I was virtually born into the grocery business. My grandfather and father were both in the grocery business. I worked in the grocery business after school, on holidays and on Saturdays. I worked full-time, beginning in 1927. And I worked as a truck driver, warehouse manager, buyer, and I have been in practically all phases of the grocery business for the last 37 years on a full-time basis.
Q. When did you start your own company, Mr. Von de Ahe?
A. In 1932.

The Court: You picked a very happy year, Mr. Von de Ahe. 1932 was a very booming year, as I remember it, is that right?
The Witness: That's right, your Honor, yes. The very bottom of the depression.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Where was your first store located?

A. In Lynwood.

Q. What other stores were in that area at that time that you competed with?

A. There were half a dozen independents and one Pay and Take Store, which was a price-cutting unit for the Safeway Stores.

Q. Were you able to keep, to compete with the Safeway Store successfully?

[fol. 1943] A. Yes, I did.

The Court: What did you open, one store first, Mr. Von der Ahe?

The Witness: We opened one store, your Honor, yes.

The Court: What was the size of the store, square footage, do you remember?

The Witness: The store was 4500 feet. It was 50 feet wide by 90 feet deep.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. And thereafter, as your affidavit describes, Mr. Von der Ahe, you began to build chains, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, he is leading this witness.

The Court: Well, counsel, I don't think there will be any harm. We all know he built the chain. I can answer that myself.

Go ahead.

Mr. Alsup: I was trying to shortcut, your Honor.

The Court: I don't mind leading on this score.

The Witness: I might say, our first store, we operated the grocery department only. The produce department was leased out and also the meat department.

Our second store, which we opened in 19—the first part of 1933 was a similar arrangement. We had only the grocery [fol. 1944] department, very small store.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Was that a common practice in Los Angeles in those days?

A. In those days it was.

Q. And when did that practice change, if it did?

A. As the persons who were accumulating a few stores got to be operating small chains, they realized that it was to their benefit to operate all of the departments, because the lessee many times would take a free ride on the merchandising activities of the grocery man.

So we, in the interest of a having better operation, would operate the delicatessen departments ourselves and then the produce departments, and finally the meat departments, which were the last to be taken over.

Q. You testified you started out in 1932 with your first store. Do you know any other concerns in this area which did the same thing at about the same time?

A. Yes. This was the time when most of the local chains originated. I can think of Market Basket that started about the same time. Shopping Bag started about the same time. Alexander's about the same time, Carte Bros.

There was a firm called Miller & Huck, there was the Thriftmart started about the same time. Most of them [fol. 1945] began their existence during the early 1930s.

Q. Can you think of any concerns which have started in more recent years and have grown larger?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1946] Q. Would you name them, please?

A. This is an ever-changing business, and firms drop off and new firms enter the market.

But I can think immediately of good chain operations: Shoppers Markets, operated by Mr. Fadderman. I can think of the Hughes Markets, operated by Mr.—I might say a first cousin of our counsel at bar, Mr. John Hughes of the government. I can think of Joe Goodnight, who operates the Michaels Markets.

I can think of Ted Wood, who operates the Pantry Markets.

There is many more, people can get into the grocery business if they have the desire and are willing to do so.

Q. Do you know when Joe Hughes got started, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. I believe it was around 1952.

Q. And how about Mr. Fadderman of Shoppers Markets?

A. Mr. Fadderman had one market in the late 1940's. But I believe he made his big move in the early 1950's.

Q. And you mentioned Ted Wood of the Pantry Markets. How large is that chain?

A. Ted Wood used to work for Alpha Beta Stores. And I would say about 10 years or so ago he left Alpha Beta and started the Pantry Markets, which is now 10 or 11 stores, if I remember.

[fol. 1947] Q. And you mentioned Joe Goodnight of Michaels Markets. When did they get started?

A. Joe Goodnight started just recently. I believe it was around 1959 or 1960. He operates seven markets already —and very good ones, I might add.

Q. Now, prior to the time you commenced your business in 1932, Mr. Von der Ahe, your father had a chain of stores, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. How many stores were in that chain?

A. He had a chain of 87 stores.

Q. And would you describe the stores?

A. These were all very small stores, which consisted of only three departments, usually meat department, produce department, and grocery department.

My father's chain operated only the grocery departments in those stores. All the meat departments were leased out and all the produce departments were leased out.

Q. And can you tell us what the gross annual sales of your father's chain of 89 grocery departments were?

A. For that year 1928 the sales were just slightly over three million dollars in all 87 stores.

Q. Can you tell us what——

The Court: Incidentally, may I interrupt?

[fol. 1948] The Witness: Yes.

The Court: What was the profit margin at that time?

The Witness: Your Honor, I would have to make a guess, but I would say it was in the neighborhood of 2 to 3 per cent.

The Court: The reason I asked the question is because it seems to me that this enters into the competitive feature, that is, the increase in earnings or the decrease, it seems to me it is rather an appropriate and important factor.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, what did your father do with his chain of 87 stores?

A. He sold them to MacMarr, Inc. That is M-a-c-M-a-r-r.

Q. When was that?

A. Effective January 1, 1929.

Q. And what happened to MacMarr?

A. MacMarr was subsequently acquired by Safeway Stores.

Q. To your knowledge, was that the beginning of Safeway in this area?

[fol. 1949] A. No, it was not exactly the beginning of Safeway. I believe Safeway began here by acquiring the Sam Selig operation. And then the Piggly-Wiggly operation, and then the MacMarr operation.

Q. I see. Do you have any knowledge as to how many stores Safeway had in this area in 1932 when you started out in your own organization?

A. I believe it was in the neighborhood of around a thousand.

Q. And how many stores, to your knowledge, does Safeway have in this area today?

A. I would make a guess of about 225 stores.

Q. Now, you have stated in your affidavit, Mr. Von der Ahe, various reasons for the merger with Shopping Bag and various other matters dealing with competition in this area. And I will not ask you to reiterate all those matters. I believe there are some matters in your affidavit which require correction, however——

The Court: Before you get to that, may I ask a question, please?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Whether it has relevancy or not—it has relevancy probably, how much weight it may have I don't know.

[fol. 1950] Do any of these stores that you have mentioned give credit? Are they all cash and carry?

The Witness: Which ones have I mentioned, your Honor?

The Court: Well, you have mentioned quite a few over a period, going back to the beginning with MacMarr.

The Witness: Well, I don't know——

The Court: Are they all cash and carry?

The Witness: To the best of my knowledge, they were all cash and carry stores. None of them gave credit.

The Court: I would like to ask this: Is it a practice among the smaller independents to be on a cash and carry, or do they have a charge?

The Witness: I believe most of them are on cash and carry.

The Court: Cash and carry?

The Witness: We have a few credit and delivery stores, but they are more or less for the fancy stores which——

The Court: Jergenson's and those?

The Witness: Jergenson's and Blazers and so forth, that is more or less the fancy stores——

The Court: Jergenson's and that type.

The Witness: They were credit and delivery——

[fol. 1951] The Court: How many stores of that type, Mr. Von der Ahe, would you say—if you know—would there be in this area? I mean now the area of, the metropolitan area. You know what I mean?

The Witness: Of the credit and delivery stores?

The Court: Yes. Do you have any idea?

The Witness: A rough figure would be about 20, your Honor.

The Court: Is that all, 20?

The Witness: That would be a rough figure.

The Court: And generally speaking, how many units do they have, one or more?

The Witness: Well, I am saying the total number of units would be 20.

The Court: That is for the whole of Orange and Los Angeles Counties?

The Witness: It is just a guess, but I couldn't think of any more than that.

Mr. Alsup: I might add, your Honor, I understand

Jergenson's has about 10 stores. I don't know if they are all in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

The Court: I doubt if they are, counsel. But I just wanted to get a sort of a sidelight on the——

Mr. Alsup: Yes. It may interest your Honor that the deposition of the witness, the government witness Craun, [fol. 1952] who testified this morning, indicated that 10 per cent of his business is credit business.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Alsup: At page 11, line 16 of Mr. Von der Ahe's affidavit, your Honor, there is reference to the government exhibits. And at the time the affidavit was given, the government exhibits bore different numbers. I wonder if we could correct that——

The Court: I think you counsel can do that without the witness having to do that, can't you, just correct it for the record.

Mr. Alsup: I believe that the exhibts referred to on page 11, line 16, should be re-numbered 33 and 34.

Is that right?

The Court: You mean they have been re-numbered——

Mr. Alsup: They have been re-numbered 33 and 34.

The Court: What are the exhibits, counsel? I have a list here, I can look at it—these are the defense exhibits or the government exhibits?

Mr. Alsup: Government exhibits.

Mr. Coyle: Exhibit B-8, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: It should be 33 and 34. No, 34 and 35.

The Court: Well, 34—33 is J. Marshall—you said [fol. 1953] 33?

Mr. Alsup: I said that, your Honor, and——

The Court: 34 is J. Marshall, so it couldn't be that, could it?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Von der Ahe in his affidavit makes reference to certain government exhibits, and he refers to what were know as government's Exhibits B-4 and B-5 at that time. I believe they are now 33 and 34, Mr. Coyle.

Mr. Coyle: Which page of the affidavit are you on?

Mr. Alsup: Page 11, line 16.

Mr. Coyle: 34 and 35?

The Court: Now, counsel, you will have to speak up because the reporter has to get it.

Mr. Coyle: 34 and 35.

Mr. Vaughn: Is that B-4 and B-5?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: According to my record it is 33 and 34.

Mr. Alsup: Well, if your Honor will permit us, we can make the physical corrections in the affidavit tonight.

The Court: I have no objection if counsel doesn't.

[fol. 1954] Mr. Coyle: I was mistaken. It is 33 and 34.

The Court: You want to correct it in the affidavit?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: The clerk will then permit them in the affidavit to make that correction, and initial it.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think we have corrected it, all of our affidavits, to show the new numbers also.

The Court: That is perfectly all right. And counsel, you do the same.

The Clerk: You said 33 and 34?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Clerk: The same as Mr. Vaughn said?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Clerk: I think they are in agreement as to what it should be.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Clerk: Is that right?

The Court: Yes, that's right.

The Clerk: It should be 33 and 34. Do you want me to make that change?

The Court: Yes, you can make it. You can make it.

The Clerk: That is on line 16, page 11, of his affidavit, [fol. 1955] is that right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, at page 31 of Mr. Von der Ahe's affidavit, he refers to an exhibit which was prepared by the government Dr. Mueller which listed purported acquisitions between 1948 and 1958 by various chains in this area. And at the time Mr. Von der Ahe's affidavit was prepared, that exhibit which Dr. Mueller prepared listed an acquisition by Thriftimart of a store from its wholly-owned subsidiary.

Since the time of this affidavit, Dr. Mueller's exhibit has been changed, and therefore it would seem to me that we should strike out the sentence commencing at line 10 and ending on line 12 of Mr. Von der Ahe's affidavit, because otherwise it would not make any sense in relation to Dr. Mueller's new exhibit.

Mr. Coyle: I have no objection, your Honor.

The Court: All right. The clerk will do it—do you want the clerk to do it?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, if you would, please.

[fol. 1956] The Clerk: What page?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I would make the suggestion——

The Court: Just a moment.

Mr. Coyle: I would make the suggestion that maybe we could edit these things out of court and submit the edited versions.

The Court: I should think probably you can. Are there many of these, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: That is the last one, your Honor.

The Court: All right. The problem is over.

The Clerk: You want lines 10, 11 and 12—how far down on line 12? Is that under the caption Thriftimart?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Clerk: Beginning "I have noted"?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: That is to go out down to where?

Mr. Alsup: Down to the end of the sentence.

The Clerk: To the end of the sentence. Want me to make the change?

The Court: Yes, please.

The Witness: That is Exhibit BA, your Honor.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, you were in court today?

[fol. 1957] A. I was.

Q. You heard the testimony of Mr. Richard Dick and Mr. Craun, Kenneth Craun?

A. I did.

Q. These gentlemen testified, Mr. Von der Ahe, that Von's has a competitive advantage by reason of its ability to make quantity purchases. And I ask you whether, in your opinion, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag in March of 1960 gave you any greater competitive advantage than you had prior to the merger?

A. The answer is absolutely not.

Q. Would you state your reasons, please

A. The Von's Grocery Company, prior to the merger, was able to buy in the largest wholesale quantities to get the maximum discount.

So, too, the Shopping Bag Food Stores were able to buy—I am speaking of dry groceries now—in the largest wholesale quantities, or carload lots, as we call it, which also enabled them to get the maximum discount.

So as the result of the merger there has been no additional advantage to Von's in the purchase of food stuff.

Q. Would you state, Mr. Von der Ahe, what the requirements are for membership in and service by Certified Grocers of California?

A. Certified Grocers will accept for membership any [fol. 1958] firm who will purchase groceries from them, make the deposit and—which is normally a two weeks, approximately a two weeks purchase, which is a deposit required to just guarantee the account.

But beyond that I know of absolutely no restrictions to become a member of Certified.

Q. Mr. Dick testified this morning that there must be some advantage to you in buying direct or otherwise you would make all your purchases from Certified, or words to that effect. Would you state what the fact is?

A. I might say, Mr. Alsup, that at the present time we are members of Certified Grocers. So is Shopping Bag, or so was Shopping Bag prior to the merger.

The advantages in having our own warehouse have absolutely nothing to do with being able to buy groceries at a lower price. The advantages of having the warehouse are purely related only to the procurement and flow of groceries to the stores. In other words, a maintaining and control over inventory.

Q. I think you indicated once before——

The Court: May I interrupt, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: First, will the reporter read that answer back, please.

(The answer was read.)

[fol. 1959] The Court: I would like to ask this question —I take it inventory control is a very important item, is it?

The Witness: Your Honor, when you have more than several units it becomes a matter of concern to management, control of inventory, yes, sir.

The Court: Well, I take it in merchandising buying is just as important as selling, is it?

The Witness: It used to be, but buying is now very stereotyped.

The Court: Is that right?

The Witness: Absolutely. More firms are going over to electric data processing automatic buying, which is just routine re-ordering. And the merchandising through the stores is the important thing.

The Court: May I ask this, have items become so stabilized that the entrances in the market are fewer now, fewer new items enter the market?

The Witness: There are a lot of items being introduced into the market all the time, your Honor.

The Court: Well, how do you go about——

The Witness: Some of them take hold and result in repeat business for the manufacturer and many of them die by the wayside immediately.

The Court: How do you go about determining the [fol. 1960] purchase on these groceries that are added from time to time, what do you do? Try it out on the basis of some formula, advertising or what?

The Witness: It depends on who is vending the product. For example, new items which have been introduced by firms such as Procter and Gamble, or Campbell's Soup or Pillsbury, or standard brands, General Foods, we know immediately——

The Court: Tell that gentleman to take that pipe out of his mouth—take that pipe out of your mouth and retire from this courtroom.

Go ahead.

The Witness: We know immediately if an item is being introduced by these major producing concerns that they will support it with advertising, point of sale material, and they will actually pre-sell the item for us. And all we have to do is stock it on our shelves.

On the other hand, if the item is introduced by a small manufacturer, it is doubtful—maybe it only substitutes or just adds on to an inventory of other labels of similar products, we wait until we are assured that the product will sell in our store.

The Court: Well, may I ask you this, suppose you introduce a new product, how and when do you determine to discontinue it, it it is not a success?

[fol. 1961] The Witness: We take several things into consideration. The movement—and we like to think that an item should move at least one case per week per store—I will admit that we have many items that sell much slower than that. As a matter of fact, your Honor, only 5 per cent of the items in our inventory—and I am speaking of grocery departments now—sell more than one case per store per week. So that we have a large complement of items that do not move too fast.

But when movement gets so slow that it does not justify space in the warehouse, and the gross margin is not sufficient to handle the cost and there are other items that will substitute for it, then we do discontinue the item.

The Court: Well, I take it you run into a considerable number of those items, don't you?

The Witness: We discontinue hundreds of items every year, yes, sir.

The Court: Are you now using a computer system, in other words, a card system computer to keep up with the inventories?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Based on your years of experience in the grocery [fol. 1962] business, Mr. Von der Ahe, do you have any opinion on whether a competitive effectiveness of a particular store depends upon the size of the chain with which it may be affiliated?

A. My opinion is that the quality, or the effectiveness of the store bears no relationship to the number of stores within the chain that it might be affiliated with.

Competition—if I may add this—is on an area basis and a store-by-store basis, within the vicinity of the customer.

And it is the power of that particular store to attract customers within that one area that determines whether it is going to be successful or not.

Q. Your affidavit states, Mr. Von de Ahe, that the chains have certain advantages and the single store operators have certain advantages. Would you relate what, in your opinion, are the competitive advantages of the single store operator?

A. I believe the single store operator has many advantages, and I can speak from experience, having been a single store operator.

I would say first of all that because of Certified Grocers of California, and because of Orange Empire and Spartan and others, including Smart & Final, a grocer is able to buy his merchandise as low, or in some cases—because of drop shipment arrangements—lower than the chain can have the merchandise in its own store.

[fol. 1963] So I say there is no question but what the independents can own his dry groceries as low or lower.

The independent has the advantage of personal selection on meat products which he buys, and that is very important because no two carcasses are the same. And if a man knows his business he can personally select carcasses which will cut a better percentage than those which a chain gets when they buy the entire lot.

The same thing is true in produce. The right to inspect or select and inspect results in a lesser degree of waste and spoilage, and he is able to actually put in a better produce, if he is of a mind to.

The independent has the advantage of personally supervising his operation by staying on top of it all of the time, with a personal interest in his customers, and becoming a part of the community in which he operates, which is a very tough obstacle to overcome when you are trying to keep against him with a chain with its cold personnel and personnel who have not too much interest in the business.

There are other advantages in being an independent because—I can think of Gilson, who just a year or so ago opened a market out in Encino which is already reputed to be doing seven million dollars, he is an independent operator, he has two stores with a combined total of about ten [fol. 1964] million dollars.

Now, these are boys who have worked hard, they have had vision. But they want to be independent because they know that they just dominate that area as independents.

Q. You mentioned drop shipments, Mr. Von der Ahe. That is another one on me. Will you explain that, please?

A. I will be glad to. A drop shipment is a buying arrangement whereby a seller will deliver a small quantity of merchandise to a member of Certified or Spartan or Orange Empire. And the cost of that merchandise is the same as Certified's cost in their warehouse.

Certified or Orange Empire or Spartan retain the 2 per cent cash discount—if that is on the invoice—and if it is not there mark the goods up 2 per cent. But the end of each six months period when they remit their patronage dividend, that full 2 per cent is rebated to the store.

So the actual result is this—and I would like to give you an example, let's say a store buys 25 cases of tuna, drop ship. The price would be, let's say, $16.00 a case, we will say. Certified buying 5,000 cases still would pay $16.00 a case for that tuna. This merchant has it delivered to his store in lots of 25 cases for $16.00.

The Court: You mean he gets the advantage of delivery expense?

[fol. 1965] The Witness: He saves all of Certified's mark-up, your Honor.

The Court: How about the cartage, there is no cartage charge?

The Witness: No, sir.

The Court: What do you do, pick it up yourself or do they deliver it to you?

The Witness: We do have some drop shipment arrangements and we also have it delivered to our warehouse, which we redistribute.

[fol. 1966] The Court: I see.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. In a case when you had it delivered to your warehouse and you redistribute it, you have the cost of redistribution?

A. We have the cost of operating a warehouse, plus the cost of storing and redistributing.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, there was a period——

The Court: Counsel, I think we have come to the time to recess. Is this an appropriate time?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I would like to just ask one question before we do.

What about the situation of a store, Von's Store, Shopping Bag, or Safeway, competing with an independent, insofar as having a greater number of items, and its effect upon a prospective customer who would say, "Well, I would rather go to Safeway because I get a greater selection than I would have if I went to the average independent." I would like to have your comment on that.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I believe that that would be a question that the independent himself could resolve, if he chose to. He can have more items than any Safeway, Ralph's or Von's, if you please, if he wants to buy them. [fol. 1967] Certified has many more items and labels—

The Court: That takes capital, though, doesn't it?

The Witness: It takes capital.

The Court: Tell me this, what kind of capital is involved in an independent store comparable to one of your stores? Forgetting the building, I mean the inventory.

The Witness: The inventory in a store can be manipulated and adjusted, and I have to say frankly that we did, when we were under-capitalized and running one store, we made displays out of corn flakes and Quaker Oats and bulky things that looked big, and there was not too much money invested.

If you want to make displays out of things like salmon at a dollar a can, or Spam or cartons of cigarettes, you are going into more money. It is a question of how you manipulate——

The Court: Yes, I understand. But assuming the normal circumstances, what would you say—let's take one of your stores, one of the Von's Stores, what normally is the inventory in one of those stores, in dollars?

The Witness: Our inventories, your Honor, run from $40,000.00 to $150,000.00.

The Court: I see.

[fol. 1968] I think at this time, counsel, we had better take our recess.

I take it from the way it looks we will finish it tomorrow, is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: I would think so, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: I think so, your Honor.

The Court: I wish that you gentlemen—I know that you have read all these affidavits, but I wish that you could impart that knowledge to me without making it necessary for me to read them. I suppose that is one of the problems of sitting in this particular position.

Do you have any idea how there could be a shortcut?

Mr. Coyle: I will think about it tonight, your Honor, and maybe we will have an idea tomorrow.

The Court: All right. Otherwise I will have to go through all of them.

Mr. Alsup: As you know, we prepared a summary, your Honor, and while we think they are all good——

The Court: But I don't want to have one of you come in after I have arrived at a decision and say, "Well, the judge didn't read all of these affidavits and all of these documents"—you know, the winning side doesn't complain, it is the loser that always complains.

So at the moment I am beginning to believe I will have [fol. 1969] to read all of them.

Mr. Alsup: Reading the government's affidavits from industry witnesses is easy, because they are stereotyped.

The Court: I see. All right.

We will stand in recess until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow.

(Whereupon, at 4:34 o'clock p.m., Wednesday, June 12, 1963, court was in recess until 10:00 o'clock a.m., Thursday, June 13, 1963.)

[fol. 1973] LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, 10:00 A.M.

The Court: All right, gentlemen.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, we call Mr. Von der Ahe to the stand.

THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, the witness on the stand at the time of the adjournment, resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Direct examination. (Continued)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, yesterday we were discussing Certified Grocers. Can you tell me if Von's, your company, ever was a member of Certified Grocers?

A. I didn't hear the whole question.

Q. Can you tell me if Von's was a member of Certified Grocers?

A. Yes.

Q. When did it become a member of Certified Grocers?

A. I believe the year was around 1934, when we first applied for membership and were accepted.

Q. And how long did you remain a member of Certified Grocers?

A. We remained a member until 1949.

Q. Did you have any position in Certified Grocers, official position?

[fols. 1974-1975] A. I was a director from approximately 1937 until 1949. And I was the chairman of the board from 1945 until 1949.

Q. Would you state the reason why your company withdrew from Certified in 1949?

A. In 1949 we had approximately 16 or 17 stores. And we found it necessary to do some storing or warehousing of merchandise outside of Certified. And Certified did have a rule that no member could be both a direct buyer and a member of Certified at the same time.

The Court: By "direct buyer," you mean to purchase other than at Certified?

The Witness: That's right, your Honor. In other words, they wanted 100 per cent loyalty and support from all of their members. And they would not tolerate a member carrying water on both shoulders, so to speak, and their policy was that you either supported Certified completely or you resigned from Certified.

And as the result of that policy, and not caring to embarrass Certified because of my position, we did resign in 1949 to engage in warehousing operations of our own.

[fol. 1976] Q. Did you thereafter rejoin Certified?

A. Yes. Certified modified its policy, and some years later we again rejoined Certified.

Q. And you are a member of Certified at the present time?

A. And we are a member at the present time.

Q. Yesterday, Mr. Von der Ahe, you were discussing the matter of drop shipments, which members of Certified may obtain, and I gathered that is direct delivery from the manufacturer to their retail stores; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not smaller stores, such as a Mom and Pop store, could take advantage of this drop shipment situation?

A. The answer is the drop shipment method is available to any member of Certified Grocers or Orange Empire or—it is available to any of these members who are in a position to use it. Many of the larger supermarkets, and I know of one very well run chain here that uses drop shipments as its principal means of supply for many years, and that was because they had large back rooms in their markets and they had merchandise purchased at a central plant, which would be distributed to all of their markets. In direct answer to your question, I would say it depends upon the ability of the store to use the quantities that were delivered in the minimum drops, drop shipments.

[fol. 1977] The Court: Pardon me. There has to be, I take it, a minimum in drop shipments to cut down the expense of cartage, is that the idea?

The Witness: That's right, your Honor. It varies with the item, I might say.

I cited the example yesterday that tuna was being drop shipped in normal quantities of 25 cases. I do know of instances where they have been drop shipped in as small lots as five cases.

The Court: That would involve the problem of a small grocery store having storage space; is that right?

The Witness: Storage space, yes, sir, and the ability to use a minimum quantity within a reasonable length of time.

You see, our business is one where a smaller operator can actually use the supplier's money to finance himself, as long as he keeps turn-over in the picture.

The Court: What is the 2 per cent—30 days, 60 days, what is it?

The Witness: It depends, again, on the item. Normally it is 2 per cent 10 days. There is also a 2 per cent 30 days. And there are some rare instances where 2 per cent extends for even a longer period than 30 days, but they are rare. Usually 10 to 30 days.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. A very large number of the government industry [fol. 1978] witnesses, Mr. Von der Ahe, had gross annual sales of under $500,000; would such retailer be able to take advantage of this drop shipment situation you are talking about?

A. Frankly, in my opinion, it would not be feasible nor practical, when your sales are that small, to try to engage in a buying function. This is the purpose for such organizations as Certified, Orange Empire, and the rest of them, and they can supply the needs of those smaller stores without the store tying up its capital in merchandise.

Q. Various of the government witnesses stated in their affidavits, and in their depositions, Mr. Von der Ahe, that while they could get dry groceries through Certified virtually the same as any of the larger chains, they cannot buy their meat, produce, or dairy products through Certified or Orange Empire, and thereby the large chains have a competitive advantage. My question to you is: If there is such an advantage, has there been any change in that situation as a consequence of your merger with Shopping Bag?

A. Absolutely none whatsoever.

Q. Based on your knowledge of the industry, is there a competitive advantage to the large chain in the purchase of meat, as compared to the single store operator?

A. I would like to say, Mr. Alsup, that there might [fol. 1979] possibly be a competitive advantage to large buyers in the purchase of meat, pricewise only, and that would be so insignificant that it is nominal at the most.

Q. What do you mean by that, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. I would say that a packing house might charge a half a cent to one cent more for a carcass of beef when it is bought in one unit as against when a large buyer would go in and buy a hundred sides or 500 sides. But I would like to further add that the competitive advantage is more than offset by the advantage the small buyer has by being able to personally select and cream or take what we call the show beef out of the packing house, which in turn will result in a better cutting percentage. So the over-all result actually, I would say, would be in favor of the man who can personally select what meat he buys.

[fol. 1980] The Court: May I ask a question?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Do the chains and the—first, let me ask you this question: How many sources are there, to your knowledge, of meat in this area?

The Witness: I don't know, your Honor. It is almost unlimited. We have packing house row, our buyers and everyone else's go up and down the row selecting and purchasing meat.

The Court: Is it highly competitive, that is, the sale of meat?

The Witness: I would say so, yes.

The Court: Well, you have, I take it, all the large concerns, the nationally known concerns here, do you? Do you have a Swift, Armour, for example?

The Witness: We have Swift—I do not believe Armour is any longer in the picture.

The Court: How about some of the others, name some of them.

The Witness: Well, most of the beef killers now are independent firms that operate on the market in packing house row. The larger firms, such as Armour, Cudahy and et cetera are not in this market of killing beef any longer. Swift has remained and I believe Wilson has just come back with a new plant. I am not sure whether they kill [fol. 1981] beef or not.

The Court: Would you have any idea how many of these beef people are in this area?

The Witness: I would make a rough guess between 20 and 30.

The Court: Very well.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, you referred to meat——

The Court: One other question, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Are you aware of generally—do the chains buy from the same people, or similar packers, as the independents?

The Witness: For the most part they do, yes, sir.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, how about the produce situation, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. The same situation that obtains in the meat industry also exists in the produce industry. By that I mean a small buyer again can personally inspect and select merchandise he buys, whereas the large buyer is unable to do so. He can only spot check—and believe me we do find many, many time of deliveries to our company that are rejected because the load, as such, is not as the sample of what our buyers intended to buy.

[fol. 1982] But the small buyer on the job, buying his own produce, putting it on his own truck, has a much better quality control over produce than we will ever have.

Q. How about prices?

A. Prices, it depends upon the item that is purchased. And it is a variable thing, depending upon the time of day and the amount of merchandise on the market and so forth.

We do have what is known as a late market here, in which all unsold produce, or all produce which is unsold by a certain time becomes known as the late market, and it is sold at distress prices by the commission merchants who must get rid of it for that day. And an alert buyer can take advantage of that late market and own his merchandise much lower than the chain, who cannot take the gamble of waiting for the late market, but who must buy his produce at the going price at the time the merchandise is there, so that he can redistribute to the stores.

Q. I think you will find——

A. There is much money to be made in the late market, and one of the best examples of people who avail themselves of it is a Japanese partnership called Hada and and Mori, who operate the largest market in Bellflower. They are the most successful independent in the whole area. As a matter of fact, they run the best store in the whole area. And they shop nothing but the late market.

[fol. 1983] And the chains and other stores just can't keep up with them. They know their business and it is just impossible to compete with them in produce.

Q. I think you pointed out in your affidavit, Mr. Von der Ahe, with respect to hard produce, which I gather is potatoes, onions and that sort of thing, sometimes the direct buyer of a chain has an advantage because he can buy in carload lots direct from the farmer, is that correct?

A. I would not deny that the carload of hard produce, onions or potatoes, and things of that nature, can be bought direct, which eliminates going through a commission merchant.

But to offset that we must take those goods into our distributing center, warehouse them and redistribute them. So we have a cost on top of our direct buying.

Q. Did you do some of this direct buying of hard produce prior to the merger with Shopping Bag?

A. Yes.

Q. And did the merger with Shopping Bag give you any advantage in this respect?

A. It gave us no advantage at all. It did not change the status a bit.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, have you read the affidavits of the various government witnesses?

A. I believe I am familiar with most of them, yes.

[fol. 1984] Q. Have you read the affidavit of Joe DeSilva?

A. Yes, I did.

Mr. Alsup: Could I borrow yours, counsel?

The Court: You can borrow mine, if you wish.

Mr. Alsup: I would like to, your Honor.

The Court: Which group is it in?

Mr. Coyle: I think we have a copy.

The Court: All right. Fine. By the way, I can't find my list of the defense exhibits, somehow I must have—you had a list filed with me, didn't you?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor, we did.

The Court: It may have gotten into another file.

Go ahead, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: Again I have an office copy.

The Court: No, no, it won't be necessary. We will locate it. It may be in some of the other files in my chambers—here it is, I found it, stuck inside of one of the others.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, Mr. DeSilva's affidavit points out the executive secretary of the Retail Clerks' Union, Local 770, and they have jurisdiction over the retail clerks employed in most of the grocery stores in this area, and he states on page 3 of his affidavit, Mr. Von der Ahe, that Hughes Markets was founded in 1952, and I am [fol. 1985] quoting——

"* * * by Joseph P. Hughes, former vice president in charge of field operations for the Fitzsimmons Stores, now Thriftimart. He began with one store purchased from Thriftimart, soon thereafter purchased two more stores, one independent and one Thriftimart, and since that time he has acquired several other stores * * * "

Do you have any personal knowledge as to whether or not that statement is accurate?

A. I believe it is.

Q. And do you know what stores Mr. Hughes purchased from others?

A. He acquired three stores from the McDaniel chain at the time that they were in financial trouble.

Q. And when was that?

A. It has been within the past couple of years, I couldn't exactly give you the date. But I would make a guess around 1960 or 1961.

Q. You think——

A. At the time McDaniel's was getting into trouble.

Q. And McDaniel's went into bankruptcy thereafter?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. And how about these stores that he acquired, according to his statement, from Thriftimart; do you have [fol. 1986] any knowledge of that situation?

A. I don't believe that Mr. Hughes acquired his stores from Thriftimart. I believe that particular reference is to a store up on North Highland which had been occupied by a Thriftimart.

Thriftimart had decided not to renew the lease, even though they had an option to do so. And Joe Hughes went in and bought the vacant building and the property on which it was located. He remodeled the store and opened it as a Hughes Store.

Q. Mr. DeSilva's affidavit states on page 4 that Mr. Edward Fox left Mayfair Markets in 1954 and started the chain of Fox Markets by purchasing grocery stores from Mayfair and LaMarrs and later acquired other Mayfair stores, the Roth Market chain, the Yor-Way Market chain, the Iowa Pork Chops chain, and other acquisitions, and that in 1961 Fox filed in bankruptcy. Does that comport with your knowledge of the situation?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Do you have any knowledge as to the reason for the bankruptcy of Fox?

A. I believe it is generally well known that Fox expanded too rapidly. They exercised very poor judgment in the selection of some of their sites, and their acquisitions, they paid too much for their acquisitions. They did not [fol. 1987] have good management, nor were they good operators.

The Court: Were they experienced management?

The Witness: They were experienced management, yes, sir.

And they were considerably underfinanced——

Mr. Coyle: This is pretty much hearsay testimony——

The Court: What is it, counsel?

The Witness: They were pretty much underfinanced——

The Court: What is it, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: This is pretty much hearsay testimony, Mr. Von der Ahe is testifying to things that happened to Mr. Fox——

The Court: Well, you haven't objected up to now. What am I supposed to do, interrupt and stop him?

Mr. Coyle: I am objecting now.

The Court: Well, there is nothing before the court now. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, Mr. DeSilva states that Mr. Jack Kennedy left the Jim Dandy Markets Company to establish the Yor-Way chain in 1953, that he began with purchasing a Mayfair Market and later acquired several more, and in 1958 Yor-Way acquired C. S. Smith's Metropolitan Mar- [fol. 1988] kets. After Mr. Kennedy's death in 1961 the stores were all sold.

Do you have any knowledge at all as to the reasons for the demise of the Yor-Way?

Mr. Coyle: This is hearsay.

The Court: Well, counsel, you state your objections in proper form and I will be prepared—but you are ruling, you are not objecting——

Mr. Coyle: I object, your Honor——

The Court: You are ruling, you are not objecting.

Mr. Coyle: I object, your Honor, on the ground that this is hearsay.

The Court: I think it is, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: But I don't think—what are you proving by this testimony? Are you trying to refute that these people were put out of business because of lack of competition or because of competition?

[fol. 1989] Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor. What I was purporting to establish is what Mr. Von der Ahe has told me, that when a company expands rapidly with inadequate capital and without a deep management staff, and something happens to the leader——

The Court: That is about as obvious as anything that I know of. That happened in 1929. Everybody was expanding, as they are doing today, and they were talking the same language that they are talking today, we are headed to a new era.

We will head for it all right. When this new generation wakes up and finds what it is, they will be surprised to learn that over-expansion, inexperience, leads to one thing, and I don't think you need to prove that to this court. I know that from just plain experience.

Mr. Alsup: There was one other point in that connection——

The Court: The Fox situation, everybody in town that keeps up with what goes on knows what happened in that case.

Mr. Alsup: I think that is true of McDaniel's and Yor Way.

The Court: McDaniel's, also.

If you want to put it in the record in some other form, [fol. 1990] I will let you do it, but I suppose this is hearsay.

Mr. Alsup: I am perfectly willing to develop the matter, your Honor.

The Court: People think nowadays experience is unnecessary. All you have to do is go in the shoe business and buy some shoes and be prepared to sell them. Sizes mean nothing to them, last or anything else, but you just become a shoe man overnight. This is the new era in lack of experience. In other words, don't be hampered by experience, never let experience hamper you.

Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Do you know of any other of the larger chains in this area which had financial difficulty in 1961, 1962, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. We have mentioned Fox, we have mentioned McDaniel's, we have mentioned Yor Way. I do know that the Greater All American Markets had some rough sledding for a while, as a result of the death of their founder, Mr. Blaine Hutchinson, and they were compelled to sell off quite a few of their units before they were able to introduce some efficiencies, and I am happy to say that the markets are now returning nominal profits.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, have you personally checked the stores of various of the government industry witnesses?

A. I believe I have visited most of them, yes.

[fol. 1991] Q. When did you do this?

A. I have been making this a project, as a matter of fact, for the last two or three months, and I have from time to time gone on different missions and visited the various stores of the government witnesses.

Q. Can you state what stores of what government witnesses you observed?

A. I observed the store operated by Mr. Jack Swerdlick, I believe is his name, who I believe calls his operation the Value Ranch, on East Olympic Boulevard. I observed the market operated by a Mr. Kasper——

Q. Chitjean.

A. —just a block or two east of Swerdlick's store. I visited Jack's Market, I visited Jenkins Market, I visited Taylor's Market in El Monte, I visited the Gertmenian's, I visited Carpenter's, I visited Logue's Star Market, I visited Rod Irvine's—Logue is not Star Market—Rod Irvine's Star Market, I visited Allen's Market in Reseda, in Northridge; I visited Dick's Market on North Figueroa; Craun's Market in South Downey; I visited a market in Van Nuys, Mekjian, I believe his name was. And there might be several others, but I at least visited that group of stores.

Q. Would you give us your impression as a grocer of this Swerdlick's Value Ranch Market?

[fol. 1992] A. Swerdlick's Market is in a small area on the east side of Los Angeles, which caters almost principally to the Spanish-Mexican trade. It has one entrance, which is a double door approximately five feet wide. The appearance is very dirty, the fixtures are extremely old, antiquated; he does a very poor job of merchandising, and practically no advertising, or no aggressive operating at all. I would say this is not a representative market of the food industry in Southern California.

The Court: Counsel, let me ask you this: What is the purpose of this particular type of testimony? In other words, somebody has made an affidavit, and I assume in his affidavit he has probably said that he thinks or at least in his opinion there will be a substantial lessening of competition—is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: That's correct.

The Court: What does it prove to prove he has, let's say, a one-horse shop, what does it accomplish? Does it go to the range of his opinion, is that what you had in mind?

Mr. Alsup: I had that in mind. In the Brown Shoe case the government in their brief on appeal referred no less than nine times to the crucial importance of industry witnesses. The Supreme Court opinion, as you know, attaches great importance to industry witness testimony, and [fol. 1993] it is my opinion—I have seen many of these stores, as well as Mr. Von der Ahe—that the great bulk of the government witnesses are not truly representative of what is the grocery business in this area.

The Court: The reason that I am asking is that a person who milks one cow may be an expert on that cow and milking, but running a dairy might be another thing. I don't know, just exactly. I suppose it is a question of evaluation of their testimony, and I suppose it is identifying their background. Is that what you are doing?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: These witnesses were all deposed. They could have done that in the course of their depositions. This is no time to be doing that.

The Court: I suppose they could have, counsel, but I guess I will let them do it now, if counsel thinks it is of any value.

I assume that in the depositions, in the affidavits, it doesn't bring out the type of store he is operating?

Mr. Alsup: It brings out the type, the size of store, the total volume of sales, your Honor. I propose to show through Mr. Von der Ahe that most of these people, government witnesses who expressed these opinions, are not truly representative of the grocery business, do not run a [fol. 1994] first-class operation, and if anyone is hurting them, it is themselves.

The Court: All right. I will permit the testimony, but I hope——

Mr. Alsup: I won't go into all of them, your Honor. I will ask one or two more, if I may.

The Court: I think probably from their affidavits and from the depositions, where there are depositions, it would be discernible pretty quickly their size and operation, won't it?

Mr. Coyle: Even in the statements we have the size and dollar sales, so it will be discernible there.

Mr. Alsup: The statement doesn't indicate, your Honor—some people can have a very small store, your Honor, but can make it very clean and attractive and attract customers. Someone who runs a very poor operation obviously is not going to attract customers, and is more likely, in my opinion, to blame.

The Court: If they give credit, they can get customers. It is a question of how much credit they give and how long they can stay open. I know many stores that were very successful by giving credit. Of course they didn't last long, but they were very successful for a time.

I don't want to restrict you. Any relevant evidence [fol. 1995] that may help the court in deciding this.

Incidentally, before I forget it, I hope you gentlemen have cited all the District Court cases that have come down since the Brown case. Have you both done that?

Mr. Coyle: I think probably between our two briefs we have cited all of them.

The Court: That's what I want to be sure of.

Mr. Alsup: I believe we have, your Honor.

The Court: It isn't that I will necessarily follow them, but I do learn something in reading the other man's opinions.

Mr. Alsup: As your Honor knows, in our brief in referring to these District Court cases which have come down since Brown Shoe, the great bulk of them are not yet reported in the Federal Supplement.

The Court: I understand that.

Mr. Alsup: They are reported in the 1963 trade case CCH series, and if you would like us to——

The Court: I assume that the Federal Supplement should be along pretty quickly.

Mr. Alsup: It should be along soon, and we can give you a list at that time.

The Court: If I have any difficulty, I may call on either one of you to help me out in that regard. But I [fol. 1996] assume that they will be coming forward rather promptly.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. I checked, as a matter of fact, Saturday, your Honor, and again Monday, and they have not yet come through in the Federal Supplement. I expect they will be soon, and we will give you the citations.

The Court: All right. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. How about this store of Mr. Kasper Chitjean, known as Kasper's Market, on East Olympic Boulevard, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. This is in the same neighborhood as Mr. Swerdlick's store. It is a block or two farther to the east. Even though it is on Olympic Boulevard there is a large sign on the top of the building that reads East Ninth Street Market. It, again, is a very small store catering exclusively to the small grouping of Mexican-Spanish homes in the area——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, there is no foundation to show how this witness knows who it is catering to.

The Court: I think I can walk into a store and I could tell you in 15 minutes what type of people they are catering to. Don't you think you could?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know.

The Court: I am sure I could, and I think you could. All you have to do is stand in there and watch the customers, and I think—it is an opinion, that is all it is, and [fol. 1997] I could reject it or accept it. I will allow it.

I think you could go to Long Island at a certain spot and tell within a few minutes that the class of trade was quite well to do. It wouldn't take you long, as you see the cars roll up and the people who are going in the store. I think these are matters that are under general observation.

Go ahead.

The Witness: Again, it is a very small operation. It looks like it is a one-man operation, actually, because there was only one man working the entire store when I was there, outside of the meat department, which a woman was acting as the butcher, and the cuts of meat were cut, designed for Mexican trade, Mr. Coyle. Beyond that, I have to say that it is strictly neighborhood. It cannot possibly serve any area beyond its immediate neighborhood, which could be measured just in blocks.

The Court: By just a quick look at the store, from your experience can you make an estimate of the inventory, the value of the inventory in the store?

The Witness: Your Honor, offhandedly I would say that his inventory was in the neighborhood of $5,000.

The Court: Well, is it unusual for a man who has been in the grocery business for 30 or 40 years to be able to walk into a plant, or a store, and make an equipment esti- [fol. 1998] mate and hit it pretty close on inventory?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: There is nothing unusual about that?

The Witness: No, sir, your Honor. Over years of experience I believe that we are qualified to walk into a store and not only evaluate inventory, but make a rather accurate estimate of the sales that the store does. And we do that by looking at the amount of perishables that the store has, because we know he has to sell them.

The Court: Either sell them or throw them away; is that right?

The Witness: That's right.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. How about the Jenkins Market out in El Monte that you mentioned, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. Frankly, Jenkins Market has to be seen to be believed. I could not conceive of this market at all, because it looked to me as though it were about 20 feet wide and about 40 feet deep; the smallest market that I have ever seen in my life, frankly. He is catering just—I might add that this little market is located right in a cluster of homes, and he does cater to that little grouping of homes right around him.

[fol. 1999] The Court: What is the location of that store?

Mr. Alsup: 9701 Cortada in El Monte.

The Court: Where is that?

Mr. Alsup: El Monte, your Honor.

The Witness: Your Honor, if I may explain, it is between the San Bernardino Freeway on the north, and I think it is Garvey Boulevard on the south, east of Rosemead Boulevard. There is just four natural barriers and a little cluster of homes there and this little market sits right in the middle of them.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, at this point this witness has operated a number of other stores before moving into this one, so——

The Court: Well, does the affidavit show that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I think the deposition does, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup. The deposition does, your Honor.

The Court: That will certainly be considered. In other words, he is making it look—making it sound like he has got nothing but squatter's rights there now, but I assume that his affidavit and deposition will clarify the background.

Mr. Alsup: This is a witness, your Honor, who testified at deposition "Some people have it and some don't. [fol. 2000] I guess I don't."

The Court: Well, that is profound.

Mr. Alsup: Very. Just two more, if I may, your Honor.

Q. Have you observed the stores of Mr. Dick and Mr. Craun who testified yesterday?

A. I have.

Q. Will you describe those stores?

A. I will start with Mr. Dick's store, which is located on North Figueroa Boulevard in what we used to refer to as the Highland Park district. The store has both a front and a rear entrance. It has a service bakery department, a service meat department, and the store appeared to be rather well run. It is clean——

The Court: Does it have parking?

The Witness: It has parking in the rear, no parking on the front because it is built right up to Figueroa Boulevard.

The store appeared to be well run, it is neat, it is clean. The only thing that gave me the shivers when I was in there was a fear that I wouldn't want to be there in case a fire broke out, you couldn't get out of the place.

But beyond that the store appears to be doing a good job serving the neighborhood.

[fol. 2001] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. How close is——

A. It is not, I might add, a supermarket building as such. There is market shops underneath some apartment houses on the second floor.

The Court: That is the one, as I remember, that did a very substantial volume, is that right, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: I think——

The Court: Was it around three million he said, he testified?

Mr. Alsup: I believe he testified one million four hundred thousand.

The Court: Was that the one that said the one million four?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Yes, I recall.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. How far is that store from the nearest Von's or Shopping Bag store, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. I believe the nearest Shopping Bag store would be in Eagle Rock, which is at least three and a half miles distant.

Q. Von's, is there a Von's store in that area?

A. There is no Von's store in that area.

Q. How about Mr. Craun's store?

[fol. 2002] A. Mr. Craun's store is in the south end of Downey, which again is a very small store. I estimated it to be in the neighborhood of five to six thousand square feet. It is neat, it is clean.

I observed that it had absolutely no prices on its shelf molding, which I thought was very unusual because all markets indicate prices for the products they are displaying.

It has a service meat department, it has old fixtures but it is well kept up.

The parking is also to the rear for the most part, with about ten spots in front. But the market itself, it is inviting.

Q. What other stores are in the area of Mr. Craun's store?

A. Almost directly across the street is a large Alpha Beta market.

Q. How close is the nearest Von's or Shopping Bag store?

A. Well, I would say the nearest Shopping Bag would be at the corner of Firestone and Lakewood. And my guess would be in the neighborhood of a mile and a half to two miles.

And then there would be a Von's market directly north on Paramount at Florence, which would be maybe two and [fol. 2003] half miles distant.

Q. That latter Von's store which you mentioned is directly across the street from the government witness Don Fairbank's store, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, the government witnesses, industry witnesses, in their statements assert that in their opinion if this merger between Von's and Shopping Bag is permitted there will probably be other mergers between and among the large chains and this will probably substantially lessen competition and tend to create monopoly. What is your opinion with respect to that matter?

A. My opinion is that the contention is not supported by fact, because, first of all, the Von's and Shopping Bag merger was a consolidation of two firms which did not compete with each other.

I cannot think——

Q. You are referring to competition between the particular stores?

A. Between particular stores. And I cannot think of any other two firms in this area who could merge without resulting in some very serious overlaps.

Q. Have there been mergers in the past, Mr. Von der Ahe, which have not worked out very well for the merging companies?

[fol. 2004] A. Well, I can think of, naturally, Fox Markets again, which acquired quite a few markets. And I will not say that their results were satisfactory.

And you have McDaniel's also acquired stores with disastrous results.

Yor-Way did the same thing.

I can think of one back East which involved an acquisition by Colonial Stores of Albers Markets——

Mr. Coyle: I object, your Honor——

The Court: On what grounds?

Mr. Coyle: I object because this is an acquisition of a large market back East, he is talking about back East——

The Court: I suppose it is. Sustained.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. In depositions of at least two, and perhaps more, of the government industry witnesses, they testified that—that is Mr. Fleishman and Mr. Palmer complained about a general price reduction which Von's and——

A. May I finish answering my last question, please?

Q. No, I am sorry——

The Court: No. I sustained an objection to that.

The Witness: Your Honor, I think——

The Court: You were talking about something outside of the area, so I sustained an objection.

Go ahead, counsel.

[fol. 2005] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Did you have something to add, Mr. Von der Ahe, which would be confined to the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes, if your Honor will permit me.

The Court: Yes. I will permit that, yes. Go ahead.

The Witness: I was thinking of Thriftimart, who have acquired several stores, and subsequently disposed of most of them.

I can think of Alpha Beta, who acquired Raisin Markets, they had considerable difficulty integrating them into their system.

I also wanted to mention those two, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. I mentioned that government witnesses Fleishman and Palmer, Mr. Von der Ahe, in their depositions complained that a general price reduction which Von's instituted in this area in July of 1961 had reduced, hurt them in some way. Would you state the reasons for that general price reduction which occurred in 1961?

A. Yes. In 1961, in July as a matter of fact, the management of our company realized that retail prices as such were too high. And the reason they were too high was [fol. 2006] in order to provide an umbrella for ridiculous price cuts on advertised items.

This was the time, if you will recall, that we were selling coffee as low as 19 cents a pound with a $5.00 purchase, sugar, five pounds for 19 cents and so forth, which was anywhere from 25 to 50 cents per unit below cost.

In order to sustain that type of ridiculous merchandising the shelf prices were gradually creeping up.

We also knew that in September there was going to be passed, or signed into law in the State of California under the Unfair Trade Practices Act, a provision which prohibited limiting of advertised specials because the——

Q. That is the quantity a customer could buy?

A. Limiting of quantity of items to a customer. This law made it a per se evidence of the intent to injure competition by limiting.

And with these factors in mind we reduced the prices on several hundred staple grocery items, at the same time we discontinued ridiculous ads of a cut-throat nature.

And it actually had the effect of stabilizing the market. And it might be interesting to note that for the year 1961,

July, the BLS index throughout the nation showed an increase in the cost of food stuff, with the exception of Los Angeles, which showed a decrease. We think the con[fol. 2007] suming public benefited by that maneuver.

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe,——

A. It actually raised our gross margin, and I am sure it raised the gross margin of every other competitor in this town. It did not hurt them.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, would you have been able to make this price cut across the board in July 1961 had you not merged with Shopping Bag?

A. This was a perfectly legitimate business reason to make this merchandising maneuver. We would have done it whether we had been merging with Shopping Bag or not. The merger had nothing to do with it.

Q. Had there been prior experiences where you had reduced prices prior to the merger?

A. Yes, yes——

The Court: We are not getting into a price case, are we, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor. I was referring to the depositions of these two witnesses, and they seem to feel that somehow this merger gave Von's a power to reduce prices and hurt them, although I think both testified they did very well after the price reduction.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, your affidavit states that A & P, Safeway, Acme and Food Fair, national chains of retail groceries, are doing business in this area. Can you tell [fol. 2008] us how they rank in size nationally?

A. Nationally, A & P ranks first with sales in excess of five billion dollars.

Safeway ranks second with sales in excess of two and a half billion dollars.

Acme ranks fourth with sales in excess of one billion dollars.

And Food Fair ranks sixth with sales just under one billion dollars.

In that connection I might also add, sir, that Kroger has now announced their intention of coming into this market. And they are the third nationally with sales in excess of two billion dollars.

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Von der Ahe, based on your years of experience in the grocery business, do you feel that Von's is at any competitive disadvantage in competing with stores of these national chains?

A. No, I do not.

Q. In your opinion, do you believe that the single store operators, or the smaller chains can compete successfully with these large national chains?

A. Yes, I believe that they will be able to successfully compete with them.

Q. In your opinion, do you believe that the single store operators or small chains can compete successfully with [fol. 2009] the stores of Von's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, I will ask you to refer to Government's Exhibit 1.

(The exhibit was placed before the witness.)

The Witness: Thank you.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. That exhibit, Mr. Von der Ahe, is a list of sources which the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles metropoltian area ranked according to sales in 1958.

Can you tell us which of those chains listed on Exhibit 1 were not doing business in the year 1948?

A. I will try to do so, yes. Going down the list, Food Giant was not in business in 1948.

Fox Markets, Hughes Markets, Shoppers Markets only had one store. McCoy's Markets and Yor-Way Markets.

Q. Tell us if there are any of the stores listed on the exhibit, if there are any, which are no longer in business?

A. Fox Markets are no longer in business. The McDaniel's are out of business.

The Greater All American has sold off quite a few of its stores and the Yor-Way stores are out of business.

[fol. 2010] Q. Do you know what happened to the stores of these concerns?

A. For the most part they have been sold off to individuals and other companies. Some have been closed.

The Court: Well, as a matter of fact, did the so-called chains, haven't they closed a great many stores in the past ten or fifteen years—Ralphs, for example, haven't they closed down stores?

The Witness: Not a great many, your Honor. They have closed stores that they find have been unprofitable.

The Court: Have you closed any stores?

The Witness: Not in the past few years.

The Court: How about Safeway, do they close stores, have they?

The Witness: Safeway has closed a few, yes.

The Court: And I guess Food Giant is relatively new out here, isn't it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, would you refer to Government's Exhibit 16?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Paragraph 90 of that Government's Exhibit 16, which comprises a portion of the answers to plaintiff's request [fol. 2011] for admission of facts states that as of March 28, 1960, Von's planned to construct a new grocery store at Euclid and G Street in Ontario. Is Ontario outside of Los Angeles and Orange County?

A. Yes.

Q. It is in San Bernardino County?

A. San Bernardino County.

Q. Paragraph 91 states that as of March 28, 1960, Von's planned to construct a new grocery store at Imperial Boulevard and Norwalk Avenue in Norwalk. Can you tell us whether that store was constructed?

A. That store has never been constructed. As a matter of fact, that deal is completely dead.

Q. Why was that?

A. The developer had difficulty getting the zone variance or change that he needed to develop the shopping center. And as a result it never was constructed.

Q. Paragraph 96 referred to in that exhibit states that as of March 28, 1960, Shopping Bag planned to construct a new grocery store at the corner of San Fernando-Mission

Road and Balboa in Granada Hills. And the answer admitted the statement stated the lease had been signed with respect to the property at this location, but construction has not yet been commenced. Can you tell us what happened to that proposed store?

[fol. 2012] A. That store was never constructed, or built for Shopping Bag. This store is now leased to and operated by Food Giant Markets.

Q. Why was that turned over to Food Giant, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. Because Von's prior to the merger, had committed themselves to a lease at the corner of San Fernando-Mission Road and Woodley in Granada Hills, which is exactly one mile east of this Shopping Bag location. Von's was committed beyond a point of stopping the deal. As a matter of fact, we didn't want to. We had a moral obligation to kindly, elderly people whom we had talked into building for us and we just did not want to nullify our lease.

And the Shopping Bag lease, being in a larger shopping center, we knew could be readily disposed of, and subsequently Food Giant Markets did take it.

But the reason was because both of these stores were serving the same community, and we would, in this particular instance, have been competing directly with ourselves.

[fol. 2013] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. I think one of the government witnesses, either Mr. Craun or Mr. Dick, testified yesterday in response to a question of Judge Carr's, that construction of new stores is somewhat like filling stations, they spring up on each corner of every block. Do you agree with that statement?

A. I certainly do not. The economics of each area must be thoroughly considered before putting in a new store. A population count must be taken. We also look at the average income, we look at the nature of the area, whether it is declining or growing, and when we finally compute how much potential grocery volume there is in an area, we divide that by the number of stores already serving it, and if we feel if the area is over-marketed, we do not take a store there. On the other hand, if we develop that a store would do a good business and be profitable, we do put in a store. But do do not fight a battle of numbers, and we try to make sound decisions when we locate a new store.

The Court: In other words, you are not looking for a stand-off in competition; is that what you are saying?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: Just as an example, I notice at the corner of Third and Vermont there is on one corner Ralph's Store and on the other corner Safeway; is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

[fol. 2014] The Court: What is the philosophy behind a situation of that kind? Is that just a happening, or is it a competitive situation?

The Witness: This, I might say, had I been operating Safeway, I would not have done that, because I would never want to antagonize Ralph's by putting a store right in their front office. However, they are both good stores. It is a very successful operation for Ralph's, and I know it is one of Safeway's better stores.

The Court: It is apparently a highly populated community and two stores can successfully operate?

The Witness: Yes, because of the density of population in the area they can both operate, yes.

The Court: What I was trying to find out, it is not just because the other store was there that the latter store went there; they just thought, I take it from your experience, that it was a good area.

The Witness: That is very true.

The Court: They don't just, from what you know of the business, you don't just go out and just land on a corner because another store is on the opposite corner?

The Witness: That's right. We don't try to match competition store for store in each area.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Do you have studies made, Mr. Von der Ahe, prior to [fol. 2015] determining whether or not you will take a particular location?

A. In some instances, yes, we do.

Q. Can you give us an idea of how many locations are offered to you in a week?

A. Well, this is a department over which Mr. Hayden has jurisdiction, but it is a two-position job in our company, we have a real estate head, and he has an assistant, and they both report to Mr. Hayden; but I can assure you that all three of those men are constantly busy checking out locations. We get them through real estate agents, we get submittals through property owners themselves, from developers, and we are constantly checking out locations.

The Court: It take it, Mr. Von der Ahe, that many builders now are agitating, trying to get more building sites and put up more market centers—that is quite a movement now, isn't it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: And they do it on borrowed money, I take it, too, don't they?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: You don't finance any of your buildings, do you?

The Witness: We do not finance any buildings on which we do not own the ground. If we own the ground, we [fol. 2016] also will build the building, your Honor. But we do not loan money, as such, to developers.

The Court: By the way—I guess this is peripheral—they have come to use an expression which to me seems ridiculous, "net-net-net"—to me "net" means net. What does "net-net-net" mean?

The Witness: I believe that is just one way to emphasize that the lessee is going to pay all of the cost, and recurring costs of the property, which means the taxes, insurance, assessments, everything.

The Court: So it is all net, isn't it?

The Witness: It is 100 per cent net, yes.

The Court: Is that term used throughout the country, or is that just Hollywood?

The Witness: I think it is spreading throughout the country.

The Court: By the way, what is the general return expected now on a leased market—8, 9 per cent?

The Witness: The insurance companies will lease a market on 7 per cent net-net-net, if you will, please, on their investment. And when you are negotiating with an independent developer, he requires a little more, I might say. The range would be from 7½ to 9 per cent. And in some cases where the location is extremely desirable, we find ourselves paying 10 per cent, all net.

[fol. 2017] This is also, if I may continue, usually against a percentage of sales, your Honor.

The Court: They do usually have a contract after they put a ceiling on, is that right, or flooring?

The Witness: It is a floor. It is a minimum net, which is the floor, against a percentage, which is usually wide open.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Speaking of stores located——

The Court: The point that I was trying to bring out, counsel, and I don't know that you intended bringing it out, is that at the present time in Southern California, in this area, all you have to do is mention the word "market" and sombody will try to build one. That's my understanding. So the competitive situation goes beyond just grocery business now; it is easy money, too, isn't it? Isn't that right? A lot of markets are being built just because there is easy money?

The Witness: Yes. Because it is a lease which they funds in good leases.

The Court: I take it sometimes these locations are not necessarily good, but they build the markets and then they have to—they usually have the leases made before they build, don't they?

The Witness: Yes. Because it is a least which they [fol. 2018] finance.

The Court: They finance on the basis of the lease?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: A lease is usually 25 years?

The Witness: Usually.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Speaking of markets located fairly close to one another, Mr. Von der Ahe, you have a supermarket at Third and Kenmore in Los Angeles?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you building another store in that general area?

A. We are building another store at Olympic and Crenshaw, which will open within the next few weeks.

The Court: That is at least how many miles away?

The Witness: This is what I was going to qualify, your Honor. This is probably two miles away. But we do have a market at Eighth and Irolo. Irolo is just a block or two west of Kenmore, and Eighth is only five blocks south of Third Street. But these two markets are serving two different and distinct neighborhoods.

The Court: There is a fairly heavy density of population in those areas, I take it?

The Witness: Yes.

[fol. 2019] The Court: And it is growing now. I assume there is the beginning of a new era there in apartment houses, is that correct?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Alsup: I have a fondness for that store. When I first came to California in 1941 I lived in an apartment house right next to Third and Kenmore.

The Court: I thought you were going to tell me that you bought some of the bonds.

Mr. Alsup: I wish I had.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, will you return to Government's Exhibit 63, page 3——

The Court: I think, counsel, we had better take the recess. We will take a 10-minute recess.

(Recess taken.)

The Court: Proceed, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, turning to Government's Exhibit 63, page 3 of that exhibit, it is entitled Minutes of Executive Committee Meeting, Von's Grocery Co., March 29, 1960, that meeting took place the day after the merger was consummated, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. These minutes are dated March 29, 1960, which would have been the day after the merger was consummated.

[fol. 2020] Q. On page 3 under paragraph 11 of that exhibit, Mr. Von der Ahe, there is a statement:

> "Mr. W. R. Hayden was requested to contact several other competing grocery firms to effect a trade of the San Fernando Mission-Balboa site."

And I ask you if that is the site that you have referred to earlier in your testimony which Food Giant eventually took over.

A. It is.

Q. Immediately following that is a statement:

> "He also mentioned that he might be able to make some kind of a deal for the Shopping Bag Garden Grove store."

Would you state for the record what that had reference to?

A. This actually refers to the Shopping Bag store in Anaheim at the intersection of Brookhurst and Cotilla Avenue. What was discussed was that this store was developed in what was going to be a shopping center, but it never did develop as a shopping center, and the store never was a profitable store, and Mr. Hayden thought that he might be able to make some kind of a deal to dispose of the store.

Q. Was he able to make such a deal?

A. The deal has not yet been made, no.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, can you tell us how long in advance Von's Grocery Company contracts for turkeys, we will say, [fol. 2021] for sale in the Christmas season?

A. We have contracted for birds as early as July for both the Thanksgiving and the Christmas season.

Q. Will you tell us, describe briefly how you go about contracting for them?

A. These are arrangements entered into by our meat department, but historically they know about how many birds they are going to require for the holiday season, and when the market looks right they will step in and actually buy, at a firm price, birds for the entire season. As I mentioned, sometimes they do this as early as July.

Q. Does this result in your getting a better price for the turkeys than someone buying at a later time?

A. In some cases it has assured us of a price which was competitive all year long. And I can recall a few instances where it swung the other way and we actually paid more for our birds.

Q. In other words, when you make the contract it is a firm price and you are stuck with it regardless of whether the price goes up or goes down?

A. That's right. There are many variables in this business, such as, a failure of the Eastern buyers to invade the market and not take off as many birds as they intend to might result in a lowering of the price. Whereas, on the other hand, if they come in in great numbers, and the Army [fol. 2022] or the Services, rather, take an awful lot of birds out of this area, the price does go up. It is for this reason that we seek to get a commitment and we make a commitment so that we know what our cost is going to be for the season.

Q. Did you do that before the merger with Shopping Bag?

A. We have always done it.

Q. One of the Government witnesses, Mr. Palmer, testified in his deposition, Mr. Von der Ahe, that because of your great number of stores you might decide to run a special, for example, on corn, and garner the market, and if he decided to run a special on corn the same week end it might not be available to him. What do you say to that?

A. Frankly, I do not believe that Mr. Palmer considered what he was saying when he made that remark, but I think it is ridiculous to assume that any firm in this area could corner the market on any item of produce. Let us assume that our market share is between seven and eight per cent of this area, it would be inconceivable to think that we could ever use a hundred per cent of any item of produce that would be brought into this area. It just doesn't make sense in my book. It has never happened, and I don't think it ever will.

[fol. 2023] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, would you state, based on your experience, what in your judgment are the factors which draw particular customers to a particular grocery store?

A. You mean why does one customer trade with one store to the exclusion of another?

A. Yes.

The Court: I don't think it necessarily follows that it is an exclusion, but in the main, does the main part of trading, isn't that about what it amounts to?

The Witness: I believe I understand it, your Honor.

I would list as the first consideration a customer has in her mind when she shops is convenience of location. And to that I would add then easy ingress and egress from the parking lot, so that it is relatively easy for a women to get to the store.

The next consideration I would list would be general over-all appearance of the market, cleanliness, neatness and well-displayed merchandise, friendliness of clerks, kinds of product sold, prices, advertising specials. And that would sort of be the order in which I would list them.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Where would you rate prices in that?

[fol. 2024] A. During times such as we are having now I would rate prices way down the list. Prices actually are not too much of a consideration during times—during good times. It is during depression times when price becomes very important. But such as we are having now, it is the other considerations of convenience, of service, merchandise, quality and so forth to which I give greater importance.

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe, do you, can you describe for us what you consider to be normal draw area of a particular store?

A. If I were to attempt to say there is a normal draw area, I would mislead you, because I do not believe there is such a thing.

Each store must be considered by itself. And its position or location in the area which it attempts to serve.

Such as I have already illustrated, we have a store at Third and Kenmore, and five or six blocks away we have a store at Eighth and Irola, which are serving two different and distinct communities. Our draw area is limited to the population immediately around these two stores.

Other stores might have draw areas of a mile to a mile and a half or two miles, depending upon the degree or the intensity of their competition, and whether the store [fol. 2025] is able to draw customers past other stores.

So I would say there is no yardstick, or no formula. And I disagree vigorously with the government witnesses, when one man tells me he has a draw area of four miles, I don't believe him because we know we have a store in that area and our draw area is about one mile.

And another witness tells me—or tells the court that his draw area is three and a half miles and he competes with us in Eagle Rock. I disagree with him because I know he is not telling the truth. It is only what he thinks, and he cannot prove it.

But draw areas as such is only what is convenient to an area and is easy, as I say, governed by many other considerations.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, I ask you to look at Government's Exhibit 66, which is entitled Survey of Shopping Bag by Division Heads—a Von's survey.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that exhibit in your handwriting?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you prepare it?

A. This exhibit is dated December 19, 1959.

Q. Turning over the first page, Mr. Von der Ahe, there is a reference to J. Ball. Would you identify him?

A. Mr. James Ball is the treasurer of Von's Grocery [fol. 2026] Company.

Q. And had you assigned him to work at Shopping Bag to make a study of their operations?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. When?

A. At the time we were negotiating our merger we instructed Mr. Ball, with Mr. Hayden's approval, to go over to the Shopping Bag offices and begin to make an internal audit of the company. And he did so. And I believe he went there about September of 1959.

Q. At page 1 states:

"Shopping Bag hidden jewel.
"Von's can improve Shopping Bag operation.
"1. Lack of management-direction.
"2. Too much cross purposes.
"3. Figures are not utilized.
"No daily sales.
'No good cash handling.
"Gross—they don't have."

And then you pointed out:

"Shopping Bag has finest equipment and facilities, good people, could do a good job if let alone and guided—"

That is a little confusing to me, I might say——

"Conclusion—continue to negotiate."

[fol. 2027] Is that what Mr. Ball reported to you at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And would you identify Mr. Bolstead, who is the next one referred to.

A. Mr. Norman H. Bolstead is the manager of our operations.

Q. And the notes which thereafter appear on that page and the next page are what Mr. Bolstead reported to you?

A. They are, yes, sir.

Q. And would you identify Mr. Ward?

A. Mr. Ward was our sales and promotion manager. And he is now the executive vice president of Food Giant Markets.

Q. On page 3 there is a notation, Mr. Von der Ahe, under the name Ward:

"No one wants to make a decision. Office dictates display and merchandising. No 'esprit de corps' at store level——"

Is that what Mr. Ward reported to you?

A. It is.

Q. Would you identify—and I won't ask you the details—but I will go through the rest of these—who Mr. Hardesty is, who is referred to there.

A. Mr. Jack Hardesty is the diivsion head of our [fol. 2028] grocery department.

Q. And the comment which appears on that exhibit under his name are what Mr. Hardesty reported to you?

A. They are.

Q. And on the next page, there is a man listed as K. Olsen. Would you identify him, please?

A. Mr. Kenneth Olsen is the division head of our meat department.

Q. Of Von's?

A. Of our present company, Von's Grocery Company.

Q. What was he at the time?

A. The same.

Q. And the next page, there appears the name J. Osberg, could you identify him?

A. He was the division head of Von's produce department.

Q. Of Von's?

A. Fruit and vegetable department of Von's Grocery Company.

Q. And what is he now?

A. Mr. Osberg is deceased.

Q. I am sorry. Then the next page refers to Ed H. Would you identify him?

A. This is Mr. Edward Hirschman, division head of the delicatessen department.

[fol. 2029] Q. And the next page refers to P. Marshall, would you identify him?

A. Paul Marshall was the advertising manager of Von's Grocery Company.

Q. And would you identify Mr. K. Doyle, who appears on the next page.

A. Mr. K. Doyle is the manager in charge of personnel of Von's Grocery Company.

Q. And who is Don Bushmayer, who is refered to on the next page?

A. Don Bushmayer is the manager of warehousing and distribution for Von's Grocery Company.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, did you form any opinion at that time as to Shopping Bag as an organization?

A. I did, sir.

Q. And would you state what it was?

A. Based on my own observations and from the reports of our division heads, we concluded that Shopping Bag was a very fine organization, in that it had completely modern facilities and offices and warehousing distribution, it had new and modern stores, that it was lacking in a full complement of top management. And we felt that it was not realizing the full profits out of its sales, and that we could move in and improve the picture.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not you have improved [fol. 2030] the picture with respect to Shopping Bag stores?

A. I believe we have. Results have shown that we have included the Shopping Bag volume with the Von's volume and arrived at a net profit as a percentage of sales which is comparable to what Von's was enjoying before the merger.

The Court: Let's see, the last year, in 1960—was it 1960 that was 9/10ths of a per cent net sales, wasn't it, on Shopping Bag?

The Witness: I believe that was 1959.

The Court: 1959, was it——

The Witness: Just before the merger.

The Court: All right. Let's take '59—I believe that is right, 9/10ths of a per cent.

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: What was it in '62, do you know?

The Witness: In '62 is was combined, all as one company now. And it was over 2 per cent, your Honor.

The Court: Well, what I was trying to—have you any way of knowing, of course that averages for both companies——

The Witness: We have not operated the companies separately. We just don't know what each group of stores would have developed.

The Court: How about the volume, you have the volume [fol. 2031] on the stores, of course, don't you?

The Witness: Yes, we have.

The Court: What has happened to the volume on the Shopping Bag stores as contrasted to 1959, the volume of sales?

The Witness: Would you accept 1962 figures as against 1960?

The Court: Yes, that is all right.

The Witness: The volume in the Shopping Bag stores on a store-by-store basis in 1962 was eight million dollars over—correct me—it was six million dollars more than the same stores did in 1960.

The Court: Percentagewise what does that amount to?

The Witness: It would have been in the neighborhood of 10 per cent.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. In that same time, Mr. Von der Ahe, can you tell us what has happened to the sales of the Von's stores?

A. During the same period, in 1962 the Von's stores increased their sales only two million dollars over 1960 on a store-by-store basis.

The Court: And percentagewise?

The Witness: Percentagewise it would have been about 2½ per cent, or so.

[fol. 2032] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. To what do you attribute the better performance of Shopping Bag stores after the merger, as compared to the lesser improvement in the Von's stores?

A. Well, I believe it bears out the prediction of our division heads when they analyzed the Shopping Bag organization, that they were not getting the full potential out of their operation, either in sales nor in gross profits. And this is what I think accounts for the fact that the Shopping Bag stores showed a better increase than the Von's stores during that same comparable period.

The Court: In brief you are saying management, is that right?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe, in your affidavit you comment upon the affidavit of Dr. Mueller of the Federal Trade Commission, the economist for the Federal Trade Commission, who lists a number of acquisitions made by others in the period of 1949 to 1958; and you point out that these same companies have sold stores. Dr. Mueller's affidavit—may I borrow the court's copy?

The Court: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Alsup: I seem to have misplaced mine.

The Court: Is it in one affidavit or is it mixed in with [fol. 2033] others, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: In your book, your Honor, it is bound——

Mr. Coyle: It is bound, your Honor, in the book.

The Court: Oh, I see. It is a Government's exhibit, you mean?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, we put the affidavit in front of each——

The Court: Pass it to me, Mr. Clerk.

The Clerk: Which one is it in?

Mr. Coyle: I will give you my copy.

Mr. Alsup: If I could just borrow counsel's copy——

The Court: You can borrow mine, if you like.

Mr. Alsup: There is one right here, your Honor. Thank you.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Dr. Mueller's affidavit, Mr. Von der Ahe, he states on page 3, commencing at line 27:

> "* * * Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 6 shows that the market share of the top 20 chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area increased from 43.8 per cent in 1948 to 56.9 per cent in 1958.
> "The market share of the top 20 in 1958 would drop to 47.3 per cent if the sales of the top 20 were re-[fol. 2034] duced by $192,916.00 i.e., by the 1958 sales of stores acquired by the 15 chains covered by our survey * * *"

Mr. Von der Ahe, have you made any study of the increase in market shares between 1948 and 1958 of the concerns now listed in the top 20 in Government's Exhibit 1 which made no acquisitions?

A. I have made some computations on those stores which made no acquisitions, which were such as Alexander's Markets, and Fox Markets, Market Basket, Von's Shopping Bag, Greater All American.

And in 1948 their market shares totaled approximately 7 per cent.

And in 1958 that same group of companies accounted for approximately 18 per cent.

The Court: You mean by shares their share of the market?

The Witness: Their share of the market, your Honor, yes.

The Court: Yes. I suppose another way of putting it would be percentage of sales.

The Witness: To the total.

The Court: As to the total.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

[fol. 2035] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. You referred to All American, did you refer to Hughes Market?

A. Hughes was not in business in 1948. But it—it was included in that 18 per cent approximate figure I gave you.

[fol. 2036] Q. And how about Shoppers Market?

A. The same thing is true of Shoppers. They had no market share in 1948 whereas they had almost 1 per cent of the market share in 1958.

Q. How about McCoy's?

A. McCoy's, likewise, was not in business in 1948. Its market share was slightly less than 1 per cent in 1958.

Q. In that same period 1948 to 1958, or to the present time, Mr. Von der Ahe, do you know what has happened to the market share of the leader, Safeway?

A. I believe that the market share of Safeway has declined.

Q. In your affidavit, Mr. Von der Ahe, and I believe also in the affidavit of Roger Laverty of Thriftimart, the statement is made that you believe that you could start out all over as a single store operator today and do better for yourself financially than you do as president of Von's Grocery Company. Would you state what you meant by that?

A. I believe that every operator of a chain store will admit—I know Mr. Laverty admits it, I admit it—that my compensation or his compensation, or the compensation to any president of any chain store in this area right now would not be equal to what he himself could earn for himself by operating a single market. In other words, it would be more profitable for that individual to operate a [fol. 2037] single independent store than it would be as compared to his compensation as president of the company.

The Court: You are not including any stock holdings; you mean just compensation in salary?

The Witness: That's what I mean, your Honor, yes. In other words, if I can't earn more operating a store than I do as president of the company, I don't know very much about the business.

Mr. Alsup: Speaking of salary——

The Court: I guess the time will come when your salary will be specifically limited, we are on the road to that now, Mr. Witness, so maybe you had better get your independent store started. The revenue provisions will soon be that we have to report every morning what we earned the previous day.

If that's what the people want, I guess that's what they will get.

Mr. Alsup: I hope they don't want it, your Honor.

Q. Speaking of salaries, Mr. Von der Ahe, can you give us some idea of the range of salary—for example, what does a store manager working for Von's make?

A. A store manager makes from $10,500 to $12,000 a year.

Q. And how about your supervisors?

[fol. 2038] A. Our range of supervisors I believe is from about $14,000 to $18,000 a year.

Q. How about division heads?

A. Division heads, they are in the range of from $20,000 to $30,000 a year.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, this merger took place a little more than three years ago; have you seen any lessening of competition in the retail grocery business in this area since that time?

A. Absolutely not. I see an increase in competition in this area, it is continuing to increase.

Q. What is the basis for that statement?

A. Competition is becoming more vigrorous, there are more firms engaged in the business, there are stronger smaller firms continually taking a larger part of the market share, at the same time the larger firms are continuing to expand. We have these very aggressive independents who are opening one store, they become a chain when they get two stores. But there are just more people participating and actively engaging in the retail food business in this area, and that is what is causing the increase in competition.

The Court: May I ask a question before you go on?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 2039] The Court: What would be the effect of a 10 per cent drop in volume on your profits, could you tell me? Do you have any way of estimating?

The Witness: Your Honor, I could not give you a fast answer, because a lot of pencil work would be required, because I don't know how fast we could readjust our expenses and things of that nature, but a 10 per cent drop in sales, which would result in a 10 per cent or more drop in grosses, might not be measured with commensurate decrease in expenses, so I think it would be quite serious.

The Court: It would put you in the red, wouldn't it?

The Witness: I guess right now it would at least get us borderline.

The Court: You have certain expenses that can't be changed, your rent, and you can't just take employees and put them on one day and off the next?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: And I take it with a sudden drop in the market—by the "market" I mean the consumer market—of 10 per cent, that you would have to wait and analyze, and you don't just precipitously start firing people and letting people go, and you might cut down on your purchases, I take it—is that right?

The Witness: Yes, but that would not result in a [fol. 2040] lower cost of doing business. We have fixed expenses.

The Court: You have fixed expenses?

The Witness: Yes. Which we might be able to decrease some of them, but others we could not decrease.

The Court: Do you have any idea, for example, what margin Ralph's works on, net to sales?

The Witness: Ralph's is one company, and a very good company, I might say, good, honest, fair competition, that do not publish any reports of any kind. I know nothing about their business.

The Court: How about Safeway?

The Witness: Safeway's net to sales, from their published reports, is in the neighborhood of 1½ per cent.

The Court: Well, that's about in keeping with the trade, isn't it?

The Witness: That's a good record, yes.

Mr. Alsup: I have just one or two more questions, if I may.

Q. You have mentioned new concerns entering the market in the last three years, Mr. Von der Ahe. Have you seen any changes in the forms of retailing groceries and related products?

A. Foodstuffs are now being sold in quite a few discount houses on a loss-leader basis to attract trade to the discount house. Recently over the past few years we have [fol. 2041] seen the introduction of milk depots, as they are called, which are permitted by the State to sell milk at lower retail prices than grocery stores. We have seen some convenience stores, such as Speedy Marts that were mentioned here yesterday. We see some foodstuffs even being sold in drug stores. So there is just almost no re-restriction on who may engage in the sale of foodstuffs.

Q. I understand the drug stores complain about the grocery stores selling health and beauty items, too?

A. It probably cuts both ways.

Q. Based on your experience——

The Court: We probably are going back to the old-time general store, aren't we, everything from patent medicine to dry goods?

The Witness: Your Honor, I agree with you, I think we are.

The Court: Just on a larger scale?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: Isn't that about what is happening?

The Witness: Yes. Instead of buggy whips, we have spark plugs now.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr Von der Ahe, based on your knowledge of the industry, your own experience, and what you expect for the future, can you tell us whether in your opinion there [fol. 2042] is any danger whatsoever of a monopoly, or oligopoly, whatever that means, of grocery business in this area occurring in the future?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, this is the ultimate issue.

The Court: And I will decide it, too. What he says isn't going to make the decision. I will let him answer.

Mr. Alsup: Every single government witness made a decision.

The Court: I will still decide it. The Supreme Court might change it, but I will decide it.

The Witness: My answer is that there is absolutely no possibility of concentration of retail food business in a few hands in this area. I would say it is more to the contrary. All the trends and indications are an increase in competition.

I can remember back to 1930 when the food industry in this area was in comparatively few hands. I can trace the steps right down to today that indicates and shows that there are more people getting into the business, more companies engaged in the business, and all signs point to the fact that this is an increasing competitive area.

The Court: What happened to Piggly-Wiggly, are they still here?

[fol. 2043] The Witness: Your Honor, the first Piggly-Wiggly, which was operated by Mr. A. C. Jones, Sr., sold out to Safeway.

The Court: There is a new Piggly-Wiggly now?

The Witness: This new Piggly-Wiggly was started a few years ago by the same Mr. A. C. Jones, Sr., who has since died, and it is being operated by his son, A. C. Jones, Jr., and they have half a dozen or so stores, principally in the San Fernando Valley.

The Court: Incidentally, in England, in London, they have a grocery store which is about 250 years old where they wear tails, the clerks wear tails. Maybe you ought to try that out.

We will take our recess.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I was just about to say that I have one more question for Mr. Von der Ahe.

The Court: If I give you until 2:00 o'clock, it will probably be three, so we will take a recess until 2:00 o'clock, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. Thank you.

(Whereupon, an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock, p. m.)

[fol. 2044] Los Angeles, California, Thursday, June 13, 1963. 2:00 P.M.

The Court: Proceed, counsel.

Theodore A. Von der Ahe, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, having been previously duly sworn, resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Direct examination. (Continued)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, do you have any opinion as to whether Von's share of the grocery sales market in this area has increased or decreased in the years since 1960?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. What is that opinion, sir?

A. My opinion is that the Von's grocery share of the market in this area has declined since 1960.

Q. What is the basis for that opinion?

A. My opinion is based on the fact that this market is expanding very rapidly. It is growing at a much faster rate than we are able to keep up with, because of new firms, companies, and individuals who are participating in this market, and which is taking a greater percentage of it, and the result is that the share of Von's Grocery Company has actually decreased.

[fol. 2045] Q. In the years since 1960 have you constructed any new stores outside of the Los Angeles-Orange County areas?

A. Yes, we have.

Q. What stores are they?

A. We have——

Mr. Coyle: Object, your Honor, this is outside of the relevant market.

The Court: There are a lot of things outside.

What is the purpose, counsel? Just because it is outside, does it make it relevant? What is the purpose?

Mr. Alsup: The purpose is simply to show, your Honor, that this area is decreasing so far as Von's is concerned, and they are moving in to other counties.

The Court: Well, I will permit it for that purpose. I will permit it.

The Witness: We have opened stores in Ventura County, San Diego County, and we are presently constructing a store in Riverside County.

[fol. 2046] The Court: Is that for the purpose of ultimately leaving Los Angeles County and environs?

The Witness: No, your Honor. It is trying to keep up with the population that comes into Southern California.

The Court: In other words, the population is spreading towards Ventura, it is spreading towards San Diego, and I suspect towards Riverside, so you are moving in those directions; is that right?

The Witness: That's correct, sir.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

The Court: All right. Cross examine.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, you testified that you had inspected most of the government witnesses' stores. Did you inspect the store in which Kenneth Richey works?

A. Kenneth Richey?

Q. Yes.

A. I do not recall the name. Would you mind giving me the name of the market in which he works?

Mr. Alsup: Covina Farms Market, Mr. Coyle.

Mr. Coyle: Covina Farms Market.

[fol. 2047] The Witness: No, I did not go in that store.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Did you inspect the stores of Paul Palmer?

A. I inspected one of his stores in Montrose.

Q. What was your opinion of that store?

A. I thought he had a very good operation.

Q. How large was it?

A. The store was of medium size, I would guess in the neighborhood of ten to twelve thousand feet. It was well merchandised, he had a good ad, and it impressed me as being a very sound operation.

Q. Did you inspect the store of Don Henry Fairbank, I think it is called Don's Market?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was your evaluation of that store?

A. Mr. Fairbank runs a rather small, what we would call a drive-in type of market. The store was neat and clean. He has a service meat department, which seems to be his main drawing card. I found nothing to complain about with the store. It was a good, well-run, independent operation.

Q. Did you inspect the stores of Manuel Gertmenian?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was your opinion of those stores?

A. The Gertmenian store on Atlantic Boulevard was, if [fol. 2048] I may use the expression, sort of hodge-podgey; it did not have a very inviting appearance, the fixtures were antiquated, old, obsolete; the store was not very well merchandised, and it didn't have the appearance of being a good operation.

Q. What about his other stores?

A. I did not see any of his other stores.

Q. Did you inspect the store of Jack Levitan?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was your opinion of that store?

A. This store was on Valley Boulevard, east of Rosemead, and one day I entered the store—I was there on two different occasions—on this one particular day the entrance to the store was restricted to four feet of clearance, another very definite fire hazard. You go through—you enter into the store, you are exposed to a liquor department on one side, which was junky, and two cash registers on the other side, which had not been cleaned up, inasmuch as the empty bottles, cartons, and so forth, had not been removed, and it gave a disorderly, uninviting appearance. The market was very poorly lit, and the produce operation was very bad.

Q. How large a store was it?

A. It is a very small store, I would guess that it is about 40 feet wide by about 100 or so feet deep. And then [fol. 2049] adjacent to it in a small building of about 15 by 20 or so, he had his produce department.

Q. Did you inspect the store of Roderick Irvine?

A. Rod Irvine, those were the Star Markets you are talking about?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they good stores?

A. In my opinion, they are not.

Q. Are they well kept?

A. I did not think so.

Q. How large are they?

A. They are both quite small, the number of square feet I cannot give you, but they were not comparable to some of the other stores I saw. The stores gave a neat appearance, but there was just something about them that gave the impression that they were not well merchandised. His fixtures were not well aligned. He caused a congestion in his store traffic. His meats were of the service type and looked to be good, and it looked as though he had a good display of produce. But the store itself did not have what you would call a sharp or fresh appearance.

[fol. 2050] Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, I believe you testified you had been in the grocery business on a full-time basis for 37 years. Were you associated with Von's grocery chain of 87 stores?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. And what was your capacity with that chain?

A. I was manager of the warehouse.

Q. And that chain was sold to MacMarrs in 1928, was it?

A. In '28, effective as of January 1, 1929.

Q. And MacMarrs was born through the consolidation of several chains including Von's?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you and your father both stayed on with MacMarrs?

A. I stayed on for a while, until I think around 1930. My father stayed on a little longer.

Q. And then you opened your own store in 1932, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Was this a corporation, or did you open it yourself?

A. This was a partnership.

Q. Who were the partners?

A. My father and my brother and myself.

[fol. 2051] Q. What was this store called?

A. This was called Von's Store.

Q. And when you opened this this store, you opened it as part of an existing store, did you?

A. I might want to correct what I just said, that it was called Von's Store. Actually I believe it was called Messick's Market. And we opened up the grocery concession in Messick's Market.

And then after the earthquake we called it Von's Lynwood Market.

The Court: I will see how good your memory is. What was the date of the earthquake?

The Witness: It was in March of 1933.

The Court: Well, it was March 10th at a quarter to 6:00, March 10, 1933. That is the date.

The Witness: Your Honor, the only thing I remember is it was on a Friday afternoon.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. And in 1949, I think you testified that you opened your warehouse, is that correct?

A. That's right. At the time we left Certified Grocers we opened a warehouse, yes. Prior to that time we had had a storage area which we did not operate as a warehouse. But it was for storage, excess storage.

Q. And was one of your reasons in opening your ware- [fol. 2052] house and leaving Certified, because you found that in cases where there was a forthcoming price advance, Certified was not able to give you enough merchandise to afford you the same protection that the direct buying would afford?

A. Yes.

Q. And was another reason you found that the same thing happened in cases where prices declined, you had no floor-stock protection, whereas firms doing direct buying had such protection.

A. That's right.

Q. And did you also leave Certified and start doing your own warehousing because you found that when you required larger quantities of merchandise to cover an ad, you found that in many cases Certified did not have ample supplies to service you?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, do you have a meat buyer who buys your meat for you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he inspect the meat before he buys it?

A. He does as good a job as he can in selecting meat——

The Court: Just answer the question first "Yes" or "No," and then explain. Can you explain it "Yes" or "No"?

The Witness: Your Honor, it is a difficult question to answer "Yes" because he does look at the carcasses, [fol. 2053] but he does not have the time to inspect them.

The Court: All right. You have answered. Now, if you wish to explain, go ahead.

The Witness: The meat buyer is confronted with the job of buying hundreds of carcasses every week. And it is impossible for him to personally inspect every carcass that he buys.

So he looks at a row of sides hanging and stamps them all, unless there is something that, of course, appears too bad to be accepted. But he does not personally inspect every carcass he buys.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. But he stamps every carcass.

A. He stamps every carcass.

Q. He must look at it before he stamps it.

A. That's right.

Q. How would an independent inspect, other than looking at the carcass?

A. Well, Mr. Coyle, there is a great difference between stamping a carcass and inspecting it. When he stamps a carcass he merely looks at the outside and goes on. And if he sees a whole row that looks pretty good he stamps them all and keeps going.

Whereas, an independent is able to look inside and outside, inspect it scrupulously to see, to determine the [fol. 2054] amount of fat, waste, and everything else in the carcass before he stamps it.

Q. That is, if he has time.

A. That is if he has time.

The Court: By the way, do you know whether or not you can tell whether they are corn-fed or not corn-fed by looking at them?

The Witness: Your Honor, I am not enough of a meat man to answer that question. But I think these meat men can.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. You think your buyer can?

A. I think he can.

Q. Well, you have produce buyers, don't you?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. Do they inspect the merchandise before they buy it?

A. They inspect some of it, because it is impossible, obviously, to inspect 500 crates of strawberries, let's say, or any large lot of anything. They look at what is presented by topping, noticing the lot, they see what it looks like, the shipper, the case. But it is subject to inspection when it arrives at our dock.

Q. And then you can return if it doesn't meet certain standards.

A. If it isn't as it looked like, we do return it.

The produce business, you must remember, is famous [fol. 2055] for having the big strawberries on top. And these commission merchants also sell their produce the same way. The nice produce is on top.

It is when we inspect through the entire lot that we discover things.

Q. If you are a big buyer it is easier to get produce returned than if you are a small buyer?

A. Not necessarily. The small buyer sees what he is buying at the time he buys it.

Q. He sees the strawberries on top, does he?

A. But he also takes delivery at the same time. That is the difference in our case.

Q. He discovers when he gets the merchandise back to his warehouse——

A. The small buyer doesn't take his merchandise to his warehouse. He takes it directly to his store.

Q. When he takes it to the store and opens the crate, can he return it?

A. Certainly he can.

Q. Now, in 1957 did you negotiate with Kroger with respect to the possible acquisition of your firm by Kroger's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was Kroger also interested in Alexander and Shopping Bag?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2056] Q. And subsequent to the negotiations with Kroger, when they broke off, did you approach Alexander and try to interest Alexander in entering into a merger agreement with you?

A. We had one feeler discussion, but that was the end of the discussion.

The Court: What is the relevancy? Suppose they did, suppose they talked to the greatest chain in all the world about doing something, and didn't do it, what is the relevancy, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I want to show that Von's Grocery Company initiated the merger talks with Shopping Bag and was interested at that time in making an acquisition——

The Court: Well, suppose they were. I don't think there is any question—is there any denial in the evidence about that?

Mr. Alsup: No such——

The Court: Well, is there any question about it, that Von's were the ones who instigated it, or didn't they, what is the——

Mr. Alsup: No question about it, your Honor, and their own exhibit shows it.

The Court: I thought the pretrial conference order indicased that they went out and bought Von's.

Mr. Coyle: Went out and bought Shopping Bag.

[fol. 2057] The Court: Voluntarily, nobody forced them into it, did they?

Mr. Coyle: No, Shopping Bag was——

[fol. 2058] The Court: What is the relevancy of that?

Mr. Coyle: To show Shopping Bag was not in such bad condition that they were out looking for somebody to take them over.

The Court: I see. All right. Go ahead. I will allow it.

Of course when you get into these economic cases, I suppose you get into all the facets of the whole civilization. We will be counting strawberries next, I suppose. I hope the Supreme Court has to do it and I don't.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Did you make the original contact with Shopping Bag with respect to the negotiation to merge?

A. Are you referring now to the Von's and Shopping Bag merger?

Q. Yes.

A. Or the Kroger?

Q. Von's and Shopping Bag.

A. I cannot recall circumstances or events, but to the best of my memory after we had seen this Kroger survey, which you have a copy of, it was pointed out that there was no conflict or overlapping competition between Von's and Shopping Bag, and Mr. Hayden and I continued the discussion in view of the fact that this merger just made good economical sense.

[fol. 2059] Q. Mr. Hayden was not in on any discussions with Safeway, was he—Kroger, I mean?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. So after the Kroger negotiations broke down, then you approached Mr. Hayden and instituted the negotiations?

The Court: Counsel, you drop your voice at the end. We all have to lean forward on every sentence. Would you please keep your voice up?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Q. Did you institute the negotiations with Shopping Bag?

A. I would say that I, at least, carried them on. Now, I don't remember if I said the first word or if Mr. Hayden said the first word, but we continued our discussions after the Kroger incident was ended.

Q. Was Mr. Hayden in on the discussions with Kroger?

A. I just answered by saying I don't think he was.

Q. I don't understand the statement that you continued the negotiations.

A. With Mr. Hayden and myself.

The Court: He said, in effect, counsel, that he wasn't sure, he didn't remember who started the first conversation, but he carried on the negotiations.

Mr. Coyle: I understand.

Q. During the years as this area has grown in popula-
[fol. 2060] tion, has there been a movement on the part of the chains to follow the population?

The Court: To do what?

Mr. Coyle: To follow the population, and locate stores in the new areas as the population moves out.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, it is confusing and ambiguous.

The Court: I understand it, and I think the witness is able to understand it. He is capable of taking care of himself. I will let him answer it.

As a matter of fact, he might do a good job if he moved over in the Antitrust Department.

The Witness: Thank you, your Honor.

The Court: Go ahead and answer it.

The Witness: I believe it can be stated as a general rule that the chain stores, and other markets, the food industry, follow the population.

The Court: Well, let me ask a question.

Do you know of any business in the world that is engaged in selling either food or clothes that doesn't follow population?

The Witness: Not at all, your Honor.

The Court: It depends on population, doesn't it?

The Witness: Certainly.

The Court: It depends on mouths, food depends on [fol. 2061] mouths, the number of mouths, is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Generally, when the population moves out into an area, do several chains move out into that area to serve the population?

A. I can't answer that yes or no. It depends on how much population moves out, how many mouths there are to feed, and whether the economics would justify one, two, or half a dozen stores, regardless of by whom they are operated.

Q. As the Downey area has grown, have a number of chains moved out into Downey?

A. I believe they have.

Q. As the Whittier area has grown, have a number of chains moved out into that area?

A. Yes.

Q. As the Garden Grove area has grown, have a number of chains moved out into Garden Grove?

A. Yes.

The Court: How about Beverly Hills, have they moved into Beverly Hills?

The Witness: Your Honor, that is a difficult area to open a store in because of the cost of land. It is almost impossible to open a store in Beverly Hills.

The Court: But Safeway has opened two in the last [fol. 2062] 10 years.

The Witness: Safeway has moved out there, yes.

The Court: Have you, Von's?

The Witness: Not yet, your Honor. I might add that we would very dearly like to have a store out there.

Mr. Coyle: I have some exhibits I would like to have marked, your Honor.

The Court: Mark them, Mr. Clerk, please.

While he is doing that, may I ask you one question?

What do you figure, insofar as your operation is concerned, the maximum amount that can be paid for land—for square foot, I guess you would figure it, wouldn't you?

The Witness: Yes. We have upgraded our ideas on how much we can pay for a store site, and it depends now whether we are going to be the landlord ourselves——

The Court: I understand that. Assuming you are not the landlord, assuming you are leasing, you are going to pay on the lease on a 25-year basis—don't they figure it on the square foot basis?

The Witness: They figure it on a square foot basis. I assume you are speaking about land cost now, not building cost?

The Court: Land cost first. We will come to building next.

[fol. 2063] The Witness: We do not like to pay in excess of two dollars and a half a square foot.

The Court: Two and a half a square foot means $42,000—what is in an acre, 42,000?

The Witness: 43,000. About $100,000.

The Court: About $100,000?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Generally, what would be the square footage in one of your stores that you would anticipate?

The Witness: Well, on the basis we are talking about now, we are talking about two and a half acres to three acres.

The Court: So you would have a land cost of about $250,000, is that right?

The Witness: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: How many square feet do you usually figure in the building?

The Witness: We like to talk in figures of 24,000 square feet on the ground floor.

The Court: What is a rough estimate—you had better listen to this, gentlemen. You may wake up and find something in the record you don't like.

Mr. Alsup: I like it, your Honor. I was listening. I just wanted to get a copy of the exhibit.

The Court: On the basis of square footage, what is [fol. 2064] a rough estimate on building cost? Ten, twelve, fifteen?

The Witness: Our buildings are costing in the neighborhood of $300,000 to $350,000.

The Court: Well, that would be how much a square foot?

The Witness: Your Honor, I might explain. This 24,000 square feet on the ground floor also has in the neighborhood of 6,000 feet for a mezzanine, so by standards today we are talking about a 30,000 square foot market, which costs in the neighborhood of ten to eleven dollars per square foot.

The Court: All right. So there is an investment involved of about around $600,000?

The Witness: That's correct.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

The Clerk: I have marked four maps as Plaintiffs' Exhibits 79, 80, 81, and 82.

(The exhibits referred to were marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 79, 80, 81, and 82.)

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I would like to show these exhibits to the witness.

The Court: Certainly. Counsel, in this court you may approach the witness at any time. The only request I make is when you have finished showing him something, don't stand there unless you have to. If you want to approach the witness stand and point out something, I will [fol. 2065] be glad to have you do it.

May I ask one other question before you take up and it will save interrupting you again?

Mr. Von der Ahe, in the matter of financing, from your knowledge of the trade—I would like to have you hear this, counsel, because later on you are going to come back and I am going to hear you say you didn't hear something, and it will be too late, so you had better listen.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

The Court: These things may not seem relevant to you, but they are to me.

From your experience in the trade in acquiring sites for stores, is there any difficulty about an independent going out and acquiring a site, building a store?

The Witness: The answer is so far as I can recall there is no difficulty, an independent can go right ahead and acquire his site and build a store.

The Court: If he has the money you mean?

The Witness: If he is able to provide the funds.

The Court: How about the financing, does he have any more difficulty in getting the financing than a chain store, for example, a small or large chain?

The Witness: Well, your Honor, if the independent goes [fol. 2066] out and buys the land, builds his building, I am sure he is able to put a mortgage on it which will finance his investment.

This is contrary to what the chains do. They do not, as a general rule, buy land and put on buildings and borrow against it.

The Court: What I am getting at is, the financial community, mainly now I am talking about insurance companies, who do most of the lending—is that right?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court (Continuing): —do they prefer the larger concerns, or do they prefer the smaller concerns, as far as you know?

The Witness: Well, your Honor, I am afraid I misunderstood you. The insurance companies will finance the leases of the larger firms. Up until now——

The Court: They look at a balance sheet, don't they, before they do it?

The Witness: They look at the balance sheet and the credit rating of the lessee before they make their commitments.

The Court: Well, suppose I, tomorrow, wish to go into—I have one small store, and assuming I decided to go out and engage in the grocery business and become a chain and have two stores, and I wanted to have a store that, say, cost four or five hundred thousand, is it difficult, [fol. 2067] the financing?

The Witness: I would say in the absence of any credit rating, it would be difficult for you, sir, to get a store which cost four or five hundred thousand dollars, because the financing institutions would not finance it for you.

The Court: Well, when you get ready to enter into a lease, make a firm deal, do you have to supply balance sheets?

The Witness: No, we do not.

The Court: Your credit rating is already——

The Witness: It has already been established.

The Court: All right, go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: I have a question along those lines.

Q. You mentioned this 7 per cent net-net-net rate that insurance companies give to certain firms. Now, do you have to have annual sales of 50 million dollars in order to qualify for that 7 per cent net-net-net?

A. I have never heard of that as a restriction. I wouldn't know.

Q. You don't know whether there is any restriction as to who qualifies for those terms?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe, will you look at——

The Court: One other question before you leave [fol. 2068] it. These are all economic questions. When these builders usually build these markets, they get out of them usually as fast as they can, don't they?

The Witness: Do you mean developers, sir?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I do not think they do.

The Court: They get financed, don't they?

The Witness: I think they get financed and maintain an equity in the development.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, will you look at the exhibit which shows the Von's and Shopping Bag locations in 1946?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that indicate——

The Court: What is the exhibit number?
The Witness: No. 79.
Mr. Coyle: 79, your Honor.
The Court: All right.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Does Exhibit 79 show that the Von's Stores were primarily in the southwest part of the Los Angeles metropolitan area—I am sorry—the northeast section, and that the Shopping Bag Stores were in the southwest portion of the area?

[fol. 2069] A. No. it does not.

Q. What does it show?

A. Just the opposite of what you said, sir.

Q. I am sorry. It shows that the Shopping Bag Stores are in the northeast part of the area and the Von's Stores in the southwest?

A. That's correct.

Q. Then turning to Government's Exhibit 80 for identification, does this show the locations of the Von's and Shopping Bag Stores in the year 1950?

A. Without verifying the accuracy of this, I would say it shows them generally, yes, it does.

Q. Does it show that the Von's Stores are moving out of the southwest area and the Shopping Bag Stores are moving out of the northeast area?

A. I don't believe it does, sir.

Q. Turn to the next exhibit, then, Exhibit 81. Does Exhibit 81 show the location of the Von's and Shopping Bag Stores for the year 1955?

A. That is what this is purported to do. In the interest of time, I will accept it as being accurate, but I have not checked this or seen this exhibit before.

Q. The listing in the margin shows the addresses of the stores, doesn't it?

A. Yes, it does.

[fol. 2070] Q. Does it show that the Von's Stores are expanding to the north and to the east, or moving to the north and to the east, and the Shopping Bag Stores are moving to the South and to the west?

A. I believe this continues to show that the Von's Stores are still on the west and south portion of this metropolitan shopping area and the Shopping Bag Stores are still on the north and east portion of the metropolitan shopping area.

[fol. 2071] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. All right. Then turn to Exhibit 82.

(The exhibit was placed before the witness.)

Q. Does Exhibit 82 show the location of the existing and planned stores of the Von's and Shopping Bag chains in the year 1960?

A. I would say within the same qualifications, that I have not checked the accuracy of this exhibit, nor the placement of the stars. But in general I assume that it does.

Q. Does this exhibit show that Shopping Bag has moved up into the Reseda area?

A. I see a red dot there which I assume is supposed to be for Shopping Bag stores——

Mr. Alsup: Will you give the address of that store, counsel? Is that the one at San Fernando-Mission Road?

Mr. Coyle: That may not be, it is the Reseda area.

The Court: I can't hear you, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

Q. Does this exhibit show that Shopping Bag had moved up to 13730 Foothill in Sylmar, which is in the upper northwest part of the area?

A. Counsel, I will agree that Shopping Bag moved to [fol. 2072] that area. But I will point out to you that the placement of the dots on this map is inaccurate.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which dot are you referring to?

A. The same store you just mentioned.

Q. No. 34. And No. 42 is the—what store is that? Is that the one on the corner of San Fernando-Mission Road——

The Court: Now, wait. Is this 34—go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: 43.

Mr. Alsup: 42.

The Court: I am sorry, but I didn't get the number. 34?

Mr. Coyle: 43.

Mr. Alsup: 42.

Mr. Coyle: 42, I am sorry. I have a very small copy here, your Honor.

The Court: I want to remember it so when I see the exhibit I can identify it. 42, is it?

The Witness: What about 42?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Is 42 up in Reseda?

A. 42, according to your map here, sir, is at the corner of San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa, which earlier [fol. 2073] this morning I testified was never opened as a Shopping Bag store.

Q. And that was planned to be opened in 1960, prior to the acquisition?

A. I so stated, yes, sir.

Q. And then this other Shopping Bag—let's leave the northwest area.

By 1960 did Shopping Bag and Von's have stores in Whittier?

A. Von's had a store in Whittier, East Whittier. Von's had one store in Whittier. Shopping Bag I believe had one store in Whittier.

Q. Did Shopping Bag have a store in Downey?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did Von's have a store in Downey?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did Shopping Bag have a store in West Covina?

A. Yes.

Q. Did Shopping Bag have a store in West Covina?

A. I just answered that.

Q. Did Von's have a store in West Covina?

A. Yes.

May I suggest that the dots on the map be made accurate, so it won't be so confusing.

The Court: We won't bother about it.

[fol. 2074] Mr. Coyle: I thought they were accurate, I am sorry.

The Court: The trend is what we are looking for. Counsel is trying to show the trend.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, did Shopping Bag have a store located at 1611 West Whittier, La Habra?

A. If that is at the corner of Hacienda Boulevard, yes.

Q. And did Von's have a store at 15704 Whitwood Lane in Whittier?

A. Yes, that is in East Whittier.

Q. And did the store manager of the Shopping Bag store in La Habra list Von's as his strongest competitor?

A. I don't know if he did or not. I don't remember.

The Court: What do you mean, list him as his strongest competitor?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. In the report that was submitted to you to use in preparing the answer to Government's Interrogatory 6.

A. Mr. Coyle: I don't remember if he did or not.

Q. If he were shown on the interrogatory's answer, would he have listed——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I object. The document speaks for itself.

[fol. 2075] The Court: Do you have it, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: This is the document which was introduced into evidence.

The Court: Well, read it, if you want to. It is in evidence. You can read anything you want from it.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I don't believe that is in evidence. It was objected to yesterday.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct. That is why I am examining this witness.

The Court: What is the exhibit number?

Mr. Coyle: Just a moment, your Honor.

The Court: Well, when you refer to something I wish you would refer to exhibit numbers because we certainly want to aid the higher court in being able to know what we are talking about.

Mr. Coyle: Referring to Defendant's Exhibit AV, which was admitted in evidence yesterday, AV.

The Court: You can read it then, it is in evidence.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. This Exhibit AV is an answer to Government's Interrogatory No. 6, which you, Mr. Von der Ahe, certified—or as to which you filed an affidavit in which you stated that:

> "* * * much of the information set forth in [fol. 2076] said answer was gathered and collated by persons regularly in the employ of said defendant or employed by attorneys of said defendant, and from records and files kept by said defendant in the regular and ordinary course of business, or from contact with officers and employees of said defendant, said persons acting throughout pursuant to the instructions of the affiant or defendant's attorneys with reference to the gathering or collation of such material * * *"

Do you recall signing that certificate, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. Are you referring to the study made by—I forget the man's name, who is a professor at Occidental University?

Q. I am referring to the answer to the interrogatory that was submitted.

A. I am sorry. My memory is blank on what I signed. But if you will show me whether it is this one particular instrument, I will be able to say "Yes" or "No," whether I signed that or not.

Q. I wonder if the witness could be shown Exhibit AV.

The Court: Of course you can always show it to him.

(The exhibit was placed before the witness.)

[fol. 2077] The Witness: What page, please?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think the pages are numbered. No. 68.

The Witness: (Looks at exhibit.) Mr. Coyle, I am sorry but I don't find page 68 in here.

The Court: Go find it for him, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: It may be that certification is not attached to this exhibit, your Honor.

The Clerk: It isn't.

The Witness: This is what you just read to me.

Now, preceding this——

The Court: He asked you, though, did you yourself personally make those answers or who made them?

The Witness: Your Honor, that is what I am trying to determine.

The Court: I see. All right.

The Witness: I don't know what answer he is referring to now. And I asked the question if this was the work compiled by the professor from Occidental.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. My question to you, Mr. Von der Ahe, is: Is that the material that you certified with this certification?

A. I don't know if it is or not. Let's get into this and see.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I don't think there is any [fol. 2078] quarrel but what Mr. Von der Ahe signed the affidavit attached to the answer to the interrogatory, included among which Mr. Coyle is asking about.

The Court: All right. That settles that issue then, counsel.

The Witness: Okay.

The Court: I can understand how one might give a deposition or sign something in a case of this kind and might forget about it. In fact, some of you lawyers, as well as the judges, forget sometimes what paper is what. In fact, I am getting so many papers here I don't remember where I leave some of them.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. All right. Referring to the page marked Exhibit E of Defendant's Exhibit AV——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —does this page indicate that the Shopping Bag store manager at 1611 West Whittier, La Habra, listed Von's as his most important competitor? That is Von's No.——

The Court: Does it indicate that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: It does to me, your Honor.

The Court: Well, if it does, read it to me.

Mr. Coyle: It says——

The Court: I am the one that is going to pass on the language.

[fol. 2079] Mr. Coyle: I am sorry, your Honor, it can't be read, it shows on the document——

Mr. Alsup: It shows on the face of the document, your Honor.

The Court: Well, show it to me and let me see it. I can determine that. Pass it to the clerk.

I am the one to pass on that.

Now, the question is whether or not this indicates——

Mr. Coyle: Whether or not this indicates——

The Court: It says names and addresses of competitors in order of importance, is that what you are talking about?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Now, it gives—who do you want to know?

Mr. Coyle: I want to know whether, as to that Shopping Bag No. 1, Von's No. 27 is listed as the most important competitor.

The Court: Is listed as No. 27?

Mr. Coyle: No, Store No. 27.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, it seems to me——

The Court: Now you have lost me completely.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: I think we can stipulate, your Honor. The document speaks for itself.

[fol. 2080] The Court: Of course it does, but I am trying to find out what he is referring to.

Mr. Coyle: I am referring to the first Von's store listed there.

The Court: At 15704 Whitwood Lane.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Court: It lists it No. 1.

Mr. Coyle: As Shopping Bag's most important competitor.

The Court: It says names and addresses of competitors in order of importance.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

Now, turning to Shopping Bag No.——

The Witness: May I also suggest that you read the note at the bottom of this same page, which is purported to be the remarks of our manager.

The Court: All right. I will read it into the record.

"Note. A large Food Giant market located in a large shopping center approximately one mile south of Shopping Bag Store 1, No. 1, is scheduled to be opened at the end of July, 1960, and when it is opened the Food Giant market will replace Von's No. 27 as the major competition to Shopping Bag Store 1."

[fol. 2081] All right. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, turning to Shopping Bag No. 21, does this part of the exhibit show that the Shopping Bag 21 at 1183 Quadway, Whittier, listed as one of its competitors Von's No. 27, the same one we referred to about the 15740 Whittier Lane, as a competitor——

The Court: What are you reading from now?

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag No. 21, your Honor.

The Court: Where is Shopping Bag No. 21?

Mr. Coyle: We were on Shopping Bag No. 1, and then we turned the page——

The Court: I turned the page and it starts out 1, Piggly-Wiggly.

Mr. Coyle: I mean, up in the upper left-hand corner, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: You have to turn 21 pages, I think, your Honor.

The Court: That is quite a difference, I would say. The next page is 21 pages, I see.

Von's No. 27, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Then turning to Shopping Bag No. 27——

[fol. 2082] Mr. Alsup: I don't think there was an answer to the last question.

The Court: The answer is right here in the document. Names and addresses of competitors in order of importance. As I understand it, these are admissions, or these are answers given by the defense, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Court: So there is nothing to prove, it is already proved for whatever it means.

Mr. Coyle: All right. I will ask the witness then——

The Court: You can call it to my attention, however. Why don't you just read it to me?

Mr. Coyle: All right. Then turning to Shopping Bag No. 27—Shopping Bag 27 shows that Von's No. 29 at 1000 East Valley, Alhambra, was the second most important competitor of Shopping Bag No. 27, and that Von's No. 4 at 2280 Atlantic Avenue was also a competitor——

The Court: Where do I find that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: That is Shopping Bag 27.

The Court: Well——

Mr. Coyle: That is 6 pages over from page, from Shopping Bag 21.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: And then going on to Shopping Bag No. 28, that shows that Von's No. 31 at 973 South Glendora, [fol. 2083] West Covina, was a competitor of Shopping Bag No. 28 at 15427 Amar Road, La Puente. And the exhibit also shows——

The Court: Exhibit what?

Mr. Coyle: Exhibit AV, Defendant's Exhibit AV also shows——

The Court: Well, the trougle is, with the higher court trying to determine where to find this, counsel, I don't think they will ever in the world find these references, the way you are putting it in the record. I assume you would like to have the higher court know where to find it, wouldn't you?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I can't find it half the time, how are they going to? You are talking about AV and here is an exhibit E on page 2, and up on the left corner it says No. 27.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, this is Defendant's Exhibit AV and I think I am using the same terminology——

The Court: Well, you could state AV and what part of AV, couldn't you, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor.

The Court: To help the record out.

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor.

In AV, Exhibit E——

The Court: Exhibit E in——

Mr. Coyle: In Defendant's AV, the page referring [fol. 2084] to Shopping Bag 28.

The Court: Can you find it, Mr. Witness?

The Witness: I have it, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: That indicates that Shopping Bag No. 28 at 15427 Amar Road, La Puente, listed Von's 31 at 973 South Glendora, West Covina, as a competitor.

[fol. 2085] Then referring to Defendant's Exhibit AV, the part marked Exhibit E, the page referring to Shopping Bag 32, this page of the exhibit indicates that Shopping Bag No. 32 at 1170 West Garvey Boulevard, West Covina, listed Von's 31 at 973 South Glendora, West Covina, as its third strongest competitor.

The Court: Does it say the third strongest?

Mr. Coyle: It says "in order of importance."

The Court: Do you consider there is any difference in that from what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: The third most important competitor.

The Court: It says, "Names and addresses of competitors in order of importance," then it is 3 or it is 4 or it is 5. Numerically they give them, is that right? Don't you think you ought to put it in that form?

Mr. Coyle: All right.

Does it list them numerically No. 3 in the list which lists "Addresses of competitors in order of importance"?

The Court: Well, it does, doesn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Sure.

The Court: Read it. He is not at the point now, unless he wants to say he made a mistake—these are whatever you want to call them, they are at least admissions, aren't they?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

[fol. 2086] The Court: And they are binding on the defendants. You don't want him to change it, do you?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

Shopping Bag No. 33 in Defendant's Exhibit AV, the part marked E, shows that Shopping Bag 33 at 9922 Cotilla, Anaheim, listed Von's No. 26 at 12156 Brookhurst Avenue, Garden Grove, as a competitor, and showed that in order of importance it was marked No. 3.

And referring to the page showing Shopping Bag No. 35 in the portion of Defendant's Exhibit AV, which is marked Exhibit E, it shows that Shopping Bag No. 35 at 9058 East Firestone Boulevard, Downey, listed Von's No. 5 at 10001 Paramount Boulevard, as a competitor, and ranked it fourth in order of importance.

And all told——

Mr. Alsup: Counsel, don't you think it would be more accurate to say last in importance?

The Court: As I understand, this was an inquiry to determine from the defendant——

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: What the order of importance of competitors was, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That's correct.

The Court: And he has listed them in that order, what he considers 1, 2, 3, and so on. And that is what you [fol. 2087] are now reading into the record?

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: It is his admission as to what he considers to be the order of importance of the competition. Is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: I might say, your Honor, the exhibit is in evidence; all he is doing is reading portions of it in. It seems more appropriate for argument to me.

The Court: Well, counsel, this is an age-old problem in the trial of lawsuits, and I suppose there is nothing one can do about it, unless you want to do the same. What he thinks helps his case he reads into the record, so when he gets up on appeal and if the court reads it in the record and accepts it, then it is in his favor. But you can do the same thing, I guess.

Mr. Coyle: This witness also testified, though, there was very little competition between the two chains, and this exhibit shows that seven Shopping Bags were competing with six Von's stores in 1960, which was approximately 20 per cent of all the stores operated by both companies.

The Court: I think that is correct. The question is how much competition was there?

By this rating I am a little bit concerned as to how I arrive at how much competition there was. In other words, [fol. 2088] seventh in importance may be of no consequence or it may be of great consequence. I was going to ask, perhaps, that would be of greater help to the court, and it concerns me. May I interrupt you at this point?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Taking Exhibit 82, Government's 82, with the stars and the red dots, I can't tell from this chart how far these stores are apart in miles, distance.

Mr. Coyle: The exhibit shows how far apart they are, Exhibit AV.

The Court: It does?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: I understand that, but the eye can be misled. You have, for example—do you have a copy of 82 in front of you?

Mr. Coyle: No, I don't, your Honor, but I will get a copy.

The Court: Get it, will you, and let me ask you a question. For example, let's take an easy one. How far is it down between 33 and 26, what is the mileage between the red dot and the green star?

Mr. Coyle: I couldn't tell that from this exhibit, your Honor. But these exhibits were presented to show this movement that they were moving toward each other, and I certainly think they show that. They also—— [fol. 2089] The Court: I don't think there is any question that they show a movement, but the question, counsel, that comes up, and the one that seems to me to be rather relevant, is how far apart are these particular stores.

For example, I see a store here in the San Fernando Valley, 42 and 37, I guess it would be, I wonder how far apart they are. They could be five miles apart there.

Mr. Coyle: I think you would have to refer to Exhibit AV to determine that, if they are listed as competitors.

The Court: You know, the distance between 42nd Street and 48th Street is a pretty short jump; but when you go from Montana to Idaho you run into a little distance.

Mr. Coyle: We would have to have a large map to plot these things and show anything.

The Court: What I am getting at is how am I going to correlate the information on Exhibit 82, insofar as distances are concerned, between these Von's stores and the Shopping Bag stores?

Mr. Coyle: I didn't submit the exhibits to be correlated in that respect. I submitted the exhibits to show this movement, that one was moving from the southwest and the other from the northeast, and they got to a point where they both had stores in virtually every part of the Los Angeles metropolitan area, every sector of it, anyhow, they [fol. 2090] had stores, they both had stores in the northwest, they both had stores down in the southeast.

The Court: Well, this map, counsel, would create that impression, but one who has been all over this county must realize—what is the distance across this county, about 100 miles, Los Angeles County?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know.

The Court: Does anybody know? It would be 100 miles, wouldn't it, close to it?

Mr. Alsup: I am sure it would be at least that.

The Court: For example, from down at the Long Beach area up to, say, Hollywood, would be what—about 20, 25 miles?

Mr. Coyle: That's close to it, your Honor.

The Court: I notice there is one store, one Von's grocery store in 1960, down at Palos Verdes, and the next closest Von's store is—well, with the lighting in this courtroom I can't tell, it is impossible. It looks to me to be a distance of at least six miles, and that is up toward——

The Witness: Your Honor, if I might interject. It would be in Gardena.

The Court: It would be at least eight or ten miles, wouldn't it, eight miles, wouldn't it?

The Witness: Yes, it would be very close to that.

The Court: Then the thing I am coming to, counsel, [fol. 2091] is this: For example, you have here a store in—let me find the closest one that I can find and see what happens.

I suppose the closest I could find, at least by the way it is put on Exhibit 82, would be—well, I can't read the streets, I give up. This splendid lighting in this courtroom is such that I give up.

Go ahead.

What I am concerned about is the correlation in miles. I think it is of considerable importance.

Mr. Coyle: I think it is a practical problem. If you are going to submit a map that is going to have the store location correlated in miles you would have to submit an awfully big map.

The Court: I don't think you can do it. That is the reason I say, other than what you are indicating just as a trend, general trend, these exhibits are of no value otherwise; is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That's right. Other than to show that they are moving towards each other.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Alsup: Have those exhibits been offered, your Honor?

The Court: I don't think so.

Mr. Coyle: I offer them in evidence right now.

The Court: Any objection?

[fol. 2092] Mr. Alsup: No objection.

The Court: Admitted.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibits 79, 80, 81 and 82 in evidence.

(The exhibits referred to were received in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibits 79, 80, 81 and 82.)

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe, at the time of the acquisition had Shopping Bag made plans to put in a store at San Fernando on Mission Road and Balboa Avenue in Granada Hills?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it determined not to put a store in at that location because that store would also have competed with a Von's store?

A. Yes, sir. I so testified this morning.

Q. Before the merger were you seeking new store locations for Shopping Bag—were you the corporate officer responsible for passing on new store locations?

A. Not for Shopping Bag.

Q. For Von's, I mean.

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Was Mr. Hayden doing the same thing for Shopping Bag?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2093] Q. And subsequent to the acquisition Mr. Hayden took over those duties for both firms?

A. That's right. That is one of his functions with the company.

Mr. Alsup: Not for both firms. Shopping Bag went out of existence.

The Court: I understand that, counsel. Those inadvertencies I usually catch.

He couldn't be obtaining them for Shopping Bag before he acquired Shopping Bag; I think that is pretty well settled, isn't it?

Mr. Alsup: That is for sure, your Honor.

[fol. 2094] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, referring to opening of new stores, in opening a 27,000-square foot store, will it cost about $225,000.00 to secure the fixtures?

A. That would be a fair estimate of cost for fixtures, yes, sir.

The Court: How much? $225,000.00 for fixtures?

The Witness: $225,000.00, yes.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. And the inventory would be from $125,000.00 to $175,000.00?

A. That is approximately correct.

The Court: By the way, I take it these fixtures, they don't put those in on time, do they?

The Witness: They can be purchased on time, your Honor, yes.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, your corporation doesn't put fixtures in on time because the financing costs are too high, isn't that correct?

A. We just prefer to pay for our fixtures as we buy them. We do not prefer to finance them.

Q. Yes. As you stated in your deposition on May 4, 1961, the terms on fixtures are too high?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 2095] Q. That is, the interest is too high?

A. That is right.

Q. And then the inventory is between one hundred twenty-five thousand and one hundred seventy-five thousand, and if you have to buy the land, would it be in the neighborhod of three-quarters of a million dollars to open a new store?

A. Mr. Coyle, may I take them one by one——

The Court: You are compounding it, counsel; what you are doing, you are confusing me, too, you have got land, fixtures, then you have the building. So you mean all of them, or part of them? I don't know what you mean.

Mr. Coyle: I have this question that was put to the witness on the deposition.

"Would it cost in the neighborhood of three-quarters of a million dollars to open a new store?

"A. That would be a pretty good figure.

"Q. That would be a minimum figure?"

The Court: But the point, counsel, is this: To open a new store, that answer really gave you no information—it doesn't give me any.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: Because I don't know whether it means they bought it, whether they bought the ground, or whether [fol. 2096] they bought the ground and the building—they could have a 99-year lease on the building, they could have bought just the land or they could have bought the fixtures or they could have rented the fixtures—the equations are too many. You will have to clear it up for me. I don't understand.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, will you——

The Court: Let me ask a question. How much would it cost to open what you would consider to be a store in keeping with your idea of a top Von's store? Now, assuming, 1, that you did not buy the land and you did not buy the store building, but only the equipment. How much would it cost?

The Witness: In answer to that, your Honor, we would put in fixtures of approximately $225,000.00 and our inventory would be between one hundred twenty-five and one hundred seventy-five thousand. So the rough figure is $400,000.00 investment in fixtures, in equipment and in inventory.

The Court: Without owning the land or the building?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: But if you bought the land and the building, that would add on how much?

The Witness: We would add on a building of [fol. 2097] approximately three hundred to three hundred fifty thousand dollars, plus the cost of the land.

The Court: And the land would probably run about $250,000.00?

The Witness: That would depend——

The Court: As a general item.

The Witness: We have bought acreage recently for $30,000.00 an acre. And we have also paid much higher prices for it. That is a variable——

The Court: Well, one is a pioneering situation and the other is in a locality that is established, is that right?

The Witness: That's right, yes, sir.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, when you open a new store, Mr. Von der Ahe, how long is it before you show a profit?

A. We generally figure from thre to six months.

Q. You lose money from three to six months, is that correct?

A. I don't mean to infer that we lose money, sir. I mean we have opening costs that are not recaptured until three to six months. We are out-of-pocket cash, yes.

Q. You are out-of-pocket cash for the first three to six months?

A. That's right. It is like a farmer who sows seed. [fol. 2098] He has to wait until his crop matures before he reaps it.

Q. And during this period it is necessary to defray payroll costs and other costs out of your cash fund, is that correct?

A. Certainly.

Q. And was Shopping Bag Stores comparable to your stores in the investment required?

A. I believe they were.

Q. And in 1958 did Shopping Bag open eight stores?

A. I do not know.

Q. If Shopping Bag opened eight stores in 1958, would they be showing an out-of-pocket cash loss for a period of three to six months on those stores?

A. Mr. Coyle, I was not too familiar with their operations and I don't know.

But based on our experience they should have shown some opening costs.

I believe that is true of any person, firm or company that opens a store, they have an initial outlay before the store becomes a profitable operation.

Q. Based on your experience, a firm opening eight stores would show a three to six months loss on eight stores during the year in which they were opened?

The Court: Counsel, I don't mean to interfere with your case, but these figures are all right for a mind who [fol. 2099] has no perception of accounting, or tax structure or those things. But the difference between capitalization and expense—you have got those problems, and you leave me in the dark. I don't know what is capitalized and what is not capitalized.

Mr. Coyle: Let me ask the witness that question, your Honor.

The Court: I don't know what is depreciation and what is not depreciation. There are so many items in there—you know, just opening up a store and saying, I am ready to sell—that doesn't answer the problem.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Are these costs for payroll and other items when the store is not showing a profit, do they come out of your cash fund?

The Court: May I ask a question this way: What do you capitalize when you open a store? What is capitalized and what is expenses, in the general practice?

The Witness: We capitalize, let's say, our fixtures, and we expense a normal opening cost, which would be payroll, advertising, small equipment which is too small to capitalize, we write that off immediately.

The Court: Rent?

The Witness: Rent is written off immediately.

The Court: Are you on a cash basis or accrual [fol. 2100] basis?

The Witness: We are on a cash basis.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Would the openings of new stores by a chain lower the net income on gross sales, percentage net income on gross sales in the year during which the new stores were opened?

A. I don't think it should.

Q. Wouldn't those losses, and the burden of carrying this labor cost and these other costs for three to six months, wouldn't they be reflected in the percentage income?

A. I can only state so far as the Von's grocery chain is concerned. And they have never resulted in figures that were depressed on account of opening costs.

The Court: May I ask you this—you are on a calendar year basis, so your profit and losses are on that basis—have you ever had a store that had a loss for a full calendar year?

The Witness: Yes, we have some right now, your Honor. But they are not——

The Court: That in effect dilutes it to the extent that, for example, you have now or you did have when you merged?

The Witness: We had 28 stores at the time of the merger.

[fol. 2101] The Court: 28 stores, so one store went in the red and it diluted the other 27 to a ratio of 1 to 27, is that right?

The Witness: Not exactly.

The Court: I mean in theory.

The Witness: It would if they were all comparable.

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, I think he had started to say something else in response to this earlier question about what stores are now showing a loss. May I ask him——

The Court: Well, I didn't ask him that. I didn't ask him what stores, I asked him if any. You can get that later if you want to, counsel.

How many stores have shown a loss, to your recollection, in one calendar year, in any one calendar year?

The Witness: In our chain, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: We have, I would say, two or three that are marginal, and that is all.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. You don't know whether or not the cost of opening new stores by Shopping Bag in the year 1958 contributed to the drop in the percentage of income earned, as a percentage of gross sales, do you?

A. No, I don't believe I have any knowledge of that.

[fol. 2102] Q. But they may have?

A. I have no knowledge at all. I will not speculate.

The Court: Well, I would like to ask one question and then we will take a recess.

Mr. Witness, have you had occasion to have a store start out within the first three months and make a profit?

The Witness: Yes, I have, your Honor.

The Court: And that was because of a heavy volume, was it?

The Witness. Because it started off as a good store immediately.

The Court: Because of volume?

The Witness: Because of volume, yes, sir.

The Court: I think, counsel, it is 3:20, perhaps we had better take—is ten minutes enough?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Ten-minute recess.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 2103] The Court: Proceed.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, was there a strike in 1959?

A. There was a strike for the first four weeks.

The Court: Against who? Was there a general strike all over the nation? Where?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Was there a strike in the retail grocery industry in the Los Angeles area in 1959?

A. For the first four weeks in January 1959 there was, yes.

Q. Were the stores of some of the major chains closed during this strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Were 21 out of——

A. I might say some of the stores of some of the major chains were closed; not all of them. I don't mean to imply that.

Q. Were 21 out of 27 of Von's stores closed, and 29 out of 36 Shopping Bag stores closed from January 2, 1959, through January 28, 1959?

A. The answer for the Von's stores is accurate. I don't recall exactly how many of the Shopping Bag stores were closed, but I think that's a close figure.

Q. I was reading from the proxy statement.

[fol. 2104] A. All right. I will accept it.

Q. The proxy statement goes on to say this event had an adverse effect on the sales and earnings of both companies for the current year.

Is that so? Did the strike have an adverse effect?

A. That would naturally follow.

Q. And would that lower the income of the firms expressed as a percentage against the sales?

A. I don't think that would follow. It should to a degree, but I think that the Von's chain, as such, showed a very comparable figure to preceding history.

Q. If you had eight newly-opened stores, would it affect them more than stores with an established clientele that had been operating for a number of years?

A. I don't see how it would.

Q. Prior to entering into the agreement to acquire Shopping Bag, did you inspect the history of the company or study the history of the company?

A. I was familiar with their history, yes.

Q. From the beginning of 1955 to the beginning of 1960 did Shopping Bag increase the total number of stores in operation from 24 to 38?

A. I believe that's correct.

Q. And its total sales from $55,000,000 to $84,000,000?

[fol. 2105] A. I believe so.

Q. In the period between 1957 to 1960, did Shopping Bag increase its retained earnings from 5.6 million to 6.2 million?

A. I don't remember, but I assume they did. It would follow.

Q. Do you know whether Shopping Bag's net dollar profits were at an all-time high in 1957 when you began your merger negotiations with them?

Mr. Alsup: I object, your Honor. There is no foundation laid as to that.

The Court: If he knows, he can answer it; if he doesn't know, he can't answer it.

Mr. Alsup: Counsel says "When you began your merger negotiations."

The Court: That is a point of time. He knows when he began. If he knows, he may answer.

Mr. Coyle: He testified about it.

The Witness: I think they were.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. You think they were?

A. Yes.

The Court: The thing that worries me in these cases is the penalty of success. Every time you get successful, you [fol. 2106] have got to be penalized. This is what worries me in these cases, how you determine what is good success and what is bad success. That is what bothers me.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, you mentioned Smart & Final and Spartan in the course of your testimony. Who is Smart & Final?

A. Smart & Final is a wholesale grocery house in this area that operate quite a few cash and carry wholesale outlets, plus operating a major warehouse.

Q. Is this an independent corporation?

A. I believe it is affiliated with Thriftimart.

Q. Was it acquired by Thriftimart over the past few years?

A. I can't give you the exact details of the transaction, because I do not know them, but I know that there is a connection between Smart & Final and Thriftimart.

The Court: Smart & Final was a wholesale house, weren't they?

The Witness: They still are, your Honor.

The Court: It doesn't distribute at the retail level, does it?

The Witness: No, it does not. At one time I know it had as many as 80 cash and carry wholesale outlets throughout this area.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Do you know whether it is a subsidiary of Thrifti- [fol. 2107] mart?

A. I do not know the corporate structure that exists between the two companies.

Q. At one time was Smart & Final independent?

A. I believe they were.

Q. Over the years you do know that Thriftimart has some sort of control over Smart & Final today, don't you?

A. I believe they do.

Q. And Smart & Final is really a subsidiary of Thriftimart, isn't it?

A. This I don't know, because, as I say, I do not know the corporate structure or the relationship that exists.

Q. If an independent is purchasing wholesale groceries from Smart & Final, and competing with Thriftimart, he is really purchasing his groceries from a firm that is at least affiliated with one of his competitors, is he not?

A. I think that would follow.

Q. Now, you mentioned Spartan. What is Spartan?

A. Spartan is also a voluntary cooperative buying association, which was formed back in the early 1920's. I am proud to say that my father was one of the original organizers of Spartan Grocers, along with several other men in this area, and Spartan has been subsequently acquired by Certified Grocers of California. So it is now a wholly-[fol. 2108] owned subsidiary of Certified Grocers of California.

Q. Other than Orange Empire and Certified with its subsidiary Spartan, are there any other cooperative buying groups in the metropolitan area in the grocery business?

A. Other than Orange Empire or the Certified combination? I do not recall of any at this time.

Q. You talked about drop shipments. How many items can you get on drop shipments?

A. It would be impossible for me to tell you, because I don't believe anyone knows the answer to that question. I can say that there are literally hundreds of items that are available to members of the voluntary cooperative groups on a drop shipment basis.

Q. When a grocer buys through the voluntary cooperative on a drop shipment basis, does he get the 2 per cent discount for paying cash?

A. The voluntary cooperative marks up the merchandise that is drop shipped to the extent of 2 per cent, and they do this either by retaining the cash discount, if it should happen to be 2 per cent, or by adding it to the price of the merchandise in the event there is no cash discount, and it is a net cost. The member receives the same 2 per cent back in the form of a patronage dividend every six months. So the net result is the member owns his goods at chain price, less the discount, delivered to his store.

[fol. 2109] Q. The chains, such as yourself, can buy these drop shipments through Certified just like the independent?

A. We can, yes.

Q. And your stores are buying enough to handle drop shipments, aren't they?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned buying produce on the late market. Is it a gamble to wait for produce on the late market? Sometimes does the market run out of produce before they reduce prices?

A. Mr. Coyle, the whole produce market is a gamble. Many things influence produce. I could start with weather, I can start with supply and demand, I can start with many factors which are taken into consideration; but I can mention the instance of one very successful independent operator, the Japanese boys in Bellflower, Hadi and Mori, who make it a practice of playing the late market, and they have been very, very successful.

Q. Do you buy any soft produce directly from the producer?

A. What do you mean, "soft"?

The Court: Do you mean the grower, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: May I also ask him, your Honor, to explain soft produce?

[fol. 2110] Mr. Coyle: I should have asked this question: What is hard produce, Mr. Von der Ahe?

The Witness: Hard produce is items such as are not readily perishable. That includes potatoes, onions.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Oranges?

A. Oranges are not considered hard produce.

Q. Just apples and potatoes?

A. Those items which do not perish too quickly.

Q. Are the produce items that are not hard produce considered soft produce?

A. I have never heard of that expression, sir.

Q. Do you buy any produce items, other than hard produce, directly from the growers?

A. I believe we buy corn, we buy melons, we buy oranges on occasion, citrus fruits I might say, things of that nature, semi-perishable but not completely perishable.

Q. Do you buy them because you can save money buying directly from the producer?

A. It swings both ways, Mr. Coyle. Sometimes we save money, and sometimes we don't.

Q. But you can save money by doing that?

A. Sometimes. That is the cost of the product. But then we have the warehousing and distributing function to go through, as I mentioned earlier.

[fol. 2111] Q. You discussed the marketing situation in this metropolitan area in the grocery field in 1930. What were the large chains in 1930?

A. In 1930 I remember we had Ralph's Grocery Company, we had Safeway——

The Court: Let me interrupt you a moment. How many stores did Ralph's have in 1930?

The Witness: Your Honor, I do not know the answer to that exactly, but——

The Court: Would it have been more than five?

The Witness: I think it would have been in the neighborhood of 10 or so.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What dollar volume had those stores been doing?

A. I have no idea.

The Court: Counsel, the trouble with dollar volume is—do you know what the annual gross income was in 1930?

Mr. Coyle: Pretty low.

The Court: It got down to 40 billion. Now with the depreciation of the dollar and a few other things it is up to a fantastic figure, it is up to more than 10 times, almost 30 times, so I take it in 19—let's take '32, what was ground round selling for, about 9, 10 cents a pound?

The Witness: That's correct.

[fol. 2112] The Court: What is it selling for now?

The Witness: Around 79 cents a pound.

The Court: You don't sell T-bone any more; that has become old-fashioned, hasn't it?

The Witness: We still have a cut of meat called T-bone.

The Court: Do you know what that sells for a pound now?

The Witness: Around one dollar nine to one dollar nineteen.

The Court: What would it sell for in 1932, if anybody could buy it?

The Witness: I guess around 29 cents.

The Court: So dollar volume is a very tricky thing, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: That's correct.

Q. What chains, other than Safeway and Ralph's, can you think of that were in this area in 1930?

A. Well, in the early 1930's, now we saw the beginning of the Market Basket chain, the Thriftimart chain, the Alpha Beta chain, Roberts Markets was in existence, we started with one store in 1932, Carty Bros., Boys Markets were starting up, Alexander's Markets were starting up. As a matter of fact, virtually all of the chains in this area at the present time, with the exception of the late-comers [fol. 2113] to the market, began around 1930.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. I think you stated this morning that if your sales declined 10 per cent you would be in pretty tough shape; is that correct?

The Court: Counsel, what he said was—I am the one that asked the question, what a 10 per cent reduction in volume would do, and his answer was, as I remember it, that it would put him pretty close to the red. Go on from there. I think that was his answer.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What would a 20 per cent reduction do?

The Court: In volume?

Mr. Coyle: In total dollar sales, or volume?

The Witness: I can only speculate.

The Court: Give us your best estimate.

The Witness: I would guess that it would result in a net operating loss to the company, a 20 per cent reduction in sales.

[fol. 2114] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, there has been much testimony that between 40 and 10 per cent of your total trade comes from beyond a two or three-mile radius, if you lost that 40—10 to 40 per cent of your total trade you would be pretty close into the red, wouldn't you?

A. That follows——

The Court: That follows automatically, doesn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: That 2 and 2 are 4. That follows. I will agree to that myself. No matter where he lost the 20 per cent, it would still reduce it to where he says is the red. I don't quite get your point, it is sort of argumentative, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: It might be, your Honor.

Q. You mentioned that you retained the 10 to 20 per cent of your customers who reside outside the two to three-mile trade area——

The Court: I think that is a proper question, counsel,—you were about to object—I think what he is getting at is a matter now of the area of competition, is that right, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 2115] Mr. Coyle: That is right.

Mr. Alsup: I understood him to say before one to two miles and I understood his question to be two to three miles. Perhaps I was in error.

The Court: Well, reframe your question then. But I think it is a perfectly proper question.

Mr. Alsup: That is a new question.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. If you lost the 10 to 40 per cent of your customers who reside outside the either two to three-mile radius, depending upon which of your experts you are reading, would you be pretty close into the red?

The Court: Counsel, that just doesn't follow mathematically. You see, what you are saying is that if he loses 10 to 20 per cent of the, what we call I would say fringe customers, on the outer skirts of this area—but that doesn't mean he is losing 10 to 20 per cent of his volume. That is where the trick of your question is.

Mr. Coyle: These customers were——

The Court: I am not objecting to your inquiry. But the form of it is that it is non-answerable. It is a non-sequitur, he cannot answer it, as I see it.

Now if you want to ask him if he loses all of the customers outside of a certain area, what effect it will have, [fol. 2116] then that is perfectly proper.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. If you lose all of your customers outside of the two to three-mile radius where you draw the bulk of your customers, according to your expert witnesses, would that be a serious problem?

A. Would you please mind refreshing my memory on this 10 to 40 per cent customer——

The Court: Now, he is asking you now a very simple question.

The Witness: Okay.

The Court: I think you are going back to a previous question. He is asking you now—suppose, let's don't put it all, let's say you lose the vast majority or the greater portion of your customers existing beyond—what was it, two miles, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Two miles.

The Court: Beyond a two-mile limit of the store. That is what he is asking you, what effect that would have upon your gross sales and on your net.

The Witness: Naturally, any loss of volume is going to depress our gross and our net. To what extent I cannot tell you, because I do not know how many of our customers come from beyond the two-mile, three-mile, four-mile radius.

[fol. 2117] The Court: Do you have an opinion, in percentage of customers? Let's forget the dollar volume and let's say—I believe the testimony was in this case, somewhere along the line, that a store would run three to four—what was it, four to five thousand customers?

Mr. Coyle: I think it was three to six thousand.

The Court: Three to six thousand, I believe it was.

Now, is that about right, in your opinion, a first-class operation such as Von's or Shopping Bag or Safeway, a top store, would it run three to six thousand customers?

The Witness: Your Honor, that three to six thousand number enters this case because of an interrogatory or deposition which Mr. Coyle was asking me how many customers it would require to operate a store. And I told him I didn't know. And he asked me whether the figure would be three thousand and I said it would be at least three. So he asked me if it would be six, and I said at least six.

So this is a figure Mr. Coyle is introducing.

The Court: I see.

The Witness: Into the case, and it is not my figure, except I said it was a minimum figure to operate a store.

[fol. 2118] The Court: Well, can you say—do you know the approximate number of customers that you have for, let's say, one of your leading stores? Do you have any idea about that?

The Witness: Yes, I would say that the average number of customers per store is in the neighborhood of 10,000. [fol. 2119] The Court: Now, counsel, you can take that base and go from there.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

Q. If you lost, on a store that has an average patronage of 10,000 customers, if you lost 4,000 of your customers, would you be in financial difficulty?

A. The answer is obviously yes. You have lost 40 per cent of your business.

Q. If you lost 30 per cent.

The Court: Why do you say 30?

Mr. Coyle: Cutting it down——

The Court: 4,000——

Mr. Coyle: I said if he lost 40 per cent, 4,000, and then I said if he lost 3,000.

The Court: I see.

The Witness: Then the 30 per cent, the answer is yes, you would be in serious condition.

The Court: And if it kept up, you would be looking to end that store, wouldn't you?

The Witness: That's right, sir.

Mr. Coyle: If you lost 2,000 customers.

The Witness: That would be 20 per cent.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Would that be serious?

A. I think it would be very serious.

[fol. 2120] Q. How about 10 per cent?

A. 10 per cent, to me that would still be serious.

The Court: But let me ask you this, suppose you had a loss of say 15 or 20 per cent for a period of three months, what would you do? What steps would you take?

The Witness: Your Honor, we have encountered that situation, more than once. When new competition comes in and takes some of our business away, we do lose 10 per cent or 15 per cent, or 20 per cent. But we have to adjust ourselves to operate the store at the new water level where it now is riding.

The Court: That is what I am getting at. Now, what are the steps? I take it you cut down on operation, is that right?

The Witness: Cut down on operation, and the biggest item of expense is, of course, personnel.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Do you attempt to gain back your trade that you lost?

A. We do.

Q. How do you do that?

A. By trying to run a good market, by specials, by promotions.

Q. And advertising?

A. Advertising.

[fol. 2121] The Court: You have a store manager for each store, do you?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: What part does the store manager really play, other than seeing that the groceries are on the shelves properly, that the store is stocked, and that the personnel is conducting their operations as they should? Other than that what does he do?

The Witness: In our business, the store manager is sort of like the captain of a ship. He is responsible for the conduct and the operation of the entire market as a whole.

And then each individual department head, such as the grocery department, meat department, produce, delicatessen, and so forth, is responsible to his supervisors, who are responsible to the sales and promotion managers.

The Court: Well, do you find from experience that the store reflects pretty much the head of the store, the manager?

The Witness: Yes, it does.

The Court: By "reflect" I mean the operation, so far as contact with the public, dealing with the public, the good foot forward, the presentation and all of those things?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor, it does. A good [fol. 2122] store manager can make a successful operation of the entire market. And a poor store manager that just doesn't have it—no matter what assistance you give him—he still doesn't have it and he can't make the store run. [fol. 2123] The Court: As one witness said, some have it and some don't, is that right?

The Witness: That is very true in our business.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Do you do institutional advertising?

A. To a minor degree.

Q. Aren't you doing more of it than you did in the past over the years, haven't you developed more institutional advertising?

A. I am not aware of any increase in the budget.

The Court: Now, by institutional advertising you mean what?

The Witness: I believe counsel is referring to, and I mean advertising which is not price advertising.

The Court: You mean good will advertising?

The Witness: Good will advertising, billboard type advertising or a TV spot, things of that nature.

The Court: In other words, something to the effect if you want to be happy shop at so-and-so.

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: The American public has come to the point that they don't ask for the reasons, they just ask for the flash, is that it? Is that what you mean?

The Witness: Right.

[fol. 2124] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Does this include advertising in Sunday papers and putting recipes in and things of that nature, in Sunday papers?

A. I don't believe we do that any more, Mr. Coyle.

Q. You discontinued that?

A. We discontinued that. I think I am correct on that.

Q. At one time you were doing that?

A. At one time we did, yes.

Q. At one time you were trying to build up an image of having sort of a custom treatment at Von's stores where you get sort of home economics advice, or cooking advice, weren't you?

A. That is correct.

Q. And this is to create an image that the Von's stores were a little bit better, a little different than other stores?

A. I wouldn't go so far as to say that.

The Court: Well, you are trying to do that every day, aren't you?

The Witness: Trying to do it every way, build up an image or personality to make Von's store the place to shop.

The Court: I take it, Mr. Witness, it is your ambition in this business to make everybody believe that the Von's are the best stores in town, is that right?

[fol. 2125] The Witness: That is our ultimate goal, your Honor. We have got a very strong competition and they have ideas also.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. When you build up this image then, when you open up a new store in a new area, you go into the area somewhat presold, so that there are people in the area that recognize you because of your image?

A. We hope that is true, just the same as all of our chains and competitors building and developing their image too.

Q. And this image is quite important in a chain operation, isn't it?

A. I do not attach too much importance to it, from a point of equating it in dollars and cents. It is a nice thing to have. Safeway has a very good image for meat. Alpha has always had an image for "sell for less" and other chains the same nature.

Q. Yes.

A. And those personalities stay with the store.

Q. Yes.

A. To that degree they are important. But you have got to be able to deliver what you open the store for, and have the customer come in and determine whether you are operating the store as advertised.

Q. Isn't part of the image having the merchandise [fol. 2126] arranged well and having the aisles clear and having enough check-out counters so that the housewife finds it convenient to shop in your store, isn't that part of your image?

A. I wouldn't that call an image at all. I would just call that good merchandising. Everybody can do that. You don't get an image for that.

Q. But you get a reputation for having done it. Isn't that an important factor in getting the housewife to your store, rather than some other store?

A. This I mentioned this morning, is one of the reasons a person will shop at a market, everything else being equal, convenient stores, clean stores, well merchandised, all of these are the reasons why people shop at stores.

Q. Now, in your proxy statement you listed some of the advantages of a merger. One of the advantages was that overhead, general and administrative expenses are expected to be reduced as a result of the elimination of duplication. Has that taken place?

A. I believe it has.

Q. Another was the total advertising expenses are expected to be substantially reduced, since duplication will be avoided and advertising campaigns of the combined companies can be more economically and effectively carried on. Has that taken place?

A. I might mention to that point that between the [fol. 2127] Shopping Bag and the Von's stores we advertised in approximately 120 community newspapers. And we both took ads in the metropolitan newspapers. The duplication that was eliminated was one page in the metropolitan newspapers and twelve community newspapers.

Q. In dollars and cents what did that amount to?

A. I don't know.

Q. Was it a fourth of your advertising budget?

A. No, it would not have been that much.

Q. Did you combine warehouse facilities as a result of the merger?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. That resulted in a saving?

A. There is always a saving when you eliminate one function.

The Court: But did that result in a saving?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Did you combine warehouse facilities?

The Witness: Yes, we did, your Honor.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Did you combine trucking facilities?
A. Yes, we did.
Q. Did that result in a saving?
A. Yes.
Q. And were you able to share specialized management [fol. 2128] abilities?
A. May I have the question again, please?
Q. The proxy statement said that the combined companies will be able to share the specialized management abilities which each of them now possesses through the pooling of executive talent. Have you done that?
A. Yes, we have done that.
Q. And the proxy statement says the inventory of the combined companies will be substantially lowered to the aggregate of their separate inventories. Has that happened? Have you reduced your inventories, that is, your combined inventories?
A. I have not calculated whether we have reduced inventories to be able to satisfactorily answer that question. I think it has happened, but I don't have the figures with which to back up my statement.

The Court: While he is looking that up, have you any idea how much of a reduction you had in executive salaries, as between the before and after, taking the combined executive salaries of both companies and then contrasting it with the after effect? Have you any general idea of what the savings was?

The Witness: Your Honor, I do not believe there was any reduction in executive salaries.

The Court: You mean you kept all of the executives? [fol. 2129] The Witness: All of the executives are employed in the surviving company.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now this morning Mr. Alsup referred you to Government's Exhibit 66, which is these working papers of Mr. Ball in which he analyzed various facets of the Shopping Bag organization.

Mr. Alsup: I think, counsel, these are Mr. Von der Ahe's notes, as he testified.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

Mr. Alsup: Which included——

Mr. Coyle: Mr. Ball's.

Mr. Alsup: Various executives.

The Court: As I understood those were his summarization.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: Of the reports that were given to him, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, referring you to the last page of that document —do you find the last page?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a notation "J. Ball—people—savings on payrolls 866,000.00. Did you save $866,000.00 in salaries [fol. 2130] as a result of this acquisition?

A. As to that one particular item I don't know the answer.

Q. Now, referring you to Government's Exhibit 50, which is the entire projected 1960 net income resulting from combined operations. It indicates there a total increase—I am sorry, have you found the exhibit?

A. 49—I have 49—I have 50, yes.

Q. It indicates a total increase in gross profits of two million seven hundred fifty thousand, and a total reduction of expenses of two million two hundred ninety-six thousand, a total increase to operating profits of five million. Have you enjoyed that saving?

A. Mr. Coyle, as to what constituted the figures I don't know. I can't tell you that the bottom figure on the right-hand column——

Q. Yes.

A. —was attained.

[fol. 2130-a] Mr. Alsup: Will you clarify that for the record, Mr. Von der Ahe? What bottom figure are you talking about?

The Witness: I am talking about the net income here, which was projected in December 1959, at $3,514,000, and

I believe our results will show that we earned three million five hundred some-odd thousand dollars. It was right on the nose.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Referring to Government Exhibit 49, which are the excerpts from J. C. Ball's working papers, and turning to the second to the last page that is not numbered, second to the last page of this exhibit—have you found it?

A. I believe I have.

Q. Under the title Summary, the following statement is made:

> "By making the necessary changes in the gross profit structure of the various divisions and instituting warehousing handling charges, both of which can be accomplished immediately, the following increase in gross profits should be realized"——

then it itemized groceries and drugs, meat, produce, delicatessen, and shows a total of $1,900,000. Did you realize that savings by following these recommendations?

A. Mr. Coyle, as to the ingredients, again, I still have to say I don't know. But I am going to assume that we [fol. 2131] did, because our ultimate projection was accurate for the total.

The Court: Counsel, I thought you were taking the position in this case that the business motive is unimportant.

Mr. Coyle: I am, your Honor.

The Court: You are spending a lot of time on that trying to show that he may or may not have been as successful in the merger, after it was merged, as he expected. Isn't that what you are doing?

Mr. Coyle: Showing they gained competitive advantages; that they have gained savings in the warehousing——

The Court: Is that helpful to you?

Mr. Coyle: It is helpful to us in that it relates to this issue of the fact that Certified is alleged to be able to deliver these groceries to the independents as cheaply as these people can buy, the large chains can buy groceries. As they cut down their warehousing and handling charges, certainly it gives them added advantages in acquiring and placing this merchandise in their storage.

The Court: What you are saying is efficiency is illegal, is that what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: No, not at all. I am saying——

The Court: I don't follow you.

Mr. Coyle: I am saying it is relevant to a Section 7 case to show the acquiring firms, or merging firms, get [fol. 2132] competitive advantages which give them advantages over independents.

The Court: If that were the situation, never again could there be a purchase of anything, because no businessman is going to buy something to lose money, that is, if he is in his right mind. I thought that the purpose of purchasing additional businesses was to acquire better economic conditions, situations. Isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is generally the purpose, your Honor.

The Court: Is that the thing that Section 7 has proscribed, prohibited?

Mr. Coyle: I am not going to the purpose; I am going to the effect. The fact that they do get competitive advantages.

The Court: Is that persuasive of the fact that it may restrict competition?

Mr. Coyle: It is part of the background.

The Court: Doesn't it cut just as much the other way, that it may be more competitive, create greater competition? I am wondering.

Mr. Coyle: I understand that your Honor is wondering. It is clear to me that if that as a result of an acquisition or a number of acquisitions, if these chains are getting more and more competitive advantages, and the independ- [fol. 2133] ents and the smaller firms are going out of business, we are moving more and more towards the situation where a limited number of firms are going to dominate an industry or a market——

The Court: Counsel, I go along with you, except here is where we part, I am afraid. You are talking about competitive advantages. If that competitive advantage is one which merely gives a particular person a better opportunity to, let's say, get a better grade of merchandise, to put it on the shelves cheaper, or anything that results from greater efficiency, less expenditure for personnel, that doesn't mean that it is restricting the competition of the other fellow, except insofar as efficiency is concerned. Isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: If it is driving the other fellow out of business, if we have other fellows going out of business because they can't compete, and you have this movement towards concentration in the industry, then I think it is relevant, showing the tendency towards elimination of competition.

The Court: Concentration, of course, is one thing, concentration is a matter of degree; but, on the other hand, what you really seem to me to be arguing for—and maybe the Supreme Court says this—is that there can be no more mergers. Because every merger has a tendency to bring about—at least, that is the intent of the merger—to bring about greater efficiency, to make higher profits, to lower the cost of operation.

[fol. 2134] This whole movement afoot nowadays, generated through the whole economic structure, is volume, increase the volume, lower the cost, get a great volume, and maybe not so much a higher percentage of net, but more volume. That is what happened, for example, in the stores that just went into bankruptcy. What was it, the Darling Stores? They were getting volume. They got to the point to where they went broke overnight. What was the name of the stores, do you remember?

Mr. Coyle: In the grocery field?

The Court: No. One of the big chain stores that sells—do you know, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: The word Interstate Federation——

The Court: No. We will pass it over. But they were taking and buying smaller stores, and they bought a lot of them, and now they are in receivership. They bought too many. They swallowed more than they could digest.

What I am worried about in this case is, you are proceeding on the theory that if it is proved in the case that Von's Grocery got an improved situation in their buying, an improved situation in lowering their costs, that that in itself has a tendency to prove that it substantially lessens competition. Is that what you are arguing?

Mr. Coyle. I think that is part of the proof. It is not all of the proof. If you prove this is happening [fol. 2135] throughout an industry, or throughout a market, and that the independents are going out and the chains are increasing their market share, and this is part of it, and it results through an acquisition or merger, it is part of the proof, yes, your Honor.

The Court: Is that what you think the Supreme Court means? Some of the language would seem to indicate it.

Mr. Coyle: I think that is what it means.

The Court: If the Supreme Court's language is to be taken literally, I guess the day of mergers is over. You couldn't merge two barbershops.

Mr. Coyle: That wouldn't be substantial, your Honor.

The Court: I don't know whether it would or not. Suppose you are in an area where people—over in New Mexico, where they are miles and miles apart?

Mr. Coyle: There have to be substantial factors in a significant segment of the economy. These are substantial factors in a significant sector of the economy. This is not just a part of New Mexico; this is Los Angeles.

[fol. 2136] The Court: I understand that. But take a state like New Mexico where the population is relatively small and covers great distances, one store there within a range of 30 to 40 miles would be an important segment, wouldn't it?

Mr. Coyle: I wouldn't think so. I would think that the legislative history, and I think in Brown Shoe, but at least the legislative history makes it clear that the Act doesn't apply to two local concerns in a small community.

The Court: Suppose you are in a square area such as New Mexico and you find out that, say, between Santa Fe and Albuquerque there are three stores, and one of them acquires the other two. Now, that is an area of about 75 miles. What happens?

Mr. Coyle: If they are selling groceries, that might be a serious problem. If you only had one source of groceries, they could charge anything they wanted. Maybe that would be.

The Court: In other words, we are coming to the situation—what you take this Act to mean is that it is an equalization, that you have got to equalize down to the most inefficient, that that is what it means?

Mr. Coyle: I am not saying that. This Act encourages [fol. 2137] natural growth, rather than this artificial growth through acquisition.

The Court: What ought to be required is that everyone in government ought to be compelled to run a business for one year and pay the bills. There is such a change in point of view that you can't realize what might happen. Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

Mr. Alsup: I have just a few brief ones, if I may, your Honor.

The Court: What I mean to say is simply this: There is no greater teacher than overhead.

Mr. Alsup: And experience, your Honor.

The Court: Overhead will give you experience, believe me.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, you were asked about the cost of financing a new store, and I think you were talking about a new supermarket in the 27,000 square foot range; is that correct?

A. The question was directed to developing a new market of 27,000 to 30,000 square feet on acquired ground, fixturizing, and stocking of the merchandise.

Q. Do you know whether or not Certified Grocers of [fol. 2138] California have organized a company to help its members finance their fixtures?

A. Yes, Certified does have a facility to help members finance equipment and fixtures.

The Court: They help them at a price, though, don't they?

The Witness: They help them finance it.

The Court: But at a price?

The Witness: At a lower rate, I believe, your Honor, than the financing companies would charge.

The Court: They get interest, I take it, the charges that go with their coverage—is that what they call it?

The Witness: I don't know.

The Court: What would you say the rate of interest is from Certified when equipment is furnished, do you know?

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Alsup: I don't know, either, your Honor. I could get that figure.

The Court: No. I just wondered.

The Witness: I am sure it is nominal. Because Certified is a non-profit organization and all profits return to its members.

The Court: It is like some of these cooperatives. [fol. 2139] You go in and buy something at 40 per cent below cost and find out that you can buy it down the street at 20 per cent below that.

Mr. Alsup: This cooperative, your Honor, is owned by its retail members.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, will you tell us what your total capital investment was in your first store when you started out in 1932?

A. Yes. The Von's Grocery Company was started with an initial capital of $2500.

Q. That was in 1932?

A. That was in 1932. And that is the only capital ever put into the company.

The Court: May I ask him a question?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: Why did you pick 1932 to start a business?

The Witness: Your Honor, frankly, prior to 1932 I tried very hard to be an attorney. I was sick and tired of the grocery business and I wanted to enter a dignified profession where the hours were reasonable. I worked——

The Court: You can say this, you have come to feed the people, rather than argue with them.

The Witness: I got my education at night in law [fol. 2140] school, I worked in the daytime. But comes 1932 the law profession also was not very promising, and I went back into a business that I knew something about. At least I could eat the samples in the grocery business, your Honor.

The Court: Did you feel that that was the turning point in the economy, or you just went back because it was a business that you knew?

The Witness: It was a business that I knew. And when the opportunity came to take one small grocery shop and this small store, my dad asked me if I wanted it. My brother and I talked about it, and he said, "Let's go," and that's the way we got back into the grocery business.

The Court: The economic upturn got going about '36, 1936, wasn't it, '35, '36?

The Witness: Around that time. We had a small recession in 1939, and then we had the war, and subsequent to the war we have been on a boom ever since.

The Court: I take it you are expecting this boom to continue for another hundred years?

The Witness: Your Honor, I am not that optimistic.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Is it necessary, in your opinion, Mr. Von der Ahe, for someone desiring to enter the grocery business today to make this large capital investment that you were discussing with Mr. Coyle?

[fol. 2141] A. I did not mean to leave that impression at all, that it requires a large capital investment to get into the grocery field.

Many firms right today have been started recently with small investments. I feel that a merchant has got to learn to crawl before he can walk. He just doesn't start off with a huge investment in land, buildings, fixtures, equipment, and so forth. He starts off by renting a market that has been vacated by a chain store, usually. The fixtures are available to him, either because they have been left in the market, or he can buy used fixtures. Certified has a lenient plan to help the fellow put in his initial inventory, and if he is smart and works his supplier capital until he gets a foothold, he can actually get into the food business with a relatively modest investment.

[fol. 2142] The Court: There are two questions I would like to ask you. No. 1 is, take a person who has had some grocery experience, let's say a clerk in a grocery store, he is a young man, perhaps has had three or four or five years, and he suddenly decides he wishes to go in the grocery business in 1963 in Los Angeles, in a small store, where he himself would be practically the whole institution. How much capital would it take for him to get a store, say, 50 by 100, which would be 5,000 square feet, to open up a fairly good, small store?

The Witness: Your Honor——

The Court: Not buying the store.

The Witness: I understand.

The Court: Not buying the ground, just leasing, and robably buying his equipment on time. How much money ould you say for inventory and getting started would e require?

The Witness: I think that a grocery department could e opened for not over $5,000.00, and much of that could e suppliers' money. By that I mean that almost half of ne grocery items will be delivered to the store on a weekly r monthly account—and I am talking about milk and read and butter and potato chips and all of those daily elivery items on which the supplier companies do not emand C.O.D. payments.

fol. 2143] The Court: That is one of the points. Is it a ustom in the industry to let a fellow start out without aking a pretty good financial showing? Do they give him chance, is that what you are saying?

The Witness: I think it can be said as a truism that ese supplier companies will put in the opening order and ntinue to stock the store. And if the fellow makes any asonable effort to pay they let him get his feet on the round.

Many, many companies in this area right now have een financed through supplier money. Some of them got o far behind, your Honor, and they went broke. But I ow of many companies that got their toe-hold in this arket through supplier money.

The Court: Now, the next question I had in mind was: ssuming that such store—I realize the conditions are ariable—but assuming one, say, went out to—let's pick spot, pick a well-populated spot, let's take 3rd and ormandie, that is pretty close to all of these stores around ere, isn't it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Suppose he opened up that type of store 3rd and Normandie. What is your opinion as to his mpetitive ability with all of those stores? You have got alphs at the corner of 3rd and Vermont, you have Safeway ol. 2144] at the corner of 3rd and Vermont, you have ur store—at Irolo, is it Irolo?

The Witness: 3rd and Kenmore.

The Court: 3rd and Kenmore.

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: And you have another one close by?

The Witness: At 8th and Irolo.

The Court: At 8th and Irolo. Well, that is a little bit distant.

The Witness: That is out of the area.

The Court: But down in the little shopping area around, I think along 3rd there are some independent stores, too, aren't there? One or two?

The Witness: One or two, yes.

The Court: What would be the prospects in your opinion, to survive or make a success as an independent grocer?

The Witness: Frankly, I believe it would be excellent.

The Court: Why?

The Witness: Because this particular location you have picked on is a good artery north and south, it is a good artery east and west, it is in an area that is becoming densely populated through the advent of multiple-unit apartment houses and so forth. And an independent ca- [fol. 2145] tering to that type of trade can do a much better job than a chain store.

The Court: Can he——

The Witness: I won't say he will do as much as Ralphs——

The Court: No, but can he meet the prices?

The Witness: He can easily meet the prices, and he can give that extra ingredient which we cannot give, that is personal service.

The Court: Well, that part we will accept. In other words, if he is a man who is disposed to work and serve, he will have a slight advantage in that respect.

The Witness: Admittedly.

The Court: But can he meet the prices?

The Witness: He can meet every price any chain store can throw at him.

The Court: Now, if he meets the prices then what kind of a volume would you say he would have to have to make a success out of that type of business? By "success" I mean make a living, make a reasonable living out of it.

The Witness: Your Honor, if his store did as little as $500,000.00 a year he could make at least $25,000.00, in my opinion, or five per cent.

The Court: Well, how many clerks would that take to handle that volume?

The Witness: Not very many, your Honor.

[fol. 2146] The Court: How many? That is quite a sizable amount of money, $500,000.00, isn't it?

The Witness: As far as markets are concerned it is very, very small.

The Court: Yes, but I am talking about independent markets.

The Witness: Even for independents, they should do that small and still be classified as a market.

I am assuming that this fellow has a little going concern, and I would say that he could do $500,000.00 on two or three clerks, plus himself.

The Court: If this gets out into the newspapers I am afraid everybody in the city will be opening grocery stores on every corner, wouldn't you think?

The Witness: Your Honor, this is our very point, that this is known. People who have been in the chain store business are going back into operating single stores for themselves, such as Al Goldstein, John Erwin—one was vice president of Food Giant and another one with the Mayfair Stores—they are going back and operating their own stores because they know that they can compete with the chains, they know they can make more money as independent operators than they earn as executives in the food chains.

You have to have a little know-how——

The Court: Of course, it all depends again upon [fol. 2147] the individual, the same as it depends upon management, I guess, doesn't it?

The Witness: This is the crux of the whole question.

The Court: If you make this so much more glowing you might wake up in the morning and find all the lawyers gone, out in the grocery business.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I have felt that very strongly after talking to many of these single store operators.

The Court: Well, you had better stick to your own business, counsel. Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. You mentioned Mr. Goldstein having started out recently as a single store operator, Mr. Von der Ahe. Can you tell us where he opened up his store, his single store?

A. He opened a store exactly across the street from a new market that we put in in Burbank.

The circumstances were that he was one of the vice presidents of Food Giant. And Food Giant had this store across the street from where we were going to open.

He knew that we would not do Food Giant any good because it was an older store and it is difficult for an older store, as a chain, to compete against a newer store as a chain.

[fol. 2148] So he resigned from Food Giant and he took this store that was Food Giant's store, changed the name to Toluca Mart and he is competing very successfully against us as an independent.

The Court: Counsel it is 25 of 5:00. How much more do you have of this witness?

Mr. Alsup: I would think 10 minutes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I think we had better—where are we in this case now?

Mr. Alsup: We will be prepared to rest after the conclusion of the testimony of Mr. Von der Ahe.

The Court: How about you, Mr Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: We have two rebuttal witnesses.

The Court: Are they extensive?

Mr. Coyle: I don't believe they will be extensive.

The Court: I don't know whether to say intensive or extensive after yesterday.

Well, I think before we adjourn I would like again to bring—Mr. Bailiff, get the file off of my desk in chambers there, please.

You may step down, Mr. Von der Ahe.

The Witness: Thank you, your Honor.

(Witness leaves witness stand.)

The Court: The clerk has handed me an exhibit here. I don't know what he means, Mr. Clerk, there is some [fol. 2149] mixup here.

The Clerk: That is one of the Government's exhibits marked in the deposition.

The Court: Apparently there is some mixup on one of the exhibits.

Mr. Coyle: That is part of the transcript, page 64.

The Court: All right. All right. Now we have it.

The Clerk: They call it Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, it should be Plaintiff's Exhibit 73.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct. It is out of the transcript.

The Court: Let the reporter hear this, please.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

On page 64——

The Court: If there is an error let's correct it. How do we correct it, Mr. Clerk?

The Clerk: Couldn't we change it to 73,

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know the problem.

Mr. Coyle: One exhibit is the transcript was incorrectly marked Exhibit 1 in the transcript, it should be 73.

The Court: Just mark it then "73."

The Clerk: Change it in the transcript.

[fol. 2150] The Court: Yes.

The Clerk: That is page 64 on the June 12th transcript.

The Court: All right. That straightens that out.

Now, before we go, I want to come back again—you will find, gentlemen, I don't know what trait it is, but I never leave a matter until it is settled.

So back to your 46, counsel, Mr. Coyle, there has been a stipulation, or at least an admission by Mr. Alsup that in 1958 the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area competed—I have forgotten, did we leave the word "intensively" in, counsel, or take it out?

Mr. Alsup: No, that was taken out.

The Court: All right. Competed——

Mr. Coyle: I think it is in the transcript.

The Court: What is it?

Mr. Coyle: I think it is in the transcript here.

[fol. 2151] The Court: The thing I am getting at, counsel, is simply this: That he has admitted that in this area, this economic area, to-wit, the metropolitan area, that in substance that all and every person engaged in the grocery business is in competition in the area. That is the general proposition.

But the thing he has not admitted is that there was intensive or extensive competition between Von's stores and Shopping Bag stores as such, is that correct, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor. I am even willing to go further and state that where a particular Von's and Shopping Bag store could service the same customers and did serve the same customers that competition was intensive.

The Court: That is exactly the point that I was coming to.

Now, I was wondering, under those circumstances, why—what the higher courts—I am not worried about the problem at all, I am just trying to make it easier for the findings in this case—it seems to me that there could be a substitution in 46 of that statement.

As a matter of fact, I can put it in without your consent, counsel, because the following facts are admitted and require no proof—I don't have to have your consent [fol. 2152] to put in what he admits. So I am about—unless you come along—to maybe change the pretrial order and put that into it.

Now, what is the damage to you?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, the paragraph of the pretrial order was clear when it was entered into——

The Court: Well, you have been overruled on that and you might just as well give up, counsel, because you are finished, done in, and concluded on that problem. Now, I have told you that I have ruled and I am still ruling and I am adhering to that ruling and I have concluded that there was a misunderstanding. And I am not going to make either party conform to a misunderstanding.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I understand that.

The Court: So that is settled.

I think possibly there was a sincere misunderstanding on both sides. And I think I am probably the one who discovered it, because the minute I read it I realized there must be some misunderstanding.

Mr. Coyle: We raised this last November, your Honor, at the pretrial conference.

Mr. Alsup: We raised it, your Honor, in our motion for——

The Court: Well, whatever you have done in the past, the ruling stands and I am not going to leave it in [fol. 2153] as it is.

Now unless, Mr. Coyle, you come up with some suggested change, I am going to ask counsel to prepare in writing what he will admit, in lieu of paragraph 46, and submit it to the court tomorrow.

Mr. Alsup: Tomorrow?

The Court: Yes. Could you do that?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor, I will be prepared to say something tomorrow.

The Court: Well, if you have any—if you want to prepare a suggested submission yourself, you can do so, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what I will prepare, your Honor.

The Court: But give up, believe me, you might just as well give up. I am going to change it. It is changed. And if he comes forward with an admission of any kind, I am going to put it in there. It is a question of how far he would go.

Because it seems to me the facts are clear that there was competition in the whole area, as you have agreed, and has been admitted, the whole metropolitan area, the general competitive situation. Nobody is disputing that. is that correct, Mr. Alsup?

[fol. 2154] Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: But where the dispute comes in is when it says each and every defendant was competing with each other. That is where the whole crux of the issue is. And he says that is not correct. And I am tempted to believe that it is true, that it isn't correct.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, would the word "generally" be part of that stipulation, competed generally—that is what I think——

The Court: I will say this, if I were in his place I doubt if I would give that admission. So I can't ask someone to do something that I don't think I would do myself.

Mr Coyle: I don't understand what the admission means then.

The Court: This admission, by putting the word "generally" would mean to me that the store in Long Beach, if there were one—was generally in competition with the one, with the Von's store in La Crescenta. And they are about 35 miles apart.

Mr. Coyle: Suppose you add "are all part of the general competitive pattern of the Los Angeles metropolitan area"?

The Court: That is all taken care of. He has admitted, counsel, that the competition in the grocery field, [fol. 2155] that is, the—what is the term I am trying to remember?

Mr. Coyle: Line of commerce?

The Court: The line of commerce is throughout this entire metropolitan area, among all those in the grocery business. That he is admitting.

Mr. Coyle: Let him come in with an admission that says that——

The Court: He has stated it right in open court, did you not, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: Am I misquoting you?

Mr. Alsup: No, so long as it is understood, we are not saying, as your Honor put it, the Von's store in Long Beach competed with the Shopping Bag store in La Crescenta.

The Court: The difference is, as I think where the whole problem came in is the distinction between "extensive" and "intensive," isn't that where the problem lay?

Mr. Alsup: That is where it lay, your Honor, exactly.

The Court: And intensive means penetrating, as I understand it. Whereas extensive means the whole, broad attack.

Now, I am not in a position to determine when it is intensive and when it is extensive. So what he is [fol. 2156] trying to say to you is that he will not admit that a store in Long Beach, a Von's store in Long Beach, is actually in competition, directly in competition with a store of Shopping Bag in La Crescenta. That is what he is saying, in effect.

[fol. 2157] Mr. Coyle: What it amounts to is, he is saying that there is a general competitive pattern in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

The Court: I think he has conceded that. At least it is conceded, and my understanding is that there is a general competitive pattern in the whole area.

Mr. Coyle: And that these——

The Court: Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Alsup: I am a little confused by what he means by "general competitive pattern," but certainly we are all competing in this area.

The Court: What I would assume it would mean is this: If everybody closed up his grocery store tomorrow in Maywood, everybody that wanted to be in the grocery business would head for that area tomorrow to put up a store. Isn't that right?

Mr. Alsup: That's for sure.

The Court: So there is competition.

Mr. Coyle: I think it means more than that. I think it means that each of these trading areas overlap on the other ones, so that a price change or competitive activity in one trading area by a repercussion of effects will reach through the whole area.

The Court: Counsel, I am willing to admit if they sold sugar at a cent a pound, and bread at a cent a [fol. 2158] pound, and made enough of a price reduction in Long Beach, that some of the people over in La Crescenta might drive over and stock up.

Mr. Coyle: More than that. That their competitors in Long Beach would have to change their price, and you would have a chain reaction of price changes.

The Court: There is no quarrel about that. That isn't what he is talking about. As I understand it, he is saying, in effect, We will not concede that the Von's store in Maywood is in direct competition with the Shopping Bag store in La Crescenta.

Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Alsup: No. You are absolutely right, your Honor. Perhaps this would help counsel's problem——

The Court: You draw it up. It is a quarter to 5:00 and we have had a long day, draw up what you consider to be the admission that you will make, in place of 46, and maybe we will substitute it tomorrow. Show it to counsel in the morning before we take up the session in court.

Anything further, gentlemen?

Mr. Alsup: Nothing further, thank you.

Mr. Knight: Nothing further, your Honor.

The Court: We will recess.

(Whereupon, an adjournment was taken to 10:00 o'clock a. m., Friday, June 14, 1963.)

[fol. 2162] LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1963, 10:15 A. M.

The Court: Gentlemen, you know I have other matters that are pressing. I can't just hold this court in abeyance while you confer.

Mr. Alsup: We apologize, your Honor. We each had a version, and I think we are reaching agreement, but I think we can do that during the recess, if that's agreeable.

The Court: All right. Proceed. I have 150 other cases waiting, gentlemen, to say nothing of the criminal cases.

THEODORE A. VON DER AHE the witness on the stand at the time of adjournment, having been heretofore duly sworn, was examined and testified further as follows:

Redirect examination. (Resumed)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, yesterday, we were talking about a possible theoretical smallish store located, say, at Third and Normandie Avenue in Los Angeles. To your knowledge, are there existing supermarkets available to persons desiring to enter the business on their own today?

A. If you are referring to available locations with vacant buildings on them that could be converted into a [fol. 2163] supermarket, yes. I can think of one right now which is a Market Basket store which is located right in the heart of Temple City.

Q. Do you know of any persons who have entered the business in recent years by taking over one of these older supermarkets?

A. Most of the persons who have recently entered the business have entered through taking an older market that has been vacated or given up, usually by a chain. I can think right now of Perry Burnside, who up until 1955 was an employee for Shopping Bag Markets, and in 1957 he acquired a market out of receivership and opened it, and is doing very well. He later acquired another market in Ontario that had been vacated, opened it, and is a very good competitor. He subsequently got a McDaniel's Market when McDaniel's was in difficulty, on Arrow Highway in the Covina district and is also doing well there. As a matter of fact, he is now operating successfully five stores. I can think of Joe Goldstein, or Al Goldstein, who I mentioned yesterday, who took the Toluca Market from Food Giant and has a successful operation.

I can mention John Erwin——

[fol. 2164] Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object to this characterization "successful." This witness wouldn't know whether it is successful or not.

The Court: Well, counsel, I have told you in advance that I disregard conclusions.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Unless there is some foundation laid I wouldn't pay any attention to the word. It would mean nothing to me. It is just his opinion, unless he has some foundation to show. Success may mean that he is burning the town down for a while, and on the way to the bankruptcy courts.

Mr. Alsup: I might say, your Honor, that John Erwin and Mr. Goldstein are both witnesses for the Government, their affidavits are on file and I don't think it is necessary for Mr. Von der Ahe to go into those details.

The Court: Are you contending they are successful or unsuccessful, counsel? I didn't know that.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor, and this witness doesn't know.

Mr. Alsup: You don't know, you haven't read their affidavits, counsel.

The Court: Well, I will say this, generally speaking unless there is some foundation for expert testimony, I disregard it.

[fol. 2165] Mr. Alsup: Surely, your Honor.

The Court: In other words, I can say you are a successful lawyer, and the only thing I know is you are in this court. I don't know how many cases you have lost recently, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: I hardly ever get to try any any more, your Honor. I was on that subsidence case for five years.

The Court: Well, you may find out what that is about some time, too. It is a difficult problem, I know.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, sir.

Q. You mentioned yesterday, Mr. Von der Ahe, that you had one or more stores that were not successful to your concern. Can you give us examples of one of those?

A. We have a store in San Marino, at the corner of San Gabriel Boulevard, that is now not having enough sales to make it a profitable operation for a chain company.

The Court: You put a qualification on that, "for a chain company," what do you mean by that?

The Witness: Well, your Honor, there are certain costs that a chain has to assess to every store, which in the case of one particular store, if the sales aren't sufficient to absorb those costs that store does become a losing operation.

The Court: Do you allocate the costs evenly among [fol. 2166] the stores?

The Witness: According to their sales.

The Court: Oh, you base it on a pro rata of sales?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor. And I am talking about administrative and executive expenses, cost of maintaining offices——

The Court: In other words, their share——

The Witness: Their share of the expenses, they have to share. And when their sales are just not sufficient to stand their part of the burden, that store does become unprofitable.

The Court: Suppose a store breaks even for two years, would you keep it?

The Witness: Yes, we would.

But this is the same type of a store, if I might add, that becomes very attractive to an independent because he can get in there and take that same volume and operate and the cost of doing business is much less than the chain can. And so the difference is in things such as salaries, actually make a good profit out of the same store that the he has no administrative or executive overhead. So he can chain would lose money on.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. What is the gross of that store you referred to, [fol. 2167] Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. It is in the neighborhood of seven hundred fifty to eight hundred thousand dollars a year.

Q. And have there been any changes in the market area in recent years surrounding that store?

A. There has been a large supermarket move in across the street from us. And there has been a more aggressive independent move down the street a ways, who actually is taking the business away from us, with the result that the sales in this market have been declining.

The Court: What do you attribute the loss of business to this independent to? Prices, personality, management, what, if you know?

The Witness: Your Honor, principally due to the fact that he is a good operator, he is on the job, he is running a good shop and we are running one by remote control and we are just not keeping up with him.

The Court: Do you think it is the personal equation that is doing it?

The Witness: I would give a lot of weight to that, yes, sir.

The Court: All right. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. In your opinion, Mr. Von der Ahe, based on your experience in the industry, is it necessary to have a store [fol. 2168] located in a shopping center in order to have a successful and profitable store?

A. I do not feel that it is necessary to be in a shopping center. And I think the facts will prove that most of the stores in this area are not in shopping centers.

I can think of one very good firm here that have, for a long time, had a policy of not going into shopping centers, and they have only put a few stores in shopping centers in recent years. But they are the oldest chain in this area, and they are very successful and they have built their business on free standing locations.

Most of Safeway Stores are not in shopping centers.

We did not have a store in a shopping center until we built our No. 16 store—No.—yes, No. 15 store, which was actually our No. 16. But we were able to develop without having stores in shopping centers.

[fol. 2169] Q. What is this oldest firm that you refer to?

A. Ralph's Grocery Company.

The Court: What is the objection, if any, to shopping centers as contrasted to what you call it, a free—

The Witness: Free-standing store.

The Court: —a free-standing store?

The Witness: There is no objection to shopping centers.

The Court: There must be some reason that these companies prefer to have their free-standing locations.

The Witness: I believe, if we are referring to Ralph's now, they have historically always acquired the fee of the land on which they built their buildings, and it was sometimes not possible to do that when someone else was developing a shopping center. In other words, they could not isolate that one section of ground and earmark it for a market. And Ralph's have taken several leases, but for the most part they prefer to own the land and own the building. And it cannot be denied that they have been very successful in building a chain of stores that have a very high average sale per store.

The Court: How about Safeway, do you know why they would prefer the free-standing store?

The Witness: Safeway have built quite a few free-standing stores, and have good ones, I might add. I am thinking of one in Beverly Hills, I am thinking of the one [fol. 2170] at La Brea and Sunset Boulevard, like the one at 3rd and Vermont opposite the Ralph's office, and these stores also do very well. They are unfettered with—pardon me.

The Court: Tell me, is there a parking problem insofar as the great markets are concerned? I realize they have parking space, but is there distance to the cars, or something of the kind, whereas in a free-standing market you have just your own parking?

The Witness: This is one of the considerations. In our business we do ask that the customer wheel her own basket out to her car and unload it. She sort of has to provide that service for herself, which box boys used to provide. And in large shopping centers where the parking lot is immense the women just hesitate to push that cart too far. It is not convenient parking for the customer.

The Court: If a person, for example, is going to go into the Woolworth store, they might very well park in front of the grocery store—is that right?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: —and walk there, and leave those places filled?

The Witness: That's true.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Nevertheless, Safeway has some stores in shopping centers?

[fol. 2171] A. Safeway has stores in shopping centers, also.

But the mere fact that a store is in a shopping center does not guarantee its success at all. There are some shopping centers right now that are very shaky, and I have seen some that have gone bankrupt.

A shopping center is just a gathering together of some compatible tenants, co-tenants, as we call them, which would be a market, a drugstore, and a variety store, and a few service shops——

The Court: The main thing in a market, I assume, is getting a reliable tenant on a long-term lease so that you can get financed; that's about the main thing, isn't it?

The Witness: This is what the insurance companies demand.

The Court: This is what the builders look for?

The Witness: And the builders want, yes, sir.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, yesterday you were asked some questions by Mr. Coyle about Defendant's Exhibit AV, which comprises defendant's answers to plaintiff's interrogatory No. 6, and Defendant's D, E, F and G thereto. Can you tell us how the answer to this interrogatory and exhibits were prepared, compiled?

The Court: Counsel, you can state that for the record, can't you?

[fol. 2172] Mr. Alsup: Well, it was typed in our office, your Honor. I thought it would be helpful for the record——

The Court: Go ahead and state it, and then see if we can't just eliminate the problem in that fashion.

Mr. Alsup: When the interrogatory was asked, your Honor, we talked with Mr. Von der Ahe about the feasibility of checking with all of the store managers and getting their idea as to who the competitors were in their respective areas. Mr. Von der Ahe pointed out to us that this would be an awfully burdensome thing, and it would be far better to have some outsider go around and check with each of the store managers, that he might get a more objective view as to what the competition was. For that reason we employed a professor at Occidental College to go around and interview each of these store managers of the Von's-Shopping Bag stores. He first talked with Mr. Von der Ahe, got the addresses, interviewed the store managers, and then prepared the documents on the basis of the store managers' questions. And Mr. Von der Ahe went over it and found some errors. One of his store managers had neglected, for example, to mention the Farmers Market nearby, one of the most successful markets as your Honor knows, as a competitor at all. And Mr.

Von der Ahe checked with the store managers and made certain corrections.

Is that a correct statement?

The Witness: That's correct.

[fol. 2173] The Court: Well, I take it, it is still an admission, but you are just explaining the purport of the admission; is that what you mean?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Alsup: To the extent that it is an admission, it is an admission. We think that it shows very little competition, your Honor.

Q. You were asked by Mr. Coyle, Mr. Von der Ahe, about Shopping Bag Store No. 1 at 1611 West Whittier Boulevard in La Habra, which lists as its No. 1 competitor, in order of importance, the Von's No. 27 Store at 15704 Whittwood Lane in Whittier, and then lists eight other stores, and then 11 markets, independent, about half mom-and-pops and about half superettes, and a proposed new Food Giant.

Will you turn to Von's 27 on that exhibit and state what the manager of Von's 27, Store No. 27, listed as his competitors in order of importance?

The Court: Counsel, you can read those. It is all in evidence, isn't it, can't you just read them?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. I will be glad to.

The Court: Just read them into the record.

Mr. Alsup: Store No. 27 of Von's, your Honor, lists as No. 1 competitor, Thriftimart across the boulevard; No. 2, Safeway, three-quarters of a mile away; Esko, three-[fol. 2174] quarters of a mile away; Alpha Beta, three-quarters of a mile away; Gateway, two and a fourth to two and a half miles away; A & P, three-quarters of a mile away; and as No. 7, the Shopping Bag Store No. 1, two and a half miles away; and as No. 8, probably ten mom-and-pops and small independents in the area within a two and a half mile radius.

The Court: Is this mom-and-pop an invention of yours, or is this something in the industry?

Mr. Alsup: It is a phrase very common to the industry, your Honor. As a matter of fact, one of the Government witnesses testified when he opened up his market in 1927, I think it was 7,000 or 8,000 square feet, it was one of the largest markets in the area at that time. He said now it is a mama-and-papa store, as he called it. I said, are there other similar stores in the area? He said, "Some that you can just call mom stores."

The Court: In other words, if the husband and wife both work it is a mom-and-pop; is that what you mean?

Mr. Alsup: I think it really depends on size and area served is what they refer to.

The Court: I think it originated from the idea that it was just a one-man store and then became a man and his wife.

Mr. Alsup: I am sure that's so, your Honor.

The Court: Of course, I suppose the way we are [fol. 2175] going they will have to hire extra people or they can't stay open; there will be a law requiring them to hire extra people one of these days.

Mr. Alsup: In Exhibit AV counsel referred yesterday to Shopping Bag Store No. 21 at 1183 Quad Way and said that Von's No. 27 Store was listed as a competitor. The exhibit shows, with respect to Shopping Bag Store No. 21, that the competitors, ranked in order of importance, were first, Market Basket, a half mile away; Esko Market, a mile and a half away; Stater Bros., about two miles away; Alpha Beta, about three miles away; Box Market, about two and a half miles away; Safeway, about three miles away; Ralph's, about two and a half miles away; and as eighth, Von's No. 27, two and a half miles away; and ninth, approximately four or five mom-and-pops within a two-mile radius.

Q. This store, Mr. Von der Ahe, at 1183 Quad Way, Whittier, a Shopping Bag store, can you tell us what has happened to that store?

A. Yes. Last year this store was replaced by a newer building on the same site and opened as a new Von's market. We did not feel that there was any competition between this store and the Von's 27, which you have referred to, at Whittwood Lane in Whittier, because had we thought so we would not have opened this new store. And the results since have proven our belief, because this new store which [fol. 2176] we have opened has increased sales of about 35 to 40 per cent, at the same time the Whittier store also has enjoyed an increase in sales.

Mr. Alsup: I might point out, your Honor, that the exhibit with reference to Von's Store No. 27 lists six competitors, and then seventh on the list, Shopping Bag Store No. 1, which we have previously referred to, and then probably ten mom-and-pops, but it does not list this Shopping Bag No. 21 on Quad Way in Whittier.

[fol. 2177] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, in your opinion——

The Court: May I ask a question?

Mr. Alsup: Certainly.

The Court: Mr. Coyle, how many stores do you claim were competing between Shopping Bag and Von's at the time of the merger?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I don't have that figure available now. I think we have filed an answer to an interrogatory in which we listed the stores that we claim.

The Court: Do you remember, Mr. Alsup, how many are claimed?

Mr. Alsup: I don't recall how many, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: I can find it for you.

The Court: I was wondering if that didn't more or less solve our—are you in disagreement on that? Is there disagreement between counsel on the number that were actually competing?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: How much disagreement, one store, one and a half, or how much?

Mr. Coyle: I would say twenty stores.

[fol. 2178] The Court: Twenty?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: What do you consider competing areas between stores, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: We consider ten minutes driving time, your Honor.

The Court: Ten minutes on the freeway and you can almost be in Santa Ana.

Mr. Coyle: A distance of ten minutes driving time—customer's driving time, in other words, a radius around the store of ten minutes driving time.

The Court: You go by the speed?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, let me ask you this question, for example: In Beverly Hills they have two Safeway Stores. They have one at Olympic and Beverly Drive and they have one at Santa Monica and—I forget the street, just below Doheny.

Now, I live at 909 North Bedford Drive. Now you say that minutes are going to decide me which one of those stores to go to?

Mr. Coyle: That is one of the things you will take into consideration if you are driving. You will go to the one probably that you can drive to more quickly, unless there [fol. 2179] is some other factor of convenience or image or some other factor.

The Court: Well, is there any norm for an area such as the metropolitan area on driving time? Don't you really have to do it in miles?

Mr. Coyle: I think in miles you arrive at on the basis of driving time, rather than—I think the driving time comes first. In other words, if the consumers know how long it is going to take them to get to the store, yes. But I think driving time takes into consideration things such as barriers, accessibility, and congestion on the highways and all those things. So it is really the driving time.

The Court: Then, according to you, suppose we had in a ten-minute area, suppose we had a Safeway Store 11 minutes away, a Ralphs Store 12 minutes away, another—all of the chains within 11 to 15 minutes, and we had an independent 7 minutes away. Is it your contention the average person would go to the independent 7 minutes away, because of the time factor?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. I don't have any contention. These are things that people—you have to determine from experience and surveys. And I don't say that the ten minutes is the limit. I say that the average housewife will drive at least ten minutes to get to a shopping center. She will consider driving ten minutes.

[fol. 2180] The Court: You know, housewives will drive all the way from Westwood to the Valley just because they like a store.

Mr. Coyle: This is true, they will. I don't say they don't——

The Court: And sometimes to save 15 cents, they will spend three dollars.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure they will.

The Court: For example, I don't know whether you are acquainted with it or not, but there is a new cheese that comes out of Denmark and sells in Beverly Hills I think for $2.75. You can buy it in the Valley for $1.85, for example, at the Piggly Wiggly. Now, don't you know that a housewife who is going to save money to buy a fur coat would jump in her Rolls-Royce and journey all the way over to the Valley and back to save that extra money, and probably spend three or four dollars doing it? You are acquainted with those factors, aren't you?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir, there are many variables.

The Court: There are quite a few variables, I am sure, aren't there?

Mr. Coyle: That's right, I agree with that. I couldn't agree more.

The Court: All right, go ahead, counsel.

The facets of these problems are so great that I [fol. 2181] don't know how you are going to—I don't know how one human being can encompass them in his mind.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I had planned to go through several more stores, but the exhibit really does speak for itself.

The Court: The exhibit shows it, doesn't it, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, it shows it.

The Court: You are just having him make an argument for you, is all you are doing.

Mr. Alsup: I want to point out that the only reason I did this, your Honor, is because counsel referred to specific ones and read them into the record yesterday. And it seems to me that I can——

The Court: Well, each and every one of those cases there is a list showing all of the alleged competitors right in those so-called admissions.

Mr. Alsup: Absolutely, your Honor.

The Court: Which are in the record. And I don't think it is necessary.

Mr. Alsup: All right. And actually the exhibit shows, your Honor, on its face there are far more Shopping Bag stores located close to Shopping Bag stores than there are Shopping Bag stores located close to Von's stores.

There are just one of these stores——

[fol. 2182] The Court: I think where the great problem comes in in all of these cases, counsel, and where many a case is won or lost is in the findings. A lawyer that can't draw findings—and there are a few that can't, believe me—can be prepared to lose a great number of cases in his career. I get findings all the time, it just keeps me busy trying to revise them and get them in condition so that they can go up.

So in this particular case I am forewarning the both of you that findings are going to be complete, full and correct.

Mr. Alsup: I might say in that connection, if I may, I think the Judicial Council has suggested on these antitrust cases the parties prepare and submit their proposed findings in advance, so the court might see them.

The Court: I was going to come to that, counsel. As a matter of fact—it is quite a burden, I realize on the lawyers—but in antitrust cases those proposed findings can be of great assistance in locating the places in the record.

Mr. Alsup: That is what we propose doing.

The Court: I take it you anticipate referring to the record in your findings, do you, proposed findings?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. That is what we propose doing, if it is agreeable to your Honor.

[fol. 2183] The Court: How about you, Mr. Coyle, do you see any objection to that procedure?

Mr. Coyle: I would be glad to do that, your Honor.

The Court: I would appreciate it, as a matter of fact I think it would be of great help, it would be of great help in the case. So we will just here and now decide that that procedure will be followed.

Mr. Coyle: Very well.

The Court: That is prior to any decision.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. I might point out our appendix to our brief is almost proposed findings.

The Court: I think that is probably true, and if you want to let that stand——

Mr. Coyle: No, I think we will amplify it.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: And put the references in it.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Alsup: Just one or two more questions, your Honor.

Q. With respect to Shopping Bag stores, Nos. 28 and 32, the first located in La Puente and the second one in West Covina, can you state, Mr. Von der Ahe, whether there have been any changes in the competitive picture in this area—in these areas since your answer to the interrogatory [fol. 2184] was prepared?

A. This store No. 28, the Shopping Bag No. 28, which is indicated as being located in La Puente, and store No. 32 which is shown as being located in West Covina, are both in the same general area known as West Covina.

And this area has been overrun with discount stores, and this is the principal new type of competitor which has entered the area, to the point where there has been great concern even to the discount house operator. It is over-discount housed. And most of them are also selling food, which they use as inducements to attract their trade.

Q. Do you have any further comments, Mr. Von der Ahe, on this exhibit?

The Court: There are a couple or three questions, if you are finished, I would like to ask, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Very good, your Honor. I am finished.

The Court: Mr. Von der Ahe, the question here is for this court to decide, as you know, whether there has been a substantial lessening of—a prospect or possibility of a substantial lessening in competition by reason of this merger.

What in your opinion has actually occurred as the result of the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag? I am speaking now of the entire merger as a merger, not just one store against another store.

[fol. 2185] The Witness: Your Honor, I say this honestly and as truthfuly as I can, that in my opinion the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has in no way lessened competition in this area.

The Court: Has increased it?

The Witness: The merger occurred over three years ago. And I believe that since that time we have seen new entries into the retailing of food stuff in this area, we have seen our major competition expand and grow.

In no way at all do we have any sort of dominance or market shares or market powers that are significant. And this is just a situation where two local firms, one competing on the south and west sections of this area——

The Court: You mean in the general market?

The Witness: In the general market. And the other competing on the north and east section of this general market, and for the most part divided by the very heart of the City of Los Angeles. So for the most part our stores were so far apart that people in one area didn't even know of the existence of the other one.

There were a few areas where we both had stores in the same locality, but in the opinion of management, your Honor, these stores did not compete with each other—and if they did I suggest, sir, that it was of a very minor nature, and that they competed only for a very few customers, [fol. 2186] and that in itself was very inconsequential and insignificant.

The Court: Let me ask you this, do you think that the merger has increased competition?

The Witness: I think that the competition in the whole area has increased. And I think that this merger might, in some way, have stimulated an increase in competition.

This is one of the very few areas in the United States where five of the first six largest national chains will be operating.

The Court: Let me ask you this, you read the announcement I take it that Kroger is attempting to come in now?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Well, will that stimulate competition or will it tend to, in your opinion, to stifle it?

The Witness: Kroger is a very active, aggressive organization. And I think that they will come in here with ideas of expansion, and they are going to try to take their share —as much of their share of this market as they can get. And I believe that competition will also fight to retain its share of the market, which is going to result in more competition, I feel, more intense competition. And I think that the general public as a whole will benefit.

The Court: Well, when an announcement of that kind [fol. 2187] is made—after all you are the policy in the management of the corporation—do you take into consideration those matters the moment they are announced, do you give thought to them?

The Witness: Your Honor, we did give thought to it, yes.

The Court: In other words, if Kroger says we are coming in this area, now you have a general idea of where they will come immediately?

The Witness: Right.

The Court: But you also anticipate that there will be some expansion, is that right?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: So do you start more or less in the military sense, begin to give thought to tactics, or to anything of that kind?

The Witness: I can't honestly say we get that deep, no, sir. We are just going to try to run a very good organization and we are going to be competitive.

The Court: But if Kroger starts to put in a store within a mile or so of your stores, it is going to become rather competitive, isn't it?

The Witness: Assuredly, yes, sir. I might add that there was an article in this morning's paper that Food Fair has now acquired the Fox Markets.

[fol. 2188] The Court: Yes, I noticed that also.

The Witness: They say they intend to continue to expand and develop the Fox chain. This, too, is going to be more competition.

The Court: Well, there isn't very much further you can go on price reduction, is there?

The Witness: Not unless we eliminate some of the frills, let's say, that we have now built into our business. I am talking about our long operating hours, talking about such things as savings stamps and some of the conveniences and niceties that right now people are willing to pay for, and which we are willing to provide.

We can draw back and go on to an austerity program, more or less, like we did when the depression was here. And we could operate cheaper if we had to.

The Court: Well, I suppose if you reduce the hours to eight hours and no night work and things of that kind, you could make a substantial reduction on the price of food?

The Witness: It would not be too much, your Honor, but it would be—it could result in savings, yes, sir.

The Court: But assuming that you maintained the same facilities, the same quality distribution, you have gone about as low as you can go on price reduction, haven't you?

[fol. 2189] The Witness: I think so.

The Court: Another price reduction and you will be giving it away at a loss, won't you? Selling it at a loss?

The Witness: Well, there is——

The Court: That is a substantial price reduction.

The Witness: I agree with you, yes, sir.

The Court: Now one other question. Is there any policy, or has there been—first, in Von's—respecting the type or area that you have sought to place stores in? In other words, you find one area, say, is a working man's area, another is a banking man's area, so to speak, more or less the white collar. Have you, in your policies respecting the placement of stores for Von's, has that entered consideration?

The Witness: Your Honor, we take that into consideration when we are out searching for new locations. The ideal location is one where there is a concentration of single family units of preferably five homes on an acre, a television set in each home, which indicates that they are staying home—younger neighborhoods, younger people raising families, who do most of their eating at home, new areas that have a potential growth factor built into them. And these are the kinds of areas that we like because they can expand.

[fol. 2190] The Court: Well, you do know that certain areas have a greater per capita wealth than others?

The Witness: Yes, that's right.

The Court: For example, San Marino?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: I take it you don't design your stores with the idea in mind that you are trying to get per capita wealth; it is population and the number of homes, more?

The Witness: That's right, and the number of persons per family.

The Court: The fact that it is a rich community or middle class community doesn't necessarily have much to do with it?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Alsup: One last question, your Honor.

The Court: I am through.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Do you have any opinion, Mr. Von der Ahe, whether the former Shopping Bag stores are more or less effective competing units today than they were before the merger?

A. Well, Mr. Alsup, I don't know if I answered that yesterday when I quoted the figures by saying that the then existing Shopping Bag stores in 1960, as against the same stores in 1962, showed an increase in sales of about [fol. 2191] $6,000,000; and I assume, perhaps in answer to your question, that they are now a more effective competitive factor than they were prior to the acquisition.

The Court: What is your opinion? You say you assume. What is your opinion?

The Witness: My opinion is, yes, they are.

The Court: They are more effective competitors against whom? Everybody? Any particular one?

The Witness: Your Honor, this entire area has competition. We are just trying to be effective competitors and provide effective competition in this area.

The Court: What you mean to say is that you are trying to get as many customers as you can get; is that right?

The Witness: That's true, yes.

The Court: And the others in the area, where the Shopping Bag stores are located, are trying to do the same thing?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: And some of them are being fairly effective, I guess, aren't they?

The Witness: True.

The Court: Who would you say, as a whole—one group of stores must come closer to you than some other group—[fol. 2192] Safeway, Ralph's, or someone? Do you follow my thinking?

The Witness: Your Honor, the competitor who I respect the most in this town, because he is a very good competitor, a legitimate competitor, and still very vigorous and runs a good operation, is Ralph's Grocery Company.

The Court: But the thing that I am getting at, which one comes closer to you? Let's assume there is a four-mile radius that applies to your stores, now. Who meets your competition the most in numbers?

The Witness: I believe that we compete against more Safeway stores than we do any other chain in this area.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

The Court: Anything further, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: Two questions, your Honor.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. You say you compete against more Safeway stores than any other chain. But the Safeway stores are generally smaller than some of the other chains, aren't they? The Ralph's stores are larger than the Safeway stores?

A. All of the new Safeway stores are larger supermarket type stores.

Q. But Safeway is still operating many of the older stores that are smaller, aren't they?

[fol. 2193] A. They probably are.

Q. Now, Mr. Von der Ahe, did you make a statement recently that "Competition is not cutthroat nor are rival chains trying to cut prices drastically. There is no intense price war on today, thanks to the healthy situation here"? Did you make that statement?

A. I made that statement, but it wasn't recently.

Q. How long ago was it?

A. Those were remarks I made before the Los Angeles Security Analysts, and what I was referring to, counsel, was the same as I was stating yesterday, that one of the reasons we cut prices was to eliminate these ridiculous below-cost prices, which we did. As a result of eliminating these ridiculous low cost situations, it resulted so that I used the expression that there was no longer any cutthroat prices going on.

Q. And rival chains are no longer trying to cut prices?

The Court: Counsel, I don't know whether he can answer that. Can he?

Mr. Coyle: That's what he said. I am asking him. That's what he said in this statement.

The Witness: I don't know if I said that, or not, either. Maybe I was quoted as having said it, but it was all part of a general plan, which I explained yesterday, [fol. 2194] your Honor, and I was trying to explain the effect of that price reduction on those hundreds of items, which we put into effect, and that resulted in the eliminating of those, as I said, ridiculous, silly prices, such as sugar, five pounds for 19 cents, and coffee 19 cents a pound, and so forth.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Based on your experience, are rival chains trying to cut prices today?

A. Certainly they are.

Mr. Coyle: No more questions, your Honor.

The Court: There is one question I wanted to ask. It slipped my mind for the moment. One thing I did want to ask, are all the chains and all the stores giving away Blue Chip or other stamps now?

The Witness: I think for the most part, your Honor, stamps are being given away by most all retailing outfits, yes, sir.

The Court: I suppose you are in the predicament that if you agree not to give them away, you probably will get prosecuted for antitrust conspiracy, wouldn't you?

The Witness: In this day and age, I would agree with you.

The Court: And if you do agree to give them away, then you will get prosecuted for agreeing to give [fol. 2195] them away?

Is that about the government's position, Mr. Coyle, they can't agree on anything regarding stamps?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: You are a leader at the Bar and a member of the Antitrust Department.

Mr. Coyle: I am just out here trying this case, your Honor.

The Court: You just happen to be here because the train went through. All right.

Is that all?

Mr. Coyle: I take a plane, your Honor.

The Court: No further questions?

Mr. Coyle: No further questions.

The Court: Step down, Mr. Von der Ahe.

Mr. Vaughn: Before the defendants rest, your Honor, we have one final matter. We would like to offer the affidavit of W. D. Hayden. I have the original and one copy here.

Let me explain if I can the circumstances surrounding this affidavit. Some time ago Mr. Hayden, who is assistant operations manager for Von's, and a former Shopping Bag executive, was asked by Mr. Von der Ahe to prepare a list of all discount houses with food departments in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. This was done not for [fol. 2196] this lawsuit, but another purpose. Mr. Hayden prepared such a list, based on interviews or based upon his personal observation and information given to him by Von's employees, their supervisors. We found out about that list and thought that it would be a good list, and we had Mr. Hayden attach an affidavit.

The government took his deposition, and we found there was some error in the list he made. I think in part the information on which he relied was inaccurate, and in part because his concept of a discount house for purposes of his original study for Mr. Von der Ahe was a little different than our concept of a discount house for the purposes of this case. Recognizing that these errors existed, Mr. Hayden thereafter went out and personally checked all the discount houses which he had listed and made a new list, which is our Exhibit AR. He also prepared a map which reflects graphically what appears on the list. It shows the Von's stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and the discount houses he lists with food departments. That exhibit is AR. Now the government has not had an opportunity to cross examine him on his most recent affidavit, but I think that we, through stipulations, can work out something that will solve that problem.

The Court: Do you desire to, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Mr. Hughes has been in negotiation

[fol. 2197] with Mr. Vaughn on this matter, and he will discuss it, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

There isn't anything to discuss; I just want to know what you will do.

Mr. Coyle: He will tell you.

Mr. Vaughn: If Mr. Hughes wishes to propose a stipulation, we might be able to agree.

The Court: I will give him the opportunity, if he wants it, to take a deposition.

Mr. Coyle: No, I don't think so.

Mr. Hughes: It is our proposal to allow the defendants to put in their proposed Exhibit AR, I believe, the affidavit of Mr. Hayden, which was handed to us on June 11th, along with the list of discount houses, with certain modifications in that list. These modifications are, one, that there are five discount houses listed on that list, which were not listed on the original list of Mr. Hayden which was submitted last January.

Mr. Vaughn: That I will stipulate to.

Mr. Hughes: There is a store listed as a Big Bear Store owned by Lucky Markets, which to our knowledge is just an ordinary grocery store.

Mr. Vaughn: Could we stipulate, with respect to that store, Mr. Hughes, and the other store, which you can [fol. 2198] identify, that the FBI went out and checked those stores, and if an FBI agent was called to the stand to testify, he would testify that according to his observations these were ordinary grocery stores and not discount stores, but that he did not check prices? Is that right?

Mr. Hughes: For this Big Bear Store in Torrance.

Mr. Vaughn: The Big Bear Store in Torrance, and——

Mr. Hughes: And for a store listed as a Low Cost market, division of Mayfair, the FBI agent, if called to testify, would state that this is just an ordinary Mayfair store.

The Court: I take it you are stipulating, both of you, to that?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

Mr. Hughes: Stipulate to that.

The Court: The stipulation is accepted.

Mr. Hughes: Further, your Honor, we did take Mr. Hayden's deposition, and we would like to place his deposition in the record.

The Court: All right. The affidavit will be admitted and copied into the record, and the deposition will be copied thereafter.

Mr. Hughes: In order for this deposition to make any sense, the original affidavit should also be put into [fol. 2199] the record, because he was cross examined upon that in the deposition.

The Court: It is all right with me, but I imagine that every time you gentlemen offer another document, that even the Overseas Distribution of Funds for America must flinch, because the cost of this record will be, I would say, mildly stating it, considerable.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree with that, your Honor. I wish it were less.

The Court: It may develop that this record will cause an increase in competition in the grocery line by Von's having to raise the price of groceries, I don't know.

The stipulation is accepted and those documents are admitted into evidence.

Mr. Vaughn: That includes Exhibit AQ, which is our map; is that right, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes: That's correct. That map has been corrected to show the new affidavits?

Mr. Hughes: Yes.

The Clerk: AQ and AR, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

The Clerk: The affidavit of Mr. Hayden will be Exhibit BI.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence and marked as Defendant's Exhibits AR, AQ, and BI.)

AFFIDAVIT OF W. D. HAYDEN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

W. D. HAYDEN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the Assistant Operations Manager of Von's Grocery Co.

In September and October, 1962, I was requested to make a list of all discount houses which sold groceries and other food items in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. I obtained the information requested from all possible sources, including personal observation and newspaper advertisements. I also had each of Von's supervisors report to me the names, addresses and other pertinent information concerning discount houses with food departments in their respective districts.

By piecing together all of the information so obtained, I developed the list attached to this affidavit. In all, I found 48 discount houses with food departments. Each of them is sufficiently close to at least one and usually several Von's stores to be in competition with them. On the attached list, the discount houses named are listed by Von's supervisorial districts. The name and address of each discount house is set forth on the left hand side of the list, together with information concerning the type of food products sold at each outlet, whether the discount house is restricted to members only and the name of the operator of the food [fol. 2199b] department (shown in parentheses) where that operator also operates a conventional supermarket.

On the right hand side of the list are the numbers and addresses of the Von's stores which are near the discount houses listed and in competition with them.

In addition, I procured an aerial map of Los Angeles and Orange Counties (as well as a portion of San Bernardino and San Diego Counties) on which each Von's store is located by a white circle and identified by its number. I have pasted on this map stickers which show the name and location of each of the discount houses with food departments which are named on the above referred to list (plus two others in San Bernardino County and one other in San Diego County which are near Von's stores). This map is Exhibit —.

The attached list and the map referred to above show that Von's faces competition in many areas from discount food outlets. I know from my own observations and experience that the sale of food products in discount houses is a relatively new form of grocery retailing and that most of the discount houses which I have listed commenced operations after the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, thus providing a new form and kind of competition both to Von's and other conventional retail grocery concerns in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

/s/ W. D. Hayden.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 23 day of January, 1963.

/s/Elizabeth Folger, Notary Public in and for said County and State.

IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

No. 336-60 cc

Deposition of WILLIAM DELBERT HAYDEN, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, at Room 808, Federal Building, Los Angeles, California, commencing at 1:45 P.M., Tuesday, May 21, 1963, before Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R., Notary Public, pursuant to oral stipulation.

[fol. 2199-3] WILLIAM DELBERT HAYDEN, having been first duly sworn, deposed and testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Hayden, would you please state your full name and address for the record.

A. William Delbert Hayden, 1110 Rodeo Road, Arcadia.

Q. What position of employment do you hold with Von's Grocery Company?

A. I am the assistant to the retail operations manager.

Q. Were you formerly associated with Shopping Bag?

A. Yes.

Q. What position did you hold with Shopping Bag?

Mr. Alsup: At what time, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: At the time of the acquisition.

Mr. Alsup: In March 1960.

The Witness: In March 1960 I was in charge of the produce and the meat operation.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Are you related to Rube Hayden, who is president of Shopping Bag?

A. Yes. He is my brother.

Q. You have prepared an affidavit dated January 23, 1963 in which you state that you were requested to make [fol. 2199-4] a list of all discount houses which sold groceries and other food items in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Who made this request of you?

A. Ted Von der Ahe, the president of the company.

Q. What was your understanding of what the words "discount house" meant?

A. Well, it is merchandise that is being undersold on all the chains in L.A., is what I took it for.

Q. A cut-rate store?

A. Yes.

Q. It would be a cut-rate grocery store?

A. Well, it would be a discount grocery store. We are selling less than the other chains in L.A. are selling.

Mr. Alsup: Do you want to clarify it?

They sold other than grocery items, did they not?

The Witness: Oh, yes. They sold anything you can buy at any department store, anywhere they sell appliances.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does a discount house under your definition sell appliances?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they sell refrigerators?

A. Yes.

Q. Stoves?

A. Yes.

Q. Would they sell furniture?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2199-5] Q. Do they sell soft goods?

A. Yes.

Q. And these are items that are not normally sold in grocery stores?

A. No, they are not.

Q. Referring to the listing that you attached to your affidavit, you note on the right-hand column certain Shopping Bag and Von's Stores which you indicate are sufficiently close to be in competition with the listed stores which you term discount stores. How did you determine whether these stores were sufficiently close to be competition?

A. Well, we have—These stores are all in a radius of five miles.

Q. Is five miles sufficiently close to be in competition?

A. Well, we feel that we can draw that far. But these are all closer than that.

Q. You feel that you can draw five miles?

A. Yes.

Q. That is based upon your experience in the industry that you can draw five miles?

A. Yes.

Q. You have been in the grocery industry how long?

A. Since 1932.

Q. When you draw from this five-mile range do customers pass other stores to get to your stores?

[fol. 2199-6] A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question on the ground that it is confusing and ambiguous and no foundation has been laid.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Based upon your experience have you found that customers will pass other stores in this five-mile distance to get to your store?

A. I think you will find that in any business.

Q. Now referring to the page marked "District 1," referring to the store labeled More and referring to the notation "Complete Food Center," what does that notation "Complete Food Center" mean?

A. Well, what we call a complete food center would be meat, produce and the dairy, and everything that is carried in a grocery store.

Q. And you checked this store and you found that it carried meat and produce and dairy?

A. That's right.

Q. When did you check this store to find that it carried meat, produce and dairy?

A. Right after their opening.

Q. When did they open?

A. I don't know the exact day but it would be less than a year.

Q. Referring to the other stores listed in this appendix on District No. 1 and District No. 2, wherever the notation [fol. 2199-7] "Complete Food Center" appears it indicates that you checked the store and found that it carried meat, produce and dairy and frozen foods?

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Do you mean by that question the witness personally, Mr. Coyle, or some supervisor under his direction?

Mr. Coyle: I asked him if he checked it.

The Witness: I checked this one, yes.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And did you check the others also?

A. Yes. All on this page, yes.

Q. The page marked "District 2," did you check all on that page?

A. Yes.

Q. And on District 3, you checked all the stores on that page?

A. The Fed Mart I didn't. That was checked by the supervisor and the district manager of that district.

Q. And he reported to you and said they carried meat, produce and dairy?

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: What page are you referring to?

Mr. Coyle: District 3.

Mr. Alsup: I am sorry.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring to Page 2 of District 3, did you check these stores?

[fol. 2199-8] A. The only one that I checked personally is the Cal Store.

Q. You found it carried a complete food center?

A. Complete food center.

Q. The others were reported to you as having food centers?

A. Right.

Q. Then on District 4?

A. The Sav-Mart I did not check.

Q. That was reported as operating and having——

A. The district man reports it.

Q. And it was reported that they were selling items such as appliances and soft goods that aren't normally sold in grocery stores?

A. Right.

Q. What other stores on this page did you not check?

A. The Fed Mart and More I did not check.

Q. They are reported as carrying complete lines of groceries?

A. Yes.

Q. Now with respect to District 5. Did you check those stores?

Mr. Alsup: Off the record for a minute.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. I call your attention to the fact that the store called "Unimart" on the bottom of District 4 is listed [fol. 2199-9] "To open January 1963." You haven't made a subsequent check of that store?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to District 5, how many of the stores on that list did you check?

A. Fedco, I have never checked that one.

Q. But you checked all the others?

A. Yes.

Q. You checked both to find that they were selling appliances and other items and also that they were selling food?

A. Our main interest was the food.

Q. But to determine whether they were a discount house you would have to check whether they were selling appliances and other items too?

A. Well, food is what we were mostly interested in in the discount.

Q. Now referring to District 3, you list there Leonard's as a discount store operated by Mayfair and having a complete food center. I believe that was one of the stores you checked yourself.

A. Yes.

Q. You found that it carried meat and produce?

A. Yes.

Q. How large a grocery section would Leonard's have?

A. Square feet?

[fol. 2199-10] Q. Yes.

A. That is pretty hard to answer. Of course, they have it all included in this large building. It must be 20,000 square feet, I would say.

Q. 20,000 square feet of groceries, including fresh meat and produce and it is operated by the Mayfair Markets?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you check the Leonard's store?

A. I checked that a couple of years ago, right after it opened.

Q. You have never checked since?

A. No.

Q. So you don't know whether today it is selling a complete line of groceries.

A. Well, I haven't heard any rumors that it has changed. And our district men, they have reports that they fill in when any changes are made in competition.

Q. They would have reported on the other stores as well, that is on this listing, if there had been any change?

A. Yes.

Q. You would be surprised, I guess, if Leonard's at Garden Grove has a 7200 square foot grocery center and doesn't carry any fresh meat or produce? Would you be surprised if that were so?

A. I sure would.

Q. Do you doubt——

[fol. 2199-11] Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it is argumentative and assumes facts not in evidence. You are not testifying, Mr. Coyle, but if you want to be sworn and testify you are welcome to do so.

Mr. Coyle: I asked him if he would be surprised and he said he would be. And I also am asking him now if this notation would prove to be incorrect might other notations on your appendix also be incorrect.

Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it is argumentative and assumes facts not in evidence, and I instruct the witness he need not answer. I have no objection to specific questions but not argumentative questions.

Mr. Coyle: I will ask him a specific one.

Q. Was this Leonard's notation made in the same manner as the other notations on your appendix?

A. What do you mean by that?

Q. They followed the same procedures with respect to Leonard's as you did with the other sources listed in your appendix?

A. No. Because most of these I have called on myself.

Q. You said you called on this one yourself.

A. At the time I called on them they had produce and meat in it.

Q. Now referring on the same page to Murray Manor, did you inspect the Murray Manor?

[fol. 2199-12] A. Yes.

Q. You found it to be a discount store?

A. All they had was the appliances.

Q. They didn't——

A. They don't have produce or meat.

Q. Or food?

A. No food.

Q. What does this notation "No meat or produce" mean with respect to Murray Manor?

A. That they didn't have meat or produce in them.

Q. But does it also mean they didn't have any groceries in them?

A. It means it didn't have meat or grocery.

Q. When you checked it did you find that they were selling dry groceries out there?

A. No, I don't believe they were.

Q. They weren't selling dry groceries?

A. No.

Q. They weren't selling any groceries?

A. They were in the discount appliances.

Q. How many of these other stores listed here didn't have any groceries in them?

A. Zody's.

Q. Zody's does not have groceries?

A. They are heavy with soft goods and drugs.

Q. No groceries?

[fol. 2199-13] A. No groceries.

Q. Are there any others that didn't carry groceries?

A. I think Zody's is the main one that doesn't.

Q. What was the purpose of listing Zody's?

A. Because they are a discount in the drug items and they have like waxes, items on that order and hardware items that we have in the grocery store.

Q. No food items?

A. No food items.

Q. Now referring to the Key Company, appearing on District 3, did your store manager report that that store is in competition with these various stores listed on the right-hand column of your appendix?

A. Yes, they were in competition with Garden Grove and the Fullerton store.

Q. Did you inspect the Key Company yourself?

A. I can't remember on that one.

Q. To the best of your knowledge is the Key Company in operation and competing with those stores listed on the right-hand column?

A. They would be competing, yes.

Q. Do you know if the Key Company were out of business?

A. I don't know about this location, but they had one in Burbank that they are out of business in.

Q. Is that the Key Company in Burbank?

A. Yes. It is not even listed on this.

[fol. 2199-14] Q. The Key Company in Burbank has gone out of business but you didn't list it.

A. It was listed as Sure, Incorporated.

Q. That is out of business?

A. Yes.

Q. When did that go out of business?

A. Right at Christmastime, in November or December. That is in District 6.

Q. It went out of business about a month before you signed this affidavit stating that it was still in business?

A. That was made in October.

Q. The affidavit was signed January 23, 1963.

Mr. Alsup: It refers to the survey made in October, Mr. Coyle, if you will read it. Made in September and October 1962.

Mr. Coyle: Q. You made no effort to check in January 1963 before you signed this affidavit to determine what had happened subsequent to September 1962 when the survey was made?

A. No. I was under the understanding that it was still open at Christmastime. The district man turned it in to me that way. But at this time it was still Sure.

Q. You don't know whether the Key Company, the other Key Company in District 3, has gone out of business?

A. No, I don't.

Q. But your records would indicate that it is still in [fol. 2199-15] business and that is what you compiled this table from?

Mr. Alsup: Do you know the answer at this time?
The Witness: No.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring now to District 3, Page 2, and calling your attention to Fedco listed for Lakewood, would that Fedco be selling food products?
A. Complete food center.
Q. District 3, Page 2?
A. Oh. I was looking at Anaheim. You are referring to Lakewood. This is one that the district man turned in.
Q. They reported it as selling food products?
A. He says here, "No meat, produce or dairy."
Q. Would they be selling dry groceries?
A. The way I take it there they wouldn't be.
Q. They wouldn't be selling dry groceries? Are dry groceries meat?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle, I think your phrase "dry groceries" may be ambiguous, because in our agreed line, "groceries and related products," we have included drug products and other items. If you want to refer to "food items" perhaps it would be clearer.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Would this Fedco at Lakewood be selling food items such as packaged cereals?
A. I really couldn't say because I didn't check that store.
Q. When you made the affidavit what did you intend to [fol. 2199-16] convey with this term "No meat, produce or dairy products"?
A. Well, I think it would have grocery items in it.
Q. You think it would have grocery items?
A. Yes. Cereals and such as soaps.
Q. And it would have a grocery department in it?
A. Without the meat, produce or dairy.
Q. Referring to another Fedco listed for Van Nuys, I think it is in District 5, it is listed as having a complete food center. That indicates that it is selling—
A. That would have everything.
Q. Did you inspect that store?
A. No, I didn't inspect that one.

Q. It was reported to you in the course of this survey that you had made in September as carrying a complete food center?

A. That's right.

Q. With produce and meat?

A. Produce, meat and dairy.

Q. And your district store managers reported to you that they faced competition from that store in the meat, produce and dairy products?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to District 4, to the store listed as a Sav-Mart, is that listed as a discount house which sells major appliances and stoves and refrigerators and soft goods and also has a grocery department in it?

[fol. 2199-17] A. That is the one in Torrance there, the Sav-Mart?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Mr. Coyle: I ask that this be marked as Hayden Exhibit No. 1 for Identification, being a picture of the Sav-Mart store in Torrance.

(The photograph referred to was marked by the notary public as W. D. Hayden Exhibit 1 for Identification and was returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Mr. Alsup: You represent this photo was taken on the time and of the store you are questioning the witness about?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct?

Q. I show you W. D. Hayden Exhibit 1 and ask you if this is the Sav-Mart store you referred to on the page numbered District 4.

A. I can't remember.

Q. Would it surprise you if this Sav-Mart store is a grocery store and not a discount center and it has never handled appliances or white goods or any of these other items?

Mr. Alsup: How do you define a discount store, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: In terms of the witness' definition.

The Witness: Is this one of the stores that I said I was in?

[fol. 2199-18] Mr. Coyle: Q. I don't know whether you said you were in it. This is one of the stores that you reported as a discount store handling appliances and white goods and soft goods in addition to food.

A. All I can say is that is the way the district men turned it into me.

Mr. Coyle: I ask that this be marked as W. D. Hayden Exhibit 2 for Identification, being a picture of the Big Bear store in Torrance.

(The photograph referred to was marked by the notary public as W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 2 for Identification and was returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Would you examine W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 2 for Identification and tell me if you recognize that as a photograph of the Big Bear store in Torrance.

A. Yes.

Q. Is the complete name of this store "Big Bear Foods"?

A. I don't know whether it is Big Bear Foods or what. Big Bear.

Q. Is this a conventional grocery store rather than a discount house?

A. Yes. They converted it over.

Q. When did they convert it over?

A. About a year ago.

Q. Sometime in May?

[fol. 2199-19] A. Somewhere in there.

Q. Six months before the survey in September?

Mr. Alsup: When you say "converted it over," will you clarify that, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: He said it.

Mr. Alsup: Converted from what to what?

Mr. Coyle: The witness said they converted it.

Mr. Alsup: From what to what?

The Witness: From a Lucky store to a Big Bear.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But it was never a discount house?

A. It is a discount store right now.

Q. Does it sell appliances?

A. No. It is just a discount food center. It is just a regular grocery store. They went in and lowered prices.

Q. A regular grocery store that sells at lower prices?

A. Yes.

Q. On the same page, referring to the Low Cost store, can you tell me what chain operates the Low Cost store?

A. Mayfair.

Q. You didn't list the Mayfair on your appendix?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. In some instances you list the Mayfair chain that owns the store and others you don't. Why is that, Mr. Hayden?

A. Just an oversight.

Q. There may be other oversights?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the [fol. 2199-20] ground that is is argumentative and instruct the witness he need not answer.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Have you checked the appendix to determine whether there were other oversights?

A. Yes.

Q. You didn't discover this oversight when you checked the appendix?

A. No.

Q. Now referring to that Low Cost store operated by the Mayfair chain, does that store sell appliances?

A. This was just a regular market they have changed to this Low Cost.

Q. You mean this is a regular market that cuts prices once in a while?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to District 1, where you have listed a Low Cost operated by Mayfair in Ontario, is this a discount store that handled appliances and soft goods?

A. They have some soft goods but I don't believe they have any appliances. It's a regular grocery store again, a grocery operation.

Q. It is a regular grocery operation?

A. Before they changed it to this Low Cost. It was just a regular Mayfair store.

Q. And then they lowered the prices.

A. And changed it to the Low Cost.

[fol. 2199-21] Q. Now referring to District 3, Page 2, it lists Cal Stores for Mayfair. What does Mayfair have at Cal Stores?

A. The way I understand it they just have the food center and the others are leased, the other departments.

Q. You say they are just operating a regular grocery store in a discount center?

A. I would say that.

Q. Would you say that with respect to the Gemco operation of Lucky that they are just operating a regular grocery store in a discount center?

A. I believe that is right. And the rest are leased departments.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle, just to clarify it for me, by your use of the phrase "regular grocery store," do you classify a mom and pop as a regular grocery store?

Mr. Coyle: I will ask this witness if he does.

Q. Do you classify a mom and pop as a regular grocery store?

A. Well, on a small scale I would say.

Q. Do you class a bantam store as a regular store?

A. Well, they have the main national brand items, I would say, in them.

Q. The bantam stores would be a modern mop and pop?

A. I would say so.

Q. You show on District 1 a More Thriftimart at Rosemead and Garvey. Did you personally inspect that store?

[fols. 2199-22] A. Yes. And it is not right on the corner either, at Rosemead and Garvey.

Q. In this District 2 you show another More's store at 8682 Garvey Boulevard, South San Gabriel.

A. This is the correct address here. They put it in there twice.

Q. They listed one of the More's twice?

A. Yes.

Q. I note that the More's store listed in District 1 at Rosemead and Garvey, if you will refer to District 1, Mr. Hayden, is listed as competing with Stores 55, 57 and 58, whereas the same store that is listed in District 2 is listed as competing with Store No. 29. Could you tell us which Von's store the More's actually does compete with?

A. Well, the More would compete with 55, 57, 58 and this 29.

Q. It would compete with all four of them?

A. Yes. And also that is wrong right there.

Q. What?

A. This side——

Q. It says "Complete Food Center."

A. But it isn't. They have no meat or produce.

Q. Now referring to District 3, and calling your attention to Murray Manor which we have previously discussed, what is Murray Manor?

A. To me it is just a name.

[fol. 2199-23] Q. What sort of an establishment do they conduct at Murray Manor?

A. Just a small center there.

Q. It is a shopping center, is it not?

A. They have several different shops in it, yes.

Q. Several different shops but no grocery store in it?

A. No.

Q. It is really a shopping center that doesn't have a grocery store in it, isn't it?

A. They have a barbershop, laundromats, a lot of small stores.

Q. A lot of small shops but no food stores?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Yet you list Murray Manor as competing with Von's Stores 26, 33 and 63.

A. Well, it is still a shop that would have the hardware items in it.

Q. A hardware store?

A. When I say "hardware," like Johnson's Wax.

Q. Which store in the Murray Manor would be selling Johnson's Wax?

A. I think it is the Murray Manor itself.

Q. Aren't there a number of separate stores in Murray Manor?

A. Yes.

Q. So which one of the stores in Murray Manor would be [fol. 2199-24] handling Johnson?

A. The one that is the discount. The other little stores go under their own names.

Q. There is a discount hardware store in Murray Manor, is there not?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they sell appliances in Murray Manor?

A. Appliances, yes.

Mr. Coyle: Would you mark these pictures as W. D. Hayden Exhibits 3 and 4 for Identification, please, 3 being the picture of the fence and sign at the Murray Manor Shopping Center, and 4 being a picture of the parking lot and building at Murray Manor Shopping Center.

The Witness: You know, a place like this would be in competition with our department store, in which we sell patio furniture, hardware items of all kinds too.

(The photographs referred to were marked by the notary public as W. D. Hayden Exhibits 3 and 4, respectively, for Identification and returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. I will ask you if that last statement is what Mr. Alsup just told you.

A. No.

Mr. Alsup: As long as you raised my name, did you just ask me if this were not a proper matter for you to mention?

The Witness: That's right.

[fol. 2199-25] Mr. Alsup: And I said, "You are the witness."

I also say, Mr. Coyle, if you have any other question I will be glad to answer it, or Mr. Hughes, who suggested the question.

The Witness: This is in between two of our stores.

Mr. Vaughan: We are going to have one of these incidents per deposition.

Mr. Coyle: Q. I show you W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 3 for Identification and ask you if you can tell me what you see on that picture.

A. Murray Manor Shopping Center.

Q. Is that the fence out there, or the wall?

A. That is the end of the building there.

Q. And does it describe it as a discount shopping center?

A. That is what it says there.

Q. I show you W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 4 for Identification and ask you if that is a picture of the Murray Manor Shopping Center and parking lot?

A. Right.

Q. Are there any other shopping centers in the Los Angeles metropolitan area that sell Johnson's Wax but don't have a grocery store in them?

A. That is the way Zody's are. They sell a lot of drug and wax items but they don't have a grocery department in them.

[fol. 2199-26] Q. Do you purport in this appendix to list every shopping center that sells Johnson's Wax and drug items in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Not every one, no.

Q. Just some of them?

A. Well, like the ones that have the big discounts.

Q. The ones that sell them at discount prices?

A. Yes.

Q. Regardless of whether they have a grocery store in them or not you are listing them?

A. Yes. That is why Zody's is listed all the way through there, you will notice.

Q. That may be why the Fedco is listed in Lakewood and Van Nuys. Is that why the Fedco is listed in Van Nuys and Lakewood, because they sell Johnson's Wax and items like that?

A. I would say so.

Q. But they don't sell groceries?

A. Right.

Q. Now referring to District No. 4 and calling your attention to the Fedco listed for La Cienega in Los Angeles, does this Fedco sell packaged cereal?

A. If it is listed there as a complete food center I would say "Yes."

Q. How big a grocery department does this Fedco have?

A. Well, this is a large store.

[fol. 2199-27] Q. How large a store would the whole establishment be?

A. The whole thing?

Q. Yes. In square feet.

A. Probably over 100,000 square feet.

Q. And then the food part of it, how many feet would that have?

A. I don't know.

Q. Would over 90 per cent of its sales consist of fresh meats?

A. I wouldn't know that.

Q. Is it predominantly a meat market?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you inspected it?

A. No, I haven't been in that one.

Q. Does it handle produce?

A. That I don't know. This is the one that they have turned into a complete food center.

Q. Now referring to District 2, to the Giant-Mart in District 2, did you inspect that store yourself?

A. That is in Alhambra?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. And the name isn't Giant-Mart any more.

Q. Was it ever?

A. It was to start out with. That is what they had on the billboard.

[fol. 2199-28] Q. Was it ever operated as Giant-Mart?

A. No.

Q. When was it opened?

A. I don't believe it is over three months ago.

Q. Is it a Unimart?

A. It is a Unimart now.

Q. Is it operated by Food Giant?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to District No. 1, the White Front store in Covina, did you inspect that store?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you inspect it?

A. About a month ago.

Q. You didn't inspect it as part of the study last September?

A. At that time—The White Front store?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I checked it in September.

Q. In September as well as now?

A. Yes.

Q. Have there been any changes since September?

A. Yes. The food center has been added to it. The market wasn't in there at that time.

Q. You list it in your appendix as having a complete food center.

A. That is through what was scheduled for it as a com-
[fol. 2199-29] plete food center.

Q. It hadn't been completed but you didn't make a notation that it hadn't been completed on your appendix?

A. I just had it scheduled to be a complete food center.

Q. But you don't have that notation on your appendix?

A. No.

Q. Calling your attention to District 4, you noted that the Unimart was to be opened in January 1963 but you did not know that the White Front in Covina was to be opened. Are there any other stores on this list that were not in operation when you signed this affidavit which you haven't so noted?

A. No. I believe they are all in operation at this time.

Q. You believe every store on this list is in operation at this time, except the two that have closed?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. But you didn't know that one of the two had closed?

A. What?

Q. But you were unaware that one of the two stores had closed?

Mr. Alsup: I object to that. The witness has answered your prior question and you are now arguing with him.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking him the question.

Q. Were you aware that the Key Company store in Ful-
[fol. 2199-30] lerton had closed?

A. I was talking about Burbank.

Q. You don't know whether the Key Company store in Fullerton has closed or not?

A. No, I don't.

Q. So the only store on this list that you know has closed is the Sure store in Burbank?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to the operation of grocery departments in these discount stores by major chains in the area, does Lucky have discount operations in two stores, one at La Puente and the other in Anaheim, that is the Gemco Stores?

A. Yes.

Q. They are operated by Lucky. And are the More Stores in Covina, South San Gabriel, Reseda and Sepulveda and National operated by Thriftimart?

A. Yes.

Q. Are the Unimarts at Jefferson and Sepulveda, Pomona and Norwalk and Alhambra operated by Food Giant?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the Big Ben operated by Ralphs?

A. No. They just have the grocery in that, I believe.

Q. Yes, that is what I was referring to.

Mr. Alsup: What Big Ben are you referring to? There are other operators who operate Big Ben Stores.

Mr. Coyle: There is only one in this listing, Mr. Alsup. [fol. 2199-31] The Witness: That would be Torrance, the one I am talking about.

Mr. Coyle: The Big Ben in Torrence.

Q. Are the discount grocery concessions in the Cal Store in Lakewood and the Cal Store in Pomona operated by Mayfair?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the grocery department in the Leonard store at Garden Grove operated by Mayfair?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to District 1 and calling your attention to the Golden Rule store in Rosemead, is that operated by Food Fair as a successor to Fox?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to the Big "A" in Long Beach, District 3, Page 2, is that operated by Food Fair as the successor to Fox?

A. No. That is a local company. That is a different company.

Q. Your study or survey indicates that the store is not operated by Food Fair, the successor of Fox Markets?

A. Which store is that?

Q. The food center in the Big "A" store in Long Beach.

A. That is a different operation altogether. That is Foods Company and this is Food Fair.

Q. I understand that. It is your testimony that Foods [fol. 2199-32] Company operates this Big "A" in Long Beach rather than Food Fair.

A. Yes.

Q. How many grocery stores do the Foods Company operate?

A. Well, I really don't know the exact number. But I think it is 12.

Q. Are they all in discount centers?

A. No.

Q. How many of them are in discount centers?

A. I believe there are two.

Q. Two in discount centers and to your knowledge ten are not in discount centers.

A. No, I think they have 12 of their regular stores and two discount stores.

Q. How long have they been a chain, this Foods Company?

A. I really don't know.

Q. Several years?

A. Yes.

Q. And they were operating conventional stores prior to the time they went into discount center operations?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to Fantastic Food Fair at Burbank——

Mr. Alsup: What page?

Mr. Coyle: District 6.

[fol. 2199-33] Q. Is that operated by Food Fair?

A. I don't know.

Q. Who operates that?

A. I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I ask that this photograph be identified as W. D. Hayden Exhibit 5, it being a picture of the Build 'n Save premises in Fullerton.

(The photograph referred to was marked by the notary public as W. D. Hayden Exhibit 5 for Identification and was returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Mr. Alsup: What page is that on? It states on the back that this is formerly Key Co.

Mr. Coyle: This is my understanding.

Q. I show you W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 5 for Identification and ask you if this is a picture of the building which you identified in District 3 as the Key Company discount house.

A. Pretty hard to say.

Q. Are you unable to state whether or not that is the picture of the premises which you have listed as housing the Key Company discount operation?

A. I can't say.

Q. Now turning to District 1, I believe we discussed the White Front operation in Covina which had not opened when you made your affidavit but has subsequently opened and which you inspected last week. Does the White Front [fol. 2199-34] store out there in Covina handle a line of applicanes?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it handle soft goods?

A. Yes.

Q. Are the appliances and soft goods sold in the same building?

A. They are in the same building under the same roof.

Q. Is the grocery store under the same roof?

A. It is to one side, the grocery store.

Q. It is a separate building?

A. A separate building.

Q. Are any of the Von's and Shopping Bag Stores located adjacent to stores which sell appliances and soft goods?

A. In different shopping centers, yes.

Q. You share a common parking lot, just as the White Front store which is operated by Bill's Ranch Market out in Covina shares the same parking lot as the White Front appliance store which is in a different building?

A. Yes.

Q. In District No. 2 you list a Serv Mart in Pico Rivera listed as a complete food center. Did you inspect this store yourself?

A. Yes. I got thrown out. I always remember that one.

Q. How big a meat counter do they have in there, in the [fol. 2199-35] grocery establishment?

A. The way I remember it it wasn't too large.

Q. Did they sell fresh meats there?

A. Yes, they did. On the opening. I don't know whether they are selling it today or not.

Q. Have your people reported as to whether they are selling fresh meats or not?

A. Not in the last few months they haven't reported one way or the other.

Q. You don't know whether they are selling fresh meats or not?

A. They did at the time I made this up in September.

Q. September?

A. When they opened.

Q. When did they open?

A. They have been open a couple of years.

Q. What about last September, were they selling fresh meat when this survey was made?

A. That I can't answer you.

Q. Were they reported to you by your people as selling fresh meats?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to District 3, ABC Union Store in Santa Ana, you listed them as selling no meat, produce or dairy. Last September when this was drawn up were they selling package cereals?

[fol. 2199-36] A. Yes.

Q. Were they selling a line of dry groceries there?

A. Yes.

Q. Selling canned goods there?

A. Canned goods.

Q. Referring to the Fed Mart store in Anaheim, were they selling meats last September?

A. The report turned into me that they were a complete food center.

Q. Including a meat department and produce department?

A. If you will notice, the discounts are changing every day.

Q. Are they dropping meat departments in most of them?

A. I didn't say most of them.

Q. But some of them are dropping the meat department?

A. They are having their troubles.

Q. Are they having troubles?

A. Yes.

Q. It is a pretty tough row to hoe to sell groceries in a discount store.

A. It is pretty tough to sell groceries anywhere.

Q. It is harder in a discount store to sell fresh meats, isn't it?

A. I would think so.

Q. This White Front store in Anaheim, has that ever been completed?

[fol. 2199-37] A. I really don't know on that.

Q. You don't know whether it is selling meat, produce or dairy products?

A. No, I don't.

Q. The last reports you had, what were they selling at that White Front in Anaheim?

A. Just what is on there, that their complete food center was under construction but I don't know whether it has ever been finished or not.

Q. You don't know that they are selling any food products out there now, do you?

A. That's right.

Q. Referring to the White Front in Torrance, District 4, you say it opened January 1963. Have they ever opened?

A. Yes, they are open now.

Q. You know they are open?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what they are selling in that store?

A. Regular run of merchandise like in their other White Front stores.

Q. What do the other White Front stores sell ?

A. Appliances, soft goods, grocery items.

Q. How much meat are they selling out there?

A. It would be hard for me to say.

Q. Do they have a meat department?

A. They have a meat department just like the one on [fol. 2199-38] Arrow Highway—or Azusa.

Q. Do they have a meat department like you have in your Von's-Shopping Bag Stores?

A. Like what we have?

Q. Yes.

A. It is a probably a little smaller.

Q. Do they have a produce department?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know that they are selling fresh vegetables out there in the White Front store in Torrance?

A. Yes.

(A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Hayden, did you visit any stores on this appendix which are not located in either Los Angeles or Orange Counties?

A. I believe they are all Orange County or Los Angeles.

Q. What is the annual gross sales figure for the largest selling store in the Von's-Shopping Bag chain?

A. The largest?

Q. Yes.

A. In Los Angeles County?

Q. Or Orange County. Which of your stores has the largest annual sales?

A. In Los Angeles or Orange County?

Q. Yes.

A. It would be the Alhambra store.

[fol. 2199-39] Q. What are its annual sales?

Mr. Alsup: Which Alhambra store?

The Witness: It's on Valley. The number of the store is 29.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What are its annual sales?

A. It would be about $100,000 a week.

Q. That would be between five and six million dollars annually?

A. That would be right, yes.

Q. Do you know of any discount store in the area which would have sales of groceries and related products of that magnitude?

A. Gee, I wouldn't know.

Q. Most of them would not, would they?

A. I just wouldn't know. You hear all kinds of rumors but I don't know.

Q. Rumor and speculation is all you know?

A. Yes.

Q. You personally have no knowledge whether these discount stores have very much annual dollar sales in groceries and related products?

A. You mean seeing their books?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I have never seen any figures.

Q. Von's and Shopping Bag's annual sales have expanded greatly in the past two or three years, haven't they? [fol. 2199-40] A. Well, not too great.

Q. They have expanded by thirty or forty million dollars since 1960, haven't they?

A. I don't remember what we did last year but I don't think it is that much.

Mr. Coyle: I have no further questions.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Hayden, you were asked if to your knowledge any of the discount stores had sales of groceries and related products amounting to $5,000,000 a year and you said you didn't know; is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you know if there are a large number of stores classified as grocery stores which have annual sales of groceries and related products of less than $100,000 a year?

A. What was the question again?

(The reporter read the pending question.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. I am referring to mom and pop.

A. Yes, there are more of those than the other.

Q. You were asked about this White Front store in Torrance and you were asked how much meat they are selling. You said that in your opinion that they are perhaps not selling as much meat as Von's and Shopping Bag Stores, [fol. 2199-41] that is fresh meat. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there a large number of other grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area which have lesser sales of fresh meat than Von's and Shopping Bag Stores?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. Or less sales of fresh meat than stores of many single store operators?

A. Very true.

Mr. Coyle: You are leading the witness a little bit, Mr. Alsup.

Mr. Alsup: Q. To your knowledge are there any so-called mom and pop stores which do not sell fresh meat?

Mr. Coyle: You are still leading him.

Mr. Alsup: I don't agree with you.

The Witness: I don't know of any offhand but I imagine there is a lot of them.

Mr. Alsup: Q. How about Speedee Marts, have you been in any of those bantam stores?

A. I have only been in the one that is up close to my home.

Q. Can you tell me whether all of the stores of Von's, and that includes the Shopping Bag Stores, sell liquor?

A. All of Shopping Bags have liquor in them but I don't believe all of Von's do.

Q. Are there other chains in this area which do not carry [fol. 2199-42] liquor?

A. Well, Ralphs, they are just getting into the liquor business, and Safeway the same way.

Q. Do you know whether all of the mom and pop stores carry liquor?

A. I think most of them would have just beer and wine, not liquor.

Q. You were asked to see the exhibit marked W. D. Hayden No. 3 for Identification which purports to be a photograph of Murray Manor in Anaheim. Do you notice a liquor sign in front of that store?

A. Yes, I notice that.

Q. Did the Von's Stores, Stores 26, 33 and 63 carry liquor, to your knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you referred to the Shopping Bag Store soft goods line. Is that what you call your junior department store items?

A. We call them just department store, non-food section.

Q. What do these stores sell?

A. Well, just about anything you can buy at a Sears & Roebuck. So you know what that covers.

Q. Will you list some of the items?

A. Well, we have the soft goods, we have shoes, we have children's clothes, we have paint, we have tools, we have a [fol. 2199-43] glass section.

Q. How many of the stores have such departments of the Shopping Bag Stores?

A. Well, I think there are 23.

Q. To your knowledge does the average grocery store, including the mom and pops doing business in this area, carry such items?

A. No, I don't think the average store would have it. Because we have patio furniture in those, which are listed as barbecues.

Q. I think you have testified, Mr. Hayden, that you feel the Von's Stores can draw up to five miles. Do you have any opinion as to the radius of the area from which your average store draws the larger percentage of its customers?

A. Well, I don't think you could plan on more than two miles.

Q. Do you have any idea what percentage of your customers of your average stores are drawn from this two-mile radius that you referred to?

A. What percentage in the two miles?

Q. Yes.

A. That is a hard figure to say. I just wouldn't know.

Q. Prior to the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, Mr. Hayden, how many stores did you have located in the City of San Marino on Huntington Boulevard?

A. We have two stores.

[fol. 2199-44] Q. Those were Shopping Bag Stores; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. How far apart are they located?

A. I would say it is less than a mile and a half.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Hayden, when you prepared this exhibit purporting to show which of your stores were competing with these various discount stores, you took a five-mile radius as your boundary of competition, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to W. D. Hayden Exhibit No. 5 for Identification, which I understand is a picture of the premises formerly occupied by the Key Company, and which you understand now houses a hardware store known as Build 'n Save, I ask you again can you identify this picture?

Mr. Alsup: I am going to object on the ground that it has been asked and answered and he said he could not answer it.

Mr. Coyle: I just want to see if he can identify it.

The Witness: No, I can't.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

[fol. 2199-45] Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Hayden, based on your study of the industry do you have any opinion——

Mr. Coyle: There is no foundation for this. What study are we talking about?

Mr. Alsup: You referred to a study of the industry and his business experience.

Mr. Coyle: I referred to his survey.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Mr. Hayden, what trade journals, if any, do you read?

A. Supermarket News.

Q. Have you seen any articles dealing with the draw area of discount stores?

A. Yes. They have quite a few articles in them.

Q. Do you have any opinion as to the draw area of the discount store, a large discount store?

A. I think some of their studies they claim up to eight to ten miles, but I think five miles would be a better figure.

Q. Is that what you had in mind when you prepared this exhibit, Mr. Hayden?

Mr. Coyle: He has already answered that.

Mr. Alsup: I don't think he has.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I have no further questions.

[fol. 2199-46] Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. On your direct examination, Mr. Hayden, didn't you testify that when you prepared this affidavit with the attached appendix that you used the five-mile area because it was your understanding that the Von's Stores would draw five miles?

A. No. I think most of the draw is two miles for any food store.

Q. But they will draw to five miles and that is what you based this appendix on, is it not?

A. That is what I made the study on the discount stores.

Q. You based it on the five-mile draw of the Von's Stores?

A. Yes.

Mr. Coyle: No more questions.

Mr. Alsup: I have no more questions.

I, Harold M. Liebowitz, C.S.R., a Notary Public within and for the County of Los Angeles and State of California, do hereby certify;

That prior to being examined, William Delbert Hayden, the witness named in the foregoing deposition, was by me duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth;

That said deposition was taken before me pursuant to oral stipulation, at the time and place therein set forth, and was taken down by me in shorthand and thereafter transcribed into typewriting under my direction and supervision; that the said deposition is a true record of the testimony given by the witness;

That it was stipulated by counsel that said deposition may be read, corrected and signed by the witness before any notary public in and for the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

I further certify that I am neither counsel for nor related to any party to said action, nor in anywise interested in the outcome thereof.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal, this 4th day of June, 1963.

[fol. 2199-49] AFFIDAVIT OF W. D. HAYDEN

County of Los Angeles, ss:

W. D. HAYDEN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the Assistant Operations Manager of Von's Grocery Co.

In September and October, 1962, I was requested by T. A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's, to make a list of all discount houses which sold groceries and other food items in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. I obtained the information requested from all possible sources, including personal observation and newspaper advertisements. I also had each of Von's supervisors report to me the names, addresses and other pertinent information concerning discount houses with food departments in their respective districts. By piecing together all of the information so obtained, I developed a list of discount houses.

Thereafter, attorneys for Von's learned of the list I had prepared and asked me to sign an affidavit to which that list was attached for use in the trial of the case entitled United States v. Von's Grocery Co. I was later called upon to have my deposition taken by counsel for the Government in that case. During the course of that deposition it became apparent to me that the list that I had developed contained some errors. Therefore after my deposition was completed and during the latter part of May and early part of June, [fol. 2199-50] 1963 I personally visited each discount house on which I had any information and corrected the list which I had previously prepared based upon my personal observation of those discount houses and their operations. I then prepared a new list, a copy of which is Exhibit AR. There are 37 discount houses with food departments named on that list. Each of the discount houses which I have listed has a grocery department and as indicated on the list many of them also sell meat and produce. If a discount store is described as having a complete food center it means that it sells groceries, meat, produce and other products customarily offered for sale in grocery stores.

Each of the discount houses which I have listed is sufficiently close to at least one and usually several Von's stores to be in competition with them. On Exhibit AR, the discount houses named are listed by Von's supervisorial districts. The name and address of each discount house is set forth on the left hand side of the list, together with information concerning the type of food products sold at each outlet, whether the discount house is restricted to members only and the name of the operator of the food department (shown in parentheses) where that operator also operates conventional supermarkets.

On the right hand side of the list are the numbers and addresses of the Von's stores which are near the discount houses listed and in competition with them.

[fol. 2199-51] In addition, I procured an map of Los Angeles and Orange Counties on which each Von's store is located by a purple dot. I have pasted on this map stickers which show the name and location of each of the discount houses with food departments which are named on the above referred to list. These discount houses are also indicated by green dots if they have complete food centers and blue dots if they sell less than all the products usually found in grocery stores. This map is Exhibit AQ.

The attached list and the map referred to above show that Von's faces competition in many areas from discount food outlets. I know from my own observations and experience that the sale of food products in discount houses is a relatively new form of grocery retailing and that most of the discount houses which I have listed commenced operations after the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, thus providing a new form and kind of competition both to Von's and other conventional retail grocery concerns in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

AFFIDAVITS OF DEFENDANT'S INDUSTRY WITNESSES WHO OPERATE ONE GROCERY STORE

* * * * * * *

AFFIDAVIT OF W. H. CRAWFORD

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

W. H. CRAWFORD, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Modern Village Stores, Inc., which operates a grocery store and junior department store at 11850 Valley Boulevard, El Monte, California. Modern Village Stores, inc. also operates a junior department store in Monterey Park.

Our El Monte store began as a grocery store and has always featured groceries despite the fact that we sell a large number of non-food products as well. The area devoted to food sales is equivalent to that of a good sized supermarket.

I started in the grocery business in Los Angeles in 1933. In 1938, I acquired the El Monte location which Modern Village Stores still operates.

In 1957 and 1958, I served as President of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States (NARGUS), and I am still a member of that association's Board of Directors. In September, 1960, I was elected President of the California Grocers Association, a position I held for approximately one year. In recent months, illness has required me to give up many of my association activities, and I have for the same reason turned over most of my duties at Modern Village Stores to my son, Ray.

At the present time, there are a number of grocery stores run by both chains and independents and at least 3 discount houses with food departments in the vicinity of our El Monte store. Directly across the street from us is a modern Market Basket. A large Food Giant store is located in a comparatively new shopping center less than a mile away. A Shopping Bag store is about a half mile away. I have often been asked if I could compete successfully against this sort of competition. My answer is and always has been that the question is not whether I can compete against them, but whether they can compete against me. I am sure that my store has always been the leading and most successful store in its vicinity. I am sure that my sales volume exceeds that of my competitors.

This has been accomplished through hard work and agressive merchandising and by exploiting the advantages I have over my competitors. A chain is, by its very nature, less efficient and more cumbersome to operate than a well-managed store owned by an independent. I am sure that I can move faster to meet local conditions and that with one store, I am more efficient than any of my chain competitors.

In addition, I am better known in the community than the chains. I have taken an active part in community affairs, and I have spent a great deal of time getting to know my customers personally. Prior to my illness, one could almost always find me in one aisle of my store and my son in another. We nod to people, stop and chat with others answer any question any customer may have. People appreciate this personal touch, and they come back for more.

I have also chosen my employees carefully, and on the whole, I seem to be able to get better personnel than the chains. I continually stress to my employees the necessity of extending courteous, friendly service.

We are almost always involved in some promotional activity or another. We advertise weekly in local media. Admittedly, we do not and could not profitably advertise in metropolitan newspapers as the chains do, but I think that the advertising we have is just as effective, if not more so. For example, our store serves a large Mexican community. We often run ads in both English and Spanish in order to because a large chain has to adapt its advertising to the attract this trade. This is something a chain could never do metropolitan area as a whole, while we concentrate on a single community.

Modern Village Stores, Inc. is a member of Spartan Grocers, a subsidiary of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. Through Spartan we can buy groceries on terms comparable to the chains. I believe that cooperative buying is the single most important factor in the success of most independent grocers in Los Angeles.

I am aware that some independents have not developed successful businesses, but I do not believe that this is a result of any competitive disadvantage which befalls the independent. In my judgment, any single store operator who has the requisite experience and who is willing to work can compete with chains or anyone else and will develop a profitable business. Unfortunately, there are grocers who are inexperienced or lazy or both. Their chances of success are not very good.

Prior to 1960, NARGUS passed a resolution condemning all mergers in the retail grocery field which substantially lessened competition or tend to create a monopoly. I am in wholehearted agreement with the letter and spirit of that resolution, and I supported it at the time of its adoption. But I am firmly of the view that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger is not such a merger. I cannot see how it could possibly affect competition adversely, and so far as I can tell, it has not. By the same token, I cannot foresee any possibility that the grocery business in Los Angeles will become dominated by chains. Certainly, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag does not raise any fear of such domination.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

AFFIDAVIT OF J. R. DAHL

J. R. DAHL, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows

I am the owner and operator of the Arrow Market located at 8315 Santa Monica Boulevard in Hollywood. From 1957 to 1959, I was President of the Southern California Grocers Association, and I presently serve as that organization's Treasurer. Since 1957 I have been a member of the Board of Directors of the California Grocer's Association, and I am a member of the Board of Directors of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. I am also an active member of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States (NARGUS).

My father and uncle operated a general store in Albert Lea, Minnesota, and so I more or less grew up in the grocery business. However, after graduation from college, I became the principal of a small high school in Montana. Later I went to work in Fresno, California for Rosenberg & Company, the world's largest dried fruit packers.

In 1927, I applied for a job with the then newly-formed Safeway chain in Los Angeles. I managed a Safeway store in the South Bay area of Los Angeles for 2½ years and was then transferred to El Paso, Texas.

Thereafter, I decided I wanted to return to Southern California, so I left my job with Safeway, sold some stock I owned in the company, and with the proceeds started a small store in Paramount, California.

In 1935, I sold that store and bought the Sunfax Market at the corner of Sunset and Fairfax in Hollywood. In 1938, I sold the Sunfax Market. Thereafter, I managed two stores for Carl's Ranch Markets, then a four store chain. In 1943, I purchased the Arrow Market, which I have operated ever since. The Arrow Market is considerably smaller than the average conventional supermarket, although we are now planning to remodel and expand the market. The building in which the Arrow Market is located is approximately thirty-five years old, and perhaps its principal drawback as a grocery store is the limited parking available. The small parking lot immediately next to the market can hold only 24 cars.

Despite the foregoing, the Arrow Market has been successful. My sales per square foot per week are nearly twice the national average for supermarkets. The success of my business may be attributed to many factors, including a good deal of hard work, but there are two principal factors leading to my success which stand out in my mind.

The first is my membership in Certified Grocers. Unless I was affiliated with a strong cooperative buying association such as Certified, I would have a distinct disadvantage as compared to chain stores in the prices for which I could purchase groceries. My membership in Certified, however, permits me to buy at prices which are as low as the prices offered by suppliers to direct-buying chains, since Certified buys in the same quantities and obtains for its members the same advantages of quantity buying and central warehousing as in the case of the chains.

The second main reason for my success is the personal relationship I have developed with the community and the customers I serve. It has always been my theory that if a small grocer takes an active interest in the people he serves and the community in which he does business, he will attract a good number of loyal customers. As a consequence, I have tried to make my store more than just a place in which to buy groceries. I have tried to make it a center of community affairs and a place people like to go. I have done this primarily because I have enjoyed doing it, and there is no doubt that it has enriched my life, but it has also contributed significantly to the success of my business. My employees are always friendly and polite. I, myself, spend time chatting with people in my store, becoming personally friendly with them. I live within a block and a half of my store, and I walk to and from work. I am known in the community.

I have installed a bulletin board in my store on which anyone can post any sort of notice without any charge. I always mail out various materials to my customers each week.

In addition, I am active in community affairs, where I have made innumerable friends and customers. I am currently President-elect for the year 1963 of the West Hollywood Kiwanis Club, a position I also held in 1955. I am the Director of Rehabilitation for the Kiwanis Crippled Children's Foundation. I have been active in the YMCA, the Boy Scouts, the Community Chest, the Red Cross, and for many years I have served on the Board of Directors of the West Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

The personal contacts I have with my customers and my community have given me a tremendous advantage over my competition. A chain store, for example, cannot possibly become as closely allied with the community as I can, and a chain store manager simply does not have the opportunity to develop the close personal ties which I have with my customers and the community as a whole.

In addition to the foregoing, my success has also been contributed to by other factors, such as my knowledge and experience in the grocery business and the fact that I am right on hand to supervise personally my employees and to watch my costs.

In 1958, I was interviewed by a representative of Food Topics Magazine who asked me what opportunities were available to the single-store operator in Los Angeles. I replied in substance, "We've never had it so good. There's never been a time such as today when a medium-sized supermarket in the $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 [sales] bracket —could make so much money." Food Topics chose to quote my remarks in an article concerning the grocery business in Los Angeles which appeared in that magazine. What I said then accurately stated my opinion, and I am of the same view today. I still feel that a single-store operator can compete successfully and make a good profit in Los Angeles.

I do not think that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag in 1960 affected the competitive opportunity of single-store operators or other small concerns in any way. The grocery business has always been keenly competitive in Los Angeles, and the merger has not lessened that competition or its intensity. It has not placed small operators at any competitive disadvantage so far as I can see. Furthermore, I am of the opinion that the existence of small concerns and the likelihood that they will prosper and grow in number precludes any possibility of this market becoming dominated by a few large concerns.

AFFIDAVIT OF CECIL W. DOBSON

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CECIL W. DOBSON, being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am the President and principal stockholder of Dobson's Market, a corporation, which owns and operates Dobson's Market, a grocery store located at 4305 Degnan Boulevard, Los Angeles, in the Leimert Park area, near the Crenshaw Shopping Center.

I have had more than 30 years experience in the meat and grocery business in Los Angeles. I acquired my present store at 4305 Degnan Boulevard just about three years ago. At that time I was aware of the plan of Von's and Shopping Bag to merge and this did not deter me in the least from opening up my present store. As a matter of fact were and are newer and bigger stores of various chains, in the shopping area in which my store is located there and I knew I could compete and in fact have competed very successfully with them. I think I have a competitive advantage over all of them. I refer to the following supermarkets, all of which are located in what is generally known as the Crenshaw shopping district:

1. The Von's store at Santa Barbara and Crenshaw;
2. The Daylite store on Santa Barbara just a block or so west of the Von's store;

3. The Safeway store at 39th and Crenshaw;
4. The Boys store at Rodeo and Crenshaw;
5. The Ralphs store at Rodeo and Crenshaw.

There is also a Fox Market at 57th and Crenshaw and there are a number of liquor stores and drug stores in the area which, of course, sell many of the same products which are sold in my store.

I believe it is worth noting that the experienced single store operator who makes an effort to give personalized service to his customers has a great competitive advantage over the employee-operated store of any chain. Labor relations and being on top of the situation are the biggest factors in the operation of any store, and the individual operator has a great advantage in this respect. In my meat department, for example, I have four men who have worked for me for more than 20 years. I have taught them the business. I feature top quality meats and we render personal service to each customer. From my years of experience and my personal acquaintance with the meat packers, I know that I can purchase my meat at prices equal to those paid by the large chains and I get just as good or better quality at all times. Moreover, I can make a larger profit on meat than any of the chains because of my greater efficiency in cutting the meat. I estimate that because of my cutting proficiency and that of the men I have referred to we get from 4- to 5% more saleable meat than the chains do.

The same is true in produce also. My produce buyer is Japanese and he really knows quality produce. He goes to the produce market at 4:30 A.M. every day and he purchases only the select merchandise so that there is no waste through spoilage. The large chain, buying in large quantities, cannot be so selective and it necessarily gets some produce it cannot sell. By buying at the right time I am certain we do just as well if not better in price on our produce purchases as any chain, and much better on quality overall. We feature top quality produce and as a consequence our produce business has increased by 50% in the last year.

With respect to hard produce, such as potatoes, it may be that the large chains buying directly in carload lots can purchase at a somewhat better price than individual operators pay buying on the local produce market, but at the same time there is no doubt that those who buy in smaller quantities on the local market can be more selective as to quality, so there is no advantage to the large chain in this respect.

I am a member of Orange Empire Co-op and I get my groceries at just as good a price as any direct buying chain. I get all the advantages of advertising allowances and buying discounts that any large direct buying chain does.

I have stated that any individual operator who concentrates on personalized service and good relations with his employees can compete successfully with any chain store and do very well in the grocery business. My own store is a good example of the accuracy of this statement. Thriftimart had the lease on my store for ten years but it was not a profitable store for Thriftimart and it did not renew its lease when it expired. I believe Thriftimart never did as much as $1 million gross business at this store. Compare this with the $2 million gross which I did in the store last year.

After Thriftimart gave up the store, Patton's Markets took it over and for awhile did a good business by running a lot of hot ads. However, Patton's did not have the personal touch and the store was not successful under that management. Patton's sold the lease to a man named Ransom. Ransom was not a good merchandiser and was not successful, and so he sold to me. Naturally I take pride in the great success I have made of the store. I know that any individual operator with know-how who has good labor relations and is on top of the situation at all times can have similar success, and there are very many similarly successful individual operators in this area competing very effectively against stores of chains.

I have read the statements of the proposed government witnesses. I refer to the statements of Messrs. Bynum, Carpenter, Dick, Gertmenian, Irvine, Ledgerwood, Logue, Mekjian, Palmer and Swerdlick. All of these statements are virtually identical and I do not agree with any of them. I believe that the larger a chain gets the more difficulty it has in labor relations, in finding competent employees and in controlling individual store operations and the more vulnerable it becomes to the competition of individual operators like myself. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could not possibly have injured any individual operator and it certainly has not lessened competition in the slightest. I believe it is utter nonsense to think there is any danger that a few large chains will ever dominate this market. There are thousands of strong individual operators, small chains and larger chains doing business in Los Angeles and Orange County and based on my own long experience in the business I am sure there always will be. Competition in the grocery business is on a store-by-store basis and any aggressive and able operator like myself can outcompete the store of any of the chains because of personalized service, better labor relations, and being in personal charge of the store and seeing that it is run properly. The merger gave Von's no competitive advantage at all and it is impossible for any chain or group of chains to control this market.

Cecil W. Dobson.

AFFIDAVIT OF REYNOLD ELKIN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

REYNOLD ELKIN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

William Tuckman and I are the sole stockholders of Penny Food Mart, Inc., which operates a grocery store at 935 North LaBrea Avenue, Inglewood, Los Angeles County, California. Mr. Tuckman and I formed our corporation in 1958. Since that time, I have been primarily responsible for the operation of our grocery business.

I have been in the grocery business in Los Angeles since 1939, when at the age of 13 I began working as a clerk in a market operated by Beach Grocery Co. In 1941, I was employed by Von's Grocery Co. and ultimately became an assistant store manager and relief manager for that company. I remained with Von's until 1951 (except for 3 years service in the Navy). I was hired in 1951 to manage the Fairway Market in Monterey Park. Three or four months later, that market was acquired by Raisin Markets. I stayed on and worked with Raisin Markets in a supervisory and buying capacity until 1958 when Mr. Tuckman and I formed our corporation and acquired our present market.

Mr. Tuckman also has had a number of years experience in the grocery business.

The store which we acquired and which we still operate is located directly across the street from a large Safeway supermarket which in 1958 was only about two years old. Our store is located in a building which is more than 40 years old. When we acquired our store and on many occasions since then, I have been reminded of something I learned from Wilfred Von der Ahe, now Executive Vice President of Von's, when I worked for that company. At the time to which I am referring, Von's had only 7 or 8 stores, and we learned that Safeway was about to open a new store right next door to one of Von's. When he learned of this, Will said, "The best place for a Safeway store is right next door to us." He was confident that Von's could out-compete this large chain store and that Von's could take trade away from it. He was right, and his axiom is just as true today as ever. Since we opened our store in 1958, our sales volume has increased by more than 400%. We have out-competed Safeway as well as the other markets in our area. There is a Von's store ½ mile away, a Thriftimart ½ mile away and a Fox market 1 mile away, as well as a few other independents. I wonder how much better we would have done if all of these stores were next door to us.

Our success can be attributed to the fact that we have exploited the natural advantages which any independent holds over any chain store. Will and Ted Von der Ahe are good grocerymen. So are Neal Ramsey (President of Market Basket), Robert Laverty (President of Thriftimart) and other chain executives, but they are not in their stores.

I am. I can personally oversee every aspect of my business. I can keep my store clean. I can create a personal, friendly relationship with my customers. I can provide them with service. I know my customers, not only in the sense that I can greet them, but in the sense that I know what they want, what they will pay for any given product and what appeals to them. In addition, my ability to make changes to take advantage of local competitive conditions is much greater than in the case of chain stores. I can walk across the street to Safeway, look around their store, see what they are doing wrong and where their operation is vulnerable, come back to my store and immediately institute changes which will take advantage of Safeway's weak spots.

Contrast my operation with the operation of a chain store such as Safeway. First of all, the store is run by an employee of Safeway. He does not have an ownership interest in the business, and it has been my experience that somehow a manager, no matter how good he is, is no substitute for an experienced and able independent who is operating his own business. The two are simply not motivated by the same considerations. Of equal if not greater importance is the fact that the chain store manager is not in charge of all aspects of his business. He has very little to say about what products will be sold in his store. He has almost nothing to do with the prices at which products are sold. He is also restricted by chain-wide merchandising policies. In order for him to institute the sort of change which I can make immediately, he must clear with the head office and then his proposed change may not be approved. Under these circumstances, I am confident that the independent has every opportunity to out-compete a chain, and that by taking advantage of these opportunities he is going to attract customers from the chain store.

One of the points I have mentioned above deserves further comment. I believe that the fact that chain stores must set a chain wide policy both in terms of the products they sell, the prices they charge and the merchandising methods they employ is a real and distinct disadvantage to them. This has been proven to me by my own experience. Approximately two years after we began operating our Inglewood store, we decided to try to branch out. We took advantage of an opportunity that was made available to us to acquire the lease on a store in South Gate, which is also in Los Angeles County. We hired a manager to run that store, and we instituted policies which had been shown to be most successful in our Inglewood store. Our South Gate store was not as successful as we had hoped it would be. The reason was that the community which we served in South Gate did not want the same things as the community we served in Inglewood, and they responded to our policies in a wholly different way. We found that the people in South Gate wanted different products than the people in Inglewood. It had been our experience in Inglewood that price was of very little importance in attracting or holding customers. In South Gate, we found that the community we served was much more price conscious. Moreover, I was not able to spend a great deal of time in our South Gate store, and because I was not right on the job, I was not able to adapt our policy in South Gate to meet the needs and desires of that community, and while our store manager in South Gate was a capable, experienced man, it just wasn't the same as having the owner of the business on the premises, able to oversee every aspect of it and make the changes that were required. As a result, we did not renew our lease on the South Gate store, and I understand that it has since been leased to another independent merchant. Now if I had this problem with two stores, I imagine and I am sure that the chains must have the same problem, only more so, with a greater number of stores, and it is my belief that the larger a chain gets, the more aggravated this problem becomes and the greater become the opportunities for the independent to compete against chain stores.

I do not mean to leave the impression from my remarks that the success of our business has been easy. It has required hard work, careful attention and most of all, I do not think it could have been accomplished were it not for the fact that I knew the grocery business by reason of my experience as an employee of Von's and Raisin Markets. I know that there are a lot of independent grocers in Los Angeles who do not have that same experience, who do not have the requisite ability to run a grocery store, or who are unwilling to work as hard as is necessary to make a success of their business. For example, the man who operated our present market prior to the time when we took over d run a clean, up-to-date market, and he did not do nea well as we have been able to do. I am sure that inc tence, inexperience and laziness have led to a lot of fa in the grocery business, and this goes for both larg small concerns. I am sure that these failures will co in the future, but I am just as sure that an able, hard ing independent has got it made in Los Angeles an the opportunity for independents who know what th doing is wide open.

Attorney's for Von's Grocery Co. have asked me to Certified or comparable cooperative buying groups such as Orange Empire Coop, can purchase groceries and get them on their shelves as cheaply as any chain. The fact that chains have their own distribution systems is evidence of the complexity of their business and the necessity for centralized control. It does not necessarily mean that chains have an advantage in these fields, and I a mconfident that they do not.

In paragraph 7 of Mr. Bynum's statement, it is stated that Certified does not handle dairy, meat and produce items. Nonetheless, it is my belief that I can do as well in purchasing those items as any chain. Mr. Bynum also points out that Von's belongs to a dairy cooperative known as Jersey Maid. I also know that Safeway owns its own dairy, and sells only Lucerne Milk which is produced by that dairy. I do not believe that this gives them any advantage. I deal with Foremost Dairies, which is many times larger than either Jersey Maid or Lucerne. Foremost has to sell its milk in competition with Jersey Maid and the Lucerne, and consequently, they are going to give me as great an opportunity to sell their products in my store as Von's and Safeway have in selling their dairy products in their stores.

Mr. Bynum also states that chains with their own distribution systems do not buy from Certified. I am confident that I can do and probably out-do the direct buying chains through my membership in Certified, just as I can do as much with the assistance of Foremost Dairies in the selling of dairy products as Safeway can do with Lucerne or Von's can do with Jersey Maid products.

In paragraph 12 of his statement, Mr. Bynum states that he has faced vigorous competition from Von's. So have I, and I have provided them with vigorous competition. As I said before, I only wish they were next door to me so that the customer would have the opportunity of a side by side comparison of my operation and Von's.

Finally, Mr. Bynum states in paragraph 14 of his statement that he believes that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag "will have the effect of substantially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in the sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area." I could not disagree with him more. I do not believe that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is in any way to the disadvantage of competition. In fact, I believe that that merger, in so far as it created a larger chain, enhanced the opportunity of independents to compete against Von's and Shopping Bag stores, and I do not see how that merger could have tended to create a monopoly in any conceivable way.

AFFIDAVIT OF JOSEPH B. GOLDBERG

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

JOSEPH B. GOLDBERG, being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I have been in the grocery business in the Los Angeles area since 1496 when, upon my release from the Army, I went to work as a produce buyer for King Cole, Inc. I had had no previous experience in the business. King Cole, Inc. was started in 1946 by my brother Leo A. Goldberg, Earl I. Swetow and Max Berick, each of whom had worked for Jim Dandy Markets Inc., and who decided to start their own business. By 1961 King Cole, Inc. had grown to a six-store chain which did a business of about $12 million per year, and by that time I had become executive vice-president and general manager of the company. My brother Leo was President of the company.

In March 1961 my brother and Earl Swetow decided to retire from active supermarketing and enter the real estate field. They desired to sell their interests in the corporation and this paved the way for me and other executives and employees of the company to purchase the individual stores and operate our own separate businesses. I wish to make it clear that the decision to break up King Cole was not because it was not doing well. Actually it was a very successful operation, but my brother felt he had made enough money to be comfortable and did not desire to continue in the business any longer.

As a result of the decision to split up the business I purchased the King Cole supermarket at 11203 East Washington Boulevard in Whittier. The unit at 2920 Los Feliz Boulevard, Los Angeles, was sold to P. T. Morse, who had been vice-president and liquor buyer for King Cole. The unit at 2511 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, was sold to Sam Warner, who had been vice-president and director of store operations for King Cole. Sam Warner and some investors also bought the Glendale store at 1615 West Verdugo Avenue. The unit at 649 West Holt Street, Ontario, was sold to Ontario Foods Corp., which was organized by three King Cole supervisors named Stanley Able, James Exchnoz and Bernard Cinnamon. They were permitted to buy the store on a long-term basis with little down payment and they have done very well with the store. A newer unit at Lemon and D Street in Ontario was sold to Perry Burnside.

As for myself, I have been very successful. When I took over the Whittier store in March, 1961 it was doing a gross business of $2.9 million per year, and in the first year under my ownership and operation the volume of the market boosted to a $3½ million level and my profits also went up. I expect to do somewhat better than that figure in the coming year.

I was so confident of my ability to compete successfully that in August of 1961 I also took over the Anaheim unit which had been under construction for King Cole, Inc. at 300 North Beach Boulevard, Anaheim. I made a miscalculation on the Anaheim store. It was not a successful store and I have since closed it and it is now available for lease to some other operator. There are many things which account for the success or failure of a particular store and in part this store was not a success because I could not be present to give it my personal attention, and in part it was because there was not sufficient population in that area to support the store and I did not have sufficient capitalization to wait for the store to begin to pay off. Actually the store is in an excellent location for the future and I have no doubt at all that before too long this will prove to be a profitable store for some operator.

I have been asked how I could increase volume and profits as an individual owner of the Whittier store which I had previously handled as an executive of a six-store chain. The answer is that my success not only focused the spotlight on deficiencies of King Cole, Inc. as a six-unit firm, but also on many larger chains in this area. My Whittier store operates within 100 yards of a large and newer Safeway and a big and newer Food Giant market. There are a number of other stores in the area, including a Shopping Bag store about a mile away. I do a better gross, and I am sure, a better net than any of these stores. Based on my own experience I can state confidently that any independent who is of a mind to personally supervise his store, merchandise aggressively, and maintain close relations with customers and store personnel, can out-operate any chain store.

The chains in this area are good operators but when they grow too large they are actually easier to compete with from an independent's viewpoint. If I had a choice I would rather operate a store near a chain unit than near another independent.

The flexibility of the independent is another important factor. As an executive of King Cole, Inc., I felt an obligation to go through channels, to make explanations of my decisions. Now if I decide to do something it goes into effect immediately. With a chain operation, management has to reach its stores through supervisors who contact store managers. I can go directly to the manager or, in some instances, right to the clerk. On-the-scene ownership gives the independent a tremendous advantage over the chain store.

The supermarket field is wide open to independents who make an effort to compete. Only in the area of financing is the independent at a disadvantage. It is easier for the chain to get into a shopping center but this is a fact of our life which was not changed in the least by the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag. Some other advantages of the independent are: Adjustability to competitive conditions, and the availability of stock movement analyses through Certified Grocers of California, which provide records to show which items are best sellers and which are slow sellers. Purchases through Certified also assure the independent of buying his stock competitively.

I have given the foregoing opinions freely and without solicitation. As a matter of fact, they are taken virtually verbatim from an article in Supermarket News for August 21, 1961 in which the reporter Les Gilbert quoted my statements after an interview with me. The statements were made long before I had any idea that I would be asked to testify in the Von's merger case. The statements are true today as they were then.

I personally believe, based on my own experience and knowledge of the business, that it is ridiculous to even think that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag did or possibly could lessen competition in this area, and it is equally ridiculous to say that this business in this area will ever be dominated by just a few or even a few hundred chains. No chain or group of chains can outcompete any independent who knows his business and is willing to work, and there are just too many of us who like to own and run our own business to think of us as a vanishing breed. The independent in this area is as strong and successful today as ever and I expect that he will continue to be so. Certainly the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has not harmed anyone and it has not lessened competition. If anything, in my opinion, it made Von's more vulnerable to competition from independents like myself.

I have been told that some of the government witnesses say that the independent can do just as well as the chains by buying through Certified Grocers or from Orange Empire, but they cannot do as well on purchases of produce and meat. I do not agree with them at all as to the meat and produce. Where a chain like Von's might buy 500 flats of strawberries, for example, I buy only 50 and the buyer of 500 flats simply cannot be as selective as my buyer is. The result is that we get higher quality with far less spoilage. As to meat, my buyer gets equal, if not better quality by buying in more selective smaller quantities and at prices competitive with those of any of the chains.

I have also been told that the government witnesses say that Von's has a competitive advantage as to milk because of its membership in Jerseymaid. I am sure that the few owners of Jerseymaid do make a good profit from the operations of that company but who can say if it is any better profit than they would have received if they had invested the money in real estate or the stock market rather than Jerseymaid? Actually, Golden Creme Farms has even more stockholders who are grocers than does Jerseymaid. I am a stockholder in Golden Creme Farms and I get milk and bread through Golden Creme. I believe there are about 90 grocers who own stock in Golden Creme Farms and who buy milk and bread through that concern. There is nothing to prevent other grocers from purchasing some of the Golden Creme Farms stock and buying their milk from that organization. But while this might be a good investment for them it would not give them any competitive advantage just as Von's has no competitive advantage because of its investment in Jerseymaid. The fact is that the price at which milk is sold by a dairy to the grocer and the price at which the grocer can sell the milk to the consumer are both fixed by state law in California, so if there is any competitive advantage in milk, aside from drive-in dairy depots which by law can sell at a lower price, it would lie with the grocer who uses one of the better advertised brands like Arden, Carnation, Foremost or Knudsen.

I have read the prediction of one of the government witnesses that if the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is not set aside there will be other mergers of big chains which will result in a few chains dominating the market and "accentuate the large chains' advantages over the small grocery." I do not have a crystal ball, but I regard this as specious reasoning and I do not agree with it at all. I am certain that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag did not lessen competition at all in this area and in my opinion there is no danger in the foreseeable future of the demise of the aggressive and able independent and small chains.

AFFIDAVIT OF ALBERT GOLDSTEIN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

ALBERT GOLDSTEIN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I own and operate the Toluca Mart, a retail grocery store located at 4020 West Alameda Street, Burbank, Los Angeles County, California.

My experience in the grocery business goes back to the days when my brother, Joseph Goldstein, sold oranges from a small truck in the streets of Los Angeles. In the late 1920's, my brother and other members of our family began operating a grocery store which was called The Boys Market. I joined the business in 1933 at about the time when the second Boys Market was opened. During the next 25 years, I served in various capacities with Boys and participated in developing that business into a 9 store chain. Today, Boys has 23 stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

In March, 1958, Theodore Cummings, President of Food Giant, offered me the position of Vice President and General Manager of that chain. I accepted and stayed with Food Giant in that capacity until October, 1962. During that period of time, Food Giant experienced a fantastic growth. In 1958, it had 19 stores; by October, 1962, it had 53 stores. In the few months since then, it has opened six new stores giving it a total of 59. In addition, Food Giant operates Unimart discount houses in the Los Angeles metropolitan area and has many other business interests in related fields.

The circumstances under which I left Food Giant are these. As an executive of Food Giant, I found that I was spending almost all my time on business matters which had little relation to the actual operation of grocery stores. I am a groceryman, and the on-the-spot operation of a grocery store is what interests me. I cannot say that I was really interested in other aspects of running a large diversified business. Also, the pressures which came with my job at Food Giant were terrific. As a result, I decided that I wanted to make a change. In 1962, we learned that Von's Grocery Co. was going to open a large, new supermarket in a shopping center directly across the street from the Food Giant market on Alameda Street in Burbank. Prior to this time, the Food Giant in Burbank had had very little competition, but it was considerably older and smaller than the proposed Von's store. I knew from my experience in the grocery business that the new Von's would undoubtedly take a good deal of business away from this Food Giant store, but I felt that if a good independent operator took over the Food Giant market, he could operate it successfully despite the competition posed by Von's. Time and again, I have seen an independent take over an older chain store and make it a success. This seemed like the perfect opportunity for me to get back into a grocery store. I knew the Burbank area, having lived there for 15 years. Therefore, I asked Mr. Cummings to sell me the Burbank store, and he agreed to do so.

I purchased this store and began operating it on my own on October 22, 1962. The Von's store across the street had just opened and a week later Alpha Beta opened a new supermarket about 2 miles away. I wanted to change the name of the store to the Toluca Mart, but I had difficulty getting an appropriate sign for the store. As a result, for the first four weeks, I operated under the name Food Giant. Of course, during this period I was not able to run independent ads or institute other policies which I had in mind. It was just as if I was operating this store as a manager for Food Giant. During these four weeks, the sales volume of the store declined.

Finally, in late November, 1963, I got my new sign, began advertising under the name Toluca Mart and instituted the merchandising techniques I had decided upon. In a very short time, the sales volume began to increase. In January, 1963, the sales volume in the Toluca Mart was about the same as had been enjoyed by Food Giant at this location prior to the opening of the Von's store across the street. I am sure that my sales will increase in the future as my store and its policies become better known in the community.

This new venture of mine is founded upon my conviction that a good independent market operator can out-compete a good chain store any day in the week. The reasons why he can do so are these:

1. The independent, through cooperatives such as Certified Grocers, can get his groceries on his shelves for a lesser cost than the direct buying chain. Based on my experience with Food Giant, which purchased directly from suppliers and operated its own warehousing and distribution system, and based on my knowledge and experience as a member of Certified, I can state as a matter of fact that I can buy cheaper than a large chain.

2. The independent is in his store personally supervising his business. He does not have to rely on supervisors or store managers to do it for him.

3. The independent can introduce a personal touch into his business by giving his store a friendly atmosphere and by personally serving his customers.

4. The independent can direct all of his competitive effort toward the objective of luring customers away from the chain competition in his particular community. On the other hand, the chain must consider the effect of its policiies on all of its stores and in all the communities it serves. Also, by reason of its size, and the complexities of its business, it takes time for a chain to make changes in all aspects of its business. The independent is much more flexible and can make changes much more quickly. In this aspect of the business, there is no question that an independent holds a tremendous competitive advantage over his chain rivals.

5. The independent's costs of operation are lower than chains and he should be able to earn a greater margin of profit than the chain.

I am sure that I can operate the Toluca Mart more successfully despite Von's competition than the same store could have been operated under Food Giant, solely because Food Giant, being a large chain itself, has none of these advantages. This does not mean that Von's is any better than Food Giant. It means only that an independent can compete more effectively against a chain store than another chain can.

As a matter of fact, I believe that an independents' best possible location is directly across the street from or next door to a chain store. With Von's directly across the street in a shopping center, I know that people will be attracted to this immediate area. Once they are here, they have a choice between shopping at Von's or the Toluca Mart. With the advantages I hold over Von's, I am sure I will get my share of the business, despite the fact that Von's name is well known and my store's name is not and despite the fact that Von's store is larger, newer and more attractive. On the other hand, if Von's had its store a mile away, we would be constantly tugging and hauling for customers to come to the vicinity of our individual stores. I would have no chance to attract those who went to the vicinity of Von's store.

I recognize that in obtaining shopping center locations, the chain has an advantage over the smaller concern. Shopping center developers prefer established chain names which are inevitably more attractive to lenders than unknown names. But this does not mean that a single store operator cannot expand his business. Not all of the good locations are in shopping centers. For example, I have been offered at least one other store which I decided not to buy because it was too far from my present store. I want to develop a small chain of stores, all of which are located in the same general area and close enough to each other to permit my personal supervision of them. I am confident of my ability to achieve this goal ultimately.

I have been asked by attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to express my opinion of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag. I do not believe that that merger has affected competition in grocery retailing in any way. I do not believe that it has given Von's any decisive advantage over its competitors. If I felt otherwise, I certainly would not have purchased the Toluca Mart directly across the street from a new Von's store. On the contrary, I believe that smaller grocery concerns have an excellent competitive opportunity in Los Angeles, and we are bound to see many of today's smaller concerns and many newcomers prosper and expand their businesses in the future. Under these circumstances, I have no fear that the food business in this area will become dominated by a few large concerns.

AFFIDAVIT OF HARLOS GROSS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

HARLOS GROSS, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the owner and operator of Shopping Mart, which is a former Shopping Bag store located at 9476 East Las Tunas, Temple City. I purchased this store from Shopping Bag on April 7, 1953, and I have run it successfully and profitably ever since that time. I have had no desire to expand and build a chain. I am grateful to be a small operator.

Membership in Certified and A. M. Lewis, Inc.

I have membership both in Certified Grocers and in A. M. Lewis, Inc. Orange Empire Cooperative. Because of this membership I can buy my groceries just as cheaply as any chain and I can meet any competition, bar none, whether it is from stores of Apha Beta, Safeway or anyone else. Certified and Orange Empire do not handle meat or produce but I can do just as well as any chain on that. I emphasize quality and service both on my meat and my produce. I buy nothing but the best meat and produce and there is not any chain that can out-compete me.

Competitors in the Area

There are 17 grocery stores within a two-mile radius of my store. Within one mile of my store are stores of Apha Beta (just around the corner), Mayfair, Lucky, Safeway, A & P, and Market Basket. When I bought this market from Shopping Bag in 1953 there were only 5 stores within a two-mile radius of it—now, as I stated, there are 17 and they have not hurt my business at all. My store did a gross of $600,000 the first year I had it and every year since it has done over $1 million a year. This has given me and my family a good living and I have made money. I have no doubt that this will continue.

Ability of the Single Store Owner to Survive

For many years I have heard it said that there is no place in the grocery business for the little man, and I suppose that despite our continued survival and success this will continue to be said. Of course, some small operators—and some chains have failed, just as there are failures in every business. Success or failure in this business is pretty much up to the individual. I have made myself a part of my community. I belong to Kiwanis, the Chamber of Commerce, I am on the school board and I have been active in Little League and the Boy Scouts. This has made friends for me, and I not only like it but it has helped my business. I think in this respect I have an advantage over the chain store whose manager may not live in the particular area. Moreover, I believe I am more cost conscious and more flexible in my operations than the chain manager. Of course, I am not opposed to the chains—they perform a very useful and necessary service to the public and afford employment to many thousands of people. But no able and aggressive operator need fear any of the chains, in my opinion, and there is plenty of opportunity for persons to enter the business and to prosper and grow.

Opinion as to the Effect of the Von's-Shopping Bag Merger

It seems to me that this merger has kept a local business in local hands, and I believe this is preferable to a local chain selling out to some national chain. Everyone that I know in this area in the grocery business has respect for and confidence in Mr. Hayden and Mr. Von der Ahe. They are tough but fair competitors and they were able to build their chains from scratch because of their hard work and self-sacrifice. If Mr. Hayden desired to realize a capital gain out of his years of hard work I believe he should be permitted to do so. I have been told that the government attorneys claim that the merger may substantially lessen competition or tend to a monopoly. To my mind this charge is ridiculous. It could only be made by someone who does not understand the business in this area. Competition in the retail grocery business was strong before the merger and, in my opinion based on my knowledge of the business, the merger has had no effect on the competitive situation. Moreover, there are just too many people who are able to enter the business and run a successful single store or chain for anyone who knows the business to think there is a danger of this business being controlled by just a few operators. There are hundreds of successful competitors in this area and in my opinion there always will be. As for me, I am not afraid of any competition, anywhere. I can do well and so can anyone else who is capable of running the business and is not incompetent.

Harlos Gross.

AFFIDAVIT OF PAUL A. HINES, JR.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

PAUL A. HINES, JR., being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

My father and I own and operate a market under the name of Hines Grocery Company, at 780 E. Colorado Boulevard, Pasadena, Los Angeles County, California. My father, Paul A. Hines, Sr., started in the grocery business in 1919 when he and his brother borrowed $500 and added $250 of their own which they used to buy a small store in Pasadena. Thereafter, my father continued to operate stores in the Pasadena area and in Avalon on Catalina Island. In 1945, he purchased the store we now operate from Thriftimart. I became active in the business in 194

1949, our Avalon store was sold and since that tim have concentrated our efforts on our Pasadena store.

Under the management of Thriftimart, that store been a consistent money loser, and when my father chased the store, there were many of his friends an quaintances in the grocery business who felt that he making a mistake. Our records show that in the firs month of operation, our store did a gross volume o proximately $12,800. In December, 1962, the last full m of our operation, our sales amounted to approxim $200,000.

In recent years, my father has become less active i management of the business, and I have become mo tive, to the point where I am now primarily responsib conducting the business.

In our store, we offer only top quality products, an prices are somewhat higher than in the average gr store. For example, we sell only meat which has graded as U. S. Prime, while most grocery stores sell grades of meat. We also offer our customers certain ucts sometimes referred to as fancy foods, which ar customarily offered for sale in the typical grocery sto addition, of course, we offer a full assortment of food ucts usually found in other grocery stores.

We provide our established customers with charg counts, and I would estimate that approximately our business is done on a charge account rather than and carry basis. We do not offer a delivery service, b will take a telephone order from a customer and h ready when he or she comes in to the store.

We are members of Certified Grocers of California and through that organization purchase grocery pro on terms as favorable as in the case of the direct b chains. Certified does not handle some of the product as the fancy foods which we offer for sale, and tho purchased through suppliers who deal in those typ products.

The unique qualities of our store, we believe, att certain type of customer, and we also believe that tract and hold other customers through the personal ice and attention which we give to them. My father personally supervise all aspects of our business. We spend a great deal of time on the floor of our store where we meet our customers and get to know them personally. Our employees are also trained to provide the customer with courteous personal service. Seventy-five percent of our employees have been with us for 10 years or more, and during that time, they too have created friendly personal relationships with our regular customers, which, I believe, has enhanced our trade.

Despite the dire predictions for our store's future when it first opened, we have done very well, and we are most grateful for the success which we have achieved. I should also add that we have been successful despite the fact that we face vigorous competition from nearby chain and independent stores. Our competitors include a store operated by Jurgensen's about 4 blocks away. Jurgensen's is a company which operates stores similar to ours in that they, too, offer top quality products at somewhat higher prices than most grocery stores. In addition, we face competition from a Ralph's store about 3 blocks away, a Safeway store about 6 blocks away, a Pantry Market about 4 blocks away and an El Rancho Market 6 blocks away. In addition, there are other independent markets in the vicinity of our store, including a Gertmanian's market approximately a mile from our store. But this competition, as intense as it is, has not prevented us from getting our share of local business.

In my opinion, as long as there is a Certified or some such organization which can supply independents with grocery products at costs comparable to those paid by the chains, there will always be an opportunity for an independent to compete successfully in the Los Angeles area. Also, there is opportunity for an independent to increase his business by adding new stores. We have been approached on certain occasions with the idea of opening additional stores, and we have not chosen to do so because we are content with the operation of one store and do not wish to go into debt or to incur the added burden of a new store, particularly when we are aware that it would be impossible for us to give the same personalized service to customers if our attention was divided between two stores. However, it is obvious that many operators who have started in recent years with only one store have added additional stores and apparently have succeeded. In our own vicinity, we have seen Pantry Food Markets expand from a one store operation in 1954 to a 10 store chain today. Another example is El Rancho Markets, which has recently become a 3 store chain. We face competition from stores operated by both Pantry and El Rancho, and we find them to be very keen competitors. In many respects, they are of greater concern to us than the stores of larger chains.

It is my impression that smaller chains have emerged and grown in the past 10 years at a rate greater than in the case of the larger chains. Under these circumstances, I cannot foresee this market becoming dominated by a few large chains, and I think we will continue to see the development and growth of smaller concerns in the years to come.

In my opinion, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is in no way offensive to competition. It has certainly not adversely affected our business, and based on my experience, I do not see how it could have any such effect on anyone else'ss business.

Affidavit of John H. Irwin

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

John H. Irwin, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I presently own and operate Irwin's Market, located at 1140 East Carson, North Long Beach, California. I am also the President of the Southern California Grocers Association, a position I have held for the past two years. I am the First Vice President of the California Grocers Association as well as Chairman of its Public Affairs Committee, and I am a member of the Board of Directors and Vice Chairman of the Finance Committee of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. I am also an active member of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States (NARGUS).

I first came to Southern California from Oklahoma in 1936. Thereafter, I worked as a salesman for Mountain View Dairies, Di Carlo Bread and the Bohemian Distributing Company.

In 1944, Ralph Noble and I opened a small (4,000 square feet) market in Long Beach. Between 1944 and 1947, Mr. Noble and I opened two more markets, one in Hollydale and another in Long Beach, and in addition, we operated two liquor stores. My partnership with Mr. Noble was dissolved in 1947, and I took over operation of our Hollydale market on my own. In the next three years, I opened two additional markets in Long Beach.

In 1950, my brother and I decided to open a supermarket in Orange County, an area which was at that time experiencing a rapid growth. Our first store—Bob's Supermarket—was opened in Buena Park. In 1953, I bought my brother's share of the business and ultimately built Bob's Supermarkets into a seven-store chain, which included a large (19,000 square feet) store in Anaheim.

In 1958, Bob's Supermarkets was merged with Mayfair Markets, a retail grocery chain with stores in various areas of California and Arizona, and I became a Vice President of Mayfair in charge of its 19 stores in Orange County. In 1960, I was made Vice President and General Manager of the Low Cost Division of Mayfair, which was opening a number of discount food outlets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

In July, 1962, I resigned from my position at Mayfair and purchased the market I now operate from Fox Markets. My son and I have enlarged and remodeled that store. We opened it for business under the name of Irwin's Market in August of this year.

I suppose it can be said that I have had experience in every aspect of the grocery business in Los Angeles over the last 26 years. I have operated single stores and small chains, large stores and small ones. I have been employed by suppliers, and I have been actively engaged in the business affairs of a large cooperative buying organization. I have been an executive of a large chain, and I have had experience in the sale of groceries through discount outlets. In addition, I have been an active member of a number of grocery trade associations.

As a result, I think I know something about food retailing in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. I am firmly of the view that while competition in that business is intense and vigorous, there is a place for everyone who is willing to work hard and who knows something about running a grocery store. It is in my opinion that in every community in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area opportunity is available to both the independent and the chain store.

As the owner of a single store or a few small stores, I found that competition from the chains was intense, but I also found that the smaller concern can compete successfully and profitably and that it can expand. As a chain executive, I recognized that competition from independents and other chains was vigorous, but I found that a chain store can compete successfully. As one involved in the discount sale of food at a time when it was a relatively new method of food distribution in Los Angeles, I recognized that the retail grocery business is one in which competition may take new forms and that those willing to try innovations in merchandising have a good chance of success.

Single store operators, small chains, large chains and discounters each has its own unique advantages in this market, in my opinion, but none of them has a decisive advantage over the other. One of the reasons for this, one of the equalizing factors in food retailing, is Certified Grocers and other cooperative buying organizations. A chain may buy directly from a supplier in carload lots, thereby realizing savings which flow from quantity purchases, but Certified likewise buys at the same prices and on the same terms for its members. In fact, Certified purchases are greater in quantity than in the case of any of the area's chains. Certified also provides the independent retailer with the advantages and economies of central warehousing and an established distribution system as well as aiding him with merchandising and advertising problems.

The question is sometimes asked why all chains do not buy from Certified and take advantage of its services. In this connection, it has been pointed out that some chains, as they grew in size, decreased their reliance on Certified, built their own warehouses and operated their own distribution systems. My experience has been that in the case of most chains there comes a time when their size requires them to take over direct control of purchasing, warehousing and distribution in order to grapple directly with the problems that arise in supplying a number of stores. In other words, the complexity of food distribution is magnified as the number of stores being served by any chain increases, and the problems which arise become such that the more efficient and successful way to deal with them is to take buying, warehousing and distribution functions away from an intermediate such as Certified and place them under the watchful eye of experienced personnel within the chain's own organization. But the fact remains that Certified provides the independent with buying, warehousing and distribution advantages comparable to those enjoyed by any chain.

I have already mentioned that independents, chains and discounters each has unique advantages. The chain, for example, has advantages which flow from the ability to allocate costs to a number of units. A chain also has the opportunity to create and exploit a name which may become familiar to a vast number of customers or potential customers and which is therefore more likely to gain quick and favorable customer response, even in new areas where it opens stores. Also, I have found that many customers believe that chains have lower prices. This is not true generally, but the fact that some people think it is true is an advantage. Also, the larger chains can afford to advertise in metropolitan newspapers with the assurance that because of the number of communities served by its various stores, such advertising will not be wasted on a vast number of people who would have no opportunity or inclination to shop at their stores. This, of course, the small concern cannot afford to do, and it must confine its newspaper advertising to community papers for the most part.

The discount outlet offers the customer lower prices made possible by lower costs of operation. Also, discount food outlets are usually found in discount houses which offer a wide variety of consumer products, and hence offer the customer the advantages of one-stop shopping.

The independent, on the other hand, has a smaller business, and as a result is able to pay close personal attention to costs and other variables. Being smaller, he is also more mobile than a chain so that he can move quickly to meet local competitive conditions or he can take the initiative in competition while his chain competitors are framing chain-wide policy or solving area-wide problems which may or may not have any particular relevance in the community which the independent serves. Finally, I am of the opinion that a smaller concern can gain advantages over chains because of a great ability to form personal contacts with his customers and his community.

The importance of personal contact and service was never more apparent to me than when I was operating Bob's Supermarkets in Orange County. This was an area in which a whole new series of communities was being formed and to which new residents were flocking, ready to occupy new homes and acquire new shopping habits. Right behind them came grocery stores operated by a host of chains and independents, all vying for this new business. It was apparent to me that in this highly competitive atmosphere, customer loyalty was going to be doubly important. For this reason, Bob's had a policy which emphasized the personal touch. For example, we maintained butcher service meat departments while many other stores were offering prepackaged meats. Our meat business was particularly successful, and I think the reason for our success in that respect was directly attributable to the personal relationships which our butchers were able to maintain with our customers. I really believe that this personal relationship convinced many shoppers that they were getting better meats.

Bob's also published a weekly, twelve page magazine entitled, "The Square Dealer," in which we gave away free classified advertising space, and for which, incidentally, I wrote a weekly column.

In my opinion, the importance of personal service in grocery retailing is more important today than ever before. I feel that people are hungry for good personal service, the type of service the chains often do not seem to give. One of the principal reasons for my decision to leave my position at Mayfair and open up a single store was that I enjoy being in a grocery store, meeting, people, dealing with my customers directly, and I am convinced that a single store operator can succeed by stressing personal service. Therefore, I have chosen employees who were outgoing and friendly, and I am careful to see that they are always courteous to customers. We have a butcher service meat department. We also have a urn of coffee brewing at all times, and anyone can stop and take a cup whenever he wishes. I chat with my customers, become friendly with them. As a result, I believe Irwin's is a store which people will like to come to.

Since we opened the doors at Irwin's in August, business has been good, and I am confident that it will get better as we become better known in the community. Already, however, our sales exceed by 20% or 25% the sales which were being experienced in this same store when it was operated by Fox Markets.

I chose my present location despite the fact that I was aware that I faced competition from stores operated by Von's, Ralph's, Shoppers, McCoy's and a number of good independents. I did not them and I do not now fear that competition, and I am sure that I will get more than my share of the business.

Obviously, I would not have embarked on this new venture if I thought that the independent could not compete effectively with chain stores, and I would not have purchased a location in competition with a store operated by Von's if I felt that a Von's store had a competitive advantage over me, whether by reason of the merger with Shopping Bag or otherwise. In fact, it is my view that that merger had absolutely no effect on competition or the ability of the independent to compete. In my judgment, it is no more difficult to compete against a Von's or Shopping Bag store now than it was before the merger.

In addition, I have no apprehension that the Los Angeles Metropolitan area will ever be dominated by a few large grocery chains. There are too many able and agressive independents and smaller concerns, too many people like myself, willing and able to open up a grocery store, and competition is just too intense, too vigorous, too many-sided to permit the domination of the grocery business in this area by a few large concerns.

AFFIDAVIT OF O. W. RICHARD

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Orange, ss:

O. W. RICHARD, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

My Grocery Background

I am President of Richard's Lido Market. For several years I have served as a member of the Food Employers' Council of Los Angeles. I have been a director of Certified Grocers of California, which is well known in the industry. Certified is a co-operative food distribution center, supplying the food needs for approximately 1500 markets in the Southern California area, and it is known as one of the largest of its kind in the world. I have also served as a Regional Director of the Supermarket Institute of America, which in many respects is international. The purpose of this institute is to regulate, develop and guide the destiny of the supermarket business in the United States of America. I am a member of the Retail Grocers of America Research and Education Committee. This group is comprised of merchants from every state of the Union. The purpose is to create a better way to distribute food to the American people.

I have been constantly in the grocery business since I started with Safeway Stores in Belmont Shores, south of Long Beach, in 1933. I was with Safeway about fifteen months. I worked as a clerk and trainee for management. My hope was to learn the business. When I left Wisconsin in 1933 I was an instructor of Economics in a private school in Oshkosh. We came to California during the terrible thirties and thought that it would be a nice opportunity to start over completely in a new way of life, because almost everybody had suffered some of the effects of the crash, and we were pretty well equalized. The food business offered the greatest challenge, to my way of thinking, because it lacked so much that seemed important to me,—good displaying, clean stores, trained personnel, and general business knowledge application. So, Mrs. Richard and I gave up everything and started all over in the food business. $11.00 per week was my salary for a full week's work.

After leaving Safeway, I went to work in a little store in Newport Beach as a clerk and manager and bookkeeper and buyer. This was in March, 1935. I stayed in this particular spot for thirteen years—from 1935 to 1947, both inclusive. That was during the war. The opportunity to branch out into one's own way of life was, during those years, limited. My little market was a key market in the community at that time. Naturally, everybody strikes out in any venture with the hope and dream that he can have his own business some day, and I wasn't unusual in that respect, so I dreamed about my own market, and the opportunity eventually came, and I was in business.

When Lido Isle was under development, the whole area began to take on a new look to some of us in the community. And that spot was, in my opinion, a good place for me to start my own business. So we hurried around to find out whether or not it would be possible for us to have this location. We cultivated many friends in the twelve or thirteen years in which we were in the community. These friends were men of substance, some of them, and it didn't take too much to have them develop a feeling of confidence in me to the extent that they allowed me several hundred thousand dollars with which to go into business. This was a great challenge. The location was decided upon. Mr. Griffith, the owner of the land, not only provided this location, but also provided the necessary capital. Since then fourteen years have passed and many wonderful experiences have been mine in this business, and I suppose that in many respects my market now is recognized as one of the top ten markets of the world because of its individuality, its operating philosophy, its dedication to service and its dedication to the principles of free enterprise.

My Experience With and Views on Competition

I found it necessary to incorporate, for the usual reasons. We needed to have the protection that the corporation gives in many areas, principally tax-wise. I think that was the principal reason. The stock is owned only by my family, just three of us. Fourteen years ago when I started, my first annual sales amounted to about $1,200,000.00. This last year they were just short of $4,000,000.00 in the food section alone.

We have just one grocery store. There was never any need, in my opinion, to go out and develop more markets. This one market provided all the substance we needed and it answers all of the requirements of a normal challenge for a business man. You go into business for several reasons: The principal reason is to make money; the second is to satisfy the natural desire to own your own business; the third one might be to create a kind of business that you can be proud to pass on to your progeny; another reason is that it gives a man an opportunity to prove that if a person operates according to a basic philosophy, and this philosophy is an expression of an individual, then nothing actually can happen to destroy the progress of this business, whether it be competition, hard times, or any of the other normal vicissitudes of a man's normal business experience.

I think that anybody can compete today in any kind of a business, providing however, that the requirements of a business man are measured up to. I don't think money is the prime requisite. I don't think location or the size of a business is an important issue. I think that when a man goes into business, he goes into it with the idea that he is going to succeed, and if he establishes a policy and stays with it year after year, it really makes very little difference where he locates or what the environment for the growth of this business is, as long as he maintains a set of standard rules acceptable to the people who are his customers. We have all types of supermarket operators near our place. We have Market Basket right across the street from us, about a block up. Alpha Beta is within a radius of one mile of our place, and Fox, Mayfair, Safeway, Food Giant, Thrifty Mart, and many independents, and all are within a radius of three miles. I am in a spot where I draw my business from inland. Most of my customers have to pass these named markets to get to my place. I would say that a good 25% to 30% of my business will pass other businesses to get to my place of business. They prefer to shop in my store because I give them the merchandise and service they want and need. Almost all of these stores have started in since I did. Alpha Beta was there but they have enlarged their market twice since I have been there. Safeway has moved three times since I have been there. All American was my nearest competitor at that time. They built two additional markets in the community during this period of time.

Actually my competition, and competition generally, increases every year. I don't think Von's-Shopping Bag merger, or any other merger, or any other market of any kind would have a tendency to decrease the competitive factor in my market. The same condition of competitiveness exists today that it did fourteen years ago. I don't think there is any difference. I think competitive advantages are a very personal thing. I mentioned before that the merchandise, the location, the size of your market,—these things do not give you a competitive advantage. Even price will not give you a decided competitive advantage. I think the success of any market depends entirely upon the personnel of the store, the willingness on the part of the merchant to face up to the demands of a trading area, the gree to which personnel are trained and schooled to ha all situations that have to do with selling.

It is most apparent that the businesses who survive those who are anticipating the needs of tomorrow and justing to them immediately, and in every respect an i pendent operator can do this three times faster tha chain operator can, principally because he is sitting on moving, living enterprise every day and he is able to de mine when his business is slacking off or when the de value is dropping out. Any independent merchant who not face up to the demands and the changing of the t will always try to find an outside reason for this. We seldom will punish ourselves or blame ourselves for s thing that we are not able to cope with, but the trut that this is where it belongs,—in the management's lap decisions are made in the owner's little office. And it comes a terrific challenge every day to be able to say " a one store operator and a good one, and competition made me this way." I am not big enough to be able to a the high-priced consultants and supervisors and exper my business, but if I am alert I can learn from the mist of the big chain operators and adjust my business qu to these needed changes. This is the terrific advantage an alert independent has. The cost of doing business an independent is much less in many respects, than multiple unit operator, because you don't pay for a l extraneous supervisory help. I found out a long time that the most important area of improvement in any ness is people, and a small independent merchant knows better than anybody else. It is your relations with p that make the difference. One of the greatest advantag independent has is the co-operative buying aids suc Certified Grocers. Our cost of merchandise is never than any of my competitors have to pay. Fresh produ something else again. Meats and produce—we call any that is perishable "perishable produce" the produce de ment gives the independent one-unit operator a terrif vantage, because we are not buying for 20, 50 or 100 st
We are buying for particular customer demands. So we are selecting our strawberries, our meats and tables, we are looking for the best for one select outfit.

Now you have asked me how I support my business against competitive practices. The smartest way to do it is good customer relations. Good customer relations are made up of a whole panorama of things. We think that we have to have good competition to begin with to make us productive customer-wise, because you get to the point where you know you can't have all of the business in the community. Then you begin to zero in on the type of customer you want to serve, and I don't care how different a merchant is, one from another, if he patterns his service in accordance with his personal philosophy, he can get all the business he needs to sustain himself. The thing that disturbs so many small merchants is that they always want to be copiers instead of leaders. Store A puts in trading stamps, so Store B puts in trading stamps. He thinks this must be the way to build business, but it isn't. These are the things that your competitors will do to try to outsmart you in their efforts to be a better merchant. But the facts all boil down, as I see it, to providing the customer with the things that she insists on having, and when you get customers trading in your place because you have a better personnel program, a better diversification of merchandise, a cleaner shop and a steadfast policy of service, and if you are willing to give more than a little bit, then I don't think anybody can take away a customer. Because if you lose a customer for any reason, it is so easy to find out why you lost him, and it usually reverts back to the fact that the merchant failed to fill the customer's need. Find a need, and then fill it. That is the secret of success. And this is the way I feel about it. We can talk about mergers hurting small operators or large operators, but this isn't the truth. I sincerely believe that whether a merger in my community takes place and makes fifty stores out of twenty-five, or one hundred stores out of eighty, they are absolutely no different than the existing competition which already has 220 stores in its chain.

I don't think it is ever possible for any national chain or any local chain to get so big that it will completely destroy the desire to be merchants, on the part of men who are born to be merchants. I started off in a chain store. I would not be in this position today if it hadn't been for a large national chain store, and I suppose I can honestly say that 25% of the merchants I know today started off with a chain store.

They learned the trade and then their desire to be independent merchants fired them into action. When you start this way, nobody can stop you.

Naturally, we have a lot of people going out of business, and I have to say this, that a lot of them should go out of business, because they refuse to keep up with the times and to be good merchants, and when the first challenge comes along, they give up. This is not a lessening of competition. I think from my experience that most of these people who are quitting the business are selling out to other business and joining with them in building a better shop in which to trade. This does not mean that a large chain is destroying another market. I would say it is a matter of offering a better service that would enhance the value of these other markets and improve the community as a result—offering a better opportunity for a good merchant to become a better citizen because of the balance of timing, the ability to balance his time. I have a standing offer of better than one million dollars for my name only, and a lifetime tenure in one of several chain operations. When a one-unit operator becomes something to be desired in a community because of the individual application of a personal philosophy, then I would say that the chain operator himself is sorry today that he isn't a one-store operator, because so many of the advantages of a one-store operator are lost in his multiple, remote control operation.

Now, consider the growth factor in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. We have over 800,000 people in Orange County today. Ten years ago we had 200,000 people. Well, naturally everybody in business knows that five years from now this is going to be a good place to be in business. People with judgment and foresight are going to move into this area, or they are going to join hands so that the management team of a combined operation is better equipped to supply the needs of a community based upon the growth of the people in that area. I couldn't possibly take care of the business in my community today if there were no more stores in my community today than five years ago. I would be forced to expand. Now I don't want to expand. If I don't want to expand, I have to pay the penalty for standing still. But my business has never decreased in dollar value or in profit potential. Every year has been better than the year before; always more exciting and more demanding of a challenge. I want the world's finest store, if it is possible, and the world's finest store in which to work. The price I have to pay is to erect a stronger competitive policy in order to hold my little island. And if I use all of the talents that have been given me, and if I am willing to read, study, and learn something more each year, I can face a stronger and better competition. And competition is increasing every year.

Von's Merger Has Not Changed the Competitive Picture

Based upon my many years of experience in the grocery business, I can say positively that the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag has not lessened competition in any respect, either for me or any other grocer in our rapidly expanding community. Under our free enterprise system, the door is wide open to anyone who has a strong desire to be a grocery merchant and who will do enough work to find a need for his services and then fill the need.

AFFIDAVIT OF LEILA M. ROBERTS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

LEILA M. ROBERTS, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the owner of Roberts Market, located at 14 E. Sierra Madre Boulevard, Sierra Madre, California. I have had 35 wonderful years in the grocery business at this location. My late husband and I started the business, selling only produce at first, and then later we added the meat, grocery and delicatessen departments.

This is a highly competitive business and I am on the job every day to see that my store is operating properly.

I believe that an independent such as myself has certain advantages over the stores of any of the chains. We get our groceries just as cheaply as any of the chains that buy direct, because of membership in Certified Grocers of California. And most of the chains sell off-brand private label merchandise. Most of the customers just won't stand for off-brands and for that reason we have always used only the nationally advertised top brands.

I have a few more employees than the average chain store and I can and do see that my customers get plenty of service from courteous employees. This policy has proved successful and I expect that I will continue to operate a very successful market.

I do not see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag hurt anybody in the business. I am sure it did not lessen competition and I do not think there is any possibility that there will ever be a monopoly in the grocery business in this area. I know the able independent who works hard can compete successfully with any of the chains.

Affidavit of Robert Sherry

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

Robert Sherry, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

A partnership consisting of Louis Amen and myself own and operate the Vernon and Vermont Market located at 4375 South Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles, California. I have operated a retail grocery business at that location for the past 17 years.

In 1934, I graduated from Loyola University. I took a position shortly thereafter as a salesman for the Kellogg Company. In 1943, Ernest Van De Grift offered to enter into a partnership with me whereby he would finance the operations of a market, and I would manage and operate it. The location we chose was the Vernon and Vermont Market which I still operate. A few years later, I had acquired enough capital to buy Mr. Van De Grift out. Some years later, I took Mr. Amen into the business as a partner. We operate everything but the liquor concession in our store.

The Vernon and Vermont Market is located in an old building in an older section of Los Angeles. The community we serve is populated predominently by colored people. Our store faces competition from a Ralph's Market (I am sure this is one of their better stores), a Foods Co. Market (a very agressive competitor), a Better Foods Market (which is open 24 hours a day), a Von's Market (I believe this is one of Von's poorer and older stores), and a number of good to marginal independents. Wonder Market, another independent, is located only a few doors away from our store.

The development of my business was not easy. It required a lot of hard work and constant attention. But I believe that I can say that we have made our store a success. I also believe that any single store operator can succeed in the grocery business. Anyone who says that he cannot compete with chains or other grocers should find another way to make a living, since it is obvious in my opinion that he must either be inexperienced, incompetent or lazy.

I know from my own experience that any independent can succeed. In many respects, he can out-compete a chain store. For example, I personally am able to watch my costs, and Mr. Amen and I are working toward lower costs every day. In a chain operation, the problem of costs is much more complex. No one man can be in charge of all items of expenditure. Total costs per item are influenced by many factors, including how well a buyer, a warehouse superintendent and a store manager are doing their jobs. In my case, I personally take care of all of these aspects of my business. As a consequence, I can show a profit on annual sales which I estimate to be less than half of the sales which many chain stores have to reach just to break even.

The fact that I operate only one store also makes me more flexible than a chain store. I can adapt my prices to meet and beat chain competition on a limited number of key items, and I can do this in a matter of minutes. The chain store manager has to check with his superiors, and he may wait days before being able to institute a desirable change. It has also been my experience that I can often stock my shelves with a new item and be selling it like hotcakes two weeks before the same item even appears in the chain store.

Also, I can become better known in my community. Church and other groups often come to me for food donations for particular purposes. I am happy to accommodate them and in that way I believe I make friends and customers.

Finally, I am a member of Certified Grocers, and as a result, can buy groceries as cheaply as any chain. Certified also provides other services to its members which are of extreme value. The importance of these services is frequently underestimated, I think. From my own experience, I know that Certified employs some very able and hard working men who do nothing but assist independent grocers with merchandising problems. These men know what they are doing, and when they make a recommendation, I follow it, as I am sure other members do.

In my opinion, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not affected competition in any way, nor do I see how it could, in view of the fact that it involved two companies who between them had only about 8% of the market. Nor do I foresee the possibility of a few chains dominating the grocery business in Los Angeles. As long as there is opportunity for a single store operator—and there is—chains are not going to reach a position of dominance. Ever since I got into this business, I have heard some people say that they feared that the grocery business would soon be controlled by the chains. But this has never happened in Los Angeles, and so far as I can see, it never will.

[Title Omitted]

AFFIDAVITS OF DEFENDANT'S INDUSTRY WITNESSES WHO OPERATE FROM TWO TO NINE GROCERY STORES

AFFIDAVIT OF EUGENE GELSON

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

EUGENE GELSON, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Encino Market Company, which operates a supermarket under the name Gelson's at 16450 Ventura Boulevard in Encino (Los Angeles County). My father bought a small, 3,000 square foot market in Monteket Company. In addition, a partnership consisting of my brother, myself and other members of my family operates another Gelson's supermarket at 3525 West Victory Boulevard in Burbank (Los Angeles County).

I was literally raised in the grocery business. My father, J. M. Gelson, operated a small grocery store in Souix City, Iowa. I began working in the store when I was only 6 years father bought a small, 3,000 square foot market in Monterey Park (Los Angeles County). Later, he sold that store rey Park (Los Angeles County). Later, he sold that store and purchased a 7,000 square foot market in Tujunga (also in Los Angeles County). This store was operated by my father, my brother and me until 1941 when Bernard and I entered the service. During the war, I was a B-24 pilot.

My father died during the war years, and in 1946, when my brother and I returned to Los Angeles, we pooled all of our resources, which amounted to approximately $5,000, and purchased a 700 square foot market in the North Hollywood community. Our business was successful, but we soon perceived that the trend in grocery retailing was toward larger supermarkets, and we decided to try to take advantage of the public's enthusiasm for this type of store.

Consequently, in 1951, we sold our North Hollywood store and with the proceeds and the aid of additional financing, we opened our Burbank store, which is 26,000 square feet in size. This store was a great success, and we later were able to acquire a parcel of property at the corner of Ventura Boulevard and Havenhurst Avenue in Encino, on which we built a 33,000 square foot store. The acquisition of this property and the construction of our store was made possible through profits we made from our Burbank store supplemented by additional financing. Our Encino store opened for business in March, 1960, and I believe that it has proven to be the most popular and successful store in the Encino area. We have enjoyed annual sales of approximately $6 million at the Encino location in each of the years since it opened. In addition, our Burbank store continues to prosper.

In Encino, our store faces competition from a number of stores operated by chains. Ralph's has two stores, one approximately 1½ miles and the other approximately 2½ miles from our Encino store. Safeway operates two stores within 2 miles of us. Thriftimart also has two stores nearby, one being approximately 2/10 of a mile and the other approximately 8/10 of a mile away. Also, a Hughes, a Fox and a Von's store are on the outer fringe of our trading area. In addition, we face competition from small chains such as Piggly Wiggly, which operates a new supermarket 1/10 of a mile from our Encino store, and Westward Ho, which operates a store approximately 1 mile away. Our Burbank store is located in an area served by stores of almost all the major chains, including Von's and Shopping Bag, and a number of smaller chains and single stores. In all, there are approximately 12 supermarkets near enough to our Burbank store to be in competition with it.

It has been our experience that we can compete effectively with both large and small rivals. Our success in this respect is attributable to many factors, but perhaps the most important is that we assert a tremendous effort to make our stores attractive, convenient places to shop, in which the customer always receives maximum service.

Our stores are up-to-date in every respect. I believe that their exterior and interior appearance is unique and outstanding. We have put a lot of money and effort into architecture and design (an architectural rendering of our Encino store is attached hereto and marked Exhibit A). We provide ample parking immediately surrounding our stores. Once the customer is inside, he will find that our aisles are considerably wider than in most supermarkets. We do not permit the storage of any merchandise in the aisles. We offer the customer a selection of approximately 1,500 more items than in the average supermarket.

We spend more money than most grocers for janitorial service in order to keep our stores spotlessly clean at all times. Our employees also see to it that the merchandise on our shelves is always kept in an orderly fashion and that it is displayed in the most attractive possible way. In fact, customers still remark that Gelson's markets maintain a grand opening appearance on every shopping day. I think that our produce department is the best example of this type of merchandising. We receive countless compliments on the especially attractive way in which we maintain our produce department. We offer only the highest quality produce for sale, but quality doesn't attract customers unless it is apparent to them. I believe that our display of produce makes the quality of our produce stand out.

In fact, we try to offer quality products in all of our departments. We stick with brand names which have good consumer acceptance. For example, we have been invited on several occasions to join and buy dairy products from Golden Creme, a dairy similar to Jerseymaid, which is owned by a number of retail grocers including Food Giant, Foods Co., Better Foods and many others. We have declined to do so since we wish to handle Knudsen dairy products which we believe our customers prefer. In so doing, we realize that we are giving up profits which others in Golden Creme are earning, but on the other hand, we believe we are gaining customers for our store by offering them the products they want.

We also stress personal service. It has long been my belief that service is of the greatest importance in attracting and holding customers. Service is also an aspect of grocery retailing in which an independent, in my opinion, can always outdo a chain store. We hire employees who can fulfill our demands for courteous, friendly service, and we are willing to pay more for their time than in the case of most chains. My brother and I personally supervise their work and assure ourselves that the type of service we want our customers to receive is being extended. For example, if any customer asks the location of any item of merchandise, our employees are instructed not merely to tell the customer where it can be found, but to escort him personally to the shelf where he will find the item he has requested. This impresses people. They like it, and the next time they will come back to Gelson's to do their shopping.

From what I have previously said, it is obvious that our effort to provide an attractive shopping surrounding and first class service costs money, particularly in the compensation of our employees. I believe our costs are therefore higher than in the case of most chain stores. However, since we can buy our groceries as cheaply as any chain, our prices are no more than 1% higher than in the case of chain stores. This 1% pays for the added services we offer and the better personnel we employ. Yet, it costs the housewife only a few cents more. Even if a customer were to spend $100 a week for groceries, the added cost to her resulting from our superior service and layout would be only $1 a week. These higher prices have not resulted in any loss of trade so far as we can tell.

The success of our business and the success of other independent grocers in Los Angeles is proof of the ability of independents to compete successfully with chain stores. There is no question in my mind but that a hard working single store operator can succeed in this business, and I do not know of any development in grocery retailing which has or is likely to change this.

The only disadvantage that I can see which an independent faces is in the acquisition of first rate locations, particularly in shopping centers. Most of the better locations today are developed by property owners or developers who need to borrow money in order to finance the construction of stores or other facilities on their property. They can usually obtain better terms from lending institutions if they can show that they have leased space to concerns with triple A financial ratings. This means that the larger chains are favored tenants in shopping centers and smaller concerns with two or three stores are not usually offered the better shopping center locations.

This is a problem for which I have no ready solution. Perhaps it would be desirable to have the federal or state government guarantee leases of smaller concerns, thereby making their credit ratings as good as in the case of the chains. Perhaps there are other ways in which this problem might be solved. But I am sure of one thing. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag did absolutely nothing to create or aggravate this problem. Both of those firms had triple A financial ratings prior to the merger and were able to acquire good locations. Von's is able to do so now. Moreover, I do not see how the dissolution of Von's and Shopping Bag could in any conceivable way improve the small concern's ability to obtain new locations. In short, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag just has no relation whatever to the new location problem.

Additionally, in my opinion, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger is completely inoffensive in every way. It has not affected the vigor of competition. It has not put the independent at any competitive disadvantage, and I do not see how it possibly could. In fact, it has been my experience that the larger a chain gets, the easier it becomes for an independent to compete effectively against its stores. As a chain adds new stores, it seems to pay less attention to any single unit. Under these circumstances, the independent who can personally supervise his business gains an additional competitive opportunity. In short, it is my firm view that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not and will not in any way substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in grocery retailing in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

AFFIDAVIT OF NATHAN GILBERT

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

NATHAN GILBERT, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

William Fredrick and I are partners in Supreme Foods Company, which operates Bill's Ranch Market at 1028 San Fernando Road, Burbank, Jack's Ranch Market at 5399 S. Sepulveda Boulevard, Culver City, and the grocery concessions in White Front discount houses in Covina and San Bernardino. In addition, within the next month or two, we plan to open a new supermarket to be known as Ted's Ranch Market at Hobart Avenue and Santa Monica Boulevard in Los Angeles, as well as the grocery concession in a new White Front discount house in Torrance. All of our outlets, except the White Front store in San Bernardino, are located in Los Angeles County.

I have been in the grocery business for the past 40 N.G. years. In 1937, I became the manager of the Hollywood Ranch Market located at 1248 Vine Street, Los Angeles. At that time, this market was owned and operated by a partnership composed of William and Lawrence Fredrick and Theodore Weiner. In about 1947, I purchased Mr. Weiner's interest in the market. Shortly thereafter, the partnership acquired an old garage in Burbank and converted it into what is now Bill's Ranch Market.

In 1957, Lawrence Fredrick died. His son, Lawrence Fredrick, Jr., wanted to operate the Hollywood Ranch Market on his own. Therefore, that store was turned over to him. William Fredrick and I formed our present partnership to operate Bill's Ranch Market in Burbank. In September, 1958, we opened the store which is now Jack's Ranch Market in Culver City. In August, 1962, we opened our first discount outlet in the White Front store in Covina. Shortly thereafter, we commenced operating the food concession in the White Front discount house in San Bernardino, and as I have said, we plan to open another conventional market and another discount concession within a few weeks.

San Fernando Road in Burbank, where Bill's Ranch

Market is located, is a street on which many new and used automobile dealers have their places of business. It is Burbank's "automobile row," being similar in many respects to other areas in Los Angeles County where the predominant business conducted is the sale of automobiles. Experience has shown and it has long been believed by grocerymen that no grocery store could succeed on any "automobile row," primarily because there is usually very little foot traffic in such areas. Indeed, almost all of our customers come to our store by automobile. Bill's Ranch Market does not even have an entrance on the street, and access can be had to the store only from the parking lot behind it. Despite these factors, Bill's Ranch Market has been a great success. The store, as I have said, was a converted garage which initially was quite small. We have remodeled and expanded the store on several occasions in the past.

Our principal competition in Burbank consists of a Cracker Barrel Market (a two or three store concern) in a nearby shopping center and an Alpha Beta which is also nearby. Until recently, Ralph's operated a store one-half mile north of us on San Fernando Road, but that has now closed its doors. Presumably, Ralph's was not operating profitably at that location since I cannot conceive of any other reason for the store being closed.

Jack's Ranch Market in Culver City has also been a successful store for us. This is a comparatively small store which was operated unsuccessfully by a series of grocers before being taken over by us. It faces competition from stores operated by Mayfair, Safeway and Alpha Beta, and from a Unimart discount house operated by Food Giant.

Our discount house concessions face competition from stores operated by almost all the major chains, numerous independents and other discount houses. In fact, there are five other discount houses with food departments in the Covina area alone.

Our contemplated store at Hobart and Santa Monica Boulevard will face competition from stores operated by a number of chains and independents. This store was formerly a grocery store operated by Yor-Way Markets, a 17 store chain which went out of business in 1961. We have expanded and remodeled it, and expect to do very well at this location.

Despite the vigorous competition which characterizes each of the areas served by our stores, we have been very successful. The keynote of our policy in our conventional markets is that we stay open 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. This policy was instituted in the Hollywood Ranch Market many years ago and contributed significantly, in my opinion, to the acceptance and favorable reputation of that store, not only in Hollywood but all over the Los Angeles area. Each of our conventional markets is located near defense plants, airports and other businesses which operate around the clock. People who work in these businesses during the night patronize our store because they can shop there on their way to or from work, and they never have to think twice about whether or not they will find our stores open. Also, we try to make our stores interesting by offering a large variety of products and special services which our experience shows are likely to attract customers.

In all of our locations, we have competed successfully with stores operated by this area's larger chains, and I believe that any smaller concern can compete successfully with the chains. Two examples, I think, will demonstrate this. First, I have mentioned that a Ralph's store one-half mile way from our Burbank store and on the same street recently closed its doors. Both this Ralph's store and our store had the same competitive opportunity to serve the same customers. Our physical plants, parking facilities and the like were comparable. If anything, the Ralph's store was more modern than ours. Our Burbank store is successful and continues to achieve higher sales volumes as time passes. The Ralph's store apparently was not successful. If Ralph's had any decisive advantage over us by reason of the fact that it is a large chain, or otherwise, our success and Ralph's failure in the same community would not have occurred.

Second, the Mayfair Market near our Culver City store is a large, modern and attractive supermarket in a shopping center. In terms of its physical plant, location and available parking, it is far superior to our store. Mayfair kept this store open until only 9:00 P.M. or so until we commenced operations on a 24 hour a day basis nearby. Ultimately, Mayfair switched to a "We Never Close" policy in its Culver City store. I am sure this move was made because we were taking potential business away from Mayfair and they found it necessary to meet the competition we were offering by imitating one of our chief competitive attractions. However, we have experienced no decline in business since Mayfair instituted their present policy.

Many other examples could be cited not only from our experience but from the experience of many other, smaller grocery concerns in Los Angeles. There is just no question in my mind that smaller concerns can and do compete effectively against chain stores.

One of the principal reasons for this is the existence of buying cooperatives such as Certified Grocers and Orange Empire Co-op. We are members of Certified and through it can buy groceries as cheaply as any chain. I have read the statement of the testimony of Lloyd E. Allen, who I have been told will be a witness for the government in connection with its action against Von's and Shopping Bag. I note that Mr. Allen apparently believes that some chains have an advantage in buying and distribution because they operate their own warehouses and distribution systems. It is my opinion that they hold no such advantage and that my company's groceries are placed on the shelves of our stores at no greater cost to us than in the case of direct buying chains. I believe that some larger chains operate their own warehouses and distribution systems because their size and number of stores create problems in buying and distribution that are so unique and complex that they must be dealt with directly by the chain, rather than through a buying cooperative. But smaller concerns do not have these problems, and Certified can very adequately serve them at no greater cost than the chains must ultimately pay. If an example is needed to support my contention in this respect, I can point to the fact that the groceries which we profitably sell in White Front discount houses at prices below those charged by chain stores are purchased by us from Certified.

I also note that Mr. Allen states that chains with their own warehouses and distribution systems have an advantage over smaller concerns "in terms of inventory control." All I can say to this is that if any grocer with one, two or three stores can't control his inventory, he shouldn't be in the business. The larger chain needs highly developed inventory control systems to deal with the problems which necessarily arise in a large organization but which smaller concerns never should have to face.

Smaller concerns also have advantages over chains in that the small grocer can personally supervise his business. He does not have to run his business through supervisors or by bulletin. From my own experience, I know that I can make some changes in my store in one day which it would take a chain 3 to 5 days to make. I can also get key products on my shelves more quickly than in the case of a chain.

Also, if the Boy Scouts or some other organization in Burbank or Culver City wants to ask our help in connection with some project, they have only to knock on our door. On the other hand, if they want Von's help, they have to go to the company's general offices in El Monte or if they want to contact Alpha Beta, they have to go all the way to Orange County. Therefore, they almost always come to us, and through these contacts and by helping them out, we gain friends and customers.

The statement of Mr. Allen's testimony also contains remarks concerning the inability of smaller concerns to get into more desirable shopping centers. This may be true, at least in many instances. But I am personally of the view that shopping center locations are not always the most desirable market locations. We are doing all right, and we do not have any stores in shopping centers. In fact, every one of our conventional markets is located in an old building and either was unsuccessfully operated under another management or would be regarded by most grocers as being undesirably located. There is no doubt that our stores are not in the best locations, but we have overcome disadvantages of location by good merchandising and hard work. Moreover, if in the future we desire to expand our business by opening new stores, I am sure that we can find adequate locations from which we can conduct a successful business, and I am also sure that other small concerns can do the same.

There is another aspect of Mr. Allen's testimony which strikes me as being worthy of comment. Mr. Allen's remarks seem to me to be an attack on chains in general. Mr. Allen is apparently concerned with possible future mergers, possible dominance of the area by chains and what he regards as a tendency to monopoly. In my judgment, Mr. Allen's apprehensions are entirely misplaced. I know for a fact that an independent can compete successfully with the chains because it's been done. I've done it myself, and I didn't work any miracles, I just worked hard. Chains and mergers such as the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag should not be feared by any small grocer who knows what he is doing. And as long as this ability to compete and the opportunity to succeed exist for the small concern, as it does, I do not see any possibility of monopoly or any sort of domination of this area's food business by one or more large concerns.

Finally, Mr. Allen's testimony does not make any reference to discount houses, and I believe that this is a significant omission. In 1960, there were very few discount houses selling food in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Today, I would estimate that there are at least 35 N.G. of them. In my opinion, the emergence of discount houses with food departments may well mark the commencement of a now era in food distribution, an era which may result in as many changes in food retailing as occurred with the advent of the supermarket. The discount sale of food has already been successfully undertaken by many conventional supermarket operators, including my company. The discount house offers a whole new area of opportunity for both large and small concerns.

Like most successful merchandising techniques, the discount houses have a simple and direct appeal. They sell food cheaper than most supermarkets do. By eliminating trading stamps, overtime labor and other overhead costs, a discount food operator can afford to sell his products at prices which are 4 to 5% below prevailing supermarket prices. This attracts price conscious customers. Today, most discount houses are divided up into independently operated concessions. In most cases, the food department is run by one company, hard goods are sold by someone else and soft goods are sold by anther, all under one roof. The time will come, as it did in the case of conventional grocery stores, when one company will operate all the concessions. These and other changes are undoubtedly going to occur in discount merchandising, and because this new form of competition is already and will be in the future a cause for genuine concern among conventional grocers, we can expect changes to occur in their methods of doing business in order to meet the competitive threat of discount houses.

These foreseeable changes will undoubtedly give rise to new opportunities, new problems and new faces in the grocery business. It seems to me that today's grocer must stop worrying about a merger such as Von's and Shopping Bag's, which in my opinion cannot possibly effect his business, and stop worrying about monopolies or chain domination, which is not going to occur anyway, and start planning now to meet and take advantage of the changes and widening opportunities which have characterized the grocery business in the past and which most certainly will exist in the future.

AFFIDAVIT OF MARCUS L. GODFREY, JR.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

MARCUS L. GODFREY, JR., being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am the president of El Rancho Markets, Inc. which owns or leases and operates three supermarkets located, respectively, at 1101 W. Huntington Drive, Arcadia, California, 1401 Huntington Drive, South Pasadena, California, and 320 West Colorado Boulevard, Pasadena, California. My company opened the Arcadia market in 1948, the South Pasadena market in 1960, and the Pasadena market in late 1962. Each of these markets is large and attractive, and in each of them we stress convenience to the customer, attractive display, good quality foods, fair prices and friendly service.

I got my start in the grocery business by acquiring the grocery concession in a grocery store in the City of Long Beach in 1939. I sold this interest in 1941 after opening up a grocery store in Huntington Park. After 1950, my associates and I operated a grocery store in Pomona, California, and the grocery concession in Farmers Market in Pasadena, California, all of which we have since sold to others.

The business of our company has been and I fully expect that it will continue to be successful. We have been able to and we expect to continue to compete successfully with the stores of the various larger chains. For example, in 1960 Safeway opened a new store at Rosemead and Huntington, three blocks west of our Arcadia store, and in 1961 Ralphs opened a new store at San Gabriel and Huntington, about one mile west of our Arcadia store. Obviously any new store opening in the trading area of another store takes some business away, but at the same time the population in the area of our Arcadia store has been increasing, and our style of operation has individuality, so that the sales of our Arcadia store have increased.

Our South Pasadena store faces competition from, among others, new stores of Pantry, Market Basket, Safeway and Von's. Nevertheless the sales of our South Pasadena store are reasonably satisfactory and profitable.

Because of the existence of Certified Grocers of California, the largest retailer-owned cooperative grocery buying organization in the world, in our area the single store operator or small chain, such as ours, can obtain his groceries laid into the store at prices just as good as those obtained by the large direct-buying chains. Certified does an outstanding warehousing and distribution job so that the Certified member does not have to do much warehousing of his own. I have no doubt at all that if it were not for the existence of Certified the single store operators and small chains in this area would find it difficult to compete and would tend to go out of business.

Certified does not handle produce or meat. I do not know whether we buy our meat as cheaply as larger chains, but I doubt that the larger chains obtain much, if any, price advantage on such purchases. I believe we do better than the larger chains in the purchase of produce, because we buy in the Los Angeles produce market, whereas the larger chains with their much larger requirements must field-buy and contract in advance for their produce needs. The Los Angeles produce market is a fluctuating market and we have skilled buyers who get us the best price and quality and make good use of our large refrigerated storage facilities to handle advance purchases. I believe our three-store chain is a good size for produce buying and competing. We can, for example, buy 100 lugs of tomatoes, a quantity which would mean nothing to a large chain, at the right time and do very well from a price and quality standpoint. Quantities of this type are often available on the Los Angeles market at advantageous prices.

The large chains do have an advantage in getting choice sites in new shopping centers, because the developer can get better financing with a tenant with an AAA credit rating. I am sure that Von's and Shopping Bag both had such ratings, so the merger did not give Von's any advantage in this respect. I believe the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag was a compatible one and in my opinion it poses no threat to competition or the existence of the many other grocery concerns doing business in this area.

AFFIDAVIT OF JOE B. GOODNIGHT

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

JOE B. GOODNIGHT, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of an independent supermarket grocery concern which is named Michael's Markets, Inc. I caused this corporation to be organized in December 1959. Its first grocery store was constructed in 1960 and it opened for business at 764 North Tustin Avenue, Orange, California, on July 28, 1960.

1. Prior Experience in the Grocery Business

I am 44 years of age. In 1939 at the age of 21 I was employed by Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc. as a butcher in the meat department. I remained in the employ of Alpha Beta until late in 1959 when I voluntarily resigned in order to start my own grocery business. During my employment with Alpha Beta I held successively the following positions: butcher, meat department manager, store manager, packing plant manager, general sales manager, and finally assistant to the president. The long training and experience I obtained as an employee of Alpha Beta have proved invaluable to me in making a success of my own business. Mr. Edwards, the President of Alpha Beta, while expressing regret at my resignation, nevertheless greatly encouraged me in my desire to start my own business. I am only one of a number of independent grocers in this area who have "graduated" from employment with Alpha Beta (or one of the several other major chains) into ownership of our own business. The training and experience gained in such employment makes it possible for one, such as myself, to become a successful independent operator.

2. Growth of my Company

My first store (and headquarters offices) was opened July 28, 1960. This store, located at 764 North Tustin Avenue in Orange, California has a total of 15,020 square feet, with 9,500 square feet in sales area. Our offices have since been moved to 436 South Glassell Avenue in Orange. In August 1961 my company commenced construction of a second store which was opened November 14, 1961 at 3400 East Chapman in Orange, California. In September 1961 my company purchased a market at 1008 East 17th Street in Santa Ana, California, and in February 1962 we purchased the Low Cost Market at 330 South Main Street in Orange, California. We opened our fifth store July 18, 1962, located at 611 East Grand in Corona, California. We were able to purchase the Santa Ana market and the Low Cost Market because they were offered to us, and because they were not profitable for the former owners. On October 15, 1962 we also purchased Grand Groceries, Inc., who operate two stores in Riverside, California. This company was offered to us because of the age and health of the former owners. Since 1960 we have been able to build or acquire a total of seven supermarkets, and we are now operating at a profit.

3. Competitors in the Area of my Company's Stores

Name of Company	No. of stores in Our Area
Alpha Beta	6
Safeway	3
All-American	1
Food Giant	1
Patton's	1
Walker's	1
Market Basket	3
Smith Bros.	1
Alexander's	1
Stater Bros.	5
Sage's Complete Markets	2
Mayfair	2
Ralphs'	1

Plus a host of small "Mom & Pop" markets.

4. Ability of the Single Store Operator or the Small Chain to Compete

My company is a member of the Orange Empire Co-op which, although slightly smaller than Certified Grocers, another local cooperative buying organization, gives me all of the purchasing advantages enjoyed by any of the larger, direct buying chains, such as A & P, Safeway, Ralphs, Alpha Beta and Von's. As strange as it may seem to an outsider, the fact is that, by virtue of my membership in Orange Empire, the larger chains have no price advantage over me. And this is also true as to any other small operator who is a member of either Orange Empire Co-op or Certified Grocers, whose combined annual volume exceeds $750,000,000.

On the basis of my twenty years of experience with Alpha Beta I concluded, and in my own operations since 1960 I have been able to demonstrate, that the able and aggressive single store operator or small chain can out-compete the large chain and has a distinct advantage over the large chain in flexibility of decision, opportunity to establish friendlier and closer ties with the customer and the community, and control of costs.

It is true that Orange Empire does not handle meats or produce, but the intelligent and able single store or small chain operator is not at a disadvantage in the purchase of these commodities. We can and do purchase meat just as favorably as any of the chains in terms of both price and quality. This is because we do not have to buy in large quantities and we are therefore in a position to help out the meat packer who is frequently left with a small quantity, such as 50 rounds, for example. A large chain would not be interested in purchasing such a small quantity and the packer will usually make us a favorable deal so as to dispose of the meat. This is likewise true in produce—for the same reasons. We can and do purchase produce at prices and quality every bit as favorably, if not more so, as any of the large chains can purchase its produce.

5. The Von's-Shopping Bag Merger

Obviously the Von's-Shopping Bag merger in March of 1960 did not discourage me from opening my first store in July of 1960 or from thereafter expanding, nor could it. Actually it is my personal opinion that the larger a chain becomes, the softer a touch it becomes for the aggressive small operator. Competition in the retail grocery business consists of many things, including price, courtesy, friendliness, convenience and flexibility. The merger did not give Von's any advantage over its many rivals in any of these aspects of competition. There is no doubt in my opinion that my company and as well any of the hundreds of other chains and strong independents can compete very successfully with Von's. From my own experience in the grocery business I am absolutely certain that the merger has not had and will not have an adverse effect on the very vigorous competition which has prevailed and still prevails in the grocery business in this area. I am equally certain that because of the existence of strong cooperatives such as Orange Empire and Certified Grocers there will continue to be for the foreseeable future many hundreds of strong independents and small chains to compete successfully with the several larger chains for the consumer dollar in this expanding market. There is no possibility whatsoever, in my opinion, of any undue concentration or of any chain or any group of chains dominating this market area. Anyone who would say otherwise just doesn't know anything about the grocery business in this area, in my opinion.

Joe B. Goodnight.

Affidavit of Yoshi Inadomi

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

Yoshi Inadomi, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

My father and I operate two retail grocery stores in East Los Angeles under the name JonSons Markets.

In 1923, my father, John Inadomi, opened a grocery store in Fillmore, California. Prior to World War II, the firm expanded and operated grocery stores elsewhere in Ventura County, California. I began working in these stores at an early age. Later, I attended the University of Southern California and Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, where I graduated with a degree in marketing and economics. Following my graduation, I spent two years in the Army.

I returned to Los Angeles in 1946. My father, my uncle and I purchased a small grocery store called the Brooklyn and Ford Market at 4500 Brooklyn Avenue in East Los Angeles. In 1952, we opened a second store, the First Street Food Center, at 3650 East 1st Street in East Los Angeles. My father, my uncle and I still have an interest in those two markets which are, comparatively speaking, quite small.

In 1959, however, my father and I decided to branch out on our own and with the profits we had made from our two small markets, and the aid of outside financing, we acquired the land at 2432 Brooklyn Avenue in East Los Angeles and built a 13,000 square foot supermarket at that location. This was the first new building erected in the Boyle Heights area of East Los Angeles in approximately 30 years, and it marked the beginning of JonSons Markets. In 1960, JonSons Markets, Inc. acquired a market from Alpha Beta at 4831 Whittier Boulevard in East Los Angeles. That market is 20,000 square feet in size. It is my belief that that store was not doing a profitable business under the management of Alpha Beta, but since we have taken over the store, we have done quite well, and our business is a profitable one.

We are members of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., and I credit our membership in that organization as being one of the principal factors leading to our success, since through Certified we are able to obtain grocery products on terms as favorable as any of the direct buying chains. Also, we have taken advantage of other services extended by Certified. Certified has developed a data processing system which we have installed in our store, and which I regard as an invaluable asset. It provides us with reliable statistical information from which we can determine how our business is operating, and what direction our efforts should take in the future. We rely upon these statistics very heavily since I am of the view that the control of any business with the aid of an analysis of statistics is an essential to success these days.

Our stores face competition from many of the major chains in this area, most notably, Safeway, Food Giant and Von's. We also face aggressive competition from a number of stores operated by independents. We have been able to meet this competition and to succeed. I believe that we are aggressive competitors and that our merchandising techniques are sound. Most of our personnel have been trained by us personally. Many of them have begun with us as box boys.

We have instituted and maintained a more or less aggressive advertising campaign. We advertise in community papers, and we place advertisements on benches and bus cards as well. Because our markets serve a large Mexican population, we also advertise on local Spanish speaking radio stations.

JonSons Markets, Inc. is a shareholder in Golden Creme Dairies. Golden Creme is a corporation whose stockholders are retail grocery concerns in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. I serve on the Golden Creme Board of Directors. In all, Golden Creme has approximately 80 shareholders ranging in size from Food Giant, which operates approximately 50 stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, to a number of single store operators. JonSons Markets feature Golden Creme products. Golden Creme is an organization not unlike Jersey Maid, although Jersey Maid is a dairy owned by a fewer number of retail grocery concerns.

Based upon my experience, I am of the view that any hard working and able independent grocer can compete successfully with the chains. About the only handicap or disadvantage which an independent faces is in terms of capital. Naturally, the larger chains, and I think specifically of the national chains such as Safeway, have tremendous financial resources at their command, which they can use in the acquisition of new locations and otherwise. The independent on the other hand, has a very difficult time accumulating capital. For every dollar that he makes and wishes to put away, the government takes 50¢ of it by way of taxes. As a result, it is very difficult for an independent to expand to the point where he can afford to acquire good new locations. Also, it is difficult for an independent to acquire a shopping center location because developers have found that they can obtain much better financing terms if they rent their store space to a larger concern with triple A financial ratings. Perhaps this disadvantage could be eliminated if the government were to guarantee the leases of smaller concerns which had, through the operation of smaller stores, demonstrated a proven ability to establish and maintain a successful grocery business.

I have been asked by the attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to express an opinion as to the effect of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag on various aspects of the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Personally, I am of the view that the merger has nothing whatever to do with the disadvantage at which an independent finds himself in the accumulation of capital or the acquisition of new store locations. There is simply no relationship so far as I can see between the merger and this situation. Secondly, I do not believe that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has affected competition in any way. It has neither decreased nor increased competition. Our stores are in competition with stores operated by Von's, and so far as I can tell, there has been absolutely no change in the nature or character of that competition since the merger. In short, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, in my view, has not and could not adversely affect my business or competition generally in grocery retailing.

AFFIDAVIT OF ARTHUR C. JONES, JR.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

ARTHUR C. JONES, JR., being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am 41 years of age and President of Piggly Wiggly California Company. I am also President of Southern California Grocers' Association, and the President of National Piggly Wiggly Operators' Association, comprising 1600 stores in 38 states. My father, Arthur C. Jones, Sr., now deceased, held this same post 35 years ago. I grew up in the grocery business under the instruction and direction of my father. I started stocking shelves when I was 11 years old, in one of Dad's markets on 44th and Western Avenue in Los Angeles. Dad paid me 25¢ a day, and because my grandmother thought I wasn't being paid enough, she gave me another 25¢ per day. This "under the table" payment was necessarily kept secret from Father, who was never accused of over-paying anybody. I succeeded my father as President of Piggly Wiggly California Company in 1957.

Father had started in business in 1920 with one store in Los Angeles. He built this up progressively to a chain of 220 stores by February of 1929. He sold all of these stores to Charles Merrill, who subsequently sold them to Safeway. I believe this was the time when Safeway commenced doing business in California, at least in the Los Angeles area. After that, Father owned and operated the Chapman Ice Cream Company for about three years; then he went to New York as President of the Ridgeway Tea Company. He also became President of James Butler Grocery Company of New York, which operated 485 stores. During Father's tenure of office, most of these stores were sold to store managers and thereafter operated as individual stores. Father was also President of Bob White Frosted Foods, Inc., and during the last war, served with the Government as O.P.A. Director in Dallas, Little Rock and New Orleans. He started the present Piggly Wiggly California Company in 1949 and had opened up and was operating five stores at the time he passed away in 1960. I have succeeded to substantial ownership of the business and now operate eight stores and hope to open two more in the next year and a half.

Competition With Von's and Others

At the present time we have five stores in the San Fernando Valley in direct competition with either a Von's or Shopping Bag store. These five are in Tujunga, Sunland, San Fernando, Reseda and Van Nuys. Two of the five Piggly Wiggly stores were in operation before the Von's merger, and the other three were acquired subsequent to the Von's merger. Both before and since the Von's merger, I considered Von's and Shopping Bag normal competitive operators. Competition between my stores and Von's has not increased or decreased since the merger; the merger has simply not affected my business in any discernable respect. Since the merger, my business has been affected and competition has increased by reason of new stores and other competitors moving in, but the Von's merger had nothing to do with it. The new Gelson store, a few blocks from me on Ventura, is the toughest competition I have. I have plenty of worries over what this two-store outfit is doing. But they had better worry about me too, for I am operating a supermarket near them, that is in my opinion the finest supermarket in the United States of America.

New Entrants Into the Grocery Business

The attorneys for Von's have asked for my opinion as to whether or not independent operators can get started in the grocery business in the Greater Metropolitan Area and thereafter compete successfully with the chains. My opinion is that they can get started providing the new-comer is smart enough to pick a good location for a modern store. By "modern store" I am referring to the phenomenal small markets like Speedy Marts, as well as the supermarkets. The new-comer, having then established himself in a modern store, is in an excellent competitive position in so far as chains are concerned, for the following reasons: He becomes personally acquainted with a large number of his customers; he becomes a better merchandiser; he generally can and does work longer hours; being constantly on the job, he is able to make decisions on the spot and is able to better control his help; he is always completely in touch with what his competitors are doing in the immediate neighborhood and is able to make day to day changes in his operation to keep abreast of this competition; he draws all his trade from this immediate neighborhood and doesn't have to concern himself with what stores are doing on the other side of the county; having personal acquaintance with his customers, he can tailor his operation to the individual customer, whereas chains cannot do this nearly so well, and certainly not as quickly.

In the last five years I have seen a large number of small markets start up like Speedy Marts. They are absorbing an increasing volume of business, and have some additional competitive advantages. They occupy about 2200 square feet or less. They open at 7:00 A.M. and run until 11:00 P.M. Generally they are a family operation, and they can select locations in crowded areas convenient to apartment dwellers, which locations are not available to chains operating stores of the supermarket variety. Rents are materially lower in comparison with supermarkets. They do not handle fresh meat or produce. They can and do, as members of a co-operative, buy at prices as favorable as can be obtained by chain operators. One big advantage is that they have no union labor and no labor troubles. These markets are one area in which independents with limited capital have a wide open opportunity to establish a profitable business. I have been informed that there are over 100 of these markets in the City of Dallas, Texas and they are spreading rapidly in all great population centers. Some of them do as much as $10,000.00 per week. It is the new modern version of the old "Mom and Pop" grocery store. Individually and in the aggregate, they are destined to become big time competition in the grocery business.

In conclusion, I can flatly state that it is my opinion that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has had no effect whatsoever on my business and that the merger has neither increased, decreased nor changed competition between us in any respect.

AFFIDAVIT OF A. J. MILLER

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

A. J. MILLER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am president of Tiny Tim Markets, Inc., a retail grocery concern operating three small grocery stores in Orange County, California. Also, I am a past vice president of the Southern California Retail Grocers Association.

I have been active in the grocery business from time to time since the days when I was a school boy working in a grocery store in Hammond, Indiana. In later years I worked for Jordano Brothers, a retail and wholesale grocery concern operating in Santa Barbara, and I later worked for Haas-Baruch Co. and Crown Products Co., both of whom were suppliers of grocery products.

In 1948, I entered into a partnership with Joseph Eannareno and we opened up a grocery store called the Grand Market in Santa Ana. This market was successful enough to permit us later to open a second market called the Value Market in Anaheim. In 1952, Mr. Eannareno purchased my interest in the partnership, and I formed another partnership to operate the Certified Market in Santa Ana.

The Certified Market was a tremendous success. We remodeled and expanded the market on two occasions between 1953 and 1958. I sold my interest in this market in 1958 in order to commence my present business, the operation of Tiny Tim Markets, as sole owner.

Tiny Tim Markets began in 1958 with one small store at the corner of Newport and Irvine in Tustin, California. We later built two additional stores in small shopping centers in Santa Ana. Recently, we have acquired a fourth store in Buena Park, which we will convert into a Tiny Tim Market.

All of the Tiny Tim Markets are so-called superettes in that they are smaller than a supermarket. On an average, they have about 4000 square feet of selling space as compared to the Certified Market, for example, which had 15,000 square feet. However, we carry a full selection of grocery products in Tiny Tim Markets.

The keynote of our merchandising policy at Tiny Tim has been cleanliness, courtesy and friendly service. I have always tried to let the customer know of my gratitude for his patronage. When I was operating Certified Markets, I would often stand at the door, shake the hands of my customers as they entered, make a point to call them and their children by name, and personally thank them for coming to our store. I tried, and still do, to play a real part in my customers' lives. Whenever I would learn of a new addition to the family of my customers, I would arrange to have flowers sent to the mother's bedside in the hospital; and while a continuation of this specific policy now that I am operating three stores is impossible, I still stress to my employees, and practice myself, the philosophy of courteous, friendly, personal service.

The employees we have chosen for Tiny Tim Markets are, I believe, of the highest caliber. I believe that in the last analysis it is the people working in a store who attract the customers. I will not tolerate any employee who demonstrates in any way a lack of integrity or who does not maintain a good personal appearance, or does not extend the sort of courtesy and friendliness which is required. Our male employees all wear red vests instead of aprons in our stores, and we try in any other way possible to make Tiny Tim Markets a pleasant and attractive place to shop.

When I went into the Tiny Tim Markets venture, I was convinced that there was a place for smaller grocery stores in Orange County. I am confident that there are a significant number of people who prefer to shop in a smaller store as opposed to a large supermarket. Some other operators who have superettes or bantam stores feel that they can attract only those customers who wish to make a quick purchase of an item which they have run out of at home, and they believe that the same customer will go to a supermarket to make her large purchases. I disagree with this point of view. I think there are many people who prefer to do all of their shopping at a clean, attractive smaller store. The success of Tiny Tim Markets has, I think, demonstrated the correctness of my views.

I also feel strongly that a grocer owes a duty to the community he serves to become active in community affairs. I believe that community service brings in customers who learn to know and appreciate the fact that here is a business man who is really a part of their lives. I have been active in the Boys Club of Santa Ana, a member of the board of directors of the Orange Empire Boy Scouts, a past director of the Boy Club of America of Santa Ana, Chairman of the underprivileged children's committee of Kiwanis of North Santa Ana, a trustee of the Santa Ana Board of Education, first commander of the Ambassador Club of the Chamber of Commerce, chairman of the membership committee and a member of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, a member of the National Chamber of Commerce, a past member of the Santa Ana Rotary Club, a member of the Elks and Knights of Columbus, and President of the Americanism Educational League. I have received the Golden Neighbor Award in Santa Ana, and in 1956, I was named Kiwanian of the Year. My activities in community affairs have greatly enriched my life. They have also made my name and the name of my stores well known in Santa Ana.

I believe that there is a tremendous competitive opportunity available in this area for independents and smaller grocery concerns, whether they operate supermarkets or superettes. Through membership (which we have) in cooperative buying groups such as Certified Grocers of California, the smaller concern is able to buy its groceries as cheaply as any chain, and by stressing merchandising techniques adapted to fit the needs and desires of the particular community which he serves, the independent can do just as well as anyone in the food industry.

The proof of these statements can be found in the success of countless independents in Los Angeles and Orange Counties and elsewhere. For example, I think immediately of a man named Fred Walker, who operates a small grocery store near the corner of 17th Street and Tustin Avenue in Santa Ana. Mr. Walker had operated this store for a number of years quite successfully. A few years ago, Alpha Beta opened a huge supermarket in a very large shopping center almost directly across the street from Mr. Walker's store. As the Alpha Beta was being built, I heard many people say that Mr. Walker's days in the grocery business were numbered, at least at this location. But Mr. Walker is a very good grocery man and he did not quit. I know for a fact that today Mr. Walker is doing just as well, if not better, than before the Alpha Beta Market opened across the street from him.

There is also a tremendous opportunity for small concerns to grow. Tiny Tim Markets is an example of the ability of smaller concerns to expand. Another very good example with which I am quite familiar is Michael's Markets. Joe Goodnight, the founder and president of Michael's Markets, was for a long time an employee of Alpha Beta. He is one of the best grocery men I have ever met. In 1959, he branched out on his own and commenced the Michael's Market chain. Today, Michael's Markets is a 7 store chain operating very successfully in the Orange County area.

There is no doubt in my mind that competition is intense in the grocery business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Indeed, I think "intense" is probably an understatement of the vigor of competition in this business. But I, for one, like the grocery business just he way it is. I am stimulated and exhilarated by competition, and I believe that I have the ability and experience to compete successfully against independents or chains. I am sure there are many people operating smaller concerns who have the same feeling. Under these circumstances, I do not see how the chains ever dominate the grocery business in Los Angeles, and I certainly see no threat of monopoly.

I understand that the Federal Government has commenced an antitrust suit challenging the legality of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag. In my opinion, that merger had absolutely no adverse effect on competition. I also understand that the Government has contended in this case that smaller concerns are at a disadvantage in obtaining desirable shopping center locations. It may be true that in some instances the small concern has a more difficult time than a larger chain in finding a shopping center location, but in my own experience, I have had no such difficulty. Today, the chains seem to be interested in the very large shopping centers, and there are many sites available which do not meet their requirements and which, I have found, are available to a grocer who wants to operate a smaller store in a smaller shopping center. Two of my three stores are in shopping centers now. Just last week, a friend of mine who owns a good deal of property in Orange County asked me to look at some of his property to determine whether or not any of it could be developed into shopping centers, in which incidentally, he wanted Tiny Tim to operate a grocery store. We spent one day looking at his property. We saw no less than eight separate sites which could very well be adapted to a shopping center development. The one which was the most attractive to me was at the corner of Valley View and Chapman in Garden Grove, directly across the street from a larger shopping center in which Thriftimart is operating a supermarket. We have decided to make some preliminary plans to determine whether a shopping center could feasibly be located at this corner, and if those plans look promising, I am sure that within the near future Tiny Tim will open its fifth market at this location.

AFFIDAVIT OF O. J. SCHOEN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

O. J. SCHOEN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am 59 years of age and Executive Vice President of Piggly Wiggly California Company. I joined this company in 1960. I started in the grocery business in 1924 in Louisville, Kentucky as an inventory stock control clerk for Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Inc. I also worked in the warehouse and in stores as a routine clerk and stayed in Louisville about two and a half years. I then was transferred to Detroit as Assistant Office Manager. The Detroit operation of A. & P. in 1927 was 550 stores and I worked in this area for about two and a half years. In 1930 A. & P. decided to open stores on the Pacific Coast and I was transferred to Los Angeles as Assistant Office Manager. I became Office Manager in the Los Angeles area in 1936, and in 1939 I also took charge of the grocery warehouse, produce warehouse, and of transportation. I later became assistant to Vice President, George Higi, in charge of all operations. In 1950 I was appointed General Superintendent and given complete charge of all A. & P. stores in California, succeeding Mr. Higi. In 1953 I resigned to become Executive Vice President and General Manager of Piggly Wiggly stores in San Diego, and at present I am Executive Vice President of Piggly Wiggly California Company. Also at the present time I am President of Western Association of Food Chains, Vice President of National Association of Food Chains, and Director of Food Employers' Council of Los Angeles. I was Charter President of San Diego Food Employers' Council.

Since coming to Los Angeles in 1960 I have had an opportunity to become acquainted with the competitive picture between the various grocery chains and between independents and grocery chains. It is my opinion that competition has generally and substantially increased throughout Los Angeles County. One important reason for this is the substantial increase in the number of discount houses selling groceries. With less desirable and cheaper locations, less union labor, and with less administrative overhead, discount houses are able to operate on a small profit margin, which they hope will be off-set by volume sales. One of the keys to a successful supermarket operation is the selection of a prime location. This is generally true also of an independent. An independent who desires to get into the grocery business and has had some training, is just as able to pick out a prime new location as some executive in a chain store operation can do.

Based upon my observation since 1960, it is my opinion that the Von's merger has not substantially changed the competitive picture with Piggly Wiggly stores as it existed prior to the merger. It is also my opinion that the Von's merger has had no effect on competition in relation to any other chain or independent operating in Los Angeles County.

AFFIDAVIT OF DANIEL H. WILSON

STATE OF CALIFORNIA
County of Los Angeles, ss:

DANIEL H. WILSON, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am Vice President in charge of operations for Crawford Stores, Inc. Crawford Stores, Inc. consist at present of six stores making annual sales of about $15,000,000.00.

Grocery Background

I started in the grocery business in 1931 when just out of high school. My first job was for W. H. Crawford in Rosemead. For the first two months I worked six days a week, from ten to twelve hours per day, and was paid only my room and board. At the end of two months I was given a raise and was then paid $10.00 per week, plus my room and board. I was supposed to be a clerk, but spent most of my time sacking sugar and pink beans. At the end of the first year I was transferred to the store at El Sereno, and was given a $2.00 per week raise. Gradually my salary was increased until I was getting $20.00 per week, plus room and board, and this was what I was making at the time I became married to Mr. Crawford's secretary. She was working for Crawfords for $5.00 per week, and resigned her job when we were married. As a wedding present Mr. Crawford increased my salary $5.00 per week, the same amount he was paying his secretary.

In 1934 we opened the Glendale store and I was transferred there as Grocery Manager, and eventually became Store Manager. In 1942 I went into the service and after my discharge I held a succession of different jobs until 1951 when I re-joined Crawfords as General Supervisor. Then I was given the job of Assistant General Manager, and as I said, I am now Vice President in charge of operations.

Competition With Von's

Before the Von's merger, two of our stores were in direct competition, one with a Von's store on Valley Boulevard, and one with a Shopping Bag store on Whittier Boulevard in Montebello. We are still competing with the same two stores. Von's were always tough competitors and they still are. We never did consider the Shopping Bag store to be much competition and we still don't. We make 100% of our purchases from Certified and Spartan, and we think we buy as cheap as Von's. We also think we buy meat cheaper than Von's, because our supplier is always prepared to supply our requirement of a lesser number of carcasses in order to maintain our steady business. Big operators often have to go to several outlets to get their supply. Where we are charged the market price, suppliers can and often do charge big operators more because of the effort needed to meet the bigger quota.

Our stores vary in size from 12,000 square feet to 60,000 square feet. Like the big chains do, we hire union labor and pay the union scale. Our prices are in line with prices charged by Von's, and we believe our store operating costs are on a par with those incurred by Von's. The last store we opened was in the fall of 1960 and despite competition that surrounds us everywhere, our sales this last year increased about 2%. It is my definite opinion that the Von's merger did not increase, decrease or make any change whatsoever in the competition existing between us at and prior to the merger. It is also my opinion that the merger had no effect on competition anywhere in Los Angeles County. Von's and Shopping Bag are still selling the same groceries to the same people from the same outlets, and generally in competition with the same competitors. From what I have seen, there has been no substantial, nor any change in this competitive picture since the merger was accomplished.

An Independent's Competitive Advantage Over A Chain Operation

I have been asked by Von's attorneys my opinion on the competitive advantages enjoyed by an independent grocer or one-ownership grocer in relation to a chain operation. In many respects a one-ownership operation has tremendous advantages over the chain operation. Some of these advantages are:

1. An independent can be much more flexible or fluid in buying supplies, advertising them and in pricing them.
2. The independent can make day to day decisions as problems arise, which cannot be so readily made by store managers in a chain.
3. An independent can and does keep in close touch with his customers. He knows their personal likes and dislikes and he caters to them whenever possible.
4. A one-ownership operation is in much closer and more personal contact with his employees and as a result, there is far less labor trouble between management and employees.
5. Then I believe he can operate more efficiently because he doesn't have to hire supervision and several different types of buyers; he can perform all these services for himself.

6. One big advantage enjoyed by an independent, or a one-ownership operation, is that he can reach his customers with "spot" advertising. General area-wide advertising by supermarkets does not reach customers as effectively as spot advertising does.

AFFIDAVITS OF DEFENDANT'S INDUSTRY WITNESSES WHO OPERATES TEN OR MORE GROCERY STORES

AFFIDAVIT OF SAM ALEXANDER

STATE OF CALIFORNIA
County of Los Angeles, ss:

SAM ALEXANDER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am Chairman of the Board of Alexander's Markets, a corporation. My brother, R. E. Alexander, is President of the corporation and my son, Veryl Alexander, is Vice President and Assistant to the General Manager of Alexander's Markets.

1. Experience In The Grocery Business

My first experience in the grocery business occurred when I was employed in the year 1912 in the City of Edmond, Oklahoma, as a delivery boy for a grocer. I moved to California in 1919, and in that year I opened my first grocery store at 41st Street and Hooper Avenue in the City of Los Angeles. This was a 25′ by 40′ market which I ran until 1923 when I sold this store. I next took over the grocery section in what was then considered the "giant" 40′ by 40′ Peerless Market, located at 48th Street and Second Avenue in the City of Los Angeles. I sold my interest in the Peerless Market in 1929 and took over the grocery department in the Great West Adams Market located at West Adams and Virginia Road in Los Angeles in 1930. In 1931, I took over the grocery section of my present store at 4813 West Washington Boulevard in Los Angeles, and in 1940, I purchased the entire operation of this market. The 41st Street and Hooper store and the Peerless Market which I have referred to above are both still standing and being operated as grocery stores by others. The grocery department at the South Arlington Drive-In Market at Arlington and Exposition Boulevard was opened by us in 1933. It has been opened and operated for a period of a year or so by others and then closed. We re-opened the store and ran it for five years and then sold it in 1938.

The next Alexander's market was opened in 1935 at 10th and Crenshaw. I sold it in 1937, but the store remained in operation in other hands until 1961 when it was destroyed by fire. In 1937, I opened another Alexander's Market at 3029 South Vermont Avenue. In 1940 I opened another Alexander's Market at 204 West Wilson Avenue in Glendale. In 1949 my company opened another Alexander's Market at 260 East Magnolia Boulevard in Burbank. From that time forward, Alexander's Markets has continued to grow and to expand. We now own and operate 12 supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and we have three additional supermarkets under construction. A list of my company's markets, including the addresses and the date that each of them was opened, is as follows:

2. Ability of the Single Store Operator or Small Chain to Compete

When I first started in business in this area as a grocer there were three or four chain grocery stores which, because of their volume, were able to and did buy their groceries direct from the manufacturers. The rest of the grocery operators in this area, including myself, were not able to buy in sufficient volume to purchase directly from the manufacturers and we obtained our groceries from the old-line jobbers. This resulted in our paying from 10- to 15% more for our groceries than the direct-buying chains and placed the smaller groceries at a competitive disadvantage in relation to the chains. The only way that I and the other small operators could compete with the chains would be by being very friendly to the people in the neighborhood and emphasizing personal service. On the basis of my experience in the industry, however, I am convinced that if this disparity in purchasing power had continued it would have meant virtually the complete disappearance of all of the single store operators and small concerns and would also have meant that the many fine large chains which now exist in this area would not be in existence today. Fortunately, some farsighted smaller operators realized in the 1920's that in order to compete successfully it was essential that they be able to purchase their groceries at prices comparable to those received by the direct-buying chains and a number of these smaller grocers got together and agreed to pool their resources and buy directly from the suppliers. By this means they concluded, and correctly, they could have the advantages of quantity discounts and reduce operating costs. This was the beginning of cooperative buying in the Los Angeles area and it was so successful that in 1924 Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., was organized. Certified is a cooperative organization, all of the stock of which is owned by retail grocers who purchase their groceries from Certified. I am informed that Certified is the largest retailer-owned cooperative food wholesaler in the world. Certified has grown to the point where today its annual sales at wholesale to its members is approximately $350,000,000.

Alexander's Markets became a member of Certified in 1928. I had the pleasure of serving on the Board of Directors of Certified Grocers for 25 years. I attribute a very large part of the success which Alexander's Markets has enjoyed over the years to its membership in Certified Grocers and from my experience in the industry, I am convinced that the growth of such other chains as Von's, Shopping Bag, Shoppers Markets, and many others has in large part been attributable to their membership in Certified. Similarly, the existence of Certified makes it possible for the ambitious and experienced individual who wishes to enter the grocery business today to do so and to compete successfully with any of the major chains.

While Certified Grocers does not handle meat or produce, this does not, in my opinion, place the single store operator or the small chain at any competitive disadvantage. I found from my own experience when I was running one or two stores that it was possible for the small operator to purchase produce and meats at comparable prices and with comparable quality to that which the larger chains purchased, and my buyers now assure me and from my own experience I am sure this is still true. This is because the meat packers frequently have small quantities of meat which they cannot sell to a chain (which must buy in large quantity). The packers are therefore willing to sell these smaller quantities to the small operator at a favorable price. This is likewise true in the purchase of produce. The small operator who does not need a large quantity can "wait the market out". By that I mean a large chain will frequently purchase, for example, 500 crates of lettuce, and it cannot, because of its large demands, wait to see if the market breaks a little. Also, the smaller operator is frequently able to help out the produce dealer by taking small quantities which the produce dealer might not otherwise be able to sell and thereby obtain a real price reduction. The buyers for Alexander's Markets today tell me that this situation still obtains and from my background and experience in the business I am satisfied that it will always be true.

People have been predicting for many years the demise of the single store operator. This may be true in other areas of the country, but I do not believe there is the slightest possibility of it happening in the Los Angeles area because of the existence of Certified Grocers and another large cooperative buying organization known as Orange Empire. The single store operator has a number of competitive advantages over the stores operated by the larger chains, because he has the advantage of the personal touch with his customers, can respond quickly to competitive conditions, and can pay closer attention to his overhead.

Of course, there have been failures in the business, just as there have been failures in all lines of business. In my opinion, most of the failures in the grocery business in this area must have occurred because the person simply did not have the experience and ability to run a successful business. There have been failures of some of the larger chains as well, either for the same reason or because they tried to expand too rapidly with insufficient capital. It has been the consistent policy of Alexander's Markets to finance its expansion out of funds generated through profits and depreciation. I fully expect that Alexander's Markets will continue to prosper and to grow in order to serve the needs of an ever-expanding population.

I believe very strongly that there is a great opportunity in the grocery business for the conscientious and able single store operator. From my observation of the industry over the past 43 years, I believe that the great bulk of the successful independent operators got their experience in the business by working for a chain. I believe this is the best schooling possible for the man who wants to start his own grocery business.

3. The Merger Of Von's And Shopping Bag

I do not wish to give the impression from what I have heretofore stated concerning my success and the success of Alexander's Markets that it has all been easy. This is not the case. It took hard work, close attention to details, and a knowledge of the business. The retail grocery business in the Los Angeles area has always been highly competitive and it is today. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, in my opinion, has not had any adverse effect on competition in this area and I don't see how it possibly could have any effect. I have stated before that if it were not for the existence of the large cooperatives, such as Certified and Orange Empire, the large chain such as Safeway or Ralphs with its ability to get low prices because of purchasing large quantities would have an overwhelming advantage over the single store operators and the small chains, but Certified and Orange Empire, of course, buy in much greater quantities than any of the chains, including Safeway. By this statement I do not mean that competition in the retail grocery business is only price competition. What I do mean is that since the single store operator and the small chain can purchase groceries as favorably as the large chains, they are at no disadvantage, and I frankly feel that they can out-compete the large chains in terms of courtesy, convenience, flexibility and close attention to detail.

From my experience in the industry I am convinced that there is not the slightest possibility that any chain can dominate or control this market. Certainly Safeway, despite its importance in this area and its nation-wide operations, has never been able to control or to dominate the market. There is, and I am convinced there will continue to be, great opportunity for persons of ability and who are willing to work hard to enter the grocery business in the area and to prosper and grow. In my years in the industry I have seen very many concerns do just that. I am convinced that the growth of such concerns as Von's and Shopping Bag and the hundreds of smaller chains from single store operations is directly attributable first to membership in Certified Grocers and secondly to hard work, intelligence and ability.

There are now in this area, and I have no doubt whatsoever that there will continue to be, many hundreds of small chains and single store operators who compete successfully with the few larger chains for a share of an ever-increasing market. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, in my opinion, cannot have any effect on this situation. There is not the slightest possibility, in my mind, of any tendency toward a monopoly in retail grocery sales in the Los Angeles area.

AFFIDAVIT OF CLAUDE W. EDWARDS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CLAUDE W. EDWARDS, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Alpha Beta Acme Markets, Inc., successor to Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc., a supermarket grocery concern operating supermarkets in the counties of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino, and San Diego, all in California. I became President of Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc. in 1952. I have held the following positions in the grocery industry: President of Western Association of Food Chains, 1944-1947; President of Supermarket Industry, 1949-1951; Chairman of the Board, National Association of Food Chains, 1959-1960; President of Topco Association, Inc. for a period of three years (This was a group of thirty supermarket chains.) At the present time I am on the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee of the National Association of Food Chains and the Supermarket Institute.

1. My Grocery Background

I started in the grocery business 42 years ago as a truck driver for the Cannel Commercial Company, and then a short time later I drove a truck for Smart & Final for about one year. About 41 years ago I went to work for Albert C. Gerrard, the founder of Alpha Beta Food Markets. I was employed as a grocery clerk in the Pomona store. In August of 1922 I was invited by Mr. Gerrard to join him as a copartner in the operation of a store in Corona, and this I did. In 1929 the business was incorporated as Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc., and I was the manager of this store. In May, 1929, I was given charge of the wholesale produce warehouse and the distribution system for Alpha Beta. Trouble came to all business, including the grocery business, in the early thirties, and about May of 1932, I opened a new type of store for Alpha Beta which we called a "depression store." It was so-called because we operated without fixtures. Merchandise, with the exception of meat, was stacked on the ground or on the floor. Some time later, after the depression lessened, the store was modified and fixtures were installed.

About 1934 I took charge of advertising. I was also given charge of the combined warehouse and the produce setup located in the central manufacturing area of Los Angeles. Mr. Gerrard and I had at that time about 25 stores. We worked closely together, in fact sat across a double desk from each other, with one telephone between us. About one year later we hired our first secretary. By 1935 we were doing about $3,000,000.00 in sales and I was elected to the Board of Directors. In 1944 I became the General Manager. Later I was also Secretary and Vice-President of the company.

At this time we had lost some stores, but had made some gains in sales. After the war, and in the year 1945, we started to expand and by 1950 we had a total of 29 retail stores. Up to this time our policy had been to seek out locations and then make a deal with the owner to construct the building and to lease it to us. Since then we have purchased some stores, but uniformly they have been a headache, as in every case we had to change over the entire merchandising program. As a result, I have come to the conclusion that it is better to start from the ground up and build your own store than it is to buy one already operating.

2. Single Store Operators

One major problem which we have had to contend with for years, is this: We select, and then at considerable cost, train good men for a number of years until they thoroughly know the grocery business; then they leave and open their own stores in competition with us. Ted Wood resigned in 1954 and started his own store in Pasadena. He has apparently competed very successfully. Joe Goodnight started to work for us in 1939 and stayed until late 1959; then he resigned to start his own grocery business. He competes directly with us and he appears to be doing a good job. Then we have sold stores to employees who wanted to strike out on their own. Blayne Hutchinson was our manager in the Downey store, which he purchased from us and used as a nucleus for the Greater All American Markets chain. L. J. and Fred Bentley, employed by Alpha Beta, purchased our store in Claremont some time in the 1940's. Fred is still operating this store very successfully. Frank Bray, also employed by Alpha Beta, purchased our store in Huntington Beach. He still has it and has also been very successful. There are other similar instances which I do not recall at the moment, but all of these men, trained at our expense, make real tough competitors.

Illustrations like these are numerous, showing that for newcomers in the business, opportunities to start in the grocery business are as great today as they have ever been in this Southern California area. As in any business, it helps to be trained, but any man who goes into the grocery business for himself and is willing to work has an advantage over the chains in the fields of service and human relations. He sits on top of the job all of the time and has personal acquaintance with most of his customers. He can also hold his prices competitive by belonging to such organizations as Certified or A. M. Lewis. As a matter of fact, Alpha Beta today buys over 1,500 items from Certified.

3. My Views on Competition

Before the merger between Von's Grocery and Shopping Bag markets, we competed directly with some of their stores in Temple City, Covina, Long Beach, Pomona, La Habra, Whittier, Downey, Lynwood, Garden Grove, and Arcadia. Both concerns always were tough competitors, and competition today is just as strong as it ever has been.

In my opinion, after being in this business for 42 years, there is apparently no chance, whatever, that any chain, or any group of chains, could dominate the grocery market in this area. If a man has the sales and merchandising "savvy" and picks out a good location and is willing to work just as hard as his counterpart did in the 1930's, he can make a success in the grocery business today. In the 41 years I have been with the company, competition has always been intense and I have never known a single year that I could say "competition is not pressing in now." This area contains the second largest metropolitan area population in the country and is still growing. This growth is demanding new stores on all sides. Lawyers for Von's-Shopping Bag have asked me "what impact did the Von's-Shopping Bag merger have on competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area." My answer is "none at all." Those merged stores are still selling the same old groceries at the same old stands. It hasn't hurt our business, helped it, or affected it in any way.

Affidavit of Charles J. Futterman

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

Charles J. Futterman, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Shoppers Markets, Inc. I am also the Chairman of the Allied Food Division of the City of Hope and Chairman of the Board of Food Employers Council. In 1959 I was President of the Western Association of Food Chains and Vice President of the National Association of Food Chains. In 1961 I was Chairman of the Food Division of the United Jewish Welfare Fund.

I am also a member of the Bar of the State of Michigan. I came to California in 1937. In 1939 my father and I opened a grocery store known as Shoppers Rancho at First Boyle Streets in Los Angeles.

In 1942 I entered the Army and served four years, two of them in Europe.

In 1946 I returned to Los Angeles and Shoppers Rancho. My father had passed away in 1944 and the late Joseph Gach joined me at that time in a partnership. The store was then doing $250,000 a year in volume. In 1949 Mr. Gach and I took over operation of an old store in Santa Monica and changed the name of our business to Shoppers Markets.

In 1950 we added a new market in Inglewood. In 1952 we opened our fourth store in Norwalk. In 1956 we opened our second store in Santa Monica, and one in San Pedro, and in 1958 three more stores were added, two in Torrance and one in Westchester.

In 1959 we built a headquarters office on South La Brea. In 1961 we opened two stores, one in Highland Park and one in North Long Beach, and purchased two, one in South San Gabriel from Sunfair and one in Los Angeles from Fox. We were able to purchase the Sunfair market because the owners had decided to go out of the business and we were able to purchase the Fox market because that company had got into financial difficulties through too rapid expansion. In 1962 we opened a store in Los Angeles.

Shoppers now operates 14 supermarkets in Los Angeles County, and, in addition, operates seven Stacy Drug stores and four Stevens Junior Department stores.

The success and expansion of Shoppers Markets has resulted from many factors and circumstances. Everybody in our company works hard, around the clock, and expects to continue to do so. In many of our stores there are strong ethnic groups that are predominant. We find that we cannot run all our stores the same. We cater to the wishes and desires of the people surrounding each individual store. We cannot do this as well as the individual store operator, but better than the larger chains. The smaller we were, the better control we had, the larger we get, the more difficult it is to be individualistic.

But we try, and we're still small enough so the top people can still get into the stores. We emphasize that our stores be kept clean, and that all company employees be polite and friendly. This seems to have paid off, and I feel that in the communities where we have stores, Shoppers has become known for the personal touch.

Another factor of major significance is Shoppers' membership in Certified Grocers of California, through which we are able to buy groceries as cheaply as anyone, while at the same time avoiding many of the expenses of maintaining our own warehouse. Any small store operator can belong to Certified, and pay the same price for merchandise as the chain operator. Our expansion has also been made possible by our ability to obtain financing for the construction of new stores because of our demonstrated past success.

As gratified as I am at Shoppers' growth, I really do not feel that there is anything particularly unusual about it. Other concerns, indeed most of the major chains operating in Los Angeles today, began with one store, and can relate a similar history of expansion. Moreover, I am confident that new concerns will likewise enter this market and grow. There is no reason why they cannot.

Of course, there are companies who will fail. This is inevitable in any business as keenly competitive as food retailing. But I feel strongly that the able and aggressive retailer has every chance for success. Enough of them have succeeded in the past and, in my opinion, will in the future to insure even keener competition. In my opinion, also, there is not the slightest possibility that the business in this area will be dominated by a few large concerns.

It is my impression that the retail food industry structure in this area is not unlike the structure of the legal profession—that is, there are a few large law firms, numerous medium-size and small law firms, and hundreds of other practitioners. Neither the large firms nor the smaller firms have or are likely to have any monopoly either of the brains or of the legal business. Many clients prefer the services of the large firms, many prefer the more personal attention and service they get from the small firms and individual practitioners. It is not difficult to enter the business once one has passed his bar examinations. This is likewise true of the retail grocery business—the large chains provide employment for many persons and they fulfill a necessary role in the competitive struggle to serve the public. But they do not have, nor, in my opinion, are they likely to have any monopoly of the business. There is a constant entry of new concerns in the business and the intelligent and hard-working single store operator and small chain grocer can and does compete successfully with the larger chains. Some prefer to stay small and some desire to and do grow larger. In my experience there has been no real change in this basic structure and in my judgment there is no likelihood of any such change.

In my opinion, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has in no way adversely affected competition. I expressed that view when I first learned of the merger and nothing has happened since to change my mind. In Los Angeles, the competitive effectiveness of a new store has never been dependent on the size of the chain with which it is affiliated. One is just as likely to lose customers to a store operated by a good small concern as to one operated by a good larger chain. No one in this area has any built-in advantage derived from size. Thus, effective, sometimes fierce, competition is offered by chains and independents alike, and I have not seen the slightest evidence that the merger has resulted in a lessening in the vigor of competition in any area with which I am familiar.

AFFIDAVIT OF GEORGE F. FITZPATRICK

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

GEORGE F. FITZPATRICK, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state, as follows:

I am the Executive Vice President and General Manager of The Boys Market, Inc., a supermarket chain consisting of twenty-five stores, all operating in the greater metropolitan area. In 1925 my folks opened up a grocery store at 65th and Broadway, and this was my first experience in the business. Then I went to work as a clerk in a Pasadena store for the present concern. At that time they had three stores. Later I became manager of one of them, then managed two, and then became a supervisor. I have also worked at advertising and filled different positions with the company. I became Director six years ago and today, after twenty-seven years with this concern, I am the General Manager.

Counsel for Von's have asked my opinion as to whether or not an individual has any opportunity today to get into the grocery business. My answer is "Yes, if he makes some effort to learn the business, is willing to work hard, and buys from Certified, or some similar concern." I know of many young people who have worked for chains, gained experience, and then have gone into business for themselves. This happens many times. In fact, it is one of the main complaints you hear from general managers of chain stores, that after they have spent years and considerable money in training intelligent, likely young people, they decide to go into business for themselves.

We have fourteen stores in direct competition with a

Von's or Shopping Bag store. All of them are within two miles or closer. We are in direct competition also with many other chains and single store operators. We consider that our two toughest competitors are Von's and Food Giant. This was true before the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, and we consider it equally true today. I cannot say that I know of any instance in which the Von's merger has affected our business or our sales. Both Von's and Food Giant are extraordinarily good merchants. I would just as soon not be close or within competition distance of either one of these concerns. Any other concerns would be more than welcome, and we easily hold our own. I guess it all depends on how good a merchant you want to be and what you are willing to do in order to attract customers into your store and keep them coming back. I see no possibility of any chain or any group of chains dominating the Los Angeles metropolitan market. Competition in the grocery business seems to be steadily increasing—not lessening, and I sincerely believe that if the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag had any impact whatsoever on competition, either good or bad, I would have learned of it through some of the fourteen stores that we have directly competing with them. I can truthfully state that the merger had no noticeable effect one way or the other on our business or operation.

AFFIDAVIT OF JOSEPH P. HUGHES

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

JOSEPH P. HUGHES, being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am the President and Mrs. Hughes and I are the controlling stockholders of Hughes Markets, Inc., a corporation which is the successor to the business I started as a one store operation in 1952. Hughes Markets, Inc. now operates 13 supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and employs about 1000 employees.

I commenced work in the grocery business in 1928 for the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company (A & P) as an apprentice clerk in a store in Cleveland, Ohio. My boss was Roger Laverty, Sr. who is now the President of Thriftimart, Inc. By 1932 I had advanced to the position of market manager in the Cleveland area.

Jim Fitzsimmons had left A & P in 1928 and he came to California where he started his own chain of grocery stores. When he died three years later, Fitzsimmons Stores, Ltd. was a chain of 18 small stores. Mr. Fitzsimmons' widow offered this chain to Mr. Laverty for $160,000, and I became one of the group to purchase these stores with Mr. Laverty. The name Fitzsimmons Stores, Ltd. has now been changed to Thriftimart, Inc.

I left my position with A & P and came to California in 1932 to work for the Fitzsimmons Stores, Ltd. From 1932 to 1952 I held various positions with this company, from store manager to general supervisor for all stores, to vice-president and general manager of the company.

In 1940 I purchased a piece of property at 12836 Ventura Boulevard, Sherman Oaks, California and leased it to Fitzsimmons Stores, Ltd., and I constructed a market on the property. When I left Fitzsimmons Stores in 1952 I decided to take over the store as my own and start my own business. This was a small store, but I have since enlarged it and remodeled it and it is now 12,000 square feet.

Since 1952 my business has been successful and my company has subsequently opened the following additional stores:

Address	Year
14440 Burbank Boulevard, Van Nuys	1953
1900 North Highland Avenue, Los Angeles	1955
16940 Devonshire Boulevard, Granada Hills	1956
15120 Sunset Boulevard, Pacific Palisades	1957
3075 San Fernando Road, Los Angeles	1958
4520 Van Nuys Boulevard, Sherman Oaks	1958
14620 Parthenia Street, Van Nuys	1958
11361 National Boulevard, Los Angeles	1961
*1100 San Fernando Boulevard, Burbank	1960
*6657 Laurel Canyon, North Hollywood	1960
*10400 Sepulveda Boulevard, Mission Hills	1960
21431 Devonshire Street, Chatsworth	1961

The three stores which are marked with an asterisk are stores which I purchased from McDaniels Markets in 1960. McDaniels in early 1960 was a 24-store chain but it had expanded rapidly with inadequate capitalization and got into financial trouble as a result. In an effort to keep the business going, McDaniels in 1960 sold over half its stores to various independents and smaller chains. But even with the sale of these stores, McDaniels could not meet its payments to its creditors and in 1961, after a series of attachment suits and other collection litigation, McDaniels sold its remaining nine markets to Food Giant and was declared a bankrupt. Other chains which got into similar financial difficulties and went under because of too rapid expansion and inadequate capitalization are Fox Markets and Yor-Way. Concerns which have grown sensibly and are adequately capitalized, such as my own company and others such as Shoppers Markets, can reasonably expect to continue to grow and prosper.

I have two sons who are employed by my company. I am a firm believer in working up from the bottom and I have followed this principle in training my sons. They have proved themselves and have progressed steadily in the business. I expect that some day they will be a factor in the running of the business.

My company is an active member of the Southern California Retail Grocers Association. I am also Chairman of the Board of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., and I have served as a director of Certified since 1947.

Certified has a most efficient purchasing, warehousing and distribution operation. In addition it offers those members who desire it accounting service and expert advice on store location and layout; it has its own coffee roasting and bean processing plant, and it has recently organized an equipment subsidiary to assist members in obtaining equipment and fixtures for their stores.

For the fiscal year ending September 1, 1962 Certified had the highest dollar volume of sales to its members in its history. Its sales for that year were $299,646,945 and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Spartan Grocers, Inc., had additional sales to its members in excess of $50,000,000. In addition to advertising allowances, rebates, promotional allowances and interest returned to its members during the year, Certified returned patronage dividends to its members of 1.25% on dry grocery warehouse purchases, 2% on drop shipment purchases, 2.50% on frozen food purchases, 1.30% on health and beauty aid purchases, 1% on delicatessen purchases, and 5.25% on purchases of Certified packed coffee and bean products. These returns were achieved despite increased operating expenses during the year, such as negotiated wage increases, increased federal payroll taxes, and higher cost of some supplies and equipment. These increased costs were offset by higher volume, a strict cost control program, improved mechanization in the handling of merchandise and invoices, and greater employee efficiency. To illustrate the wide range of products available through Certified Grocers I am attaching copies of the Certified order forms for delicatessen items (Book No. 5, dated January 9, 1963), frozen foods (Book No. 6, dated January 9, 1963), non-foods (Book No. 30, dated January 2, 1963) and the grocery division (Book No. 19, dated January 9, 1963).

I have heard it said that the larger, direct-buying chains have an advantage over the purchaser through Certified in price. I am certain that the Certified member gets his goods on his shelf at virtually the same price as many of the direct-buying chains, and the Certified warehousing and distribution system is so efficient that the member does not need to do very much warehousing on his own and is able to maintain close inventory control. For years in this area Safeway, for example, had a notoriously inefficient warehouse and distribution system, but it has now built a new and modern warehouse in order to make its operations more efficient.

Hughes Markets makes most of its purchases from Certified, except for meat, produce, bread and milk, which Certified does not handle, and except for occasional outside purchases of items. These outside purchases are not all because of price considerations but because Certified does not handle the particular item or I may desire a large quantity of an item for protection.

With respect to meat purchases, it is my opinion that there is not any big difference at all in prices whether the purchase is made by a large, medium-sized, or a small chain. My opinion is that the smaller operator, needing a smaller quantity, actually can at times be more selective and get good quality at a cost even below that of the larger chains.

On produce, the single store operator buying at the right time in the fluctuating produce market can sometimes do as well and probably better on price and has the opportunity to be more selective than the larger chains. The larger chains may have some advantage in buying a carload of hard produce, such as onions or potatoes, apples, watermelons or pears.

The existence of chain stores is a fact of life and I am sure their existence, just as the existence of retailer-owned cooperative buying organizations like Certified Grocers has resulted in better food at better prices to the sonsumer. Certified, of course, is the salvation of the small grocer, and but for its existence the small grocer simply could not compete with the chains.

I have not seen any change in the competitive picture in this area and I do not see how there could be any as a consequence of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag. Certainly competition has not lessened. It continues to be very vigorous. There are literally thousands of separate grocery concerns doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area ranging from single store operators and small and medium-sized to a few larger chains. I do not think there is any possibility that this market will be controlled by just a few, or even a few hundred concerns, and I think most grocers in this area have difficulty in understanding how it could possibly help competition or help the industry to break up the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag.

AFFIDAVIT OF ROGER LAVERTY, SR.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

ROGER LAVERTY, SR., being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am President of Thriftimart Markets, which is a chain of 67 markets in Southern California and Nevada. I came to Los Angeles in 1931 at the request of the widow of James Fitzsimmons to purchase the chain of 18 Fitzsimmons Stores, Ltd. I purchased these stores for $160,000, of which $20,000 was my money and the balance was borrowed from various investors. I paid out the last of the original investors for $250,000 in 1952.

Prior Experience

My schooling was cut short by my father's death and the necessity of helping to support my family. I commenced work as a taffy puller in a candy stand in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and thereafter successively until 1913 I held various jobs as manager of the candy stand, salesman of the first tungsten lamps, owner of an electric light agency, wiring estimator, butcher, saw salesman, hot hoop iron catcher, and armature winder. In 1913 I answered an ad of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. and was employed as a house-to-house solicitor taking orders for coffee and tea at a salary of $3 per week and 20 per cent commission. Soon I gained enough business to use a company horse and wagon and later I was put in charge of an A & P store. This store had gross sales of $300 a week when I took over and within three months it had sales of $1100 a week. I was then given a larger A & P store with 12 employees to manage. This store did $4000 worth of business weekly.

In 1915 A & P put me on the road opening stores. My job was to go out and lease a store, have a carpenter build shelves, order the merchandise from the warehouse, and employ a manager to run the store. In this way I opened more than 500 stores for A & P between 1915 and 1929.

In 1922 A & P made me vice president in charge of the Cleveland area and later in 1929 I was promoted to first vice president of the A & P central division with responsibility for 2600 stores. In this same time James Fitzsimmons had risen to the position of general superintendent of A & P's Pittsburgh territory. Mr. Fitzsimmons became ill in 1929 and came to California where he recovered and within two years opened 18 stores doing business as Fitzsimmons Stores Ltd. These are the stores which I purchased in 1931 with my total assets of $20,000 plus $140,000 invested by friends who had confidence in me. These were very small stores, of course, as there were no supermarkets in those days. The total sales of the 18 stores were $3,600,000 annually.

Thereafter my business prospered greatly as a result of hard work, loyal and able employees, good service at fair prices and the continuing population explosion in Southern California. In 1957 the name of the company was changed to Thriftimart, Inc.

I have taken the utmost care in training my two sons in the business. My son Robert is in the sales department and my son Roger, Jr. is in the real estate division of Thriftimart. Each of them has spent many a morning at the produce market at 3 A.M. This is but one example of how they have learned the business from the bottom up.

I have been advised that the Government attorneys in the action against Von's has cited the 1949 acquisition by Thriftimart of the 19-store chain of Roberts Markets as evidence of a tendency to monopoly in the grocery business in this area. Actually I am convinced from my long experience that there is not the slightest possibility of monopoly or anything approaching it in retail food distribution in this area. There are just too many strong, able and aggressive competitors ranging from single store operators, small chains, medium sized chains, to large national chains doing business here for any company to dominate the market. And since the draw area of any particular store is not very large, competition for customers is on a store-by-store basis. For this reason the single store operator can compete just as well as any store of a larger chain. Moreover, this is a business which is quite easy to enter and each year new and able competitors enter into the business. I take some pride in the fact that I have consistently helped our employees who desire a business of their own to take over an older Thriftimart store. Many have done this and many have prospered. For example, I turned over a large number of the Roberts Markets to the former managers or employees on a cooperative arrangement whereby Thriftimart supplied the inventory on consignment but the business was owned and operated by the former employees. I made this arrangement with respect to the following stores we acquired from Roberts:

Address

468 Market Street, Inglewood, California
2570 Lincoln Boulevard, Venice, California
11526 Santa Monica Boulevard, Los Angeles, California
14521 Ventura Boulevard, Sherman Oaks, California
1830 East Artesia Boulevard, North Long Beach, California
310 Torrance Boulevard, Redondo, California
1505 Wilshire Boulevard, Santa Monica, California

In addition to the foregoing we sold to other individual operators in the years indicated the following of the stores we acquired from Roberts:

Address	Year
11841 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, California	1951
49 Pier Avenue, Hoermosa Beach, California	1956
436 Atlantic Boulevard, Los Angeles, California	1955
9607 So. Long Beach Boulevard, South Gate, California	1956
420 Broadway, Santa Monica, California	1955

Thriftimart has similarly sold to individual operators or employees various of its older stores or entered into cooperative arrangements with older employees to let them take over a store as their own business. I estimate that between 1950 and 1960 we have disposed of some 15 stores in this fashion. The fact is that stores do become obsolete from the standpoint of a chain with its high labor costs which make operation of some stores unprofitable, whereas an individual operator can take over the same store and run it profitably as a family business because he does not have the high overhead. There are a large number of "graduates" of Thriftimart who are successfully running their own businesses today just as there are many such "graduates" of the other chains. Actually the chains furnish the training and experience and often the stores for many new competitors entering the business.

The grocery business is quite easy to enter and many do enter it each year. And those with ability, training and enterprise can and do succeed. It is a highly competitive business, however, and those unwilling or unable to work hard, make friends with their customers and give them first-class service at fair prices, will not and do not succeed. I am certain that I could start all over with one store today and make a great success of it. Many have done so in recent years and many I am sure will do so in the years to come.

In my opinion the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not lessened competition in this area or made it more difficult for any of the thousands of single store operators and small and larger chains here to compete. It kept two local chains in the hands of local people who have the respect of the entire industry.

AFFIDAVIT OF RICHARD RALPHS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

RICHARD RALPHS, being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am the President of Ralphs Grocery Company. Ralphs was started by my grandfather, George Albert Ralphs, ninety years ago in 1873, with a small grocery store on Sixth and Spring Streets, Los Angeles.. It remains a family business today. In the years which have passed, Ralphs Grocery Company has grown with nearly every community in this area. Today, we own and operate 45 modern supermarkets.

I think it is generally agreed that in the 1930's my father and his cousin, Walter W. Ralphs, Sr., originated the supermarket as it is known today. M. M. Zimmerman in the book "The Super Market" published by McGraw Hill Book Co., Inc. on pages 24 and 25 makes reference to Ralphs as the pioneer in this field. Another innovation that my father and his cousin came up with was the self-service idea, which replaced home delivery back in 1928. They also are generally credited as being first to provide ample free parking which made self-service possible. Later they introduced the single check-out gates, and extended self-service to include meats, baked goods, and fruits and vegetables.

Over the years many new grocery concerns have entered the business in this area. Many have been successful and, of course, some have been unsuccessful. It has always been a highly competitive business and it is today.

In a speech to the Food Industries Sales Managers Club on March 24, 1961, our General Manager, Gene Walsh, stated in part "Ralphs pledges to continue its leadership in the food industry in Southern California through better merchandising, the finest of store service facilities, the making of a fair and reasonable profit, and through financially sound growth." This accurately stated our policies for the future.

It is my opinion that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not lessened competition in the slightest. Because of strong cooperatives like Certified Grocers of California and Orange Empire, the many single store operators and the small chains can and do compete very effectively with the stores of the larger chains. In my opinion there is no danger that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag will lessen competition in this business or tend to create a monopoly in it.

AFFIDAVIT OF NEAL D. RAMSEY

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

NEAL D. RAMSEY, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Market Basket, a chain of retail grocery stores. I am a past regional director of the Supermarket Institute and a trustee and past chairman of the City of Hope's Allied Food Division. I have also served as President of the Western Association of Food Chains and as Vice President of the National Association of Food Chains.

I came to California from Auburn, Illinois, in 1922 and went to work as a clerk for Crown Emporium Stores, a retail grocery chain. Ultimately, I became a store manager for Crown Emporium and later was put in charge of inventory for that concern.

As a result of a series of transactions which took place in the late 1920's, Crown Emporium and six other chains were consolidated and ultimately became part of the Safeway chain, thus making Safeway by far the largest and most powerful factor in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles.

In 1930, Howard Geohegan and Arthur Cauthers opened the first Market Basket store in Pasadena. Later that year, I became associated with this firm and was put in charge of its second market. By 1933, Market Basket had opened six new stores, and I was made the firm's buyer.

Market Basket became a corporation in 1938. In 1940, when the company had 26 stores, I was elected to its Board of Directors. In 1946, I was made President of the company, a position I have held ever since.

Today, Market Basket has 55 stores. Most of them are located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, but we also have stores in San Bernardino and Riverside Counties as well. Our sales are approximately $120 million a year.

I believe that Market Basket's growth is a tribute to this country's system of free enterprise, which has permitted a concern which began with one market in the depths of a depression to succeed and grow by reason of hard work and thoughtful planning. For years now, I have heard that this record of accomplishment could not be duplicated today; that times are different and that business opportunity is no longer available to a newcomer in the retail grocery business. To my mind, such a belief is just so much nonsense. California and Los Angeles are still growing. New communities are springing up every day, and with them come new opportunities for the watchful, aggressive grocer, whether he is opening his first market or his sixtieth.

The past provides ample evidence of the success of small concerns in this business, and I firmly believe that a small concern or a company just opening its first store has as much chance of success—no, a greater chance of success—than it would have had 30 years ago. Remember that in the 30's we were mired down in a depression. Los Angeles had not yet begun its fantastic growth. We did not have the full advantages of strong cooperative buying groups such as Certified Grocers and Orange Empire Co-op. Safeway, a powerful national chain, had more stores and a larger share of the market than any chain does today. Yet, most of this area's larger chains began operations on a small scale in the 30's and were able to grow, in large part because of their membership in Certified. Today, the small concern has a good deal more going for it than ever before, and if the small concern of the 30's could succeed, so can the small concern of the 60's. In my opinion, there is plenty of opportunity today for the newcomer to open up a store in Los Angeles and to prosper if he knows what he is doing and is not afraid to work.

In March, 1960, Von's and Shopping Bag merged. Market Basket had at that time and still has a number of stores which are near enough to a Von's or Shopping Bag store to compete for the patronage of the same customers, and hence, I am in a good position to assess the impact of the merger on competition. In my opinion, the merger has not changed the vigor, intensity or character of competition in any way. Certainly Market Basket has not experienced any loss of business or been aware of any change in competition as a result of the merger. Since March, 1960, Market Basket's sales have increased in record amounts to record highs, and it has expanded at a more rapid rate than at any time in its history.

Von's and Shopping Bag stores offered stiff competition before the merger, and they still do. But stiff competition also faces Market Basket stores from numerous other chains and the hundreds of independents doing business in the Los Angeles area. We do not find it any more difficult to compete against a Von's or a Shopping Bag store now than before the merger, and I am confident that other Von's and Shopping Bag competitors will say the same thing. The merger simply has not changed competitive conditions in any way so far as I can see.

Nor do I see any chance that any chain or group of chains will dominate the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. There are just too many able competitors eager to expand their existing businesses and so much opportunity for others to enter the market to warrant a conclusion that only a few will succeed and eventually control the market. In fact, quite the opposite is likely to occur. It must be remembered that the number of grocery chains in Los Angeles is greater today than ever before. This area can be distinguished from other areas across the country by reason of the increase in number of chains of all sizes, as well as by the strength of its many independents. There is no reason to think that this trend toward an increasing number of competitors will not continue.

AFFIDAVIT OF TED R. WOOD

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

TED R. WOOD, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the president of Pantry Food Markets, a retail grocery concern which operates 10 grocery stores in Los Angeles County. I have been in the grocery business all my life. For 21 years, from 1933 to 1954, I was employed by Alpha Beta, a local chain of supermarkets. When I resigned in 1954 I held the position of store manager.

History of Pantry Food Markets

In 1954 a group, seven men who had been associates of mine, and I decided to start our own grocery business. We did this in the belief, based on our past experience, that a small concern could compete successfully and profitably in Los Angeles County. In fact, it was our then belief, which we have since confirmed in practice, that a single store operator or small chain who maintains an aggressive competitive policy and watches costs carefully can successfully compete and prosper and grow.

We invested our savings in our new business. In all, we began with $48,000.

A corporation was formed under the name of Pantry Food Markets. In March 1955, Pantry opened its first store at 141 South Marengo, Pasadena, and a second store was opened in July of the same year at 495 North Altadena Drive, Pasadena. Each of these stores faced competition from markets operated by a number of chains and independents, but as we had anticipated, we were able to compete successfully against those stores. In fact, our success has exceeded even our highest hopes. We found that we were doing very well, and within a year we were ready and able to expand our operations. In 1956 we added one other store to our chain. In 1957 we added another, and in 1958 another, all in the Pasadena-Altadena area. Pantry continued to prosper. From June 1959 to December 1961 we opened five new stores, one in Pasadena, one in Altadena, one in South Pasadena, one in Duarte, and one in Monrovia. In every one of those areas we faced competition from leading chains and independents, and in every case we were able to compete against them successfully.

I think that Pantry is a living example of the opportunity available in this area to an aggressive, capable grocer. The success of Pantry is proof that new concerns can enter the retail grocery business and within a relatively short time expand and prosper despite the intense competition offered by chains and other independents.

The Significance of Membership in a Cooperative Buying Organization

The reasons for Pantry's success are many. They include a large measure of hard work, conscientious effort and thoughtful planning. Also of tremendous significance was the experience which I and my associates gained as employees of a large chain. The training we received in that employment made possible our success when we started our own concern.

However, the primary reason for our ability to compete successfully has been our membership in Orange Empire Cooperative, a cooperative buying association sponsored by A. M. Lewis, Inc. Orange Empire, like Certified Grocers of California, provides the independent grocer with the opportunity to buy groceries at prices as favorable as those available to large chains which buy directly from original sources of supply. At the same time, cooperative membership permits the independent grocer to avoid the problems and headaches of running his own warehouse and distribution system. I found while with my former employer that such problems can often be of serious magnitude.

The existence of the large cooperative purchasing organizations in this area and the opportunity they have afforded smaller concerns such as Pantry of buying as cheaply as chains has placed the smaller concern on an equal footing with the chains. Success then depends on many other factors, such as providing courteous and friendly service, employing successful merchandising techniques, watching the pennies, and being able to maintain a flexibility sufficient to meet changing competitive conditions. In these respects I am of the view that an able and conscientious independent can out-compete a chain store.

Effect of the Von's-Shopping Bag Merger

I have been asked by attorneys for Von's to express an opinion with respect to the effect on competition of the Von's-Shopping Bag merger. In my opinion, that merger has had no effect whatever on the intensity of competition between retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. That competition has always been fierce, and the merger has not lessened it in any respect. It seems apparent to me that:

1. The merger did not eliminate a competitor or change competition. The stores previously operated by both Von's and Shopping Bag are still in operation today, competing against the same independent and chain stores as before the merger.

2. Competition has actually been enhanced since the merger by reason of the following developments:

a. The opening of new stores by new and existing concerns.

b. The entry into this market of a national chain, American Stores, through its acquisition of Alpha Beta. American Stores is a large concern, a keen and aggressive competitor, and Alpha Beta can be expected to become of increasing competitive significance in Los Angeles.

c. The innovation of selling food through discount houses or other discount outlets, a development which seems to be here to stay and which has grown in importance in the last two years or so.

Actually the recent developments cited above do more than emphasize the competitive vigor in this area. They show that the grocery business in Los Angeles is in flux and subject to change, as it has always been. There has never been an opportunity for any grocer to relax or to become complacent or to ignore changing conditions, for as soon as he does, he finds a competitor taking his business.

By the same token, in my opinion, no chain or group of chains has been or will be able to dominate this market. With independents placed in a position to compete on equal terms with larger concerns by reason of cooperative buying, with opportunities available for new chains to develop and grow, with the ability and aggressive characteristics of many hundreds of separate competitors, and with the continuing prospect of innovations in food retailing which in the past have always led to keener competition, no one concern could possibly achieve a position of dominance. Under the circumstances, I cannot conceive of the possibility that this market will fall into the hands of one or even a few concerns. I view the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag with indifference. In my opinion it cannot possibly affect me, or, for that matter, any of the hundreds of grocers in this area.

AFFIDAVITS OF VON'S OFFICERS

* * * * * * *

AFFIDAVIT OF CHARLES VON DER AHE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CHARLES VON DER AHE, being first duly sworn, deposes and states as follows:

I am Chairman of the Board of Von's Grocery Co. I am eighty years of age and I have been engaged in the business of food distribution and merchandising in the Los Angeles area for 57 years. I am the father of five sons and three daughters. One of my sons is a member of the Society of Jesus, at Loyola University of Los Angeles; one is a doctor of medicine, practicing in Los Angeles, and three are associated with me in Von's Grocery Co. which they started in 1932. Some of my thirty-five grandchildren also work for Von's Grocery Co.

In 1902 at the age of 19 I decided to leave Illinois and come to the West Coast as I had heard many great stories about California and the opportunities open to men who were not afraid of hard work and adventure. A few years thereafter I found employment in a small butcher shop known as Luer's Butcher Shop in Los Angeles and I began to save my money so that I could own and operate a grocery store of my own.

In 1906 I was able to buy the F. N. Velsey Grocery Store and Meat Market which was located at 7th and Figueroa Streets in Los Angeles where Barker Bros. department store now stands. This was a typical small grocery store of that day and I doubt that we carried as many as 400 different grocery items to choose from. Compare this with the first supermarkets of the late 1930's and early 1940's which carried approximately 1000 items and today's supermarkets which stock up to 8000 items, most of which are new or basically greatly improved.

My first store was not a great success because less than a year after I bought it I found that my landlord planned to raze the building. I was thus forced to sell my stock and for several years to work for other grocers until I could save enough money to open my own store again. I was finally able again to open my own market at 48th Street and Vermont Avenue. In 1914 I acquired a second store at 61st and Broadway and in the following years I added more stores until by 1928 my firm had 87 grocery outlets. I believe I was able to achieve this success because of sound merchandising, fair prices, and by stressing service and courtesy to the customers. These are principles which I endeavored to inculcate in my sons and I am proud to say that since they started the present Von's Grocery Co. in 1932 these principles have been constantly adhered to.

The growth of my business was also greatly helped by the expanding population in this area and it seems to me that this factor will continue to make the grocery business profitable and successful in this area.

Shortly after I commenced doing business as a grocer in the Los Angeles area, it became apparent to me and to other smaller operators that we could obtain our groceries at a better price and sell them to the public cheaper if we had a cooperative buying organization. At that time there were a number of wholesalers who also operated retail stores doing business in this area, such as Chaffee, which operated the chain of retail stores called Acme Groceterias, and there were other chains such as Jevne, Albert Cohen, Ralphs and Newberry, who were able to obtain their groceries at a lesser price than the smaller operators. Accordingly, my father-in-law, A. O. Luer, and I and seven other grocers, including Jules Revere and Charles Mottaz, organized Spartan Grocers, which I believe was the first retailer-owned cooperative buying organization in this area. It preceded the organization of Certified Grocers of California by a number of years. Prior to the organization of Spartan by myself and the other grocers I have referred to, we had to pay the wholesalers' mark-up, which was high, and then we had to add a mark-up for our own profit, but after we commenced buying through Spartan, we added a mark-up to cover our costs and the profit and were thus able to sell our groceries to the public at a cheaper price.

In 1928 I sold my 87 stores to MacMarr, Inc. which later became part of Safeway Stores. I recall at that time fear was expressed by some that Safeway would have a virtual monopoly on the grocery business in this area and no one could start a new grocery store and compete with Safeway. This was utter nonsense, of course, as my sons and hundreds of other presently successful grocers in this area have demonstrated in the succeeding years.

I recall that in the early days the chains which could buy directly from manufacturers did in fact have a great price advantage over the single store operator or the smaller chain and the food wholesalers and brokers got together and tried to persuade the food manufacturers not to sell to the chains. This led the government to bring an action under the Sherman Act against the wholesalers and food brokers and they were enjoined from pursuing this course of action. (See United States v. Southern California Wholesale Grocers Ass'n., et al. (S.D. Cal. 1925) 7 Federal 2d 944.) This advantage that the chains had led to the formation of Spartan, as mentioned above, and also to the organization of Certified Grocers of California, a larger retailer-owned cooperative buying organization, by the grocers in this area so that they could have the same advantages of mass purchasing that the chains enjoyed. Certified is a cooperative wholly owned by its retailer-members. I believe it today is the largest grocery-purchasing organization in the United States and membership in it gives even the single store operator the same purchasing advantages of the largest chains. In my opinion, if there is a single most important factor which has prevented this market from being dominated by a few chains and which will continue to ensure the ability of the single store operator and small chain to compete successfully in this area it is the existence of Certified Grocers.

Certified does far more for its members than simply purchasing groceries for them at low prices. It has, for example, specialists in advertising, store location and layout, a line of special brands which it manufactures itself; it furnishes its members accounting service if they want it, and it has now organized a new company, known as Grocers Equipment Co., to help its members obtain equipment at the lowest possible price and to provide financing on reasonable terms to qualified members.

In my lifetime in the grocery business in this area I have witnessed many changes and innovations in food distribution. In the early days the salesmen calling on our stores used horse and buggy transportation and we purchased such commodities as crackers, molasses, kerosene and Coca Cola syrup in barrels. Service then was over-the-counter, and choice of product was very limited. The area served by a particular store was very limited since most customers traveled by foot, and the average store was only 40 to 50 feet wide and deep. Most of these small stores have gradually been closed over the past 25 years although a few of them still remain in certain areas. These small stores became obsolete, just like the buggy-makers, because of the preference of the American consumer for a better way of life. But the individually owned and operated supermarket can do just as well as the chain store. Competition in this business is on a store-to-store basis, and the aggressive and intelligent single store operator can do just as well if not better than a store of any of the chains.

I have read the statements furnished to our attorneys by the Government attorneys as to what certain persons if called to testify would testify to. I refer to the statements of Adrian Bynum, Artie L. Carpenter, Richard Dick, Manuel Gertmenian, Roderick A. Irvine, James E. Ledgerwood, Robert J. Logue, Ernest A. Mekjian, Paul Palmer and Jack Swerdlick. I assume they are correct when they say there has been a decline in the number of single store operators in this area since 1950. I know, for example, there has also been a decline in the number of stores operated by many chains. A & P once had over 15,000 stores in this country and I understand it now has fewer than 4,000. This is a part of the replacement of the smaller, older stores by the large, modern supermarkets. Part of the decline in number of "single store grocery retailers" is also no doubt due to their own growth into a two store or larger chain. Mr. Irvine, I note, was a single store operator for a time, and when he acquired a second market it obviously resulted in a decline in the number of "single store grocery retailers".

I am puzzled by the reiteration in said statements that the large chains which run their own warehouses have "an advantage over independents and small chains in terms of inventory control". From my own experience I can state flatly that if the single or two store operator is unable to have absolute inventory control then he is indeed a poor operator. Certainly his problem is far less in this respect than the complicated inventory and distribution problems of the larger chains. And as for the reiterated statement that the single store operators and small chains "do not have their own highly developed distribution system," I would answer that of course they do not, and they do not need one with such a small business.

When Von's and others organized Jerseymaid, the dairy cooperative, they were all relatively small concerns. Other competitors organized similar concerns such as Golden Creme Farms. This opportunity is not foreclosed to anyone, and I have no doubt that if the vast Certified Grocers membership felt it necessary or advantageous they would have Certified handle dairy and even meat and produce items. I am informed and based on my many years of experience I believe that the able single store operator can do just as well in terms of price and quality on purchases of meat and produce as the large chain.

As for the statements that the eight, nine, fifteen and twenty largest chains increased their share of the market between 1950 and 1958, I believe it is correct and it is worth noting that the market shares of Safeway and Ralphs, the leaders, declined in this period. And with over 4000 separate grocery concerns doing business in this area today and with the twenty largest companies having only about 50% of the business between them, the suggestion that there is a danger of monopoly of the business in my opinion borders on the ridiculous.

There is vigorous competition in the retail grocery business in this area and I note that each of the statements say that the proposed Government witness would testify "that he faces very vigorous competition from Von's." I am sure this is true and I am certain that it will continue to be true. Vigorous competition, in my opinion, is essential to the public interest. The merger with Shopping Bag did not, in my opinion, lessen competition at all. There were good business, personal and tax reasons for the merger and I am certain that no competitor has been or could be hurt by the merger, and competition has not been lessened in this area.

In my many years in the grocery business I have witnessed great strides in food manufacturing, distribution and marketing. Some may wish a return to the cracker barrel days of the small corner grocery but I do not think the public would stand for it. The public demands and requires a wide selection of reasonably priced groceries at a clean, attractive and convenient location and it gets it in this area. Government figures that I read in a recent issue of the Commercial Bulletin showed that prices at the grocery store for the Government's standard market basket in 1962 were only 2% over that in 1952, whereas the Government's price index for all items excluding food rose 17% in the same decade. When one considers the tremendous increase in wages for employees in this period he is forced to agree with the recent statement of Secretary of Agriculture Freeman that food is a great bargain.

In recent years we have seen the development of discount houses selling groceries and countless other items, drug stores selling groceries, liquor stores selling groceries, the development of bantam stores, and now I have read that certain large oil companies are planning to sell groceries at their gas stations. This is an ever-changing and ever-improving business and in my opinion there always has been and there is today great opportunity for the able and hard-working man to enter into the business and to succeed. Since competition is obviously on a store-by-store basis, I do not think there is the slightest possibility of a lessening of competition or a monopoly in this business in this area.

I can think of only one area where the larger and well-capitalized chain has an advantage over the small chain and single store operators, and that is in getting space in shopping centers. Various bills have been introduced in Congress which if enacted would give financial assistance to the smaller operators who desire space in a shopping center. Each of the statements of the proposed Government witnesses mentions this problem, but breaking up the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could not possibly help them in this respect—or any, for that matter. This is a matter where only Congress can help the small operator, and I hope it does.

AFFIDAVIT OF W. R. HAYDEN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

W. R. HAYDEN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am Senior Vice President of and the largest single stockholder of Von's Grocery Co. (hereinafter referred to as "Von's"). Prior to the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag Food Stores (hereinafter called "Shopping Bag") on March 28, 1960, I was the President of and the largest stockholder of Shopping Bag. Indeed, although stock of Shopping Bag was publicly held there was not a very large market in the stock and I and members of my family owned approximately 60% of the stock of Shopping Bag. Shopping Bag basically was a "family" business developed from a first store opened in 1930 to a 38-store chain by March of 1960.

Prior Experience in the Grocery Business

I came to California from Kentucky in 1926 at the age of 22 and soon found employment as a clerk in one of the small grocery stores of the E. A. Morrison Grocery Company. This company was a local grocery chain which had the grocery departments in approximately 50 stores in Los Angeles. At that time the stores averaged from 4000 to 6000 square feet and they consisted of the grocery department, the meat department and the produce department, each under separate ownership and management.

In 1928 the E. A. Morrison Company, the then Von's chain of about 87 small grocery departments, and the Humpty Dumpty chain of about the same size were merged into one grocery company which was named MacMarr Grocery Company. Prior to this merger I had been appointed manager of one of the E. A. Morrison markets and following the merger I was promoted to Supervisor of the Grocery Department for the Hollywood District. I held this position until 1930 when I resigned to form my own company.

In October of 1930, W. D. Rorex, also a former E. A. Morrison Company employee, and I formed a partnership and purchased one of the stores of the MacMarr chain. About a year later, in 1931, we opened our second store. We opened two more stores in each of the depression years of 1932 and 1933, and in 1933 we dissolved the partnership and incorporated as Shopping Bag Markets (the name was changed to Shopping Bag Food Stores in 1947). I became President and General Manager of the corporation and Mr. Rorex became Vice President. He retired in 1945 and passed away in 1952. Our business was successful and in 1934 we opened seven more grocery departments in small stores. In each of our stores the grocery, meat and produce departments were separately owned and operated.

Our first store of large size was opened in 1935 in the city of Montrose, Los Angeles County, in direct competition with stores of Safeway, A & P, and Piggly Wiggly. We were able to and did meet the competition of these larger chains because our membership in Certified Grocers enabled us to buy our groceries at competitive prices and because we emphasized courtesy and service to our customers.

All building was curtailed with the commencement of World War II. By that time Shopping Bag Markets was a chain of 12 grocery departments in moderate to small size stores. With the end of World War II, however, we began an active building program to the point that by 1960 we had a total of 38 stores. By the late '30's the concept of separately owned grocery, meat and produce departments in small stores had begun to change to one of a larger store of from 20,000 to 30,000 square feet and all departments owned and operated by the same management. All of our stores built after 1945 were of this type with the grocery, meat, produce, delicatessen, liquor and junior department store (clothing items) departments owned and operated by Shopping Bag.

This short statement of the beginnings and the growth of Shopping Bag may give the impression that it was easy, but of course it was not. For example, when we opened our second store my working hours increased from about 14 to 18 hours a day because I had to take a truck and shuffle goods from one store to another which might be in short supply. And my family and I made sacrifices in order to build a successful business.

Ability to Enter the Grocery Business

People in general may not be as willing today to make the sacrifices and put in the hard work necessary to start from scratch to build up a successful business. However, most of the larger chains in this area got their start at about the same time and developed in about the same way as Shopping Bag. I have in mind in this connection Von's, Alexander's, Thriftimart and Market Basket. This is also true of other chains which started after World War II, such as Shoppers, Hughes, Pantry Food and many others. I have no doubt at all that if I were 30 years younger and not so tired I could start out again today with no more than I had in 1930 and in 30 years I could build up a chain of 38 stores just as I did before. I realize it costs more rent to lease a store now, or to buy one, but financing is available through suppliers, or the Bank of America and other banks, or through the Small Business Administration for persons with experience, integrity and know-how. Financing a small business is a much easier proposition today than it ever was in the 1930's. Moreover, just as my business started with the purchase of one store from the MacMarr chain, so today others can get their start by purchasing or acquiring the lease on a store which one of the chains decides to dispose of. I know a large number of successful grocers in this area have got their start in this way. Shopping Bag in recent years has sold to individuals or small chains the following stores and they are still being operated either by the purchaser or a successor:

1700 Block North Vermont, Los Angeles
5000 Block Fountain Avenue, Hollywood
866 North Virgil Avenue, Los Angeles
2200 Las Tunas Boulevard, Temple City
625 Garfield Avenue, Monterey Park
2225 Whittier Boulevard, Whittier
2260 Colorado Boulevard, Pasadena
6625 Foothill Boulevard, Tujunga
1849 South San Gabriel, San Gabriel

Thriftimart has long made it a practice when it decides to discontinue one of its stores to give one of its older employees a chance to take it over and run it as his own business. Other chains such as Alpha Beta and Mayfair have sold a number of their stores to individuals or small chain operators. Obviously, it is not possible for the average person just starting his own business to open up in a new, large supermarket. It never was. But in my opinion the man with experience and know-how can start out in a small way and prosper in the grocery business just as easily today as one could thirty years ago. The individual grocer, whether he operates a small store or a supermarket, who makes himself a part of his community and who makes a point of friendly and courteous service can draw customers just as easily as the large store of one of the chains. But, of course, it is not enough simply to draw customers. The operator, whether single store or chain, must have adequate financing and be able to manage the use of his money in order to keep his business solvent and profitable. He must be able to organize his store and his employees to obtain maximum efficiency at minimum cost. This includes the handling of merchandise with the least effort, time and expense. He must have some knowledge of when, what and how much to buy, and know how to price competitively, and at the same time cover the cost of his merchandise and expenses. He must also be able to interest customers through advertising or attractive window and interior displays, and he must be able to provide the special services which appeal to customers in his particular community. In addition, he must be able to keep complete and current financial and other records, select and train the proper personnel, and, above all, he must be a good manager. Ambition and money are not enough to succeed in the grocery business, or in any other business, in my opinion. The principal requirement is sound management.

I have recently read a study of small business which was published by the United States Small Business Administration entitled "The First Two Years: Problems of Small Firm Growth and Survival." That book states:

> "The haphazard, unplanned way in which a number of firms were established doomed some of them from the start. In some cases, the initial decisions were so wrong that the owners themselves recognized them shortly after opening and closed their doors rapidly before the damage became extensive. A number of other owners, however, were not aware of the inevitability of failure and continued in operation until their resources were exhausted."

Those of us who have been in the grocery business in the past 35 years have seen many examples of just this sort of failure in the grocery business. But we have also seen very many examples of persons who knew the facts of the business start out from scratch and become highly successful. There always has been and there is today strong competition in the grocery business in this area. The rapid growth in population has given great opportunity to those with know-how and ability, and the future population growth which we can expect in this area means to me that these opportunities will continue to exist for a long time. This is a business in which it is easy to enter and to prosper and succeed, but it is also easy to fail in this business whether one is a single store operator or a chain if ability and know-how are lacking or management is not sound. If I and the many others who got started as single store operators in the 1930's or 1940's or 1950's could, as we did, compete successfully with the chains, the only thing that can prevent someone starting out today from doing the same thing is lack of ability, initiative or know-how.

Reasons for the Merger With Von's

I had both personal and business reasons for welcoming the opportunity to merge Shopping Bag with Von's. In the fifteen years following World War II I gave virtually all of my attention to building and running a successful business. I think in this time I may have expanded the number of stores too rapidly without giving sufficient consideration to developing a strong staff to take over if something should happen to me. Although Shopping Bag had become a 38-store chain, I made all of the important decisions concerning operations, new store locations and the like. I had capable men working with me but they, like myself, were getting along in years and I began to have doubts as to whether the business would continue to operate successfully if something happened to me. I was also concerned by the fact that the Shopping Bag net profits in relation both to assets and to sales were considerably lower than those of other comparable chains. I was concerned that if I should die a very substantial part of my stock would have to be sold to pay estate and inheritance taxes and that a fair price for my stock would not have been obtained and management of the company after my death might not be adequate. Although stock of Shopping Bag was publicly held, the great bulk of it was owned by me and members of my family, and there was not an active market in the stock. I was conscious of the fact that having spent a lifetime building the business without having planned carefully for management succession, a decline in or failure of the business following my death could have very bad effects on my family, the employees and the community. In addition to all of the foregoing, I was frankly getting a little tired of the day-to-day problems and wanted to start taking life a little easier. These were the personal reasons which led me to favor the merger. There were equally good business reasons. I owed an obligation to the people who had invested in my company to see that they got an adequate return on their investment and that it would continue to be secure. I have known the Von der Ahe family for 34 years and I had great confidence in their integrity, their business ability and their fairness. I also knew they had a very able and deep management staff that could continue to run the business successfully. Von's net after taxes both in relation to assets and net profits was one of the best in the entire industry. They were an outstanding and successful group in whom I had great confidence. Moreover, the Von's stores were located primarily in the west and south portions of the area and those of Shopping Bag were located primarily in the east and north sections. There was hardly any area where the stores of the two companies competed for the same customers. It seemed apparent to me that a merger with Von's would permit savings in warehousing and advertising, be beneficial to Shopping Bag stockholders, and give greater security to my family and the Shopping Bag stockholders.

As a result of the merger we have been able to get the Von's stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange and now there is a much wider and better market for the stock.

The fact is that I considered the merger with Von's to be in the best interest of Shopping Bag and its stockholders and of myself and my family, and this has proved to be a sound judgment. I have no doubt that I could have arranged to sell or merge Shopping Bag with one of the very large national chains such as Kroger, Food Fair, National Tea, ACF Wrigley or others which are not yet in this market. Food Fair has now entered this market by operating supermarkets in various new discount houses and by operating the bankrupt Fox Markets. Since Shopping Bag merged with Von's, American Stores, the nation's fourth largest chain, has also entered this market by acquiring Alpha Beta. However, I preferred to deal with Von's, a local chain with local origins, because I knew the management of Von's and had complete confidence in them.

Naturally I am troubled by the pending action. Perhaps there would have been no action filed if I had sold out to one of the large national chains I have mentioned. I am advised that the Department of Justice investigated the merger of Alpha Beta and American Stores in 1961, but it did not file any action challenging the legality of that merger. I do not think that that merger lessened competition at all, and I am equally certain that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger did not lessen competition in the slightest. If anything, our stores have been upgraded and have become more efficient competitors. Obviously I am not an expert on the merger law but I recognize that if a merger did in fact give a company some power to control prices or eliminate competitors or control the market it should be prevented. But our merger with Von's does not give us power at all over competition or prices or any dominant position. There are actually thousands of strong concerns in this area and in my opinion the chain, whether large or small, has absolutely no competitive advantage over the able single store operator who has membership in Certified Grocers or A. M. Lewis Orange Empire. If this were not true, then in my opinion only A & P, Safeway and Ralphs would exist in this market today because all were strong chains when the rest of us started doing business in the 1930's, 1940's and 1950's. The undeniable fact is that we were able to and did compete successfully against stores of these chains, and it is equally true that the single store operators and smaller chains today can and do compete successfully against stores of Von's-Shopping Bag.

I do not see how it would have been more beneficial to competition for Shopping Bag to sell to some large national chain, or to liquidate, or to go into probable future decline, and yet these were the probable alternatives to the merger with Von's. Certainly I would not want to take the responsibility for running Shopping Bag again if this merger should be held to be illegal.

From my own experience in the industry for 37 years, I do not think there is the slightest possibility that there will ever be just a few or, for that matter, even a few hundred companies doing business in this area. The chains such as Von's, Safeway, Ralphs, Alpha Beta, Thriftimart and many others furnish the basic training ground for the persons who will, as they have for years, start their own businesses and prosper. Fortunately, it is not difficult to get started in this business and because of the buying advantages available through Certified Grocers the individual operator is very nearly if not completely on an equal footing with his chain store competitors. Some will fail just as some chains have failed and will fail, but many others will succeed just as many have in the past. Competition in this business has always been vigorous and healthy and I cannot foresee that situation changing at all.

The Reduction in Numbers of Stores

There has been a gradual disappearance of a large number of the older very small stores which characterized this market when I first came here in 1926. The obvious reason for this is the development of supermarkets, greater use of the automobile, the public demand for a wider choice of goods at a convenient location and at a fair price. Many of the older, very small neighborhood groceries have continued to survive but their numbers are naturally declining. On the other hand, in the past 15 years particularly, supermarkets have been constructed in great numbers in this area to serve the needs of the increasing population. There are few if any localities in this area, in my judgment, where the housewife does not have a choice of a number of competing stores within convenient shopping distance. The decline in the number of small stores has not in my opinion resulted in lesser competition. Just the opposite is true. The fact is that in the days before the widespread use of the automobile and the development of the supermarket, the small neighborhood grocery store frequently had no competition at all and therefore pretty much of a monopoly of the business in the immediate area of his store. I have been advised that the government attorneys contend that this gradual disappearance of the small stores means there is a tendency to monopoly in the grocery business in this area. I am certain that no one who has the slightest experience in the grocery business would agree with that contention.

AFFIDAVIT OF THEODORE A. VON DER AHE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Von's Grocery Co., hereinafter referred to as "Von's". My father, Charles Von der Ahe, is Chairman of the Board of the Company; my brother Wilfred is Executive Vice President; W. R. Hayden, who was formerly the President of Shopping Bag Food Stores which merged with Von's in March of 1960, is Senior Vice President of Von's, and his brother, W. D. Hayden, is Assistant Operations Manager of Von's.

Background in the Grocery Business

I was virtually born into the grocery business. In 1908, when I was born, my grandfather, A. O. Luer, was running a very small grocery store at the northeast corner of 23rd and Magnolia Avenue in Los Angeles. My father, Charles Von der Ahe, worked in this store as a clerk. Mr. Luer subsequently opened a second market which he later, in 1914, sold to my father in order to enter the meat provisioning business. I worked in my father's store (and later stores) during after-school hours and on Saturdays, holidays and summer vacations until the year 1927 when I left day school (second year pre-legal) to run my father's grocery warehouse at 6100 South Central Avenue, Los Angeles. I continued to act as warehouse foreman until 1929 when my father sold his chain (which by then consisted of 87 grocery concessions in small stores) to MacMarr Stores. I believe it is of interest that the total gross sales of my father's chain of 87 grocery concessions were in the neighborhood of $3 million annually and that today there are a large number of single supermarkets in this area which do that much gross business in a year.

When my father sold his chain to MacMarr Stores, I went to work for MacMarr Stores as "Short Buyer", that is, the person in charge of replacement buying. MacMarr Stores was a chain which was built up in 1927-1929 by acquiring a number of western chains such as that of my father's, E. A. Morrison, Humpty Dumpty, Crown Emporium and others in the Los Angeles area. I believe E. A. Morrison had from 70 to 80 stores and Humpty Dumpty had about 25 when they sold out to MacMarr Stores. In 1931 MacMarr Stores sold out to Safeway which had earlier acquired the Piggly Wiggly chain, and so by 1931 Safeway had over 1000 stores in this area.

In 1930 I resigned my job with MacMarr Stores so that I could devote more time to my law studies at night at Loyola Law School. During the daytime I worked for Henry Bodkin and Jerry Giesler, attorneys. I graduated from law school in 1931—LLB, 1932—LLM. But I did not pass my bar examination and these were depression times, so I decided to go into the grocery business which I knew something about. Accordingly, in March of 1932 my father put up $2500 which we used to open a grocery department in a very small (50 feet by 95 feet) store in Lynwood, California. In most stores in those days the grocery department, the meat department and the produce department were all separately owned and operated. The sales in this store were from $2000 to $2500 per week.

As an example of the ability of the individual operator to compete with a chain, directly across the street from this Lynwood store was a Pay 'n Takit store, one of the stores of the Pay 'n Takit Division of Safeway. I was able to and did meet the prices of this Pay 'n Takit market and I am sure did a better business than it did. As a matter of fact, when the Long Beach earthquake of 1933 destroyed our Lynwood store and also damaged the Pay 'n Takit, they moved out of the building and never came back to compete with us. We then bought this building and moved our store into it and Western Auto Supply took over our former building.

When the 1933 Long Beach earthquake occurred and completely collapsed our Lynwood store, it was several days before we could do anything about it because martial law had been declared in the area. As soon as we could, however, we got approval of the City Engineer to jack up the roof of the store with heavy jacks and then build up the walls around it and open for business. We arranged to jack up the roof and restore the building, and our suppliers were good enough to replace the merchandise which had been destroyed. After the earthquake some other stores in the area increased their prices, but as soon as we were able to open we ran a "hot" ad which announced special reduced prices on a number of items. This ad attracted a lot of new customers to our store. I believe these customers were grateful that we did not attempt to profiteer from the situation and they remained good customers, both before and after we moved across the street to the new location. As a matter of fact our gross, which prior to the earthquake had run between $2000 and $2500 per week, jumped to $3500 per week and remained around that figure thereafter.

In December of 1932 the partnership of my father, my brother Wilfred and I opened up the grocery concession in the small Davidson's Market in North Long Beach, California. This also was destroyed by the 1933 earthquake. In 1934 we opened another grocery concession in a market at Beverly Boulevard and Crescent Heights, Los Angeles, and also constructed a market at Third and Kenmore in Los Angeles. Our business prospered because of the hard work and sacrifice that I and members of my family put into it. In the years following and prior to World War II, our partnership developed as follows:

1. The grocery concession in the small El Adobe Market on Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. This concession we later sold about 1937. It is still being operated successfully as a grocery store.
2. The grocery department in the City Food Mart at Yucca and Argyle in Hollywood, which we later disposed of about 1938.
3. The grocery and delicatessen concession in a market at 320 East Manchester, Inglewood. This we later sold also.
4. The master lease on a market building at 1020 West Manchester Boulevard, Los Angeles. We later sold this store and it is still being operated as a market.
5. Construction of a market at 1020 South Fairfax, Los Angeles.
6. Construction of a market at 8th and Irolo, Los Angeles.
7. Lease of a market at 9th and Alvarado, Los Angeles.

8. Purchase of a market at Olympic and Crenshaw.
9. Construction of a market at 1500 West Pico, Los Angeles.
10. Construction of a market at 5100 South Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles.

In most of the early markets we operated the grocery department only. The meat, bakery, delicatessen and produce departments were operated by others. Commencing in 1939 we started to run the produce departments which, up to that time, had been operated by others. We also began operating the meat and delicatessen departments.

During World War II there was a building moratorium, but following the war we opened a large supermarket at Crenshaw and Santa Barbara, Los Angeles. With this store we were able to demonstrate to developers our ability to operate a large market, and we thereafter had no difficulty in securing other locations, such as Pico and Westwood Boulevard in West Los Angeles in 1949, a store in Van Nuys in 1950, and thereafter additional stores which were all of the large, supermarket type, as contrasted with our first twelve stores which, for the most part, were very small.

I take pride in the fact that in the 28 years from 1932 to 1960 my family and I had developed a chain of 28 stores doing business in this area and giving employment to 2150 employees. I do not suggest that we were unusual, because anyone else who wanted to put in the hard work and self-sacrifice could have done the same thing, and many did. Market Basket was formed in 1930 and developed in much the same manner, and so did Shopping Bag, Alexander's, Boys, Alpha Beta, Thriftimart, and others. Shoppers Markets have grown from a one-store operation in 1946 to a 14-store chain. Hughes Markets (13 stores), Pantry Markets (11 stores), Michael's Markets (7 stores) and many others are late comers in the business, starting in the 1950's or 1960's, and they have grown and prospered.

Competition in the Retail Grocery Business Today

According to the Board of Equalization figures obtained by the Government in this case there were 4,741 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties in 1961. 3818 of those stores were separately owned and operated as so-called independent stores. According to Godfrey Lebhar of Chain Store Age and Business Guides, Inc., today there are 150 concerns which operate two or more stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. By comparing these figures, it is apparent that the grocery business in Los Angeles is conducted by 3968 separate concerns operating more than 4,700 stores. I am not an economist but I am amazed that the Government economist could call this a "concentrated" industry in this area.

It appears to me that the trend in grocery retailing in this area is toward a lesser degree of concentration and the figures developed by Mr. Lebhar confirm my opinion. Mr. Lebhar points out that in 1953 there were 96 concerns which operated two or more stores each. By 1962 there were 150 such concerns. The smallest of these companies—those with only two or three stores—showed the greatest numerical growth, having increased from 56 in 1953 to 104 in 1962.

The number of chains with ten or more stores also increased in number from 10 to 24 in the ten years since 1953, according to Mr. Lebhar. It is interesting to note that of those 24 concerns:

(1) 19 are of local origin and even today all but a few of their stores are located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties;
(2) 14 had less than 10 stores each in 1953; and
(3) 7 were not in business at all as chains in 1953.

In all, since 1953, 174 new concerns operating two or more stores each have entered the grocery business in Los Angeles. While some of them have failed, some have cut back their operations, and some have been acquired by other concerns, no less than 103 of them remain today as new, independent, competitive factors.

Many of these firms, together with the firms that existed in this area prior to 1953, have expanded their businesses by opening new stores. I doubt there is a single Von's store which faces competition from fewer stores in its immediate trading area today than it did ten years ago. On the contrary, in the majority of areas now served by a Von's store we are facing competition from a greater number of stores than at any time in the past. Competition from both new and old stores operated by both new and old concerns, whether they be independents, small chains or large chains, has increased, in my opinion, in the last decade, and it certainly has not diminished since our merger with Shopping Bag in March 1960.

Thus, I was surprised to see, and I question the accuracy of statistics obtained by the Government's attorneys from the California Board of Equalization which indicate that there are fewer grocery stores now than there were in 1948. If these figures are in any way accurate, however, I am confident that the following factors more than any others have contributed to the decline in number of stores:

1. Over the past several years the average housewife has indicated by her shopping habits that she likes to shop in large supermarkets. This has had its effect on the small corner grocery stores which were about the only type of stores which served Los Angeles in the years when I first started in the grocery business. As a result, both chains and independents have built larger stores which serve more people, and a number of smaller stores have, at the same time, been closed down. For example, over the last several years, Safeway has closed down a large number of its smaller stores and has built larger supermarkets to take their place. A & P in 1940 had approximately 15,000 stores and now it has about 4,000 which do a greater annual gross business. Because these larger stores serve more people than two or three older, smaller stores, Safeway has fewer stores today than it did ten years ago, but I'm sure that its sales are greater than in prior years. This trend toward larger stores has been reflected throughout the Los Angeles metropolitan area and has probably resulted in a decline, at least in certain areas, in the number of grocery stores.

2. The vast freeway system which has been constructed in the Los Angeles metropolitan area since 1948, together with other types of public improvements such as schools, municipal buildings and the like, have undoubtedly caused the closing of a number of stores particularly in East Los Angeles and the southwestern section of Los Angeles County, either by the actual condemnation of the store itself, or the destruction of the homes which it served.

Also, I have some reason to doubt the accuracy of the Board of Equalization statistics, and in any case, I am confident that those statistics do not give a true picture of business success or failure, for the following reasons:

1. Government Exhibit No. B7(b) filed in connection with their Motion For Summary Judgment is a chart prepared by the Board of Equalization which is entitled "Analysis of the Gross Sales of the Grocery Stores Opened In 1960 and Closed by November 15, 1961." This chart shows a total of 81, of which 63 are shown to have had annual sales of under $500,000. My attorneys then asked the Board of Equalization to break this figure of 63 down further and they were supplied with the chart which I am attaching as Exhibit A to my affidavit. It will be seen from a reference to this chart that someone in the Board of Equalization cannot add very well because the next to last column totals 62 instead of 52 and the last column totals 73 instead of 63. It will also be seen that 66 of the 73 had annual sales of under $200,000 and 29 of these had annual sales of under $50,000. A supermarket in this area has sales from $1 million to $7 or more million, so a store with annual sales of under $200,000 is obviously a very small store, and one with annual sales of under $50,000 can hardly be classified as a grocery store in this day and age. If you figure a net of 3% after taxes, the $50,000 gross sales would produce an income of only $1500 a year.

2. Government Exhibit B-6 filed with its Motion For Summary Judgment is a chart entitled "Grocery Store Openings and Closings in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area for the Calendar Year 1960." This chart shows that the chains (defined as two or more stores) had 119 openings and 42 closings and there were 128 openings and 260 closings by an independent (defined as a single store operator). I think it is of interest that there were more openings by independents than by chains. I think it is also of interest that our attorneys asked for and obtained the names and addresses of the stores listed on the Government chart which the Board of Equalization records indicate were closed, and this list of names and addresses contained 24 duplications, 15 which were not grocery stores, 16 where there had been no closing at all, 71 where a successor had purchased the store, 19 which had moved to a new location, 31 closed because of a freeway, and 18 closed because of the death, retirement or illness of the owner. This information is discussed in greater detail in the affidavit of Mr. Pasini.

3. I have read the proposed stipulation as to testimony of John B. Marshall of the State Board of Equalization which the Government has submitted to our attorneys and this statement illustrates to my mind the fallacy of drawing conclusions from bare statistics. This statement refers to plaintiff's Exhibits 33 and 34 and concludes in paragraph 6: "These reflect the extent to which the number of chain grocery stores are increasing while the number of independent grocery stores are decreasing in an area of increasing population." The difficulty with that conclusion is that if a single store operator acquires a second store, Mr. Marshall would conclude that this means a decrease in the number of independent grocery stores, because he defines a chain as a concern "filing consolidated returns for two or more stores." It frequently happens that a successful single store operator will open a second store, but simply because by that action he becomes a "chain" it does not follow to me that the number of independent grocery stores has decreased.

When the owner of a small Mom & Pop store dies or retires it probably often does mean the closing of an independent simply because there are better opportunities for the children than running a small Mom & Pop store. I have read the report of the Temporary National Economic Committee published in 1940 and it is apparent to me from that report why a large number of small grocery stores have been closed in the last twenty years. That report states:

> "Even more astonishing is the fact that out of a total of about 305,000 grocery and combination stores in the United States, more than 130,000 have sales of less than $5,000 per year. Many of these are operated with family labor, and do not represent the entire source of family income. Also, they provide the families of the proprietors with food at wholesale prices. But it is nevertheless self-evident that they cannot sell at reasonable prices to consumers and at the same time provide their proprietors and employees with what are usually thought of as reasonable wages." (p. 64) (Temporary National Economic Committee Monograph No.

35 entitled "Large-Scale Organization in the Food Industries," written by A. C. Hoffman, Principal Agricultural Economist, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture (Senate Committee Print, 76th Congress, 3rd Session, Washington, D. C., 1940).)

There are other reasons why I doubt that the Board of Equalization statistics can be used as any sort of guide to the success or failure of independent grocers in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. I know from my experience in the retail grocery business and from my observation of the success of a vast number of grocery concerns that there is a definite place for, a need for and plenty of opportunity for the single store operator, the small chain and the large chain. None of these types of concerns is at an inherent disadvantage in its attempt to wage competition with the others. One of the reasons for this is the advantages which accrue to the smaller concern by reason of its membership in cooperative buying organizations such as Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., and the Orange Empire Co-op, which is sponsored by A. M. Lewis, Inc. Through such cooperatives, the smaller concern can purchase its groceries as cheaply as any chain which buys directly from suppliers, and at the same time avoid many of the costs and headaches which the direct-buying chain must incur in conducting its own buying, warehousing and distributing systems. Even on items which co-ops do not handle, such as meat and produce, the independent is able to do as well as the chain. Indeed, it is because of the fact that meat and produce purchases can be made on equal terms by both chain and independent that cooperatives have not found it necessary to handle those products.

For example, there is very little variation in the price for which meat can be purchased, and meat is not an item which is in short supply. Therefore, whether the meat is being purchased by a buyer for a large chain or by an independent grocery, the price is almost always the same. It rarely varies by more than a few pennies, and of course the independent is able to buy meat of the same quality as a chain.

Also, the independent is able to do as well as the chain in its purchases of most produce, and particularly in its purchases of perishable produce which often prove to be the most important in any produce department. As a matter of fact, with respect to these items, the independent and small chain is frequently able to purchase the same quality produce at a much cheaper price than the larger chain. The larger chain has a complicated distribution system. It must have its produce in each of its stores by the time those stores open every morning. In order to accomplish this, the day's produce must be purchased before 6:00 A.M. so that it can be placed on the chain's trucks and distributed to the stores at an early hour. The independent or small chain, on the other hand, does not have the same distribution problems. The owner can stay in bed until after 6:00 A.M., and then shop at what is known in the produce trade as the "late market". The quality of produce available on the late market is almost always as good as earlier in the day. The produce commission broker knows that his fruits and other perishables will not last until tomorrow, and they must be sold. His bigger customers, the chains, have already purchased the quantities they want. Under these circumstances, the independent is in a good bargaining position and can often purchase his perishables at prices which are much lower than the chain paid early in the same day. Also, the chain, with its large requirements, cannot possibly check every crate of produce which it purchases and instead must rely upon sample inspections. The independent has less to purchase and very often he can and does personally inspect every item of produce which later appears in his store. This very often means that an independent will have better quality produce than can be found in a large chain store.

I personally believe that the direct buying chain can do better than the independent on the purchase of items of "hard" produce, such as potatoes and apples. Others do not agree with me entirely, because we do have a warehousing cost. Market Basket and some others of the larger chains, for example, have regularly purchased their "hard" produce through the commission merchants. Apparently they think they can do just as well by purchasing in this manner, and if they can then so can the independent.

By reason of his cooperative membership and his ability to buy meat, milk and most produce on terms as favorable as any chain, the independent need not lose customers because of his prices. Van de Kamp bakery concessions are available to chains and single store operators alike. But in order to succeed any store, whether chain or independent, must be able to lure the customer inside the store. In this connection I believe that a single store operator has certain advantages over a chain and that a chain has certain advantages over a single store operator. None of those advantages is decisive, and an able and aggressive grocer can attract his share of the business by taking full advantage of his opportunities. Also, from my experience I know that an independent operator has a better opportunity to control his costs. He is in a position to personally supervise or actually conduct every phase and aspect of his business, and as a result he is better able to watch pennies and control costs. The chains must work through supervisors and managers and cannot be as efficient as the individual owner who is on top of the situation. It must be recognized, however, that the independent has certain disadvantages. For example, a single store operating in a community which has suffered economic setbacks due to strikes or large layoffs, as sometimes occurs, for example, in the aircraft industry, may be injured. Also the chain has an advantage in getting into shopping centers because of its being a better credit risk and being better known.

I believe that personality, service, courtesy and friendliness can go a long way toward attracting customers. We at Von's urge our store managers to stress these qualities in their stores, but at the same time we recognize that no store manager in a chain store can develop the same personal relationship with his customers, his employees, and with his community as the independent operator. On this score, the independent has an advantage over the chain.

On the other hand, I think that the chain has the advantage of being able to exploit by institutional advertising and otherwise a name which becomes familiar to customers and potential customers throughout the area it serves. Von's, for example, advertises in metropolitan newspapers. In this way and by word of mouth Von's becomes a name that is known to shoppers throughout the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Therefore, when Von's opens a new store, it can expect that potential customers in the surrounding areas will have heard of its name. This gives us an advantage over the independent who opens up a store with no expectation of being known in advance, although as I have said he has a better opportunity to become a part of his community and to become well known in it as time goes by.

Because Von's has stores in many communities in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, Von's problems are area-wide. The single store operator or the small chain, on the other hand, has only one or a few communities to worry about. The chain by reason of its size and organization is not as mobile or responsive to competitive conditions in any given isolated area and the aggressive, competent independent can, for that reason, out-maneuver the chain in meeting or creating local competitive conditions.

Therefore, sometimes size works for a chain and sometimes against it. In some ways having one store is an advantage, in others a disadvantage. But I am firmly convinced that if a grocer, whether he operates 70 stores, 7 stores or only 1 store, can take advantage of his opportunities he can succeed. There is no important advantage or disadvantage in the grocery business by reason of size. If there were, one would not find 3800 single store operators in this area nor would the growth, expansion and success of smaller concerns have taken place.

As one experienced in the industry and as a citizen I do not subscribe to the idea that there is something wrong with building a successful large chain. The fact is that the grocery chain offers very attractive career opportunities for capable people. Von's, for example, employs 8 Division Managers whose salary ranges from $18,800 to $38,500, 6 District Managers whose compensation ranges from $17,400 to $18,300, and 30 supervisors whose annual compensation averages from $12,000 to $16,700. Each manager of a Von's supermarket earns on the average of $10,800 to $13,250, which is a higher range than the national average for most of the professions. It is a fact of life that many people prefer to work for others rather than open their own business and, in my opinion, opportunity is wide open in the retail grocery business in this area, either as a salaried employee or opening your own business.

I have no doubt that if I desired to open my own single supermarket and run it myself I could make more money for myself than my compensation as President of Von's Grocery Co. The single store operator who pays attention to his business, who makes an effort to get to know and render good service to his customers, and who is alert and knowledgeable, can do every bit as well, if not better, for himself financially than can the president of many of the chains. In fact, I have advised my son, who is now working for our company, that as soon as he has the requisite training and experience, he should go out and get a store of his own.

The Matter of Market Shares

Prior to the merger, according to statistics I have seen, Von's had about 4% of total grocery store sales in the area and Shopping Bag had only slightly less than 4%. I believe we ranked third and Shopping Bag fifth in this respect, and we are now second to Safeway, having moved ahead of Ralphs by reason of the merger. As I have stated, I am not an economist but I do know this business and I can flatly state that it would not be logical at all to equate market shares with market power in this business in this area. Competition in retail sales in this business is necessarily on a store-by-store basis, and, as I have stated, numbers of stores is not an important factor in this competition.

In this market area we now have A & P, the largest national chain, Safeway Stores, the second largest national chain, Acme Markets Inc. (operating locally as Alpha Beta), the fourth largest national chain, Food Fair, the sixth largest national chain, Mayfair, a large multi-state chain, Lucky a large multi-state chain, a good number of large regional chains such as Ralphs, Food Giant, Thriftimart, Market Basket, a large number of medium-size chains, such as Shoppers, Hughes, Pantry, Alexander's and others, and thousands of independents or small chains backed up by strong cooperative buying organizations.

These local chains, including Von's, have grown and prospered over the years in the face of much larger market shares of Safeway and Ralphs and the fact is that over the past twenty years I am sure that the market shares of both Safeway and Ralphs have declined. I reiterate market share in retail grocery sales in this area is not the equivalent of market power.

The Shopping Center Problem

I have mentioned some of the respective advantages in competition possessed by the single store operator, by the small chain, by the larger but local chain, and by the national and regional chains. There is one area wherein some of the larger chains in this area do have an advantage over small concerns and, for that matter, over some large concerns whose financial credit rating may not be good, and that is the greater ability to get choice locations in new shopping centers. In recent years there has been a trend to develop large shopping centers containing a department store, a variety store, a drug store, a supermarket, a restaurant, dress shops, haberdashery, cleaning establishment, and other concerns. The developer of such a shopping center can usually obtain 100% financing from insurance companies if he leases to a concern with a Dun & Bradstreet AAA credit rating, but, I understand, only about 50% financing if the lease is to a chain or independent which has a lesser credit rating.

The merger with Shopping Bag did not help Von's in this respect because it had an AAA credit rating before the merger.

I have learned from various trade papers that the Small Business Administration has set up a program to help independent supermarket firms obtain leases in new shopping centers by lending local development companies up to 80% of the necessary funds to construct a center that will be occupied by small firms, and has defined a grocery concern as "small" if its dollar volume is less than $2 million annually. Henry Bison, the general counsel of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States (NARGUS) has criticized these standards as unrealistic (see Supermarket News for October 17, 1960) and I agree. I am certain from my experience that there are very many small concerns with sales in excess of $2 million who need and should have the opportunity to get into new shopping centers.

A number of bills have been introduced in the Congress to permit the federal government to guarantee leases in shopping centers made to small concerns, and I have read reports concerning hearings held by the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives on such proposed legislation, but the Congress has not enacted such legislation. It is my opinion that the enactment of such legislation would be desirable and helpful to very many sound but small operators. I do not see how the insurance companies, or the shopping center developers, or the larger chains can properly be criticized for the present situation (and certainly the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not had and could not have any effect on the problem) but it is an area where, in my opinion, the smaller operator is at a disadvantage, and only the Congress can help him.

Certified Grocers of California

My company became a member of Certified Grocers of California, the retailer-owned cooperative buying organization, in 1934. We terminated our membership in 1949. At that time Von's was a chain of 16 stores. Much of the success of our business is directly attributable to our membership in Certified from 1934 to 1949, because Certified's buying power enabled us to obtain our groceries just as cheaply as the direct buying larger chains. I was elected to the Board of Directors of Certified in 1936 and became Chairman of the Board in 1945, a position I held until my resignation in 1949.

At that time Certified had a policy (which it has since abandoned) that the member must make 100% of his purchases through Certified of the grocery items which it handled, and we felt that if we had a warehouse of our own, we could control our inventory better, purchase the large quantities we might want of a particular product to cover a special promotion we might want to run in our stores, and buy a particular product in larger quantities to protect us against an anticipated price increase. My father, my brothers and I therefore decided to build a warehouse and do some direct buying. This forced us to resign from Certified. Many others, of course, did not agree with our point of view and did not want to take on the problems of operating a warehouse. These, including Shopping Bag, continued to stay with Certified even though they had more stores than Von's did.

I believe that it is to Von's advantage to do its own direct buying and warehousing, particularly because of the inventory control it gives us. Others disagree with me. But I do not think any experienced grocer in this area will disagree with the fact that the Certified membership (which includes numerous single store operators, small chains and larger chains) which buy their groceries through Certified get them on the market shelf just as cheaply as does the direct buying and warehousing concern, such as Von's. I have on several occasions seen a sign in the window of a very small store at Beverly and Normandie in Los Angeles which states:

> "Our shelf prices are as low or lower than any chain mkt. because we are a member of the largest co-op buying power in the world."

The reference obviously is to Certified Grocers, although from reports in the trade papers the A. M. Lewis Orange Empire Co-op is not far behind Certified. The Federal Trade Commission Staff Report on its Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, January 1960 (at page 179) states that the wholesale sales of Certified to its members and the estimated retail sales by Certified's members were as follows in the years 1948, 1954 and 1958:

	Wholesale Sales by Certified To Its Members	Retail Sales by Members of Certified
1948	$ 86,829,000	$ 382,000,000
1954	197,717,000	858,000,000
1958	338,957,000	1,390,000,000

This Staff Report (p. 181) further states as to Certified:

> "* * * This cooperative chain follows the corporate chains, A. & P., Safeway, and Kroger, as the fourth largest food retailing organization in the country—accounting for an estimated 3.1 percent of national grocery store sales and 2.8 percent of food store sales. It must be borne in mind, however, that a cooperative chain is not a single organization in the sense that a corporate chain is one. * * *"

The Staff Report does not give comparable figures for the A. M. Lewis Co. It states (p. 179) that "Alfred M. Lewis Co., a large Southern California wholesaler sponsoring the 'Orange Empire' group of stores and often called a cooperative, is not so classified in this report, since the shares of stock owned by its retail customers do not carry control." However, a recent report by A. M. Lewis, reported in the Southern California Grocers Journal for September 27, 1962, stated that Orange Empire had wholesale sales to its members of $12.5 million in 1945 and by 1962 its wholesale sales were $321 million.

Certified Grocers has a coffee processing plant, a bean packaging plant, and a frozen food warehouse in addition to its two huge grocery warehouses. Its transportation fleet comprises approximately 340 tractors and trailers. Members of Certified can obtain insurance at a cheap rate through Certified and can obtain assistance in financing the purchase of new equipment and facilities through Certified. In addition, Certified has seven well-trained men employed on a full-time basis to assist Certified's members with grand openings, sepcial promotions, new store locations, store layout and display, and advertising and accounting problems. Certified's advertising department keeps the Certified member advised of all advertising and promotional allowances offered by suppliers, and the advertising department also assists Certified members with advertising mats, layouts or display materials. Finally, Certified has the most modern and up-to-date electronic data processing systems which helps the Certified members to eliminate out of stock conditions in their stores.

The existence of organizations like Certified and Orange Empire, in my opinion, has been and is the reason for the success of the independent and small chain in this area and made possible the growth of organizations such as Von's and Shopping Bag and many others.

The continued and successful existence of Certified makes ridiculous, in my opinion, the government suggestion that there is a possibility that only a few chains will sometime, somehow, dominate the market. With four national chains, two strong multistate chains, a number of large local chains, very numerous smaller chains and hundreds of independents operating successfully in this dynamic area, it appears obvious to me that in the future there will continue to be, as there are now, literally hundreds of separate concerns doing business in this area. This is not a difficult business to enter and there is, and I am convinced there will continue to be, plenty of opportunity in it for those who are willing to work as I did to develop a business. I do not mean to suggest that anyone can go out and build or buy a supermarket for little or nothing—just as one cannot become a manager of a store or an executive of a business overnight. But leases of existing stores are always available and one who has had experience can obtain such leases and prove his ability. Many of my friends in the business have done just this—in fact, there are many who have taken over stores which the larger chains have given up as unprofitable and have been very successful in running these stores on their own.

Changes in the Marketing of Retail Groceries

In my lifetime in the grocery business there have been many innovations and changes. I have witnessed the development of the supermarket which has resulted in the replacement of a number of small stores. Safeway, for example, once had over 1000 small stores in this area and today it has approximately 200, and while Safeway's percentage share of the total sales in the area has, I am sure, been greatly reduced, I am sure their total gross sales in the area are very much greater. With the supermarket came self-service, greater sales per square foot and greater variety of choice at a lesser cost to the customer. New products, rapid developments in packing and merchandising, a rapidly increasing population, the increased use of the automobile and moves to the suburbs are just a few of the constantly changing conditions and circumstances which the grocer in this area has had to be alert to meet, and take advantage of in order to be successful.

A relatively few years ago the "Los Angeles market area" was generally considered to be the City of Los Angeles and the immediately surrounding communities; that is, the area where a number of stores could efficiently be served from a single warehouse. More recently it has generally come to mean Los Angeles County and Orange County. But with the development of our freeway systems more and more concerns are building stores in Santa Barbara, Ventura, Kern, Riverside, San Bernardino and San Diego Counties as well. Shopping Bag had two stores in San Bernardino County prior to the merger, and since the merger we have opened new stores in Ventura and San Diego Counties, and one presently under construction in Riverside County. There is little doubt in my opinion that the Los Angeles market area in a very short time realistically will be considered to extend from Santa Barbara-Bakersfield on the north, south to the Mexican border, and west to east from the Pacific Ocean to the desert.

In the past two or three years large discount houses which sell virtually everything and include a large supermarket under their roof have become prevalent in the area. There are now at least 25 of such discount houses in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, including six in the Covina-West Covina community alone. Some, including Dr. Ward J. Jenssen, an experienced marketing consultant and one of the government's proposed expert witnesses in this case, have predicted this development of the discount house will result in the virtual demise of the supermarket such as those of Von's. While I do not agree with his conclusion, Dr. Jenssen has stated that the discount house within the next ten years will emerge as the dominant retail form in this area and the role of the conventional supermarket will shift to that of a convenience outlet for quick, fill-in purchases. He has further stated:

> "If one has been studying the signs closely enough, however, it is evident that by 1970 or 1975 the supermarket as we know it today in Los Angeles will have been relegated to a second-class role, and local operators who continue to expand with conventional markets in conventional type locations are pouring money into the traditional 'rat hole.'" (From the Commercial Bulletin, October 6, 1961.)

It is my opinion that the discount houses will be a competitive factor and, of course, they are able to obtain Certified membership, but I do not foresee them relegating the supermarket, whether chain or independent, to a minor role in food distribution.

A further development is the increasing importance of the conventional liquor store as a retailer of food products. Just as the supermarkets in more recent years have commenced the sale of alcoholic beverages at many of the supermarkets, so have the liquor stores commenced the sale of various food products. In many of the liquor stores in this area the customer is able to purchase milk, bread, and various canned goods. As a matter of fact, it is common knowledge in the industry, for example, that many of the liquor stores are better customers of the bakeries than many of the grocery stores. While I do not have figures to support my belief, it is my impression, based on my knowledge of the business, that many of the liquor stores of today sell more groceries and related products than most of the small "Mom & Pop" stores.

Drive-in milk depots run by dairy companies are now springing up all over the area. Not only are they permitted by the state law to sell their milk cheaper than the grocers but most of them carry other items, such as bread, wieners and potato chips. Drug stores compete with the grocers in the sale of health and beauty aid items and paper goods as well as alcoholic beverages, tobaccos and other items.

A further very recent development in this area and elsewhere is the emergence of the bantam store, which is truly a "convenient outlet" for quick, fill-in purchases. One example of this type development is Speedee Mart, Inc., a California food market chain which was organized in 1956. It builds and franchises very small convenience stores which can best be described as "a modern-day Mom & Pop operation." I am informed that Speedee Mart, Inc. has well over 100 such franchise stores in operation in various California cities and there are a large number of them in the Los Angeles area. I understand that Speedee Mart does the buying, pricing, advertising, accounting and supervising of all activities, but the particular stores are run by individual owner-operators under the franchise plan.

A new type of competition which is now being experimented with in Eastern States and, if successful, will no doubt move into this area, is illustrated by the plans of various of the major oil companies to build small grocery stores in connection with their gasoline stations. Supermarket News for October 15, 1962 announced that Socony-Mobil Oil Company, Shell Oil Company, and other oil firms are considering moving into the retail food business by erecting bantam markets adjacent to their stations.

Obviously the retail food business in this area is a dynamic, challenging, highly competitive and ever-changing business. Anyone familiar with the business would have to agree, in my opinion, that it is highly competitive and highly decentralized and no chain or group of chains could ever dominate the market.

There is scarcely a household in this entire area that does not have at least three first-class supermarkets within ready shopping distance, and anywhere from 5 to 8 additional markets of smaller or older vintage. I do not foresee any change in this highly competitive condition.

Mergers by Other Companies

The government attorneys have furnished our attorneys with a proposed "Stipulation As To The Testimony of Dr. Willard F. Mueller, Chief Economist of the Federal Trade Commission," which has attached to it as Exhibit B a list taken from records of the Federal Trade Commission of the "Acquisitions Made By 9 of the 20 Largest Chains in the Los Angeles-Long Beach Metropolitan Area; By Company: 1948-1958." The government attorneys have contended that this exhibit shows "increasing concentration". I think it is worthy of note that not one of these acquisitions has been attacked by the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission. I notice also that there is some double counting in this list, since, for example, it adds acquistions both by and from Mayfair Markets in order to reach its 132-store total and it shows an acquisition by Thriftimart from its own wholly-owned real estate holding company. Similarly, it shows a six-store acquisition by Food Giant from Food Giant in 1957, when as a matter of fact there was no such acquisition. What Food Giant did was to merge with Magic Chef, a stove company, the stock of which was listed on the New York Stock Exchange, so that Food Giant could thus be so listed and get financing more easily. Food Giant sold the appliance business in 1958. I have the following further comments concerning the specific acquiring companies referred to:

Mayfair Markets

Mayfair is a multi-state chain which got its start in this area and now operates more than 175 stores in various Western States. The exhibit shows that in the period 1950 to 1958 Mayfair made five acquisitions totaling 18 stores, one of 9 U-Tel-Em Markets, 6 of Bob's Supermarkets, and 3 of single markets. The exhibit also shows that in this period Mayfair sold five stores to Fox Markets (the start of the Fox chain in 1954) and four to Yor-Way. Actually, as is shown by the affidavit of Clive Johnson, Mayfair sold more stores in this area than it acquired from others.

Lucky Stores

Lucky Stores is a multi-state chain which now operates some 140 stores in several Western States. The exhibit shows that it made one acquisition of nine stores in 1956. The exhibit does not show that this was Lucky's means of entering the business in this area. It had not theretofore done business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Since that time it has opened a number of new markets in this area.

Alpha Beta

The exhibit shows that Alpha Beta acquired the 13-store Raisin Markets chain in 1958. Raisin Markets was a family business and the father and founder has passed away shortly prior thereto. His son Phil successfully ran the business but his health shortly became very bad and, in fact, he has since passed away. The last two stores built by the Raisin chain were very large but very unprofitable, and there was concern that the losses on these stores might cripple the entire operation. Although the Raisin family was anxious to make the sale to a responsible purchaser they did keep, and the family is still running for itself, the liquor departments in these stores.

The exhibit does not show, but it is a fact, that in the period 1948 to 1958 Alpha Beta sold seven of its own stores to individuals and that six of these are now being operated successfully by individual operators.

Thriftimart

I have noted that the exhibit lists as an acquisition the transfer of a new store to Thriftimart by its real estate operating company, Corbin Development Co. The exhibit also lists the acquition by Thriftimart in 1949 of the 19-store Roberts Public Markets chain. The great majority of these markets were very small and with respect to a majority of them, Thriftimart turned them over to the former managers or employees on a cooperative arrangement whereby Thriftimart supplied the inventory on consignment but the business was owned and operated by the former employees. Thriftimart over the years has made similar arrangements with various of its managers of other Thriftimart stores and has thereby enabled experienced people to enter into and develop a business of their own.

Fox Markets

Edward Fox and John Cramer, former executives of Mayfair, started Fox Markets in 1954 by taking over five Mayfair Markets. The exhibit shows that from then until 1959 Fox Markets made 11 acquisitions totaling 32 stores. It is common knowledge in the industry that a large number of these stores were in poor locations; that Fox was under-capitalized and it was soon in financial difficulties because it could not pay its suppliers. Fox Markets is now in bankruptcy. A number of its stores have been sold by the trustee in bankruptcy and the remainder, I believe a total of 18, are being operated for the trustee by Food Fair, the sixth largest national chain. In addition to operating the Fox Markets, Food Fair has recently started business in this area by opening supermarkets in some discount houses.

McCoy's Markets

The exhibit shows that McCoy's acquired one store in 1955 and another store in 1957. I do not know the details but I do know that McCoy's was first organized in 1948 by Joseph D. Saul, who had been employed in the grocery business in this area for many years before that and then decided to open up his own business. I believe there are now fourteen or fifteen McCoy's stores in this area, which is another illustration of the opportunities for growth and success for the experienced and able operator.

McDaniel's Markets

The exhibit also shows three acquisitions by McDaniel's in 1957-58 of a total of six stores. This is another instance of the chain which expanded too rapidly with insufficient capitalization. At one point in 1960 it reached a total of 24 stores and announced plans for building six more stores in that year. Unfortunately, when Fox Markets got into trouble, creditors of other concerns, including McDaniel's, started pressing for prompt payment. Because it was greatly overextended, McDaniel's sold off a number of its best markets to various individuals and smaller chains in late 1960 and early 1961, but it could not salvage the situation and in October 1961 it was declared bankrupt. Food Giant took over the remaining nine McDaniel's markets at this time. These were by no means the best McDaniel's markets but with the markets Food Giant obtained some experienced and very able executive personnel, which is in short supply in this area.

Yor-Way Markets

The exhibit shows, and it is a fact, that Yor-Way got its start by purchasing three markets from Mayfair in 1953. Thereafter it made seven acquisitions of single stores and one acquisition of a chain of five stores. This is another case of a chain which purchased a number of marginal markets, which never had enough money and which, according to the trade papers and their attorney James McLaughlin, always operated on deficit financing. Nevertheless, it was able to keep going until the death of its founder, Jack Kennedy, in 1960 and the Fox Markets bankruptcy. When the creditors began to press it in 1961, Yor-Way went into bankruptcy. A few of its poor stores were closed and the balance were sold to various individuals.

This completes my discussion of the list of the acquiring companies set forth by the economist of the Federal Trade Commission. As will be seen, the bare statistics do not fully or, for that matter, entirely accurately give the true picture. There have been acquisitions by these companies, none has been challenged as illegal, and some were not financially sound organizations. In my opinion these mergers have not tended to create a monopoly in this area nor, based on my experience, do I think there is the slightest possibility that there will ever be only a few large concerns doing business in this area. I have no doubt there will continue to be, as there are now, a number of larger chains, hundreds of small chains, and several thousand independents.

Reasons for the Merger With Shopping Bag

At the time of the merger with Shopping Bag, 80% of the outstanding stock of Von's was held by members of the Von der Ahe family. In the event of my death or the death of my brother Wil, this would have created severe estate tax problems for our family and would have required the forced sale of a substantial part of the stock of the estate to pay death taxes. There was not an active over-the-counter market for our stock at that time and a forced sale of a large block for estate tax purposes would naturally have had a very adverse effect on the market value of the stock. At the time of the merger Von's had approximately 3280 public stockholders and Shopping Bag had approximately 2064 public stockholders. Thus the merger resulted in 5344 stockholders for the surviving corporation and in a much broader and more active over-the-counter market. Further, the increased number of stockholders other than members of the Von der Ahe family which resulted from the merger enabled Von's to comply with the New York Stock Exchange requirements in this connection and the stock of Von's was listed on the Exchange in 1961. This likewise resulted in a wider market for Von's stock.

The owners of Shopping Bag were faced with virtually the same problem—members of the Hayden family owned approximately 60% of the stock of that company. Moreover, W. R. Hayden, the President of Shopping Bag, desired to become a little less active after over 35 years of hard work. In addition he believed, and my own study of the Shopping Bag organization caused me to agree with him, that Shopping Bag was suffering from a shortage of qualified executive personnel to carry on its business successfully. Actually, Shopping Bag's earnings had begun to sink. Shopping Bag was by no means a failing company, but it is equally true that in the several years prior to the merger while Shopping Bag sales increased, nevertheless its net profits were dropping. This was a matter of concern to Mr. Hayden. In these same years, Von's with ten fewer stores, had greater total sales each year than Shopping Bag, and increasing net profits. The total sales, the net profit and the percent of net profit to total sales of Shopping Bag in the years 1957, 1958 and 1959 were as follows:

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% Net Income to Total Sales
1957	$87,007,857	$1,360,986	1.6%
1958	90,531,209	912,851	1.0%
1959	84,403,866	770,122	.9%

For these same years the total sales, the net income and the percent of net income to total sales for Von's was as follows:

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% Net Income to Total Sales
1957	$89,990,056	$1,872,943	2.1%
1958	94,485,993	1,947,367	2.1%
1959	86,605,829	1,981,358	2.3%

(Sales for both companies were off in 1959, of course, because of the four week strike in January 1959.)

In these same years the respective ratio of net profit after taxes to total assets for the two companies was as follows:

Year	Shopping Bag	Von's
1957	6.6	12.7%
1958	3.9	12.4%
1959	3.2	10.8%

Von's in contrast to Shopping Bag, was strong in well-qualified executive personnel who could carry on the business.

Our survey of the Shopping Bag operation convinced us that it could be upgraded in many respects and made more profitable, and that we have done since the merger. The stores of Shopping Bag were for the most part operating in different communities than the Von's stores and this also made the merger attractive. In addition, the combined operation made possible important savings in advertising costs and reduction of overhead expenses and made our warehousing and trucking operations more efficient. Further, I had known W. R. Hayden well for many years and I was convinced that he and I would make a good team. Experience has proved this to be so.

Apparently the government attorneys believe these savings and efficiencies somehow give Von's an unfair competitive advantage over smaller concerns operating in this area. This is not true. While we have made savings and will profit therefrom, competition for the patronage of the retail customer is still in the local area served by an individual store, and, as I have stated, no chain store has any advantage over any other chain store or independent operator in that competition. Nor, in my judgment, did the merger lessen competition in any respect in this area nor give Von's any power or control over competition in the area. I have mentioned that four of the nation's largest chains, A & P, Safeway, American Stores (Acme), and Food Fair, and two strong multi-state chains, Lucky and Mayfair, do business in this area, and I have mentioned the strength of the remaining chains and single store operators who are affiliated with the cooperatives. Certainly the merger has not discouraged these competitors from building new stores or others from entering the business or expanding.

In entering into this merger we had sound business and personal reasons, but absolutely no intent and no ability to lessen competition. Being realists and knowing the industry from having lived with it for 35 or more years, we could never have logically entertained any thought that we could control or lessen competition, nor have we. The fact is that this merger kept two local businesses of local origin in control of local people.

This brings me to a problem which puzzles me about this case: Mr. Hayden, who owned or controlled approximately 80% of the stock of Shopping Bag, desired to become less active, and he was concerned about what would happen to his company if he did. He wanted to make a deal which would give security to him and his family for the equity they had created. This equity would have been dissipated if, as he was concerned, Shopping Bag continued to go downhill. He had confidence in Von's and could get a fair price for his equity from us. Would it have been better for him to sell out to some large national concern, such as Kroger or A & P, or, alternatively, to turn the management of his company over to others when he believed this would not be in its or his best interest? And, if this merger should somehow be held to be illegal, must Mr. Hayden resume an active management he does not want, or liquidate his assets, or sell to some large national concern which would give fair value for the assets? Those of us who have spent our lives in the industry have seen many failures occur when management becomes tired, weaker, or less aggressive, or when a company becomes overextended from a credit standpoint. Yor-Way promptly went downhill and its stores were sold off by the creditors' committee following the death of its founder, Jack Kennedy. Greater All American suffered two bad years, in the red, and was forced to sell off some of its stores following the death of its founder, Blayne Hutchison. Fox Markets started out in 1954 by purchasing a number of stores from Mayfair and others and they then expanded too rapidly with insufficient assets and with a hastily put together staff. Fox is now in bankruptcy, a number of its stores have been sold off, and the remainder are being operated by Food Fair, the sixth largest national chain, which wishes to take over the Fox Markets in order to enter this market area. Over the years there have been, and I am sure in future years there will be, a number of such failures of chains, both big and small. In my opinion Shopping Bag would have experienced similar difficulty if Mr. Hayden had passed away, and I do not believe this would have been of any benefit to competition or to the industry, and it would have been disastrous to the Hayden family who had worked so hard and sacrificed so much to create their organization. The merger has given them security and, in my opinion, it has not had and could not have an anti-competitive effect.

This is the point which I believe important: There were perfectly honest and legitimate business and estate tax reasons which brought about this merger, which had nothing to do with aggrandizement or any desire to injure competition. No one connected with the transaction thought it would or could stifle competition and anyone familiar with the business would, I am certain, agree with us that it could not stifle competition.

Comments on the Government Affidavits

I have read the first twenty affidavits which the government attorneys have supplied. Each of the affidavits appears to be a carbon copy of the others except for the first paragraph which gives the name and location of the affiant's market and the gross business. I think it is worth noting that not one of them points out a single way in which the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has injured the particular affiant or lessened competition in any way.

Each makes the point that it is difficult for the single store operator to get into the more desirable shopping centers, and this is true, as I have pointed out. But breaking up the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag would not help them at all in this or any other respect. Each also states that the larger chains have an advantage over the independent and small chain "in terms of inventory control." This is utter nonsense insofar as the individual operator or small chain is concerned. The single store operator or chain which is a member of Certified has the advantage of Certified's electronic data processing system which helps eliminate out-of-stock conditions in stores of its members. Moreover, if an individual operator does not have complete and superior control of his inventory at all times, which is something no chain can really achieve, then he certainly belongs in some other business. Each states that he is at some disadvantage in the purchase of fresh dairy, meat and produce items. I do not agree. Any able and knowledgeable single store or small chain operator actually can do every bit as well as the larger chains in purchasing meat and produce. I know this is a fact, and the testimony of various operators such as Cecil Dobson, Joseph Goldberg, Ted Woods and Joseph Goodnight confirms it. If the government witnesses are not doing as well as others in this respect they have only themselves to blame. How membership in Jerseymaid Milk Products Company gives Von's a competitive advantage none of the witnesses says. This has been a profitable investment but since the price at which milk is purchased and sold is fixed by state law there is no competitive advantage here any more than there would be if the investment were in real estate or the stock market. If there is any competitive advantage in milk it would lie with the users of the nationally advertised brands like Arden, Carnation and Foremost.

I note that each government witness states "that he faces very vigorous competition from Von's" and I hope and believe this is so. Note, however, that not one states that he is unable to compete successfully with Von's and none states the merger had any adverse effect on competition.

Each of the government witnesses also states that if our merger is permitted "there will probably be subsequent mergers between and involving the other major chains, and in all likelihood it will develop that a few large grocery chains will dominate retail grocery distribution throughout the Los Angeles metropolitan area. This merger is a major stride in increasing the market share of the large chains and it will accentuate the large chains' advantages over the small grocer. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag will have the effect of substantially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in the sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area." I have difficulty believing that any person familiar at all with this industry could or would so testify. The structure of this industry is such that it is not even conceivable that a few large chains will ever dominate the retail grocery business in this area. The very existence of Certified Grocers and Orange Empire precludes any such possibility. I doubt that these government witnesses have any better knowledge of this industry than my family and Mr. Hayden and none of us can foresee subsequent mergers "between and involving the other major chains". Von's and Shopping Bag were unique in that they had virtually no overlapping stores, and I cannot think of any two other "major chains" which could sensibly merge, and I know of none with any plan to do so. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag took place almost three years ago and I do not think any witness could honestly state that competition has been lessened at all, much less substantially, and how anyone can foresee a tendency to monopoly in an area such as this where there are literally thousands of separate grocery concerns, and new companies such as those of Ted Woods, Joe Goodnight and others constantly entering the market, is more than I can understand.

I have personally visited the stores of various of the government witnesses. Some are obviously very small and old stores which do very little business. Some are clean with an attractive display of merchandise. Some are clearly not well-run operations and the owners could benefit enormously from copying the merchandising and display techniques of the many top-notch single store operators like Cecil Dobson, Mrs. Roberts, Joseph Goldberg, Rudy Dahl, Harlos Gross, or any of hundreds of other single store operations in this area. The public in general does not want to patronize a store where the merchandise is not top-notch or is poorly displayed, or the atmosphere is not pleasant.

I believe it is interesting that various of the government witnesses have been able to enter the business in recent years and to survive and others have been able to expand. As will be seen, most of them were able to enter the business after getting their experience with a chain. It is also worth noting that various of the other affiants have operated their stores for from 18 to 26 years, apparently successfully. For example, I know that the store of Manuel Gertmenian at 1720 East Colorado until 1947 was the headquarters store of Market Basket. Mr. Gertmenian took over the lease when Market Basket gave up the store and he apparently has done well there because in May of 1960, two months after the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, he was able to and willing to take the lease on a second store then known as the Commonwealth Market at 301 South Atlantic Boulevard in Alhambra, and I am certain that this is a successful operation for him. This store is not a large one and it is quite old; also it is located directly across the street from a large and modern Safeway store. Apparently Mr. Gertmenian concluded he can compete successfully with Safeway, and he has. It is apparent also that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag did not discourage Mr. Gertmenian from expanding.

The Temple City store which Mr. Roderick A. Irvine, one of the government witnesses, had for a short time and which he states "did not show a profit and he closed it in May 1961" was not in fact closed. Actually it was sold by Mr. Irvine to two relatively young but experienced and very able and aggressive persons. This is their first store, but I predict that they will have others in the future. They cleaned up the store, put in better fixtures, and they have a first-class operation. I am certain that these young and able men are making and will continue to make a successful operation out of this store, which is located just two or three blocks from Von's headquarters and warehouse. From personal observation, I would say that Mr. Irvine sold the very best of his three stores.

I do not want to quarrel with the government witnesses. There are bound to be differences of opinion in an industry as diverse and competitive as the retail grocery business in this area. It is only human nature for some chain operators to envy the individual operator and for some individual or small chains to envy the larger chain. I am certain that each has certain advantages, but I am equally certain that there is no danger of the able and knowledgeable independent disappearing, and absolutely no possibility that any chain or group of chains could gain control of this market. Competition is necessarily on a store-by-store basis and the draw area of any particular store is a limited one. The single store operator who knows the business can draw the customer and keep the customer just as well as any chain if, as each is able to do, he sells at fair prices, runs a clean and attractive store, and sells service and personality along with his merchandise.

[fols. 1-2] DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT BA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

No. 336-60-CC

[Title Omitted]

Deposition of THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, at Room 806, Federal Building, Los Angeles, California, commencing at 2:00 P.M., Thursday, May 23, 1963, before Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R., Notary Public, pursuant to oral stipulation.

[fol. 3] THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, having been first duly sworn, deposed and testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, would you state your full name and address for the record, please.

A. Theodore A. Von der Ahe. My residence is 5220 West 2nd Street, Los Angeles, California.

Q. You have your affidavit with you?

A. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, if you would turn to Page 7 of your affidavit, referring you to the sentence beginning on Line 5, "By comparing these figures, it is apparent that the grocery business in Los Angeles is conducted by 3,968 separate concerns operating more than 4,700 stores. I am not an economist but I am amazed that the government economist would call this a 'concentrated' industry in this area." Would you say that it is a fragmented industry rather than a concentrated industry?

A. You are referring to the study which was prepared by Godfrey Lebhar in Business Guides.

Q. I am referring to this language on Line 5 there before [fol. 4] you get to Lebhar.

A. You are talking about my comments on the figures which his study produced.

Q. I believe those are the figures which you computed yourself on both the Board of Equalization and Mr. Godfrey Lebhar's study.

Mr. Alsup: Would you clarify, Mr. Coyle, what you mean by "fragmented industry"?

Mr. Coyle: I wonder if the witness understood my question.

The Witness: I understood the language but I would like to have you clarify and define the word "fragmented" for me.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Would you say that this is an industry made up of many separate entities?

A. Yes, definitely so.

Q. And if that is what fragmented means, this is a fragmented industry?

A. I agree.

Mr. Alsup: You are referring to the Los Angeles metropolitan area, are you not, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: I am referring to the industry which he is referring to. I presume it is the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Q. Now referring to Page 8 of your affidavit, you refer to the competition which the Von's Stores face in their [fol. 5] immediate trading area. Are you familiar with the Von's store in the Whittier area?

A. We have three Von's stores in the Whittier area at the present time. Which one do you mean?

Q. You had an original Von's store to begin with there, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that Von's store face much competition?

A. Yes, very much.

Q. The former Shopping Bag Stores in the area, do they face very much competition?

A. Very much.

Mr. Alsup: Just a moment, in order to clarify it. You say the former Shopping Bag Stores in the area.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: One of those former Shopping Bag Stores, Mr. Coyle, does not exist.

Isn't that correct, Mr. Von der Ahe?

The Witness: You are referring to the one in the Whittier Quad. That is no longer operated as a Shopping Bag store.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What happened to that store?

A. That store was vacated and a new facility operating under the name Von's was built in the same shopping center. In other words, we felt that this store did not compete with the Von's store several miles to the east, and it being [fol. 6] an entirely different shopping area we built a new store there to take care of that trade.

Q. And all three of those stores in the Whittier area face competition, do they not?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they face substantial competition?

A. They face substantial competition from both independents and chain stores.

Q. They have a number of competitors?

A. Yes.

Q. And have they had a number of competitors for several years?

A. They have had a number for several years and more are continuing to move into the area.

Q. And they have had a number of competitors five years ago?

A. Five years ago I don't know what stores were open at that time so I don't want to make a guess. But that area, as a general rule, has been growing and as the population comes in new stores are coming in.

Q. How many customers would those stores out there in Whittier each of them have to have in order to handle in the course of a week to keep the volume up?

A. Mr. Coyle, I do not have those kind of statistics at my command. I don't know how many customers a store has to have. That depends on the area, the trading area.

[fol. 7] Q. I am referring to this particular trading area out there.

A. As I say, I don't have those kind of figures at hand. I can't tell you whether it would be 10,000 customers or 11,000 or 8500. I don't know.

Q. Would it be as many as 8500?

A. Those figures are available to me and I can develop them for you. But I don't want to be held to a number because I don't know it at this time.

Q. Could you give us a minimum estimate of at least how many you would have to have?

Mr. Alsup: You mean "have to have," Mr. Coyle, or do you want the figure of what was the customer count in '59 and what is it today?

Mr. Coyle: Q. What would the count in '59 have been, a minimum customer count for your stores?

A. This I don't know.

Q. Not even in general terms?

A. I don't have those figures in my memory.

Q. You don't know whether it would be over 3,000 or over 6,000?

Mr. Alsup: A week or a month are you talking about?

Mr. Coyle: A week.

The Witness: I would say that it would be over 3,000, it would be over 6,000. Because those would be minimum figures. But now don't ask me how much over because that [fol. 8] is the information I do not have at this time.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring on the same page to your comments beginning on Line 20, do you have any knowledge, based upon your own observations of the industry whether or not there are fewer or more grocery stores operating in the Los Angeles metropolitan area today than there were in 1940?

Mr. Vaughn: '40 did you say?

Mr. Coyle: '40.

The Witness: My observations, Mr. Coyle, are that this trend—that there are now more grocery stores, supermarkets, et cetera, as we know them today, operating than there were in 1940. Now, I might distinguish that by saying I do not know if there are more grocery stores licensed to operate than there were in 1940. But the general trend of the business has been larger stores and there are more of them.

Mr. Coyle: Q. There are more large stores but are there more stores on a numerical basis?

A. This I don't know. At one time I testified there were. I have not taken the time and trouble to find out whether there are, numerically speaking. But there are more stores in the grocery business represented as such than there were in 1940.

Q. And in 1940 were there more stores?

A. I would say so.

Q. Do you think on a year-to-year basis there are more grocery stores on a numerical basis?

[fol. 9] A. From the very fact that Certified has more customers, Spartan has more customers, Orange Empire is doing more business. All of the independents—not all of the independents but all of the chain stores here have more units. There are more independents in the business as such. My observation, without being founded in statistics, is that there are more stores.

Q. But you have never made a count?

A. I have never made a count.

Q. And you know that Safeway has more stores now than it did in 1940 in the area?

A. I believe they do.

Q. In this area?

A. I believe they do.

Mr. Alsup: Than in 1940; is that the question?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And in 1940 they had more stores in the area?

A. That would be my considered opinion.

Q. And they have more stores than they had in 1950?

A. I would say so.

Q. And 1955?

A. Is the same, yes. Now, this is a guess, please understand it, because I have not kept track of the number of Safeway stores. It is just my opinion.

[fol. 10] Q. And it is a guess with respect to the total number of stores in the area?

A. That's right.

Q. And based upon your guess you conclude that the Board of Equalization figures are inaccurate?

A. I didn't say that, no, sir.

Q. You question the accuracy of the statistics obtained by the government attorneys from the California Board of Equalization, which would indicate that there are fewer grocery stores now than there were in 1948.

A. And I further went on to state the reasons the accuracy of the Board of Equalization statistics were questioned, and I set those forth on Page 10.

Q. You state that as a result of a vast freeway system, either by condemnation of the store itself or the destruction of the homes which it served, some stores have been closed in particular cities—in portions of the cities. Are the operators of those stores generally able to get into shopping centers when those stores are closed?

A. I have no information on that. I don't know.

Q. If they are small operators from your experience would they be able to get into a shopping center to open a store?

A. I see no connection between his store being closed up because of a freeway being put through a neighborhood and a small operator being able to open up a store in a shopping center.

[fol. 11] Q. Where would a small operator be able to open up a store if his store were closed as a result of a freeway or a condemnation?

A. I think it would depend upon the ability of the operator whether he was acceptable to the developer of a shopping center. The same as it would have been before the store was closed on account of the freeway. And if the small operator was not in a position to open in a large shopping center before he lost his store I see no reason why he should automatically become qualified to open a store in a shopping center after he lost his store. I think he would have to find a comparable store as he had been previously operating.

Q. Is it your opinion that personality, services and courtesy go a long way toward attracting customers?

A. Yes.

Q. And if a storekeeper because of his personality, service, courtesy and friendliness builds up acceptance with certain customers will they pass other stores and travel a longer distance than they otherwise might in order to stop at his store?

A. I think we are discussing something that is a matter of degree. Everything else taken into consideration and being equal, the stores that do have the friendliness, which is another way of putting what you just asked me, will have a better chance to succeed than a store that does not offer [fol. 12] the same advantages.

Q. Are all other things ever completely equal between two stores for a given customer? One would necessarily have to be closer to her than the other, wouldn't it?

A. I have to go along and I would say that to any customer all things are never equal. But when you consider the things that make a person go to one store and discriminate against another store, you will find that things like service and personality, friendliness, convenience and other things that a woman takes into consideration when she patronizes a particular store.

Q. And price?

A. Price by many, many surveys is way down the list of reasons why people trade in stores.

Q. How about images, is that important?

A. Image is just another word for what we are talking about. The store personality or a store image is the same thing.

Q. Which is more important, the friendliness, courtesy, personality and services or the convenience of the store?

A. In my opinion the most important thing a market can have is convenience. That means convenience to the prospective customer.

If a customer can drive to the market easily with a freedom of ingress and exit so that she doesn't have difficult left-hand turns to make and things of that nature, the [fol. 13] woman will come to your store once. After she finds it convenient to come to your store you must then develop this image or personality which is friendliness, courtesy, cheerfulness and the other things that a customer expects when she goes shopping.

Q. By "convenience," you mean the traffic access and the parking facilities?

A. That is what I mean.

Q. And the driving time?

A. Yes.

Q. Driving time too?

A. Not necessarily driving time, because a woman might find it more convenient to drive two miles on an open road without any stop signals or railroad tracks or things to cross as against driving one mile through a town of heavily congested traffic. So I wouldn't add driving time to this at all.

Q. Only as it might relate to the traffic congestion?

A. That's right.

Q. And the distance is really not so important as the access on the road——

Mr. Alsup: What distance are you talking about, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: I am just asking him. He just said that a woman would rather drive two miles on a non-congested highway than one mile on a highway with many stoplights.

The Witness: As long as we are talking about minimal [fol. 14] distances I would say that it doesn't make too much of a difference when we are talking about convenience. When we are talking about more than a mile or two then distance definitely has to be taken into consideration because you are talking about time then.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Then you are talking about driving time.

A. Yes.

Q. What driving time would get to be beyond that minimal driving time that you refer to?

A. This is very difficult to estimate because driving time in a country would be considerably different than driving time in the city. And it becomes a matter of what people are accustomed to. Whenever driving time becomes more than a few minutes it is something I am sure that women take into consideration when they go shopping, and particularly if they have to drive by other competing stores they stop in first. The matter of convenience overcomes the driving time and you don't get your customer anyway.

Q. You refer on Page 22 to a sign which you have seen on several occasions, you say, in the window of a very small store at Beverly and Normandie in Los Angeles. Have you seen that sign recently?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Is that the store operated by Mr. Fleishman, do you know?

A. Well, this is a store that is at the northwest corner [fol. 15] of Normandie and Beverly Boulevard. I don't know who operates the store.

Mr. Alsup: I will stipulate that it is Mr. Fleishman's store, Mr. Coyle.

The Witness: I go by the store almost every day so I have noticed the sign on many occasions.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Did you notice when it came down?

A. No.

Q. You mentioned on Page 26 that there are at least 25 discount houses in Los Angeles and Orange Counties which include a large supermarket under their roof. How many of these supermarkets are operated by the Lucky Stores?

A. Well, if you will permit me to refer to the Commercial Bulletin of March 29, 1963, they show a list of all the discount centers with food departments in this general area. And I believe the Lucky Stores operate the Gemco Department Stores, and they list two of these locations.

Q. You made no independent study to check whether this article is correct or not, have you?

A. I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of these. However, I did not go out and independently check all of these.

Q. Has Von's ever considered going into the discount store phase of the grocery operation?

A. No.

Q. Have they ever been approached with an offer to go [fol. 16] into the discount store phase of the operation?

A. We have, to my knowledge, received one offer to buy out a complete discounting operation, including the food department store, which we rejected without very much study, and we received one other offer to operate a food department in a discount store which we turned down.

Those are the only two that readily come to my mind. I think of nothing else.

Q. Would you be desirous of doing this?

A. No. We have no intention of entering the discount field.

Q. Is Mr. W. A. Christensen general manager of your organization?

A. Yes. He recently joined our company. He hasn't been with us two years yet.

Q. Was he with you in January of 1962?

A. Yes. Only a few months at that time. I believe he came with us in October of 1961.

Q. Were you present at a meeting of the Sales Managers Club in January of 1962 when Mr. Christensen made an address and discussed this subject of discount houses?

A. I don't remember if I was or not.

Q. This was at the Nikabob.

A. I have been there at quite a few Sales Managers luncheons and I don't remember if I was at this one particular luncheon.

[fol. 17] Q. Do you ever remember or have you heard that he made a talk or a speech at a meeting of the Sales Managers Club at the Nikabob?

A. It is very possible he did. I just don't happen to remember it or recall it.

Q. Do you ever recall him making a talk in connection with the discount houses?

A. No.

Q. You don't ever remember him expressing the opinion that in 1961 the Von's-Shopping Bag sales suffered no loss due to discount houses?

A. I have to say that I am completely ignorant or do not remember anything that he said. I don't know if I was there. I can verify if I was there. But things that are picked up by reporters——

Q. I will show you this and this might refresh your memory. It lists you as being present.

A. Does it say I was there? Well, as I said, it is very possible that I was there.

Q. If he said that——

Mr. Alsup: Why don't you read it, Mr. Von der Ahe, and then I would like to read it, since it has been shown to the witness.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Did this refresh your recollection, Mr. Von der Ahe?

A. It is still very foggy, but because that says I was there I will admit I was there.

[fol. 18] Q. Did you hear that speech?

A. Let me say this. Christensen talked without notes——

Q. But did you hear him? My question was: Did you hear him?

A. This was so long ago that I will say that I was there when he gave the speech, but if you ask me what he talked about I don't know. This has been picked up by a reporter and this is the reporter's ideas of what Christensen said.

Q. Do you read the Commercial Bulletin?

A. Occasionally.

Q. But not regularly?

A. Not regularly.

Q. Does anybody in your organization read the Commercial Bulletin regularly for purposes of ascertaining what your employees are saying, or keeping in touch with public references made by your employees?

A. We have nobody assigned to that job, no. We get a half dozen copies of the Commercial Bulletin in the office and it is circulated around.

Q. Did your organization take any measures to counter or clarify anything said by Christensen at that meeting?

A. No, I am sure we didn't.

Q. Did you have any reason to think that anything that he said at that meeting, as reported in this Commercial [fol. 18-a] Bulletin, was incorrect or inaccurate?

A. Well, specifically you are referring to what now?

Q. Do you have any reason to think that Mr. Christensen was mistaken or inaccurate or misquoted when he made the following statement: "Christensen, expressing it as his personal opinion, said that Von's-Shopping Bag sales in 1961 suffered no loss due to discount houses"?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle, if you will refer to Page 27 of the affidavit you will see that the witness himself said that in effect.

Mr. Coyle: I didn't see it in the affidavit.

Mr. Alsup: He refers to Mr. Jenssen's statement and states his opinion as to the effect of it.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is it your opinion that you have suffered no loss due to discount houses?

A. I would say that is an accurate statement, yes. That we have recognized them as competition but we have also remained as competitive as we could with the result that we have not lost any business to them.

Q. Now referring to Page 28 of your affidavit——

Mr. Alsup: Do you intend to mark the document as an exhibit?

Mr. Coyle: Not particularly, I don't think. I just showed it to him to refresh his recollection.

Q. You stated on Page 28: "I am informed that Speedee Mart, Inc. has well over 100 such franchise stores in oper-[fol. 19] ation in various California cities and there are a large number of them in the Los Angeles area. I understand that Speedee Mart does the buying, pricing, advertising, accounting and supervising of all activities, but the particular stores are run by individual owner-operators under the franchise plan." Who informed you of this?

A. This is my belief. And if you ask me who informed me of it, right now I don't think I could tell you. This is information that I pick up at the office.

Q. But you don't know who told you?

A. This minute I am not in a position to assign a name to who gave me the information. It comes out of a general discussion.

Q. And it may or may not be true. You have taken no steps to ascertain whether it is true?

A. That's right. But I think the facts speak for themselves that it is true.

Q. Which facts are those?

A. As stated here.

Q. Which facts? Do you know that Speedee Mart does the pricing for these individual owner-operators?

A. That there is well over a hundred of them operating in the State and that they do operate them on a franchise basis.

Q. And that Speedee Mart sets their prices?

A. Provides these services, yes.

Q. And one of the services is setting their prices?

[fol. 20] A. Yes.

Q. What do you base that conclusion on that Speedee Mart sets their prices?

Mr. Bates: Mr. Coyle, could you raise your voice, please? I can just barely hear you.

The Witness: On the discussions, as I say, that we have in our meetings at the office when we talk about things of this nature. This is the information I pick up. Plus the fact that they do publish their financial statements in the paper, which is a matter of common knowledge.

Mr. Knight: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. I note, Mr. Von der Ahe, on Page 26 and Page 27 you quote from an article appearing in the October 6, 1961 Commercial Bulletin. Did you read this article yourself, or did someone show it to you?

A. I have read that article myself, if you are referring to the one by Dr. Ward Jenssen. Yes.

Q. Did someone call your attention to it prior to the time you read it?

A. No.

Q. That was one of the days that you read the Commercial Bulletin?

A. Yes.

Q. But you didn't read it on January 12, 1962 when the reporter——

[fol. 21] A. When he made this remark it received an awful lot of publicity and appeared in more than the Commercial Bulletin. It appeared several places, and obviously I saw it.

Q. Mr. Christensen's remarks at the Food Industry Sales Managers Club didn't receive publicity?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question on the ground that it is argumentative.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Or did it?

A. It is obvious because you have shown me a copy of it. It did receive publicity.

Q. But you didn't read this article about Mr. Christensen and yourself?

A. I am not saying I didn't read it. I am saying I just don't remember it. Bear in mind, please, that every week there is an article of some kind concerning our operation in some trade publication. A man would have to be a librarian to keep up with everything that has been published about our company.

Q. How long have there been drive-in milk depots in this area?

A. A guess would be about ten years. I cannot tell you exactly the length of time but my best guess would be around ten years.

Q. How long have liquor stores been selling food in this area?

A. I would say liquor was first authorized in 1935 and [fol. 22] I would say it has been since 1935.

Q. Do you know of any major oil companies who have built any small grocery stores in this area that are adjacent to their service stations?

A. There are none in this area at the present time. However, they are experimenting back East.

Q. Where back East?

A. And I am sure that if the idea catches hold that they will expand it out here.

Q. In which cities are they experimenting?

A. I do know of some snack shops that Standard Oil tried one time out here in connection with their stations.

Q. They didn't work, though, did they?

A. And I have seen stations now vending things like soda pop in the cases, they vend cigarettes and ice cubes and a few other things of that nature, which is getting into the food field.

Q. Does Standard Oil still have snack shops?

A. I think they have discontinued them.

Q. That didn't work, did it?

A. I don't know, but I think they have discontinued them.

Q. What cities back East are these oil companies experimenting with these snack shops?

A. I think I am quoting from an article—— What page is it, please?

[fol. 23] Q. Page 28, the middle of the paragraph.

A. That is a quotation from Supermarket News for October 15, 1962. And they announce that Socony-Mobil Oil and Shell, and other firms, are considering moving into the retail food business by erecting bantam markets adjacent to their stations.

Q. But you don't know that they have experimented any place?

A. I am relying on the veracity and the factual correct reporting of Supermarket News. But it shows a trend, an indication of what can happen.

Q. Can happen. But it doesn't show that it has happened any place, does it? They are considering, it says.

A. That is what it says.

Q. But they are not experimenting.

Mr. Alsup: You mean at the present time they are not, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Are you so testifying?

Mr. Coyle: I am asking Mr. Von der Ahe if they are experimenting at the present time.

The Witness: It is my belief that they are.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But you don't know?

A. I don't know.

Q. You would have to rely on Supermarket News?

A. Right.

[fol. 24] Q. And all Supermarket News said was that they were considering.

A. Right.

Q. It didn't say they were experimenting.

Now, on Page 29 of your affidavit, on Lines 22 and 23, you mention an acquisition by Thriftimart from its wholly-owned real estate holding company. What is that wholly-owned real estate company?

A. I believe it was the Corbin Realty Company. The name they took after Corbin Street out in Reseda where they built a store.

Q. And the Corbin Street Realty Company built the store and then Thriftimart acquired it from the Corbin Realty?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. And you know that the Corbin Realty Company is owned by Thriftimart?

A. Yes.

Q. And this was only one instance that you found in this study where that happened, wasn't it?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question on the ground that it is confusing and ambiguous. You mean one instance where Thriftimart acquired a store from its own wholly-owned subsidiary?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: That was the only store they had.

Mr. Coyle: Q. The only store they acquired?

[fol. 25] A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember in March of 1960 telling the stockholders that all the advantages of the company's—that is March of 1961—that is telling the company stockholders that all the advantages of the company's merger with Shopping Bag Food Stores have not been realized? The combining of warehouse distribution and manufacturing facilities will not be completed until about August? Do you ever remember telling them that?

A. Yes.

Q. Has the combining of warehouse distribution and manufacturing facilities been completed now?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you now realizing the full advantages of the acquisition?

A. I think we are.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle, may I see the article to which you referred?

Mr. Coyle: I don't see why. I was just questioning him.

Mr. Alsup: If you object to showing it to me I am not going to quarrel with you. Do you object to showing it to the witness?

Mr. Coyle: I was just asking him a question.

Q. I am reading again, Mr. Von der Ahe, from the article in the January 12, 1962 Commercial Bulletin in which Mr. [fol. 26] Christensen is quoted as follows with reference to discount houses: "Their scope is limited unless they can develop a better merchandising plan in their food sections. They can't compete with good supermarkets. There is little or no grocery advertising, variety is limited and the customer has to walk to the rear of the store to buy the food."

Mr. Alsup: Since counsel has read from and quoted from the article in question I ask that it be marked as an exhibit for identification in connection with this deposition.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 1 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does this statement by Mr. Christensen, as quoted in this article in the Commercial Bulletin, conform to your own understanding of the situation as of January 1962?

Mr. Alsup: Do you wish to look at the article?

The Witness: Yes.

First I would like to point out that these are the personal remarks of Mr. Christensen and you are asking me to——

Mr. Coyle: Q. I am just asking you a simple question. Do they or do they not conform to your own understanding?

A. —state whether they are my opinion also.

Q. Just "Yes" or "No." Do they conform or do they not?

A. I cannot answer it "Yes" or "No," because in some [fol. 27] degrees I agree with this and in other aspects I disagree. Because he goes on to state, "Their scope is limited unless they can develop a better merchandising plan in their food sections."

Q. Is that true?

A. A discount house has a far greater draw than a conventional supermarket. They draw from a far greater radius.

Q. Is that what he was referring to——

Mr. Alsup: I don't think the witness has finished his answer, Mr. Coyle.

The Witness: He says, "They can't compete with good supermarkets." I believe that is true if a supermarket remains alert and diligent and aggressively merchandises its store.

"There is little or no grocery advertising, variety is limited and the customer has to walk to the rear of the store to buy the food." I also agree with that, because the method of operating the so-called discounters is to use food as a loss leader to attract trade. And by so doing they expose their food customers to all of the other merchandise that is on display in the store. So they do make them walk to the back of the store and they limit their selection and they do not provide all the services and facilities a conventional supermarket does provide.

So with those qualifications that would be my answer.

[fol. 28] Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions, Mr. Von der Ahe.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, Mr. Coyle referred you to Pages 26 and 27 of your affidavit in which you refer to the government's witness Dr. Ward Jenssen.

Mr. Coyle: You are assuming a fact not in the record.

Mr. Alsup: We have been furnished with a statement by Mr. Coyle as to what Dr. Jenssen would testify to and an exhibit prepared by Dr. Jenssen.

Mr. Coyle: We also told you that he won't testify unless the judge admits this evidence, which we consider contrary to his pretrial order.

Mr. Alsup: Q. And you said you read his statement quoted in the Commercial Bulletin, ". . . it is evident that by 1970 or 1975 the supermarket as we know it today in Los Angeles will have been relegated to a second-class role, and local operators who continue to expand with conventional markets in conventional type locations are pouring money into the traditional 'rat hole' " and you said that you had read that and read other similar articles quoting Dr. Jenssen; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: I don't remember him saying he read similar [fol. 29] articles quoting Dr. Jenssen.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Have you read other articles?

A. I do say that this quotation appeared in several publications and I think I read most of them.

Q. I show you a document which will be marked Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 2 for Identification from the Food Mart

News for February 17, 1961 and ask you if you can identify it.

Mr. Coyle: May I see it first, please.

The Witness: What do you mean "identify it"? Do I recognize it?

Mr. Alsup: Q. Yes.

A. I will answer and say, yes, this is an article that purports to quote Dr. Ward Jenssen, in which he says, "Food discount operations posing threats to traditional supermarkets."

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that that be marked as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 2 for Identification.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 2 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show you two clippings, one from the Southern California Grocers Journal for August 25, 1961 and one from the Commercial Bulletin for August 25, 1961, the first article entitled "Supermarket Out By 1975 Says Jenssen," and the second entitled "Discount Store Influence Seen Causing Gradual Demise Of Today's-Type Super." I will ask you if you have previously seen these articles.

[fol. 30] A. The answer is, yes, I have seen both of these before. They are along the same lines as the last article shown in the Food Mart News.

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that these two articles be marked as one exhibit, being Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 3 for Identification.

(The clippings referred to were marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 3 for Identification and are attached to the deposition.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show you a third clipping taken from the Commercial Bulletin for October 6, 1961 and I ask you if that is the article that is referred to on Pages 26 and 27 of your affidavit.

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that this be marked as our exhibit next in order.

(The clipping referred to was marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 4 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show you an article from Food Merchandising for April 1962 entitled "Price Reduction Only Stopgap Measure," and underneath that, "Dr. Ward J. Jenssen, Marketing Consultant," and ask if you can identify this article.

Mr. Alsup: Do you want to see it?

[fol. 31] Mr. Coyle: No, I don't want to see it.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Q. That article, Mr. Von der Ahe, states, "Conventional retailers have responded to discount competition with price reductions. This strategy will prove effective as a stopgap measure only and cannot for long save the conventional retail outlet from its ultimate disappearance from the American scene." And it goes on. Do you agree with Dr. Jenssen's conclusion?

A. Well, I do not wish to argue with the learned doctor but I am not wholeheartedly in accord with him and I disagree with some of the conclusions that he arrives at. I think that discount houses are probably here to stay. I think that there is a place for them but I do not believe that they are going to upset the entire food retailing system such as we have known it in the past.

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that this now be marked as our exhibit next in order.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 5 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. Have you seen other predictions, Mr. Von der Ahe, with respect to the growing importance of discount houses as retailers of groceries in competition with the conventional grocery store?

[fol. 32] A. I attended an annual meeting of the National Association of Food Chains in Chicago in 1961, at which time they had two operators of discount houses, whose names I forget at this moment, but they are readily available, who predicted that the store of the future was going to be a large single-roof operation operated on a discount basis. I have also seen an article prepared by the U.S.D.A., I believe it was, in which they also conveyed the thought that discount houses would impose a very serious threat to conventional supermarkets because of their farther range of draw, we will say, because of the price appeal, because of their ability to operate more cheaply than supermarkets. They pose a serious question that discount houses as such would be a very serious factor to contend with in the future.

Q. I show you an article taken from the Commercial Bulletin for February 16, 1962 quoting a report of the United States Department of Agriculture, which states in part that discount supers now have an estimated two billion annual volume and may quadruple in four years, and that they "will have an important influence on traditional patterns of distribution." I will ask you if this is the U.S.D.A. report to which you refer.

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that this be marked as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 6 for Identification.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary [fol. 33] public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 6 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, in response to a question by Mr. Coyle you said that in your opinion the milk depots have been doing business in this area for approximately ten years.

A. That was a guess as to the number of years, yes.

Q. Have you seen any change in the number of milk depots doing business in this area in the last three years?

A. They are constantly increasing in numbers.

Q. Have you observed that the milk depots can sell their milk——

Mr. Coyle: You are leading him now, Mr. Alsup.

Mr. Alsup: Q. What price do the milk depots sell their milk at?

A. The State permits milk depots to sell their product at a discount under the retail prices which the State has set for the regular market outlets. This discount has given the milk depots a tremendous advantage and as a result have the trade that they attract with these lower milk prices and they are also getting into other related grocery items such as bread, cakes, snack items, beverages and actually expanding their field into grocery items all the time.

Q. How long has this expansion into other grocery items been going on?

A. It seems to be gathering momentum all the time.

[fols. 34-35] Q. Is milk——

Mr. Coyle: You asked him the question how long it has been going on?

Mr. Alsup: I am sorry.

The Witness: To pinpoint it to days and dates, I am unable to do that, except to say that it is noticeable and it is continuing at a more increased pace all the time. If you will look at the statistics that the State puts out you will find that these milk depots are now accounting for about 16 to 17 per cent of all the fluid milk products sold in this milk shed, which is a considerable amount of business.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Is milk an important or relatively unimportant item in grocery store sales?

A. It is one of the very basic staple items and of extreme importance.

Q. Do you have any idea whether there are more or fewer of these drive-in milk depots since the merger occurred with Shopping Bag in March of 1960?

A. I am convinced that there are many more.

Q. You testified in response to Mr. Coyle's interrogation that liquor stores have been selling groceries in this area since 1935. I ask you if you have seen any change in the picture since March 25, 1960.

A. I am not sure I understand your question, Mr. Alsup.

Q. Are there more or fewer liquor stores selling more or fewer grocery items?

[fol. 36] A. I believe it could be a general statement that these liquor stores are expanding their lines to convenience foods, snack items and those items which they can readily sell, such as party items and so forth.

Q. You were asked about the Speedee Marts. Do you have any knowledge of any other bantam stores which have commenced doing business in the metropolitan area?

A. I feel there are some but I can't give you a name right now.

Q. Have you heard of Pronto Marts?

A. No.

Mr. Coyle: You are leading the witness, Mr. Alsup.

Mr. Alsup: I have a perfect right to ask the question, "If he has heard."

The Witness: No, I have not heard of Pronto Marts.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Have you heard of Tiny Tims?

A. I have heard of Tiny Tims.

Mr. Knight: I would like to object right here that counsel is leading his own witness.

Mr. Alsup: Q. What have you heard of Tiny Tims?

A. Frankly not too much.

Q. Do you know whether or not there are any doing business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. No.

Q. Have you heard of Minit Marts?

A. Yes.

[fol. 37] Q. What have you heard about Minit Marts?

A. Not too much.

Q. Going back——

A. I am not very familiar with that type of operation.

Q. Going back to these drive-in milk depots, Mr. Von der Ahe, you testified that they are doing 16 per cent of the milk business in this milk shed. What did you mean by the phrase "milk shed"?

A. Well, that is a phrase used in the dairying business to describe a marketing area for retail marketing.

Q. What is that market?

A. Los Angeles metropolitan marketing area.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, I think you testified that Safeway, in your opinion, has more stores in the area——

Mr. Coyle: I will stipulate he testified to that.

Mr. Alsup: Q. —at the present time than it had in 1940 and more than it had in 1950. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how many Safeway stores there were in this area in 1930?

A. In 1930 I believe they had about a thousand stores.

Q. Do you know how many they had in 1940?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any knowledge how many stores A & P had across the country in the last 1930's?

A. I believe they had in the neighborhood of about 15,000 [fol. 38] stores.

Q. Do you know how many they have right now?

A. It's between four and five thousand.

Q. Based on your experience in the industry has there been a trend toward the disappearance of smaller stores and the growth of supermarkets?

A. Well, I think the answer is obviously, yes, that there has been a gradual disappearance of small stores and they are being replaced by the larger more conventional markets as we know them today.

Mr. Alsup: I have no further questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, referring to Von der Ahe's Exhibits 2, 3, 4 and 5 for Identification, all of them being newspaper, magazine or bulletin accounts which purport to report speeches by Ward J. Jenssen, were you personally present at any of these speeches?

A. I did not hear him say it, no.

Q. As far as you are concerned this is hearsay then, is it not?

A. I am basing my judgment on what was reported as being remarks made by Dr. Jenssen.

Q. You are assuming that this is correct?

[fol. 39] A. I did not hear it myself.

Mr. Alsup: I think, Mr. Coyle, if you will look, that two of them do not purport to be speeches, they purport to be articles by Dr. Jenssen.

Mr. Coyle: Q. You mentioned that in your observation or opinion milk depots account for 16 per cent of milk sales in this marketing area. What percentage of milk sales are accounted for by door-to-door deliveries?

Mr. Alsup: May the record show that the witness is working with a pencil and paper.

The Witness: I believe the figure would be in the neighborhood of 32 per cent.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Ten years ago what would have been the percentage accounted for by door-to-door deliveries?

A. You are asking me to go a long way back in my memory, but I believe the figure would be closer to 40 per cent.

Q. Is it an accepted fact that the door-to-door deliveries are accounting for a decreasing share of the sales of milk in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. I believe that is true.

Q. What about the chain grocery stores, are they accounting for a decrease—

Mr. Alsup: What chain grocery stores?

Mr. Coyle: Q. What about the grocery stores, are they accounting for an increasing or decreasing share of the total milk sales in the metropolitan area?

[fol. 40] A. We are speaking percentage only in all these figures that we are talking about?

Q. Yes.

A. The retail food industry through markets is also suffering a loss of milk sales percentagewise.

Q. How does it compare with the loss being suffered by the door-to-door deliveries?

A. I would say that it is rather hard to compare the loss suffered by door-to-door deliveries unless you treat this in percentages only. And I think that both door-to-door deliveries and out of market have suffered about the same percentage decrease which has gone to these milk depots.

Q. Have you made any study to determine this?

A. I am quoting from memory of reports that are put out by, I think it is, the Milk Control Board of the State of California.

Q. Are the large chains in the area presently permitted by the Control Board to sell at a discount price?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it uses the phrase "large chains."

Mr. Coyle: Q. Are any chains in the area permitted to sell milk at the present time at a discount price?

A. I have to say all markets have the same retail price for milk, regardless of whether they are an independent or a chain.

Q. Who fixes that price?

[fol. 41] A. The State of California.

Q. And have they temporarily lowered that price?

A. At the present time there is an injunction against the Director prohibiting him from removing quantity discounts on milk. And so all retail market outlets are selling at a discount price but it is not as large a discount as milk depots are enjoying.

Q. Was your chain one of the chains that sued to have the injunction imposed?

A. Yes.

Q. And as a result of that injunction did you reduce the price on milk in your stores?

A. I don't think that was the result of the injunction. I think the result of the injunction was to allow us to continue to give this quantity discount.

Q. And in giving this quantity discount are you selling at a lower price than certain of your competitors?

A. No. Identical prices throughout the area.

Q. Is this price fixed for the mom and pops? Are the mom and pops able to sell milk at the same price as you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they in fact selling milk at that price?

Mr. Alsup: Which mom and pops?

The Witness: To that I don't know. But I believe they have the right to sell at the same price as everybody else and I am assuming that they do, because milk is such a [fol. 42] highly competitive product.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What is the quantity discount?

A. Gee, I don't know.

Q. Is it the quantity purchased by the consumer?

A. Yes. It is based on the amount bought by the consumer.

Q. You state that it is your observation that there are more milk depots in the area now than there were at the time of the acquisition. Are there more people in the area too?

A. What area are we referring to?

Q. Los Angeles metropolitan area.

A. I believe it is safe to assume there are.

Q. Do you know whether the increase in the number of milk depots has exceeded the increase in population on a proportionate basis during that period?

Mr. Vaughn: You mean a percentage basis?

Mr. Coyle: I am asking if he knows.

The Witness: The answer is, no, I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I have no further questions.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, in your examination by Mr. Coyle you showed him a clipping from the Commercial Bulletin [fol. 43] for March 19, 1963 entitled "Southern California Discount Centers (Volume General Stores With Food Departments)." I ask you if this is the document which you exhibited to Mr. Coyle.

A. Yes.

Mr. Alsup: I will ask that this be marked Von der Ahe Exhibit next in order.

(The clipping referred to was marked by the notary public as Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 7 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: That is all.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Referring to this Von der Ahe Exhibit No. 7 for Identification, and calling your attention to the store entitled "Venox," it is in the third column, the second from the bottom, have you ever inspected that store?

A. This store happens to be in Oxnard.

Q. Is that outside the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. This is in the County of Ventura.

Q. You have never inspected that one?

A. No, sir.

Q. Referring to the store marked "Sage Department Store," is that in the Los Angeles metropolitan area? It is [fol. 44] in the second column, second from the bottom.

A. That is in Bakersfield.

Q. Is that outside the area?

A. That is in Kern County.

Q. Referring to the store entitled "Mednick Brothers," is that in the Los Angeles metropolitan area? That is in the fourth column. The address is listed as Compton. Is that in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes, that is in the L.A. Metropolitan area.

Q. Have you inspected that store?

A. I have been in that store before it became known as Fantastic Fair City.

Q. When was that?

A. This was several years ago. As I understand it it was an operation that was not very successful as a supermarket and they converted it to a discount house.

Q. How long ago were you in there?

A. Oh, this is a very old store. I have been in it three or four times.

Q. When was the last time?

A. I can't even remember.

Q. Was it more than three——

A. I have not been in it since it has been operated as Fantastic Fair City.

Q. You do not know what size, shape or type of grocery department it has, do you?

[fol. 45] A. Not since it has been converted, no.

Q. Prior to being converted it was a conventional supermarket?

A. Right.

Q. How many square feet of space did it have in it when you inspected it?

A. I would guess around 15,000 feet.

Q. How many square feet does your biggest store have?

A. Our biggest store in sales area has square footage of about 22,000 square feet.

Q. Do some of your Shopping Bag Stores have department store sections?

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to a store listed as SCOA, in the third column second from the top, have you ever been in that store?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge as to what kind of operation SCOA has out there?

A. I do not, no.

Q. You took no part in preparing this exhibit or making this list?

A. This?

Q. Yes.

A. Absolutely not. This is prepared by the Commercial Bulletin, which is one of the trade papers here in Los Angeles.

[fol. 46] Q. You have no way of knowing, or no personal knowledge as to whether these individual statements are true or false that appear on this document?

A. I don't understand your question. What do you mean the statements being true or false?

Q. Whether or not there is a SCOA store at Orange and Service Road, West Covina, and whether or not it has a grocery department in it.

A. The answer is I have been by the store, I have seen it. I have not been in it.

Q. You don't know whether it has a grocery department in it or not?

A. But it is represented by Commercial Bulletin as having a grocery department, and they are reliable. I would say they do have a grocery department there.

Q. On the basis of the representation made by the Commercial Bulletin?

A. Yes.

Q. But not on the basis of your own personal knowledge?

A. That's right.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, you were asked how many square feet your largest store in your chain has in selling area and [fol. 47] I think you testified it was 22,000 square feet.

A. That's right.

Q. Do you have grocery stores with lesser square feet?

A. Oh, yes, very much.

Q. What is the smallest one in terms of square feet of selling space?

A. We have some very small ones, the exact footage I do not know. But I daresay that we have some with less than 6,000 feet of selling area.

Q. What is your highest grossing store in terms of annual sales?

A. We have several stores that will gross around $5,000,000 a year.

Q. What is your worse annual grossing store?

A. I believe we have one store that is going at the rate of about $800,000 a year.

Q. Where is that located?

A. That is located on Huntington Drive and San Gabriel Avenue.

Q. That is a former Shopping Bag Store?

A. It is still operated under the Shopping Bag name, yes.

Q. Is that a profitable store?

A. No.

[fol. 48] Q. Would it be profitable, in your opinion, for a single store operator operating that store?

A. Oh, very much so.

Q. How large is your Store No. 22 in Reseda?

A. I believe the figures are it is 160 feet by 140 feet. Do you want me to calculate that out? That would be 24,400 feet on the ground floor.

Q. What selling space would that represent?

A. The selling space normally is around two-thirds of the ground floor area. So this would be in the neighborhood of 16,000 square feet.

Q. When was that Store No. 22 built?

A. I think it was built around 1953. I am not sure exactly but it was in that area.

Q. Do you have any idea what the draw area was of that store in 1953?

A. In 1953, or at the time the store was built, we sort of pioneered the neighborhood and had a rather large draw area. By that I mean we actually attracted 25 per cent or so of our trade from beyond five miles.

Q. What has happened to the draw area of that store?

A. Well, as more people have moved in there have been more markets move in and each one has taken a certain amount of business so that the store which once did $6,000,000 or more per year is now down to two and a half million or so per year. Our draw area has been restricted to just what is now convenient for the immediate neighborhood to [fol. 49] come in and patronize us because there is no longer any reason for them to go——for our customers to go past other markets and come to us. In other words, our draw area has been considerably restricted because of the influx of competition on all sides of us.

Q. And during what period are you referring to?

A. This has been a gradual declination, I would say, from 1956 on.

Q. Since March 25, 1960 have there been declines in the draw areas or in the grosses of your stores, or the Shopping Bag Stores in 1960?

A. I think it could be a general observation that older stores, those that have been in existence since March 25, 1960, have all suffered by having their draw areas restricted and it would follow that their gross sales have also been declining.

Q. Since March 1960 have you constructed new stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you constructed new stores outside the Los Angeles metropolitan area? By that I am referring to Los Angeles County and Orange County.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you state for the record what stores Von's has now outside the Los Angeles metropolitan areas as compared to what Von's or Shopping Bag had in March 1960?

A. We have opened a store in Oceanside, which is in San [fol. 50] Diego County; we have opened a store in Ventura, which is in Ventura County; we have opened a store in Camarillo, Ventura County; we have opened a store in Canejo Park, or Thousand Oaks, Ventura County; we have opened a store in Santa Susana, which is Ventura County; we are building a store in Carona, which is in Riverside County. That is all that comes to my mind right now.

Q. Shopping Bag at the time of its merger with you in 1960 had two stores in San Bernardino County; is that correct?

A. That's correct. They had one in Fontana and one in Upland.

Q. And you still have those stores?

A. We still have those stores.

Mr. Alsup: I have no further questions.

Mr. Coyle: I have one question.

The Witness: I have to back up here. I think Ontario is also in San Bernardino County and we have opened a store there.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. You have indicated that you have at least one store that you believe an independent can do better in than you people.

A. That's very true.

[fol. 51] Q. How many stores altogether are in that category?

Mr. Vaughn: How many of Von's Stores?

Mr. Coyle: Q. How many of the Von's-Shopping Bag Stores?

A. Mr. Coyle, I think we have about five stores that an independent could operate very successfully.

Q. And an independent couldn't operate any of the other stores successfully?

A. I didn't mean to imply that.

Q. That is what I was asking you. How many of your stores could an independent operate successfully?

A. An independent could operate any one of our stores successfully.

Q. Just as successfully as you are operating them?

A. Better.

Q. But he couldn't get in the shopping centers.

A. This I don't know.

Q. If he didn't have Triple A financing he couldn't get in, you know that. You said it in your affidavit.

A. The financing in shopping centers is one that an individual as such, regardless of his financing, cannot get into a shopping center because the lender has got to be assured of the ability of the tenant to repay his investment. And it has to be a corporation to do that.

Q. What areas are these five stores in? Let me ask it another way. Are any of these five stores that an independent could do better than you are doing in, in Whittier?

[fol. 52] Mr. Alsup: I think that misstates the testimony of the witness, Mr. Coyle. I believe the witness testified he had five stores that they are not operating successfully that an independent could operate profitably.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Are any of those stores in Whittier?

A. No.

Q. Are any of them in Garden Grove?

A. Yes.

Q. How about Downey?

A. No.

Q. Alhambra?

A. Time out. I have to write down the stores first. Roughly we have about five borderlines.

Q. In what areas are they, could you tell me? Including the one in Anaheim?

Mr. Alsup: Why don't you ask him, Mr. Coyle, and he will give them to you.

The Witness: I will give them to you as they come to my mind readily.

We have a store in Eagle Rock, we have a store I already mentioned on Huntington Drive in San Marino, we have a store at Fairfax and Olympic. I wasn't thinking about the one you mentioned in Garden Grove, but it is actually in Anaheim and I add that to the list.

Mr. Coyle: Q. You have four so far.

A. I will give you the store on Valley Boulevard in [fol. 53] Alhambra. I will give you another store in Lancaster. We have increased the list already.

Q. Are any of these stores up for sale?

A. No.

Q. Do you think that some of them in Lancaster will be profitable if you hold onto them long enough?

A. We have made no effort to dispose of them yet. We are making every effort to make them profitable and should we fail to make them profitable we will dispose of them.

Mr. Coyle: I don't have any more questions.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. This store in Eagle Rock, Mr. Von der Ahe, was that a Von's or was it a Shopping Bag Store?

A. It was a Shopping Bag Store.

Q. Do you have any idea how old that store is?

A. Oh, it's 20 years old. I have no idea but it is real old.

Q. And this store on Huntington Drive in San Marino you testified is not profitable for you. Was that a former Von's or Shopping Bag Store?

A. That was a Shopping Bag Store.

Q. How about the one you mentioned on Fairfax and Olympic?

[fol. 54] A. That is a Von's Store.

Q. How about the one in Anaheim?

A. Shopping Bag.

Q. I think you mentioned a store on Valley Boulevard in Alhambra. What was that?

A. That is a Shopping Bag Store.

Q. How about the one in Lancaster that you mentioned?

A. Shopping Bag.

Q. Was it your testimony, Mr. Von der Ahe, that these are not profitable stores for your company?

A. That is correct.

Q. This Shopping Bag Store in San Marino on Huntington Drive, is that near San Gabriel Boulevard?

A. That is the north and south street there. Yes.

Q. How far is that from the Shopping Bag Store west on Huntington Drive in San Marino?

A. I guess about a mile.

Q. And that other was a Shopping Bag Store prior to the merger?

A. Also, yes.

Q. Have you made any observations as to whether or not Shopping Bag Stores generally were located close or far apart from one another?

Mr. Coyle: That is a pretty vague question.

The Witness: I don't know if there would be any general scheme involved, but I have noticed that some Shopping Bags were opened rather close to existing markets, much [fol. 55] closer than some of the Von's markets that I can think of. But in each case I could see where Mr. Hayden was trying to serve a neighborhood or an area, and there are some instances where the stores are fairly close to each other.

Mr. Alsup: I have no further questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Are you considering disposing of any of those stores in those neighborhoods where they are fairly close to each other?

A. Not over above what I have just given to you, with maybe some few exceptions that don't come to my mind.

Q. Maybe a few more in addition to these six that are borderlines?

A. Time will tell.

Q. Have you disposed of any stores in the last three years?

A. No.

Q. When did you last dispose of any stores?

A. We disposed of a store at Manchester and Vermont and I can't guess how many years ago it was now. But I would just say seven or eight years ago.

Q. Did you sell that to an independent?

[fol. 56] A. Sold it to an independent.

Q. Is he still operating it?

A. Yes. And making money.

Mr. Coyle: No more questions.

Mr. Alsup: No more questions.

going deposition be signed before any notary public with the same force and effect as though read, corrected and signed in the presence of the notary public before whom it was taken.)

I, HAROLD M. LEIBOVITZ, C.S.R., a Notary Public within and for the County of Los Angeles and State of California, do hereby certify;

That prior to being examined, THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, the witness named in the foregoing deposition, was by me duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth;

That said deposition was taken before me pursuant to oral stipulation, at the time and place therein set forth, and was taken down by me in shorthand and thereafter transcribed into typewriting under my direction and supervision; that the said deposition is a true record of the testimony given by the witness;

That it was stipulated by counsel that said deposition may be read, corrected and signed by the witness before any notary public in and for the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

I further certify that I am neither counsel for nor related to any party to said action, nor in anywise interested in the outcome thereof.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal, this 6th day of June 1963.

AFFIDAVIT OF JOHN COKER

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

JOHN COKER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the Regional Sales Manager for the American Chicle Company. I have been with that company for 28 years, 14 of which have been spent primarily in the Los Angeles area.

American Chicle Company sells chewing gum, mints and certain other products to virtually every grocery store in the Los Angeles Metropolitan area. Our customers also include drug stores, liquor stores, and other retail outlets. Grocers in Los Angeles can buy our products directly or through Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. or other co-operatives.

In order to conduct my business properly, it is necessary for me to become well acquainted with the business operations of my customers. As a result, I am quite familiar with the business conducted by all of the larger chains and many smaller concerns in the retail grocery business in this area.

In my opinion, the single store operator or small chain has every opportunity to compete successfully against the larger chains. The smaller concern has greater flexibility in the merchandising methods he employs and he can make changes in his operations more quickly than a chain. The sale of chewing gum, for example, depends in large measure on where and how it is displayed in a store. We are constantly urging our customers to display our products in display racks, which we will provide, and to locate them in the most desirable place in their store, which is usually close to the check-out stands. I know from my own experience that once you persuade a single store operator to follow your suggestions, he can make the necessary changes in a matter of hours. But when you are dealing with a chain executive, the task is far more complicated. We must supply him with the display racks and find a means of getting them to the stores. He must send out bulletins to all of his store managers instructing them to make the change. Invariably, days elapse before the change is actually accomplished. The same thing happens with other products and other changes which any grocer, whether large or small, is continually making. It is obvious that in this respect the independent can always get the competitive jump on the chains.

Also, the independent can buy his groceries as cheaply if not cheaper than the chains through Certified or Orange Empire Co-op. People sometimes do not appreciate what a tremendous factor Certified is in this market. My company's records show that Certified is the largest, single customer we have in the United States. Through its buying power, an independent can gain every possible buying advantage which a direct buying chain enjoys.

In my opinion, as long as smaller concerns have these advantages, there is no reason to conclude that the chains now doing business in Los Angeles will attain a position of economic dominance.

I do not see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could in any way affect the competitive opportunities of smaller concerns, or stifle the growth of any grocer who may want to expand his business. Most of this area's larger chains began right here as one or two store operations and you can bet that there are a number of small concerns in the business today who will expand into chains in the next 10 or 20 years. The growth of smaller concerns into large local chains has characterized the grocery business for years, and I know of no valid reason to suspect that this will not be the case in the future.

I suppose that my views with respect to the Von's-Shopping Bag merger boil down to this. That merger occurred in March, 1960, nearly three years ago. So far as I can see, that merger has thus far proven to be an insignificant event in the history of grocery retailing in this area. It has been productive of no discernible change. It has not brought any new and powerful concern into the area nor has it resulted in the closing of any stores. Both Von's and Shopping Bag stores continue to do business from the same stands just as they did before the merger. There is no doubt that since March, 1960, some changes have occurred in grocery retailing in this area. Many new stores have been opened. Discount houses have begun selling food. Experiments in the operation of bantam stores and so-called convenience markets have been instituted. Liquor stores and other types of outlets have begun selling more and more grocery products. We have experienced a mild recession. Some larger chains have failed. Others, such as Food Giant and Alpha Beta, have expanded rapidly. But I cannot think of a single change in the grocery business which attributable even indirectly to the merger. The merger has not affected competition, competitors, methods of doing business, entry into the market or any other aspect of grocery retailing. It seems to me that if the merger has nad no adverse effect on competition in the last three years, it is reasonable to conclude that it will have no such effect in the next three or the next thirty years. For this reason, I am of the view that the merger cannot possibly lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

John Coker.

AFFIDAVIT OF CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of City Refrigerator Co., a company which supplies store fixtures to retail grocery concerns in Southern California, and principally in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

Commencing in the late 1920's, I was associated with Castendyck Construction Company. Our business included developing various properties for use as retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. We would choose a likely location, draw plans for the store, interest the owner in building it, find a tenant to operate it, erect the building, supply the operator with necessary fixtures, help him with the layout of his store and in any other way possible promote the development of the store.

In the early 1930's, I went into the business of selling fixtures to grocers. In order to promote the sale of fixtures, I promoted the development of grocery stores and assisted the grocer with the layout of the store.

This sort of promotion usually followed a pattern. First, I would find a location which I thought would make a good grocery store. I would contact the owner of the property and tell him I thought I could find him a tenant who would pay $500 a month in rent. If the owner expressed interest, I would try to find a groceryman or someone interested in going into the grocery business who might be willing to operate a store at this location. I would try to sell him on the location. I might suggest that he sign the master lease on the store but operate only the grocery concession. I would then suggest that I could find a meat man to run the meat department who would pay $150 a month rent, a produce man to run the produce concession and pay the same amount, and operators for the delicatessen and dairy departments who would pay $125 a month each. This would allow the grocery concession to be operated rent free. If the grocer approved this plan, I would then find the tenants to operate the other concessions. If I was successful, I would then design the interior layout of the market for each concessionaire and sell them the fixtures.

In later years, it became popular for one man or one company to operate all concessions in a store. Later the supermarket developed and larger stores were built. I continued my efforts to find locations for these stores and promote their development in order to sell fixtures. I am sure that it would be no exaggeration to say that I have promoted the development of hundreds of grocery stores.

I performed these kinds of services for most of the successful grocers doing business in Los Angeles in the 1930's and 1940's. Among my customers were Ted and Will Von der Ahe, who started Von's Grocery Co. with one store in the early 30's and have built it into a large chain; Rube Hayden, who developed the Shopping Bag Chain from a one store beginning; Sam Alexander, who developed Alexanders Markets from one store; Bill and Larry Fredricks, who operated the Hollywood Ranch Market, and many, many others. Today, my customers include grocery concerns, both large and small, doing business in all parts of Southern California.

While I still plan store layouts for my customers, in recent years I have been able to forego some of the other elaborate promotional techniques which I used to employ in order to sell fixtures. Nonetheless, I am still well acquainted with the location, merchandising methods, facilities and management of countless grocery stores in Los Angeles and elsewhere. I am active and interested in the grocery business and I think I know it pretty well.

Ever since I can remember, I have heard some people say that the days of the independent were numbered and that the grocery business in Los Angeles would soon be dominated by chains. These predictions have proven false in the past and will in the future, in my judgment. I base my opinion in this respect on a number of things.

First, there is no question in my mind that an independent has an excellent competitive opportunity in Los Angeles. A grocery store is a business run by people. It does not run itself, and its success or failure depends on the ability and effort put into it by the people who own and operate it. A single store operator is always in his store, personally overseeing all aspects of his business and directing all his attention to that one store. A chain executive, no matter how good a groceryman he may be, must divide his attention and talents among many stores. He must run his business through supervisors and store managers while he sits in chain headquarters. He cannot make his decisions on the basis of competitive conditions in one community but instead he must consider all of his stores and he must formulate a chain-wide policy. As a result, the independent gains a tremendous competitive advantage in terms of his ability to move quickly and decisively with only the operation of one store in mind and without having to take into account the wide range of complex problems which confront any chain by reason of its larger and more diversified operations.

In the same vein, a single store operator can personally serve his customers, get to know them, and gain their confidence and friendship by personal contact. "Personality" is of great importance in attracting and holding customers in the grocery business. A store will reflect the "personality" of its owner, and in this respect, an independent can create and maintain a friendly, courteous, appealing atmosphere which contrasts with the always more or less impersonal atmosphere of any chain store.

An independent can personally supervise his business and by watching costs closely and contributing his own labor to his business, he should always be able to earn a greater margin of profit on every dollar of sales than the chain.

Finally, through Certified Grocers and other buying cooperatives, a small concern can buy its groceries for no greater cost than paid by the chains.

Thus, there is plainly an excellent opportunity open and available to almost any qualified person who wants to own a grocery store. Because of the proven ability of small concerns to compete successfully with larger chains and because entry into the grocery business is relatively easy, there always have been and still are many people willing to take advantage of this opportunity. In the past, a great number of these people have made a lot of money. Some have expanded their businesses into today's chains. Some have been content to operate one or two stores. The retail grocery business in Los Angeles has seen too many successes to ever conclude that in the years to come there will be no new successes, no new chains or single store operators and no new opportunities. The past history of the business and the plain fact that opportunity still exists makes it appear inconceivable to me that the chains now doing business in Los Angeles will or can attain any degree of economic dominance.

Naturally, I recognize that the grocery business also has resulted in failure for some. Both large and small concerns have failed and some percentage of today's grocery concerns can be expected to fail in the future. I am familiar with the facts surrounding many of these past failures. In one case, failure may result from under-capitalization, in another case rapid over expansion may be the cause. Inexperience, lack of ability, changes in neighborhood from residential to commercial, and the apparent unwillingness of some to work hard have taken their toll, as they will in the future. But these failures did not occur because of any lack of opportunity or any competitive disadvantage suffered by small or large concerns.

Nor should these failures be regarded as necessarily resulting in net losses to competition. I am reminded of a statement made to me 30 years ago by Walter Oppen, who was at that time operating a small grocery store on Jefferson Boulevard near the University of Southern California. We were discussing the failure of a grocery store and the fear being expressed even then, that independent grocers were a dying breed. Walter said that he did not believe that the independently owned and operated grocery store would ever become extinct. Instead, he felt that there would always be others who would come to take the place of those who left the business. As he put it, "Independents are like flies; when one dies, six others come to the funeral." This was true then, and it still is. The past has shown that there is a steady stream of newcomers in the grocery business. No doubt they are attracted by the opportunities which I have previously tried to describe. But for whatever reason, they seem to keep coming.

In fact, I am willing to go out on a limb and make a prediction. In my opinion, in the next 10 years, we will see more grocery concerns in Los Angeles, both large and small, than at any time in the past 20 years. In making this prediction, I am aware of statistics which seem to show a decline in the number of grocery stores being operated in Los Angeles and Orange Counties in the past decade or so. I do not know if these statistics are accurate. Also, if they take into account only grocery stores, they undoubtedly overlook the fact that other types of stores, including liquor stores, sell more groceries today than many small corner grocery stores. But if there has been a decline in the number of grocery stores, I am sure that it is due in large measure to the fact that the old, small, corner grocery store has been replaced by the large supermarket, which of course, does much more business and serves many more people than the older, smaller type store. Therefore, fewer of these large stores are needed. The competition waged by these larger stores is more intense today than ever, and is likely to become more so as newcomers enter the market and existing firms grow. And the fact that there are fewer stores today will not limit future opportunities for entry or growth, in my opinion.

So far as I can see, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has had absolutely no effect on the opportunities available to others in the grocery business, on the intensity of competition or on any other aspect of grocery retailing in Los Angeles. In my opinion, it is ridiculous to think that the merger could adversely affect competition or lead in any way to market dominance by Von's or anyone else. I just don't see how a merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could "tend to create a monopoly" in any way in an industry composed of hundreds of vigorous, able competitors who are successfully operating thousands of stores and opening new stores every day.

In fact, I believe that in at least one respect, the merger may have benefited competition by resulting in the preservation of the continued competitive activity of Shopping Bag's stores. From what I know of Shopping Bag's operations prior to the merger, there was a chance that without the merger, that concern would have failed. I base my views in this respect on three principal factors:

1. Shopping Bag's top management was dangerously "thin." Rube Hayden and perhaps one or two others in the Shopping Bag organization were and are very able grocerymen, but they did not have enough such people to take care of all the complex management problems which arise in the operation of a 38 store chain. This meant that some of these problems had to be ignored or neglected.

2. Many of Shopping Bag's stores were in outlying areas which had been relatively free of strong competition for many years. But in the few years prior to the merger, these areas had caught the eye of other concerns, both large and small, who were building new stores to compete with Shopping Bag.

3. Shopping Bag for many years had engaged in a rapid expansion program on a minimum of capital and many people felt that Shopping Bag was under-financed. In early 1961 (after the merger), another company which had been doing the same thing—Fox Markets—finally filed a petition in bankruptcy. Hundreds of Fox's suppliers were badly hurt, and immediately suppliers throughout Los Angeles began cracking down on all grocery concerns in order to collect past due accounts and get their payments on a current basis so as to avoid losses such as had been experienced in the Fox bankruptcy. I believe that this pressure from suppliers dealt the final blow to other under-financed concerns such as Yor-Way Markets and McDaniels Markets and forced them into assignments for benefit of creditors. But for its merger with a well-managed, financially sound company such as Von's, it is possible that Shopping Bag would have suffered a similar fate.

In short, it is my opinion that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger benefited both companies and their stockholders and possibly saved the closing of some or all of Shopping Bag stores without in any way adversely affecting either competitors or competition and without in any way raising the slightest fear of domination of this market by Von's alone or larger concerns in general.

AFFIDAVIT OF CYRIL C. NIGG

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CYRIL C. NIGG, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the President of Bell Brand Foods, Ltd., a company which sells potato chips, peanut butter, nut meats and other products to virtually every grocery concern doing business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. We also sell our products in other areas of Southern California.

I have been engaged in the business of supplying grocers in this area since 1929 when I went to work as a salesman for the Kellogg Company. I was with that concern for 16 years, and during that time rose to the position of District Manager. In 1945, I purchased Bell Brand Foods, Ltd. and have headed that company ever since.

Since 1929, I have been intimately aware of developments in grocery retailing in the Los Angeles area. I have witnessed the growth of chains. I am acquainted with the business operations of many independents. I have seen grocers, both large and small, succeed, and I have seen others fail.

I have been asked by attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to express an opinion as to the effect of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag Food Stores on competition in the retail sale of groceries in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In my opinion, that merger has not and will not affect competion in any way for the following reasons:

1. In the first place, there were very few Von's and Shopping Bag stores near enough to each other to compete for the same customers. For the most part, Von's had its stores in the south-western sections of the Los Angeles metropolitan area while Shopping Bag stores were located mainly in the northern sections. Thus, there was little, if any, competition between the two concerns which could have been affected by the merger.

2. There are literally hundreds of grocery concerns in Los Angeles and Orange Counties operating thousands of stores. In every community served by a Von's or Shopping Bag store there are stores of other chains and independents effectively competing for the patronage of customers.

3. The merger gave Von's no competitive advantage over its rivals. It has been proven time and again both before and since the merger that any experienced, hard-working grocer can compete successfully in this area. The single-store operator can compete very effectively with chain stores. He can buy his groceries as cheaply as chains through Certified Grocers or some other cooperative. He can operate with greater flexibility than a chain. I cannot conceive of any reason why an independent grocer could not compete as effectively now against a Von's or Shopping Bag store as before the merger. If anything, he ought to be doing better since Von's is now a larger and hence more impersonal, less flexible chain.

4. The grocery business in Los Angeles has always been characterized by change, innovation and the emergence of new concerns. This is as true today as ever. Discount houses are selling groceries. So are liquor stores and other types of establishments. Competition is coming from an increasing number of new sources. Under these circumstances, I cannot see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could in any possible way lead to a monopoly or domination of the retail food business by a few large concerns.

AFFIDAVIT OF EDWARD F. PASINI

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

EDWARD F. PASINI, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the Plant Manager and Southern California Manager of Langendorf United Bakeries, Inc., a position I have held for the past thirty-five years.

Langendorf sells bread and other bakery products to virtually all the grocery stores located in Southern California. In addition, Langendorf sells its products to other types of retail establishments, such as liquor stores and to institutional and restaurant accounts.

Our customers are solicited and deliveries of our products are made to them by route men who are assigned specific territories. We also have supervisors whose duty it is to supervise and regulate the activities of our route men. As part of their job, these employees are required to become familiar with the location and business affairs of every customer or potential customer in their respective territories. Of course grocery stores have always been the principal outlet for Langendorf products, and our route men and supervisors have a particular knowledge of the grocers and grocery stores in their territories.

It was because of this fact that in April 1962 attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. came to Langendorf and to me with a request that through our route men and supervisors we conduct a survey of certain designated grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Von's attorneys advised us that they had obtained from the California State Board of Equalization a list of the names and addresses of grocery stores which had allegedly closed their doors in 1960 and a list of the names and addresses of grocery stores which had allegedly opened in 1960, but which were closed by November 15, 1961. The list of grocery stores closed in 1960 was designated as "Table A." It was segregated into stores operated by companies with two or more outlets (multiple outlet concerns) and companies with only one outlet (independent grocery stores). The list of stores opened in 1960, but closed by November 15, 1961, was designated as "Table B," and was similarly segregated.

Von's attorneys wanted us to check the accuracy of those tables and to supply any other information concerning the stores in question. In order to comply with this request, I instructed our route men and supervisors to check each location listed on Tables A and B and to provide me with any information they had or were able to find out concerning it. I made it clear to the route men and supervisors that their reports should be accurate and complete. I instructed them not to speculate or guess, but to be sure that their reports were in all respects correct.

Our check was made in April and again in October, 1962. Our route men and supervisors checked a total of 295 locations in all. We found that 16, or approximately 5% of them, were not now and, so far as we could tell, never had been grocery stores. For example, in one case the location listed by the Board of Equalization had been a hot dog stand for a number of years and was still being operated as such. In another case, the location was a private home. In addition, we found that 19 of the stores checked (approximately 6%) were still being operated by the persons or entities which, according to the Board of Equalization, had ceased doing business at the location listed. In addition, we found that 20 of the stores listed by the Board in its tables were duplications of stores already listed at some other place in the tables. This apparent error accounted for approximately 6% of the total.

It is apparent that the above-referred to locations, totaling 55 in all, should not have been listed in the Board's tables in any case. They were either not grocery stores at all or had not been closed and had not experienced any change in ownership or they represented only a duplication of a store listed elsewhere on the Board's tables.

By subtracting those 55 stores from the total listed by the Board of Equalization, we are left with 240 locations. We found that a successor business entity had operated a grocery store at 81 (or more than 33%) of those 240 locations after the discontinuance of the business of the entity listed by the Board. In all but 12 of those 81 cases a grocery store was still being operated at the location in question as late as October, 1962, when we made our last check. This shows that in a number of cases the discontinuance of the business referred to in the Board's tables did not result in the elimination of a grocery store, but only a change in ownership. We note that the Board's tables purport to reflect only the closing of stores which were not later operated as grocery stores by a successor concern. These 81 stores were improperly listed, therefore, because of the subsequent operations of a successor.

By adding these 81 stores to the 55 previously mentioned, it is apparent that the Board's tables include 136 locations which have no place in a list of grocery stores closed without any successor. Those 136 locations constitute 46% of the 295 stores listed.

Our study also showed that of the 159 stores remaining after elimination of those which were improperly listed, 18 (or approximately 11%) had been closed because the owner moved his grocery business to a new location. 29 (or nearly 20%) had closed because a freeway or some other public improvement had resulted either in the condemnation of the store property itself or of the surrounding homes it served. 21 (or more than 13%) were closed due to the death, retirement or illness of the owner. 5 (or 3%) were closed because of a fire or the loss of a lease. 2 (or 1%) were sold for a profitable sum to make way for another type of business such as a gas station.

This leaves only 84 of the total of 295 stores listed which closed for good because of business failure or for reasons which our route men and supervisors could not otherwise explain. Of these we found 5 locations which had not been used as grocery stores for several years prior to 1960. Most of these 84 stores were extremely small. In one case, the "store" consisted of a trailer parked a quarter of a mile off a highway in Lancaster on a bad dirt road. It had a total inventory worth about $60. While this is an extreme example, it does show that almost any business, no matter how small and how unlike the customary grocery store, was listed as such on the Board's tables if it sold food products of any kind or in any amount. Also we found that in most instances the 84 business failures listed by the Board were poorly operated.

Our detailed findings are set forth below under the classifications and table headings used by the Board of Equalization.

In addition to the foregoing, I would like to make some further remarks concerning the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. I have been intimately familiar with that business for the past 35 years. I have seen grocery concerns fail, and I have seen others succeed. I have personally witnessed the changes in grocery retailing which have occurred during those years.

Twenty or thirty years ago, the grocery business was conducted almost exclusively from small stores. In most cases, the grocery concession was run by one man, the meat concession by another, the produce concession by a third, and so on. After World War II, however, an innovation in food retailing hit Los Angeles—the supermarket. These stores were much larger and newer than the small corner grocery store. They often times were able to serve as many people as two or three of the older, smaller type stores, and they became immensely popular. Since the War, almost all of the new stores built have been of the supermarket variety. Small stores have been closed to make way for new supermarkets. Because of their larger size, a few supermarkets may adequately serve a community previously served by a number of smaller stores. Safeway, for example, has had a program under way for some time now designed to eliminate its smaller stores and replace them with fewer, but larger supermarkets (see, for example, Table A, supra).

I have been advised by Von's attorneys that other statistics developed by the Board of Equalization show a decline in the number of stores being operated in Los Angeles and Orange Counties since 1948. It may be that there are fewer stores today than in 1948 (although I have my doubts concerning the accuracy of the Board of Equalization's figures in view of our findings as set forth above). I am also sure that this decline, if it exists, is attributable in large measure to the popularity of the supermarket.

There have been other changes in grocery retailing over the years. For example, it used to be that the small corner grocery store had to meet only the competition posed by other small corner grocery stores within a radius of a few blocks. Most of the grocer's customers could walk to his store from their homes. This is not so today. First of all, people are more mobile. They travel in automobiles to do their shopping. They will go further to shop than before. They want to go to a store which provides such advantages as adequate parking facilities. Thus, today, any grocer must meet the competition posed by stores as far as 2 miles from his, and he must meet that competition on all levels, not only in terms of the quality and price of his products, but also in terms of convenience, accessibility and the other intangible inducements which are demanded by the public.

Moreover, today's groceryman must deal with competition from outlets which did not concern him at all 20 years ago. Today, grocery products are sold in discount houses, drug stores and liquor stores. For example, it has been Langendorf's experience that in recent years, we have sold more bread through certain large liquor stores than we have in some supermarkets.

Therefore, it is obvious to me that grocery retailing is much more complex and many-sided than ever before. Competition is and always has been vigorous. It is becoming more so as the passage of time brings change, not only in the geographic area of competition faced by any store, but in the form, content and character of competition as well. There may be fewer stores today than in the past, but I seriously doubt that any retailer could say that he faces less competition today than in former years.

It is equally obvious to me that in a business as competitive as grocery retailing, a grocer to succeed must perceive and adapt to these changes which occur in competition. If he does not, he will fail. In order to succeed, he must be experienced and able, and he must move forward with the times in order to take full advantage of his opportunities. However, the grocery business has not always attracted only experienced and able men. Many find it easy to open up a small store since there are few businesses today which require a lesser initial capital outlay. But those who do open a store are not always sufficiently equipped to meet the demands of competition. Hence, business failure is not uncommon. It has taken its toll not only in the case of small chains and single stores but in the case of comparatively large chains as well.

I do not believe that these instances of failure can be attributed to any competitive advantage held by larger chains over smaller concerns. Anyone who reached a contrary conclusion would, in my opinion, have to overlook the plain fact that there are today and always have been successful grocers with one, two or three stores. Many of today's chains had their beginnings with one store. Examples are Von's, Shopping Bag, Market Basket, Shoppers, Pantry, Michaels, and many others. Other grocers have made good money with one or two stores and have not chosen to expand. They compete quite successfully with chain stores in the communities where their outlets are located. These people were not just lucky, any more than those who have failed were just unlucky. The grocers who have succeeded did so because of hard work, careful planning, ability and experience. The fact that they were and are successful is proof of the ability of smaller concerns to compete with larger chains. I know it can be done because I have seen it done so often.

Under these circumstances, I certainly cannot foresee that this market will become dominated by a few large chains. On the contrary, I believe competition will become more vigorous and less concentrated. Certainly, I do not see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could in any way lessen competitive vigor or lead to domination of the grocery business by large concerns.

Edward F. Pasini.

AFFIDAVIT OF CAMPBELL STEWART

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

CAMPBELL STEWART, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

From 1927 until 1945, I operated retail grocery stores in various locations in Los Angeles County. Also, for a number of years prior to 1945, I served on the Board of Directors of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. In 1945, I was elected General Manager and Vice President of Certified, and in 1955, I became that organization's President, a position I held until my retirement in 1961. Since that time, I have been retained as a consultant by Certified and have devoted a good portion of my time to that organization's business affairs.

Certified had its beginning in 1922 when 15 grocery retailers, who operated one or two stores each in Los Angeles, met at the Hotel Green in Pasadena. The problem they faced was this—they could not effectively compete against many of the chains then doing business in Los Angeles because those chains could purchase groceries directly from suppliers in large quantities, while the small retailer had to purchase his groceries at higher prices from independent wholesalers. As a result, chain store retail prices were sometimes lower than the prices for which a small retailer could purchase groceries from his wholesaler.

These small retailers decided to try something new. They agreed to pool their resources in order to buy jointly through one common headquarters warehouse. They were thus able to purchase directly from manufacturers and other original sources of supply in sufficiently large quantities, so that they could obtain quantity discounts. In addition, a central warehouse would permit reduction of operating costs.

This was the beginning of cooperative buying in the Los Angeles area. The experiment proved to be successful, and in 1924, Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. was incorporated. All of the stock in that corporation has been and is held by retailers who purchase from Certified, and Certified sells only to its retailer-owners (called members).

Today, Certified is the largest retailer-owned food wholesaler in the United States. Its membership consists of 873 retail grocery concerns operating approximately 1,557 retail stores. In addition, Certified's wholly owned subsidiary, Spartan Grocers (also a retailer-owned cooperative), has 1,200 members who operate 1,255 stores. Most of the members of these cooperatives do business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, although Certified also serves some members in other parts of the Southern California trading area and in parts of Arizona, Nevada and elsewhere. The members of Certified and Spartan do a retail business estimated at $1.9 billion a year. According to the Federal Trade Commission, in 1958, Certified's member sales were greater than those of any grocery chain in America, with the exception of A & P, Safeway and Kroger Co.

Here are some additional facts about Certified:

1. Certified sells more than 13,000 items to its members, consisting of dry groceries, frozen foods, delicatessen products and certain non-food products such as health and beauty aids, housewares and appliances. Our members usually can purchase these products at the lowest possible price and as cheaply as any chain. As evidence of this fact, Certified is now supplying many of the area's discount food outlets—establishments which exist because they believe they can undersell the chains. Additionally, several chains who presumably could operate their own warehouses find it more advantageous to buy from Certified.

2. Certified has its main offices and warehouse at 2601 South Eastern Avenue, Los Angeles, on a 30 acre site. The warehouse at that location has 535,280 square feet of storage space, and in addition, Certified owns and operates another warehouse in the San Fernando Valley, which is approximately half as large as the main warehouse on Eastern Avenue. In addition, Certified has a coffee processing plant, a bean packaging plant and a frozen food warehouse. Certified's transportation fleet, which has approximately 340 tractors and trailers, travels more than 2½ million miles a year delivering merchandise to Certified's member stores.

3. While Certified deals primarily in branded items, it also has certain products available under its own private label—Springfield.

4. Certified has been a pioneer in the distribution of many new food items including frozen foods. Certified was instrumental in developing an economical method of distribution that helped cut frozen food handling costs to a point where any merchant could afford to carry this now important type of merchandise.

5. Certified employs seven trained men on a full-time basis who travel more than 10,000 miles a year to assist Certified's members in any way possible with grand openings, special promotions, store layouts, new store site selection, advertising and accounting problems. In addition, Certified's advertising department keeps members advised of advertising and promotional allowances offered by suppliers to Certified and its members. In addition, the advertising department is always available to assist members with advertising mats and layouts or display materials.

I am convinced that Certified has done far more than just allow independent grocers to stay in business. On the contrary, Certified has contributed significantly to making independents in the Los Angeles metropolitan area potent competitive factors having most of the advantages which flow from size without sacrificing the advantages which come from the independent operation of a small business. As members of Certified, the independent can usually buy as cheaply as a chain, and he can receive assistance in merchandising, advertising and promotional techniques which would otherwise not be available to him. As a small merchant, he can control costs more closely than can the chain, he can become an active member of his community and give his customers the personal touch which wins so many of them away from the chain store. He can move more quickly to meet local competition or take advantage of local conditions, while the nearby chain store must often await orders from its central headquarters.

In proof of my opinion in this respect, I need only to point to the success of many able and aggressive independents. There are countless independents who day after day compete successfully and in many cases out-compete their chain rivals. Year after year, I see independents increase their business and build new stores. Most of the leading chains in Los Angeles began as independents with only one store and a Certified membership. Von's and Shopping Bag are two good examples of the success story of Certified independents who started with one store and grew from there.

Naturally, I also recognize that some independents have failed. So have some chains. The failure of a few is inevitable in any business where margins are as thin and competition as keen as in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. But these failures should not be over-emphasized. It is my belief that failure is the exception and success the rule. I base this belief on my own observations and on this undeniable fact—Certified could not have grown and succeeded as it has unless its members, its only source of business, had likewise grown and succeeded. The record in this respect is clear. In 1948, Certified's wholesale sales reached a then all-time high of $87 million. By 1954, wholesale sales had increased to $198 million a year. By 1958, annual sales had reached $339 million, and by 1962, they were $345 million. This represents an increase of nearly 400% in 14 years.

Obviously, I am directly concerned with any development in food retailing which affects small grocery retailers, since they always have been and still are the primary source of Certified's business. If small concerns are hurt, so is Certified. If they are placed at a competitive disadvantage, Certified would be adversely affected. It is with this thought in mind that I have considered the effect of the Von's-Shopping Bag merger. In my opinion, that merger has not and will not lessen the keen and intense competition which characterizes the Los Angeles grocery business. It will not lead to dominance of the market by one or more chains, and it will not adversely affect the independent's competitive opportunities. In my opinion, the individual store operator is in an excellent position to make a success of food retailing, and there is no question in my mind whatever that the able and aggressive independent can continue to prosper. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag cannot affect that prospect, in my judgment. So far as I can see, an independent would have no greater difficulty competing with a nearby Von's or Shopping Bag store now than it had competing with that same store prior to the merger.

A charge that this merger may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly is, in my opinion, wholly refuted by even a casual glance at the past history of food retailing in Los Angeles, and with the continued existence of Certified and Spartan, I am confident that independents and small chains will continue to grow and prosper and that the Los Angeles grocery business will not be dominated by a few large concerns.

SUPPLEMENTAL AFFIDAVIT OF THOMAS H. LINDEN, SR.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

THOMAS H. LINDEN, SR., being duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

On January 5, 1962, I signed an affidavit in the above action in my capacity as President of Marketing Services Corporation. The following is a supplement thereto:

The price book published by Marketing Services Corporation reflects prices on approximately 3000 grocery products. The average supermarket carries approximately 7000 products.

Information set forth in the price book is determined by checking shelf prices at one of the stores operated by each of the chains whose prices are listed in the book. Such checks are made approximately once each week.

The price book is a useful guide to those interested in the range of prices being charged by various chains, but it does not purport to nor can it reflect actual prices being charged by the chains surveyed on all items at any given point in time for the following reasons:

(1) Prices change almost daily in the grocery business in Los Angeles and no survey can hope to record every change made;

(2) Not all prices of all chains are checked on the same day. For example, we may check Ralphs' prices on Tuesday and Safeway's prices on Thursday. Assume that both chains were selling a particular item for the same price on Tuesday. On Wednesday, each reduced its price on that item by one cent and again were selling the item at the same but a lower price. Our survey and price book, however, would show Ralphs' Tuesday price and Safeway's Thursday price and would hence show a price variation between the two of one cent, though, in fact, both chains were selling the item in question at the same price;

(3) The prices listed in our price book are retained from week to week without change unless a change is found and noted by one of our checkers. Such changes are not always found because:

(a) When an item does not appear on the shelves of the store checked, it is not known whether the item has been discontinued or the store has merely sold all its existing supply;

(b) Our survey reflects only ordinary shelf prices and does not purport to record prices on items which are "on special" or as to which there is a temporary price reduction for any other reason. It is not always possible, however, to distinguish between "specials" and actual reductions in shelf price; and

(c) In checking 15,000 items a week, there are bound to be some errors made.

(4) There is necessarily a time lag of from four to seven days or in some cases longer between the day on which any given price change is made and the day on which our subscribers learn of the change. It takes at least that long for our checker to learn of the change, for the change to be made in the price book, and for the book to be printed, mailed and received.

Marketing Services Corporation's principal competitor is a firm which publishes a price book known as Grocer's Weekly Guide. To my knowledge, that price book—which has been published for at least the past seven years—has never reported Shopping Bag's prices. It has listed the prices of a number of other chains in the Los Angeles area.

In addition to the foregoing, I have the following observations to make based upon my 30 years' experience in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles:

(1) Price is not the most important factor in competition. Of equal importance is convenience, courtesy, the availability of near-by parking, shelf display, store layout, variety of products sold, advertising, quality of products, length of check out lines, general store atmosphere, special services and the like;

(2) By far the most important and influential factor in the determination of grocery store prices in the Los Angeles area at the present time is the emergence, growth and activity of discount houses which sell food. All recent price reductions on grocery items can be attributed to mounting concern on the part of grocery retailers over the necessity to meet or at least approach discount house prices;

(3) The price book published by Marketing Services Corporation is sold primarily to retailers who operate one, two or three stores—the so-called independents. My experience with independent grocers is that they can and do compete effectively and profitably against the larger chains. Chains have advantages in some ways over independents, but by the same token independents have some advantages over chains. Often, the independents' costs of operation are lower. They can more easily adapt to local competitive conditions. They can act quickly where the chain store must await orders from the home office. They can render more courteous, friendly and efficient service. By reason of affiliation with cooperatives such as Certified Grocers, they can buy groceries as cheaply as the chains and can profitably sell them for the same prices as charged by the chains. Naturally, some independents do not do well. Some fail. But, usually, those who fail are inefficient or inexperienced. Too many independents have prospered to conclude that independents are at a competitive disadvantage; and

(4) The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag has not lessened competition in the retail sale of groceries in Los Angeles. Competition was intense and vigorous before the merger; it continues to be. I have noticed no change in competition as a result of the merger, nor do I know of any independent or chain which has suffered because of it.

Affidavit of M. W. Engleman

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

M. W. Engleman, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the manager of the Adjustment Bureau of the Credit Managers Association of Southern California, a concern engaged in the business of representing creditors in connection with bankruptcies, assignments for benefit of creditors and otherwise. I am also a member of the California Bar.

On March 17, 1961, Yor-Way Markets, Inc. and its wholly owned subsidiary, C. S. Smith Metropolitan Markets, Inc., executed a general assignment for benefit of creditors to me as assignee. Thereafter, and until December 6, 1962, I was personally engaged, along with other representatives of the Credit Managers Association, in winding up the affairs of Yor-Way and C. S. Smith Metropolitan Markets. Our duties included negotiating for the sale of the assignors' markets, or if a sale of the market was not possible, a sale of the merchandise and fixtures contained therein. The Credit Managers Association also operated those markets until a satisfactory sale could be made or the decision was made to close them.

At the time of the assignment for benefit of creditors, Yor-Way was operating 12 stores and C. S. Smith was operating 5 stores, all of which were located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Both companies were under a single management.

The records of the Credit Managers Association show that the following 9 Yor-Way or C. S. Smith stores were sold as going concerns by the Association to the following named persons or firms on the following dates:

Store Address	Purchaser	Date of Purchaser
9434 Venice Blvd., Los Angeles	Balian's Markets, Inc.	4/26/61
2990 Santa Fe, Long Beach	Myer Wolfson	5/16/61
101 Azusa Avenue, Azusa	Fry Bros.	4/26/61
1803 Huntington Dr., Duarte	Morris L. Goren	3/31/61
5311 Santa Monica Blvd., Los Angeles	Supreme Foods Co.	3/30/61
290 Harbor Dr., Redondo Beach	Mayfaur Markets	4/12/61
10237 Rosecrans, Bellflower	Your Market	4/25/61
401 S. Alameda, Compton	Mednick Bros.	4/18/61
1451 W. Washington, Los Angeles	Myer Stepnick	5/ 4/61

The remaining 8 Yor-Way and C. S. Smith stores were closed after the assignments for benefit of creditors, and the merchandise, fixtures and other assets therein disposed of in liquidation sales.

In March, 1961, Fox Markets filed a Chapter XI petition in bankruptcy. A substantial number of Fox's creditors filed their proofs of claim through the Credit Managers Association. I know from my own personal knowledge that Fox's receiver in bankruptcy has sold a number of Fox's markets to other grocery concerns.

The Credit Managers Association in August, 1961, was also the assignee for benefit of creditors of McDaniels Markets. Prior to the assignment, McDaniels had sold a number of its stores to other grocery concerns, and at the time of the assignment, it was operating 10 grocery stores in Los Angeles, Orange and San Bernardino Counties. Nine of these stores were sold to Food Giant. The remaining store was closed and its inventory and fixtures sold.

In the course of my duties on behalf of the creditors of the chains mentioned above, I have learned a good deal about their operations and the reasons for their failure. Based upon this information and my own experience, I am of the view that over-expansion, under-capitalization, the selection of poor locations at high rentals and, in some instances, inadequate managerial and fiscal controls, led to the Yor-Way, C. S. Smith, Fox and McDaniel's failures. In my opinion, the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag in no way contributed to or had anything at all to do with the failure of those concerns.

Affidavit of Clive W. Johnson

State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

Clive W. Johnson, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am an attorney for Mayfair Markets, a chain of retail grocery stores located in California, Oregon, Utah, Idaho, Arizona and Nevada. I am also a member of the Board of Directors of Mayfair Markets.

I have been advised that Government counsel in United States of America versus Von's Grocery Co. have procured the affidavit of Dr. Willard F. Mueller, who has compiled a list of acquisitions of stores made by 9 retail grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan area between 1948 and 1958. Among them is Mayfair which, according to Dr. Mueller, acquired 18 stores in that period. Apparently, this evidence will be offered in an attempt to show an increase in concentration in grocery retailing in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

In so far as Mayfair is concerned, Dr. Mueller's statistics show an incomplete picture. While Mayfair acquired 18 stores between 1948 and 1958, it sold 35 stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties to other concerns during the same period of time, leaving a net loss from acquisitions and sales of 17 stores. Moreover, from 1959 to 1962, Mayfair sold an additional 11 markets, meaning that from 1948 to 1962, Mayfair sold a total of 46 stores to other concerns. The following table lists those 46 stores by county and shows their addresses, the Mayfair number each such store was assigned, and the year in which each was sold.

AFFIDAVIT OF HOWARD KRUGER

STATE OF ARIZONA,
County of Maricopa, ss:

HOWARD KRUGER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

From 1946 to October, 1962, when I retired due to poor health, I was employed by the Kroger Co., the nation's third largest retail grocery chain. My duties for Kroger up to 1961 centered around problems and research in grocery merchandising. I have been called upon many times by Kroger Co. to analyze the performance of retail stores and to evaluate the competition faced by various stores.

In August, 1957, I was assigned the task of making a survey and report concerning three grocery chains in Los Angeles. Kroger was then considering acquiring one of them, if possible, in order to enter the Los Angeles market. Those three chains were Von's, Shopping Bag and Alexander's. Together with Harris Lawless, of Kroger's property division, I conducted interviews of a number of persons who were acquainted with the retail grocery business in Los Angeles and obtained statistical data from various sources, including newspapers.

Then Mr. Lawless and I visited the stores of the three chains being studied. We went inside each store to gain an impression of its size, age, sales layout and the like. We then traveled by automobile around the vicinity of each store to observe stores of competitors in the area. In some instances, we went inside competing stores to look at them.

I wrote a report to my supervisors setting forth my observations and the facts I had learned during this survey. A copy of that report is Exhibit AF.

My conclusions, based upon this survey, include the following:

1. There was very little, if any, competition between Von's and Shopping Bag in 1957 when my survey was conducted.

2. The only area in which I found any indication of competition between the two concerns was Whittier. However, competitive stores in the same area were being operated by Alpha Beta and Market Basket.

3. In most of the areas I visited, I found that the stores of Von's and Shopping Bag faced competition from nearby stores operated by other chains and independents.

4. It was quite obvious that competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area was intense and vigorous, and that no chain or group of chains dominated the market.

AFFIDAVIT OF FRANKLIN L. MILLER

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of San Francisco, ss:

FRANKLIN L. MILLER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am a marketing consultant to the food industry. Prior to 1932, I was a food salesman and later Branch Manager of the Saturday Evening Post in New York. In 1931, I was employed as the Manager of the American Weekly in Cleveland and later became that magazine's Western Manager. In these various capacities, I devoted considerable time to problems of marketing and merchandising in the food industry, in part because that industry was always a major source of advertising revenue.

In 1945, I began making frequent reports dealing with a wide range of problems to approximately 74 retail food chains and independent groups as well as to many manufacturers of items distributed through food chains. I have also been retained by innumerable chains and independents to study particular areas in which they have problems or which they are considering entering.

I have also been retained for various purposes by the National Association of Food Chains, the Association of National Advertisers and other groups.

In March and April, 1961, I conducted a survey of competition in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area at the request of attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. In this connection, I visited and surveyed several communities in the area. The purpose of this affidavit is to set forth my findings.

Garden Grove-Anaheim Area

I was told that one of the areas in which Von's and Shopping Bag had stores relatively close to each other was in the Garden Grove-Anaheim area. I was frankly astonished at what I found there. Within a few square miles of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores were 26 supermarkets, three corner grocery stores and three discount houses with food departments. In addition to the Von's and Shopping Bag stores, there were 4 Safeway stores, 3 Alpha Betas, 2 Mayfairs and 2 U-Totems. Also represented in the area were Ralph's, Minit Mart, Speedee Mart, Food Giant, Thriftimart, Greater All-American, Market Basket and Cole's. At least 5 independents were also operating. Large discount houses such as Gemco, Fedco and CMA were selling groceries in the area.

The Reseda Area

In Reseda, I found a Von's at 18247 Sherman Way and a Shopping Bag at 19333 Victory Boulevard. I also found 21 competing supermarkets in a three mile radius of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

I stood in the parking lot of the Shopping Bag store and observed 152 cars leave the lot. 149 of them turned out of the lot in a southerly or westerly direction, or in other words, away from the Von's store. It is reasonable to assume that most of these customers left the lot to go home, and it is therefore permissible to conclude that Shopping Bag drew most of its customers from an area distant from the Von's store and not from an area between the two stores. A similar observation was made in Von's parking lot—most of its customers turned to the north or east, away from the Shopping Bag store. It would therefore appear that the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Reseda do not draw their customers from the same areas. One of the principal reasons for this is, undoubtedly, that the Los Angeles River and Wilbur Wash run just north of the Shopping Bag store. They form a partial barrier to traffic between the two stores.

The Monterey Park Area

The Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Monterey Park are about 2½ miles from each other. They are separated by Coyote Pass and the Garvey Reservoir. Only two streets, Atlantic Boulevard and Garfield Avenue, run between the two stores. In view of the distance and lack of access between them, one would not expect to find these stores competing for the same customers.

This conclusion is reinforced when consideration is given to the competition posed by other concerns in this area. The Von's store is completely surrounded by stores operated by A & P, McDaniel's, Safeway, Food Giant, Thriftimart, Market Basket and McKeon. The Shopping Bag store is surrounded by two circles of competition, one close by and one farther out. These stores are operated by Alpha Beta, Gateway, Shopper's, Crawford's, Sunfair, Boy's, Market Basket, Safeway, Ralph's, El Rancho and Star Market.

With this battery of competition, it is exceedingly doubtful that the Von's and Shopping Bag stores had customers in common or that the merger would in any way affect the intensity of competition in this area.

The Downey Area

In this area, I found a Von's about 2½ miles from a Shopping Bag. In this same area, competition was offered by Ralph's, All American, Boy's, Dixie Market, Don's Market, Alpha Beta and Shoppers. Again, it is difficult to see how the merger could lessen competition under these circumstances.

The Whittier Area

Whittier is an area which appears to me to have more stores than the population could support. Yet, there they are. For example, there are three huge supermarkets at one intersection, a Safeway, a Food Giant and a King Cole. Also represented in the area are Town & Country, Mayfair, Gateway, Jim's, Fox, Thriftimart, Serv-Mart, A & P, and Alpha Beta. These stores are apparently engaged in a savage battle for customers, for I observed that many different forms of promotional campaigns had been instituted at competing stores. There are also two Shopping Bags and one Von's in the Whittier area, but in view of the distances between them and the competition in the area, it is doubtful that they competed for the same customers.

The West Covina Area

This area is not only served by a Von's and Shopping Bag but by an Alpha Beta, a Glen's Market, an Alexander's, a Thriftimart, a Food Giant, a Farmer's, a Codd's Market, a Sunrise Market, a Fairgrove Market and a large, new Safeway, all of which are south of the San Bernadino Freeway, which more or less cuts the city in half. Competition is also offered in this area by discount houses with food departments. I cannot see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could adversely affect this sort of intense competition.

Other Areas

In addition to the foregoing areas where there is a Von's and a Shopping Bag store, I visited other areas in which there was no potential competition between the two concerns. They include Covina, where I found a Shopping Bag store and many other stores including those of Safeway, Yor-Way, Alexander's, Valleydale, McDaniels, Food Giant, Market Basket and Codd's. In El Monte, I found stores of Shopping Bag, McDaniels, Commonwealth Market, Carlton Market, Miles Market, Safeway, Food Giant, Market Basket, Crawford's, Fox, Jax Market and Fine Market.

Knowing that only a few years ago Von's and Ralph's were the only prominent competitors in the Crenshaw area,

I decided to visit that community as well. This time I found the Von's store surrounded by stores operated by Boy's, Jay's, Safeway, Better Foods, Daylight, Alpha Beta, Thriftimart and Fox.

The only conclusion I can draw from my observations is that competition is intense and vigorous in Los Angeles and becoming more so.

It is also of significance that two of the nation's largest chains have recently entered this market. They are American Stores, through its acquisition of Alpha Beta, and Food Fair, which is now operating Fox Markets. Add these two powerful concerns to the national and regional chains already in Los Angeles (Safeway, A & P, Lucky and Mayfair), a multitude of local chains and a vast number of independents, and it is apparent that Von's does not and cannot dominate this market. From my own knowledge of this area, I can state that competition in the retail grocery business has been and is intense and vigorous.

Under these circumstances, I cannot see how the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag could lessen competition in any way. First, there was little if any competition between Von's and Shopping Bag before the merger, so, on this score, there was virtually nothing to eliminate or lessen. Second, the Shopping Bag stores remain as competitive factors in each of the communities where these stores are located. Third, in each of those communities as well as in every other area I have seen, there are a number of able, vigorous competitors carrying on an intensive battle for patronage. Nothing resulting from the merger can change that, or, as far as I can see, stem the tide of increasing competition among the area's numerous chains and independents.

By the same token, I see no indication that this market will become concentrated or dominated by a few concerns. A quick comparison of this area and others with which I am familiar, such as Milwaukee, where A & P alone has a third of the market and other chains all but approximately 12%, or Washington, D. C., where four national chains control 75% of the market, or Philadelphia, where four chains control more than 65% of the market, or Albuquerque, where Safeway alone has 27% of the market, shows that the Los Angeles area is not concentrated. The intensity of competition and the number of competitors in Los Angeles, including the strength of the independents associated with Certified Grocers and Orange Empire, indicates that no chain has any chance of controlling or dominating this market. The strength of Certified Grocers and Orange Empire distinguishes this market area from other major marketing areas in the United States.

WILLIAM DOVER, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am presently Vice President of The John B. Knight Company, an independent market research firm. From February 1938 to January 1962, I was the Director of the Business Research Division of the Los Angeles Examiner. The Examiner ceased operations on January 6, 1962.

In the summer of 1961 and while I was still with the Examiner, I was requested by attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to prepare a map showing the location of each of the stores operated in the Los Angeles metropolitan area by the following 27 chains as of July 1961:

A & P	Gateway	Mednick Brothers
Alexander's	Greater All-American	Pix
Alpha Beta	Hughes	Ralph's
Better Foods	Jurgensen's	Safeway
Boy's	Kory's	Shoppers
Carl's Ranch Markets	Lucky	Shopping Bag
Cole's	Market Basket	Sunfair
Crawfords	Mayfair	Thriftimart
Food Giant	McCoy's	Von's

I had on many occasions in the past prepared similar maps for use by the Examiner, its customers and others.

In order to prepare the map requested by Von's attorneys, I first solicited each of the above named concerns for a list of the locations of each of its stores as of July 1961. The information received in response to that request is set forth in a report I prepared (Exhibit J).

Working under my supervision and direction, employees of the Examiner's Business Research Department located on a map the addresses of each store listed by the chains (as set forth in the report referred to above) and inserted a colored pin at each store location. The color of the pin used identifies the chain operating the store in accordance with particular colors previously designated for each chain. In order to assure complete accuracy, the location of each pin was thereafter rechecked on two separate occasions against the lists furnished by the chains. This map is Exhibit K.

The map shows the number and location of stores operated by the 27 leading chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area up to July 1961. Of course, it does not include the stores opened by these same chains since that time or the hundreds of stores which are operated by other chains and independents in this area.

AFFIDAVIT OF DOROTHY D. COREY

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

DOROTHY D. COREY, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the director of Facts Consolidated, which in 1961 became a division of C-E-I-R, Inc. Prior to that time, Facts Consolidated was a partnership (in which I held a partnership interest), and later, commencing in 1960, a corporation (of which I was President).

Facts Consolidated was and is a marketing research organization which has been in business in Los Angeles since 1938. It has conducted in excess of 5,000 marketing studies covering an extensive range of subjects and involving virtually all types of research problems. It annually serves an average of 150 clients. Among them are many companies involved in food distribution.

Facts Consolidated has had extensive experience in studying the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. On a continuing basis for the last 18 years, Facts Consolidated, under my supervision and direction, has conducted in-the-home surveys to determine consumer preference for the areas of various food chains. These surveys have been made for the Los Angeles Times and are contained in the Times' Continuing Home Audit, which is distributed every two months. A copy of the most recent Home Audit dealing with the grocery business is attached to this affidavit.

Facts Consolidated has also been employed on many occasions to conduct customer surveys to determine reactions to existing or proposed grocery stores, or the effectiveness of grocery store advertising, or the areas served by a particular store. Von's Grocery Co. has called upon Facts Consolidated to conduct such surveys on frequent occasions in the past.

Survey of Competition Between Von's and Shopping Bag Prior to the Merger

In November, 1959, O'Melveny & Myers requested Facts Consolidated to determine the extent of existing competition between Von's stores and the stores operated by Shopping Bag Food Stores. The procedure which we followed in making this study, which included conducting interviews, compiling data thus obtained and analysing that data to reach our conclusions, are procedures which have been regularly followed by Facts Consolidated for many years (see, for example, Exhibits S through Z), and which have been adopted by other recognized research organizations in making comparable surveys. These procedures and the results achieved through their use have proven reliable in the past and have consistently affored Von's and other of our clients with information on which they have relied in making business decisions.

We first set out to establish which stores of the two chains were in sufficiently close proximity to each other to make it appear possible that competition existed between them. We concluded that the stores which should be made the subject of study were the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Whittier, Garden Grove, Downey, Alhambra and Monterey Park.

On Friday and Saturday, November 13 and 14, 1959, we stationed trained staff interviewers in the parking lots of each store being studied. Using a prepared questionnaire, our staff members asked customers questions designed to determine where each did most of his shopping, the market which was his second choice, the principal reasons for his shopping habits and the like. The customer was also asked to identify the street intersection nearest his home.

In the course of this study, more than 3,000 interviews were conducted. The results of those interviews were analyzed and tabulated in a detailed report (Exhibit M).

Following the making of said interviews, Facts Consolidated obtained maps of the vicinities surrounding each store. A red star was placed on those maps at the location of each Von's store and a green star placed at the location of each Shopping Bag store. The intersection named by each person interviewed was located on the map in question and a colored dot entered at that point, one dot for each respondent. If the person interviewed stated that he did most of his shopping at a Von's store, a red dot was used. If he said he most frequently shopped at a Shopping Bag store, a green dot was used. Thus, these maps (Exhibits N through R) show the area from which the stores in question drew their customers. Attached to each map is a list of the number of dots placed in each intersection mentioned by the persons interviewed.

Our report and the maps referred to above demonstrate that as of November, 1959 (prior to the merger), there was very little competition between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores so surveyed. The following are the highlights of our study.

The Whittier Area

The maps we prepared indicate strongly that there was very little overlap in the draw areas of the two Shopping Bag and one Von's store in Whittier.

Our interviews show that of the 264 residents who named Von's as their first choice, only 26, or 10%, named Shopping Bag as a second choice. It would appear that the Von's store in Whittier faced greater competition from Alpha Beta and Thriftimart stores than from Shopping Bag.

Only 4% of the patrons at Shopping Bag's store at 1183 Quad Way, Whittier, named Von's as their second choice. Of greater competitive significance were stores operated by Market Basket and Food Giant. At Shopping Bag's store at 127 North Hacienda, Whittier, 21% of the customers naming Shopping Bag as their first choice named Von's as their second choice. However, a greater number preferred Alpha Beta, which also has a store nearby.

The Garden Grove Area

The draw areas of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Garden Grove do not overlap except that a more or less isolated number of Von's customers came from the vicinity immediately surrounding Shopping Bag's store. However, the larger area just a little farther out from the Shopping Bag store is very predominantly populated by Shopping Bag customers.

Our interviews showed that only 5% of Von's customers in Garden Grove regarded Shopping Bag as their second choice. Thirteen percent of Shopping Bag's customers named Von's second. Stores operated by Alpha Beta, and Thriftimart were more significant competition for both Von's and Shopping Bag stores than were Von's and Shopping Bag to each other. Von's also faced competition from stores of Food Giant, Coles and Safeway, which competition appeared to be of greater significance than the competition offered by the Shopping Bag store.

The Downey Area

The trading areas of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Downey are quite distinct and separate as our map shows. This conclusion is borne out by our interviews. Only 3% of those naming Von's as their first choice named Shopping Bag as second choice. Only 6% of Shopping Bag customers named Von's second. Stores of Alpha Beta, Ralph's and a number of small concerns were stronger competitors of both Von's and Shopping Bag

The Alhambra Area

Our map shows that the Von's store in Alhambra has a larger, more scattered draw area than the Shopping Bag store. However, the Shopping Bag store had strong loyalty from customers in its immediate vicinity, and again, there was very little overlap in the draw areas of the two stores.

Only 5% of Von's customers named Shopping Bag as a second choice. Von's faces much stiffer competition in this area from the stores of Crawford's, Gateway, Market Basket and Safeway. Six percent of Shopping Bag's customers indicated Von's as their second choice. Of greater competitive significance to Shopping Bag were stores operated by Crawford's and Gateway.

The Monterey Park Area

Our Monterey Park map shows a competitive situation similar to that in Alhambra. Again, the Von's store had a more scattered trading area, Shopping Bag had strong loyalty from nearby customers, and only a few Von's customers came from areas which were otherwise predominated by Shopping Bag customers.

Von's customers indicated that the stores of Market Basket, McDaniel's, Food Giant and Alpha Beta were all more significant Von's competitors than was the Shopping Bag store, which received only 4% of the second choice votes. Shopping Bag's principal competitor was Gateway, while Von's was indicated as a second choice by 18% of Shopping Bag's customers.

Conclusions

The conclusions which I draw from the foregoing study are that:

1. Prior to the merger, there was very little competition between the stores of Von's and Shopping Bag. For the most part, they drew their customers from different areas.

2. In none of the areas studied was either Von's or Shopping Bag the other's principal competitor. In no case did a Von's store appear as the most important second choice of Shopping Bag customers. In no case did a Shopping Bag store appear as the most important second choice of Von's customers.

3. In each area studied, both Von's and Shopping Bag faced competition from the stores of at least 6 other chains and a number of independents. This competition was significantly more important than any competition between the stores of Von's and Shopping Bag.

4. Our study also shows that by far the most important reason given for preferring one store over another was convenience. Forty-eight percent of those interviewed who indicated that they do most of their shopping at a Von's store gave convenience as their reason. Fifty-eight percent of those who preferred Shopping Bag did so on grounds of convenience. These statistics are consistent with other studies we have conducted of the grocery business in Los Angeles. Apparently shoppers in this area will most often be drawn to the store closest to them, and it is undoubtedly proximity, and hence, convenience, which contributes more than any other factor to the limited draw areas of particular stores. Convenience is again the reason why the existence of nearby competition may cut down a store's trading area. Our studies have shown that since it is more convenient to shop at the supermarket nearest one's home, most shoppers will not pass by one store to shop at another farther away. Thus, the existence of competing markets in the vicinity of Von's and Shopping Bag stores undoubtedly limited the competition between these two concerns by limiting their trading areas. In each area studied, Von's and Shopping Bag faced competition from stores operated by a number of other concerns.

Other Surveys

In past years, the staff of Facts Consolidated, under my supervision and direction, has conducted a number of surveys for Von's using procedures substantially similar to the ones employed in the study of competition between Von's and Shopping Beg. The following is a list of some of the more significant survey reports prepared for Von's together with a brief description of what they show:

1. "Map Overlay Study for Von's Grocery Co., October, 1955" (Exhibit S)—This study was conducted for Von's advertising department in order to determine the area from which each of its stores in 1955 drew its customers and hence the areas in which Von's advertising ought to be centered. Our study involved locating the addresses of a representative number of Von's customers on a map and then determining the distance from their residences to the Von's store where they shopped. As a result of our study, we concluded that in every case, the majority of customers came from less than 2 miles away. In most cases, the majority of customers came from less than a mile away. The results of our study for each of Von's 22 stores are as follows:

Store No.	% of Customers From Within 1 Mile	% of Customers From Within 2 Miles
1	61%	83%
2	48%	82%
3	84%	94%
4	40%	70%
6	58%	87%
7	76%	91%
8	94%	97%
9	88%	99%
10	68%	84%
11	95%	100%
12	76%	89%
13	52%	78%
14	48%	89%
15	35%	63%
16	48%	85%
17	38%	67%
18	56%	78%
19	55%	85%
20	47%	73%
21	87%	90%
22	29%	62%
23	35%	77%

It must also be emphasized that the above study was conducted in 1955. Since that time, new stores have been built by competitors in the vicinity of almost all of Von's stores. This is particularly true in the San Fernando Valley, where Von's stores Nos. 17, 22 and 23 are located. As we have noted above, the operation of nearby competitive stores tends to limit the draw area of a given store so that there is no doubt that in many areas Von's draw area has been reduced since 1955.

2. "Consumer Shopping Habits—Area 1—Eightieth and Emerson Avenue for Von's Grocery Company—March, 1955" (Exhibit T)—This customer survey showed that Von's faced competition from Ralph's, Jim Dandy, Mayfair, Thriftimart and other concerns in the area surveyed.

3. "Consumer Shopping Habits in the Vicinity of Florence Avenue and Paramount Boulevard and Riverside Drive and Fulton Avenue for Von's Grocery Co.—March, 1955" (Exhibit U)—These customer surveys show intense competition in the areas involved. In the Florence-Paramount area, Von's was an insignificant competitive factor as compared to Raisin Markets, Don's, Safeway, Ralph's, All American, Shopper's, Horton's and other miscellaneous meat, produce and fish markets. In the Riverside-Fulton area, Von's faced competition from Thriftimart, Ralph's, Alexander's, Safeway, Valley Village, McDaniel's, Fox,

A & P, Mayfair, Bon's, L-V Foodland, Nero's Food Mart, Gelson's, Carty Brothers, Butler Brothers, Stop & Shop and others.

4. "Consumer Shopping Habits in the Vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue, Lakewood, for Von's Grocery Co., February, 1956" (Exhibit V)—This customer survey shows Von's was an insignificant factor in an area served by Hiram's, Iowa Pork Shop, McCoy's, Boy's, Thriftimart, U-Tel-Em, Market Basket, Greater Central Market, Alpha Beta, Safeway, Shorty's, Cole's, F & W Market, Royal Market, McDaniel's, Clark's, Plowboy's Market, Jim Dandy, Ralph's and Raisin, among others.

5. "Consumer Shopping Habits in the Vicinity of Santa Gertrudis Avenue and Whittier Boulevard for Von's Grocery Company, February, 1956" (Exhibit W)—This survey shows that Von's had an insignificant share of a market divided between Alpha Beta, Shopping Bag, Market Basket, Esko Foods, Stater Bros., Raisin, Nixon's Market, Mayfair, Safeway, Ralph's, Colima Food Center, Town and Country Market, Orcutt's Whittier, and others.

6. "A Study of Resident Reaction to a Proposed Shopping Center at Pacific Coast Highway and Calle Mayor, Hollywood Riviera, conducted for Von's Grocery Co.—June, 1950" (Exhibit X)—This survey of customers showed that a proposed Von's store in a relatively undeveloped area would meet competition from Jim Dandy, Food Giant, Thriftimart, Safeway, Frontier Market, Howard's, Ralph's, De Simone's, Moore's Market and a host of other chains and independents.

7. "Opinion Study of Stores in the Crenshaw Area, conducted for Von's Grocery Co., August, 1959" (Exhibit Y)—This customer survey showed that most residents of the Crenshaw area preferred stores operated by Boy's, Ralph's and Daylite to the one operated by Von's and that competition also came from Safeway, Alpha Beta, Thriftimart, Patton's, Fox, Dobson's and others.

8. "Shopping Habits Among the Residents of a Portion of the Sherman Oaks Area, prepared for Von's-Shopping Bag, April, 1960" (Exhibit Z)—This customer survey showed that a Von's store in Sherman Oaks would face competition from Hughes, Safeway, Ralph's, Thriftimart, Fox, Gelson's, Bel-Air Market, Bestway and others.

Opinion of Effect of the Merger on Competition

As is in part indicated by the foregoing studies, the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area has been for many years and still is intensely competitive. In my opinion, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has not resulted in any diminution of that competition. If anything, competition is keener and more vigorous now than before the merger.

It is also my opinion based on my experience of the past 25 years that no chain or group of chains has in this period dominated the Los Angeles market, and I do not see any sign or indication that any chain or even a group of chains could control competition in this area. For years, the Los Angeles metropolitan area has been subjected to the influx and competitive effort of numerous chains and independent stores. No concern has yet been able to capture a decisive or dominant share of the market, and there is no reason to expect that any will in the foreseeable future. The hundreds of smaller chains and independents have demonstrated their ability to compete effectively against the stores of Safeway, Ralph's and the other leaders in the market. There is no reason to conclude that they cannot continue to compete effectively against Von's, and my studies of the grocery business since March of 1960 have demonstrated to me that they can and do compete effectively against Von's and that there has been no lessening of competition as a result of this merger.

Deposition of DOROTHY D. COREY, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, at Room 806, Federal Building, Los Angeles, California, commencing at 11:15 A.M., Wednesday, May 22, 1963, before Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R., Notary Public, pursuant to oral stipulation.

[fol. 3] DOROTHY D. COREY, having been first duly sworn, deposed and testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mrs. Corey, would you state your full name and address for the record, please?

A. My business name is Dorothy Corey, my married name is Mrs. Roy S. Frothingham.

Q. What is your address?

A. My business address is 9171 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills.

Q. Mrs. Corey, when did you first become affiliated with Facts Consolidated?

A. In 1938.

Q. What was your position with Facts Consolidated at that time?

A. I opened the Los Angeles office.

Q. What was your employment prior to opening the Los Angeles office of Facts Consolidated?

A. Immediately prior?

Q. Yes.

A. I had been with Elmo Roper in New York City.

Q. Were you doing marketing work with him?

[fol. 4] A. Marketing research, yes.

Q. What position did you have with him?

A. I was pre-testing and developing questionnaires, assistant project director.

Q. What formal training do you have in the field of market research?

A. I have a Bachelor's and graduate work in marketing and statistics from Northwestern. I don't have my Master's.

Q. What year did you get your Bachelor's Degree?

A. '25. That was in '32 I believe I was studying at Northwestern under Dr. Linden Brown.

Q. Do you have a copy of your affidavit with you, Mrs. Corey?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. You state on Line 23 of Page 1: "On a continuing basis for the last 18 years, Facts Consolidated, under my supervision and direction, has conducted in-the-home surveys to determine consumer preference for the areas of various food chains." When you refer to "consumer preference," do you mean the personal preference of consumers to buy particular products at particular stores?

A. Yes. A preference or a more factual answer as to where they buy most of their groceries, most of their meats, most of the vegetables. The interviewers would always ask the question exactly as it is worded on the questionnaire.

Q. Have you found by making these interviews and [fol. 5] these studies you are able to measure personal preferences statistically?

A. Yes. The answers are tabulated and presented in statistical form to the questions.

Q. And they are statistical measurements of personal preferences?

A. They are either—if the question asks preference it would be a statistical measure. It would be a statistical measurement of the content of the question.

Q. Is it your opinion that these activities and these studies are of a practical benefit and assistance to food stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these statistical measurements of personal preferences generally accepted in the marketing field as valid?

A. Yes.

Q. Do established authorities in the marketing field acknowledge that you can measure consumer personal preferences statistically?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question on the ground that it is confusing and ambiguous. She testified the consumer preference is as a result of interviews and the results of those interviews are tabulated statistically.

Mr. Coyle: Would you read my question back.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

[fol. 6] Mr. Coyle: Q. I will add: On the basis of the interviews which you tabulate.

A. I would like to say that your use—I am not sure that I know your use of the word "preference." If I might illustrate.

Let me say that there is a coffee shortage and we ask people what brand of coffee they prefer and then we ask what is on hand. There might be a difference. But if there is no coffee shortage and there is a marked preference, the brand a person prefers and the brand that is on hand is apt to be the same. In the continuing home audit we get into 85 per cent of the kitchens and check the brands on hand. It is as factual a study as we can make it rather than depending upon attitudes. And you are asking me about this study, the continuing home audit where we are in 85 per cent of the kitchens.

Q. I was really asking you more, or intended to ask you more about the personal preference of a consumer to shop at a particular grocery store. Can you measure that statistically on the basis of your interviews?

A. Yes, I think that we can. I believe that we can, because most people shop where they prefer to shop. There may be certain exceptions to that in which you might prefer to shop in some wonderful specialty store, but nevertheless shop at the most convenient supermarket. But the question that is asked on the continuing home audit is, "Where did [fol. 7] you buy most of your groceries last week?" The question is not, "Which store do you prefer?"

Q. But you measure the preference on where they buy.

A. Buy most of their groceries. And in checking brands on hand there is a constant remembrance of the shopping pattern.

Q. You state on Page 2 of your affidavit that you have major surveys on the effectiveness of grocery store advertising. On the basis of these surveys and your background in the industry have you found that grocery store advertising is an important aspect of developing consumer preference for a particular store?

A. Will you repeat the question?

(The reporter read the pending question.)

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question. I don't know what grocery store advertising you are talking about. Is this price advertising or institutional advertising?

Mr. Coyle: I am referring to grocery store advertising that she referred to on Page 2.

The Witness: Could I say this, that studies we have made in grocery store effectiveness have been confidential studies made for particular clients. They are not published as the home audit is and there is a great deal of difference in grocery store advertising effectiveness, depending upon the skill of the advertising department. That is one of the reasons for making the study.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you advise as to good advertising policies as a result of your study?

A. We are not an advertising agency. We are only a marketing research agency. We do analyze the findings and in some cases we would make recommendations.

Q. If a store uses marketing research and sound advertising policies can it develop consumer preferences for its stores?

Mr. Vaughn: If you know, Mrs. Corey.

The Witness: I think both of those are tools but they are not the entire picture.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But they are part of it.

A. It would only be a tool if they use it properly. They may not use it properly. That depends on management. I wouldn't want to say.

Q. What other tools would management have to develop consumer preference?

A. I think that would be up to management. There would be many tools.

Q. As a result of using these tools do stores build up consumer preferences for their trade?

A. The purpose of advertising is to communicate, and certainly if you are going to measure the results of advertising effectiveness you have to define the goal of the advertising. Now, if the goal of the advertising is to build up consumer franchise then the research company measures [fol. 9] how effectively that has been done.

Q. Have you in your research measured how effectively that has been done?

A. We have.

Q. And have some chains built up a substantial consumer preference for their stores as a result of that?

A. No. Those are confidential studies.

Q. In your opinion. I am not asking you to name any particular store, but have you formed an opinion as to whether stores are able to develop consumer preference?

A. I don't know.

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as calling for a conclusion with the word "substantial" and being confusing and ambiguous you refer to some chains and don't say where.

The Witness: I don't know what the goal of the store—the market you are talking about is. I would say some do a better job than others.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And the ones that do a better job develop consumer preferences for their stores, do they not?

A. That would be the goal of their advertising, I should assume.

Q. And it is based upon the premise that good advertising can build up consumer preferences, is it not?

A. I have never thought so. In my experience, sir, the worse thing you can do is advertise a bad product. The first thing you have to do is have a good product. But if [fol. 10] you have a good product and advertise it, do you build up consumer preferences for the store?

A. You have to have a good price.

Q. If you have a good price and a good product and advertise it?

A. You may have to have a good location and many more.

Q. What are some of the other factors that go into building up consumer preference?

A. If you ask me——

Q. You said, "Many more."

A. Management of the store, personnel of the store, arrangement of the files, lighting in the store, color factors, exits and entrances, noise, parking lot convenience. That is a few more.

Q. Would layout of the store be an important factor?

A. It could or could not be.

Q. It is one of the factors, is it not?

A. It is one of the factors in the store, yes.

Q. And the sum total of all these factors would build up the consumer preference of a particular store.

A. I mentioned location, which is very important.

Q. Yes.

A. Parking facilities are very important. The hours in which the stores are open may be very important. Even check cashing might be important, personnel. All of these things would go into it.

[fol. 11] Q. And do all of these things go together to form an image that is placed before the consumers?

A. I would say that those go into the image or the profile of the store.

Q. And the image or profile of the store then would determine the consumer preference, would it not?

A. It would certainly contribute. Let's say cleanliness and variety of merchandise and the brands and maybe even the fact whether the type of meat, whether there are butchers available, whether there is a liquor store or not. There are so many factors that go into it.

Q. It is your business to conduct these interviews and conduct the surveys to determine how effective the store is with respect to these various facets and then to tabulate these interviews statistically, is it not?

A. Well, we are a problem solving organization and we don't sell a technique. We try to solve a particular problem once it has been clearly stated and defined.

Q. And some stores have come to you, or some chains have come to you and asked you to help make a study of their operations in a particular area or a number of areas to determine how effective they are in building up consumer preference, have they not?

A. In marketing areas, yes. Not in manufacturing areas.

Q. I understand just in marketing areas.

[fol. 12] A. That's right.

Q. And on the basis of that you make the statistical tabulations and help them try to solve their problems.

A. Statistical tabulations are usually part of it, yes.

Q. In the course of these studies that you have conducted over the years have you noted that a housewife will generally shop at more then one store during a given period of time, say a three-week period?

A. Well, I have findings of some of the studies.

Q. And have your findings been that the housewives generally will shop at more than one store?

A. I think we have a study that has been submitted to you that shows that people can always name one store and a smaller percentage can name two, and a smaller percentage can name three.

Q. But more than half will name more than one store, won't they?

A. I would say.

Q. And more than half would name two stores?

A. I doubt that.

Q. I meant more than half will name one store and not more than half will name two stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, is that over a two- or three-month period or for how long a period?

[fol. 13] A. It all depends upon the question. You can ask it in the last week or last month, depending upon what your question is.

Q. On the basis of your studies, your general studies, not the particular studies that you have done here, have you made any findings or formed any conclusions as to how many stores a housewife will shop at, that is the average housewife will shop at in a three-month period?

A. Not particularly. I don't recall particularly a three-month period. The average housewife shops once a week. A family will do shopping once a week and in Los Angeles we find that the man often does the shopping. It becomes a question of who has the most muscles when you carry the groceries home.

Q. Do most housewives shop by automobile?

A. In Los Angeles?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that more than 90 per cent of them shop by automobile in Los Angeles?

A. I would want to check that figure.

Q. Does that sound about right?

A. I think it would vary by area in the city. In the Wilshire district I would say that it would be much lower than that. It would vary by area.

Q. Los Angeles is a very mobile community, as com-
[fol. 14] munities go, is it not? Compared to the rest of the country it is one of the more mobile areas, is it not?

A. I think you could call it mobile in that most people own cars.

Q. And do a lot of driving; isn't that right? Don't they do a lot of driving?

A. They do a lot of driving. Not necessarily for groceries but they drive. In studies we have made for automobile usage it shows that it is fairly high from the rest of the country too. But maybe a little higher, particularly because so many families are two car and three car families.

Q. You say that most families shop once aweek. Do most families do incidental shopping during the course of the week in addition to their principal shopping that they do once a week?

A. When you say "most," do you mean over 50 per cent? Is that what you mean by "do incidental shopping"?

Q. Yes.

A. This is just an opinion. I would say in my opinion that most do incidental shopping.

Q. And when they do their shopping one day a week do they generally shop at the same store or do they shop at several stores on that one day a week?

A. I would say that generally they shop at one store and maybe a second store.

[fol. 15] Q. Have you done any studies as to the extent which consumers will study the weekly advertising in the metropolitan papers prior to doing their shopping?

A. The metropolitan papers?

Q. Yes.

A. If I may be helpful, I would say, yes, but also—I will say "Yes."

Q. Have you made studies as to the extent to which they study the local papers?

A. You mean the community papers?

Q. Yes.

A. The paid dailies?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. What percentage of the consumers will study either the metropolitan papers or the local papers, that is the local community papers, prior to doing their weekly shopping?

Mr. Vaughn: You mean study the grocery ads in the papers, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: She said she made studies whether they all study them. I am asking what percentage study them.

The Witness: Have those studies been introduced?

Mr. Vaughn: There have been some of them that have been.

The Witness: It varies from time to time. I think most [fol. 16] of the studies—I don't want to quote a figure because it varies in various areas and it varies——

Mr. Coyle: Q. This is another item in building consumer preference, is it not, that weekly advertising in newspapers?

A. Yes. And this is an item of interest not only to the market but to the media.

Q. And it's a pretty important way of building consumer preference, is it not, this newspaper advertising?

Mr. Vaughn: I think that calls for the conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Coyle: She is an expert witness.

The Witness: I would say that various media have been used, newspapers, the stores use direct mail. I mean there are many types of media to communicate.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And is newspaper advertising the most effective medium to communicate?

A. I think that would depend on what you are trying to communicate. And I wouldn't want to state that between radio, TV, newspaper and so on, that any one medium is the most effective.

Q. There is much more newspaper advertising in the grocery field than radio and television advertising, is there not?

A. For the Thursday specials and so on, yes, I would say so. So evidently in their opinion they think it is the [fol. 17] most effective.

Q. And in your studies you haven't found that it is not the most effective, have you?

Mr. Vaughn: Would you repeat that?

Mr. Coyle: Q. Have you found in your own studies whether they are correct in their conclusion that it is the most effective medium?

A. Well, I say that I think it is effective. I don't want to say which medium is the most effective because it would depend upon each newspaper, how they spend their advertising budget.

Mr. Hughes: Each grocery chain.

The Witness: Each grocery chain.

Mr. Alsup: Or each newspaper.

The Witness: Each grocery chain, how it spends its advertising budget.

I am sorry, but these are kind of complex, where management in markets disagree. It is hard to come to a "Yes" or "No" conclusion.

Mr. Coyle: Q. On the middle of Page 3, Line 10 you refer to a study which you made for counsel in this case in which you interviewed 3,000 people. Were these interviews made to determine the consumer preferences and to record them statistically with respect to two Shopping Bag stores and one Von's store in Whittier, one Von's store and one Shopping Bag store in Garden Grove, one Von's and one [fol. 18] Shopping Bag store in Downey, one Von's and one Shopping Bag store in Alhambra and one Von's and one Shopping Bag store in Monterey Park?

A. If you have read correctly, and I am sure you have, yes.

Q. That is a total of 11 stores, is it not?

A. I believe that is 11 stores.

Q. How representative are these 3,000 interviews?

A. I think they are very representative.

Q. How many consumers would each interview represent?

A. How many consumers would each interview represent? Frankly, I don't know because I don't know how many customers they have.

Q. Do you have any opinion? Did you go into the question of how many customers the 11 stores would have?

A. No, we didn't.

Q. How did you arrive at the number of 3,000?

A. Well, actually we operate on the theory that it is the size of the sample rather than the universe, the statistical theory. It is the size of the sample rather than the size of the universe that is important.

Q. Wouldn't the size of the sample have to be related to the universe?

A. There is a certain relationship but not an absolute relationship. In other words, when you are talking about a sample of 3,000 or a sample of 300, we sometimes describe [fol. 19] it to our people in this way. We say that we have three bowls of vegetable soup and one is big and one is middle-sized and one is little, and each bowl is completely stirred up. And we ask them to sample each bowl and they use the same size spoon, that is the sample for each one. And you can get as good a sample of the big bowl with that spoon as you can of the little bowl, if it is properly stirred up. It is the size of the sample.

We have an article that we have had thousands of requests for from universities, professors, marketing research organizations since this has been written and we have reproduced this and reproduced this to bring out the point that it is the size of the sample rather than the size of the universe.

Of course, more and more our clients, you know, have had some experience with statistics. But in the early days of research you were dealing with clients that had none and you couldn't—the client is always right, too. But just to try to bring them into the picture of some idea of sampling, why, we have used articles of this type to leave with them.

Mr. Vaughn: If you are not going to offer this into evidence, the document which Mrs. Corey has just referred to, which is entitled "Monthly News Letter Prepared For Western Advertising By Facts Consolidated," indicating that it comes from the research notebook, we will. Do you want to wait? I thought it was more convenient to have it [fol. 20] at the same point in the record where she referred to it.

Mr. Coyle: I think she is your witness. She is not here to be introducing your exhibits.

Mr. Vaughn: I will be happy to wait. I thought it would be useful to get the description of this document on the record as she refers to it.

Mr. Coyle: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Vaughn: I will ask that the court reporter mark this as Corey Exhibit No. 1. It is the bulletin to which Mrs. Corey just referred to.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as Corey Exhibit 1 for Identification and returned to counsel for the defendants.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mrs. Corey, have you, as a result of your studies in this area, arrived at any conclusion or opinion as to the expenditures by the consumers in the Los Angeles metropolitan area on a weekly basis at a particular shopping center or at the average shopping center? What does the average consumer spend for groceries on a weekly basis?

A. At one particular market?

Q. Yes.

A. We have never gotten into that.

Q. What do they spend at all markets?

[fol. 21] Mr. Vaughn: You mean one consumer in all the markets she shops?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: I don't know the average or the median. It will probably vary from $10 a week to $100 a week in a scale, depending upon the income and the size of the family. There is some information available along that line but I don't have anything on that myself for a particular store.

Mr. Coyle: Q. How many customers would a store the size of the Von's and Shopping Bag Stores, which you studied in your survey, have to have during the course of a week's time in order to make the gross annual sales which these stores make?

A. I don't know.

Q. You have no idea how many customers were represented by this 3,000 sample that you took?

A. No. I told you that I didn't know how many, but we could find out.

Mr. Alsup: Let her finish her answer.

The Witness: That information from Von's would be available.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Maybe Mr. Von der Ahe would know it and we will ask him tomorrow.

Assuming, until we hear from Mr. Von der Ahe, that the Von's Store would have 3,000 customers in the period of a week's time, then a sample of 260 customers, the result [fol. 22] of that would be that each interview would represent more than ten, probably ten or twelve customers, would it not?

A. Yes. We usually in training our interviewers, because we train them for a kind of honesty that is a little different —honesty is so important, and integrity. Just as an offhand figure we tell them, "That you just remember that every home you interview, or every interview you make may be projected to 150,000 homes, and so the accuracy and the carefulness and everything that you do must be so careful."

Q. And these interviews that you made in connection with this study for defense counsel weren't made to project them to 150,000 in each interview, were they?

A. That wasn't part of the problem, no. However, it wouldn't be if you say 3,000 would be representative for a week. I don't know, as I told you, how many customers Von's or Shopping Bag, or these other stores have a day or a week. Truthfully I don't know.

Q. On Page 3, Lines 11 and 12, you say, "The results of those interviews were analyzed and tabulated in a detailed report." And then there is the word "exhibit," and the number of the exhibit is left blank. Are you there referring to a document which is marked here Defendants' Exhibit No. 3?

Mr. Vaughn: We have changed those numbers since we gave those to you, Mr. Coyle. And the reason this is blank in the affidavit, as you will find all our exhibit numbers are blank, is that we haven't decided in what sequence they will [fol. 23] be offered.

If you have a document there which in the box in the middle of the page says "A survey to determine existing competition between Von's and Shopping Bag Markets, December 1959," you have the exhibit to which Mrs. Corey refers in her affidavit.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Which day of the week has the heaviest traffic in grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. It varies, depending upon area and also depending on some of them give special stamps on special days and so on. Thursday, Friday and Saturday are all heavy days. Sunday has become heavier in some areas.

Q. Isn't Thursday generally accepted as the heaviest day?

A. I believe Friday and Saturday are heavier in most stores than Thursday—Friday and Saturday in most markets are the heaviest. There, of course, again it depends on paydays too. You know some people always do all their shopping on payday.

Q. When does the newspaper advertising generally occur?

A. They advertise their weekend specials and their food day is on Thursday. But we find that many people do not always act on it that particular day. That is an advertisement in the papers that have it on Thursday, those are [fol. 24] usually their Thursday, Friday and Saturday specials. We consider in almost anything we are doing that Thursday, Friday and Saturday are equally heavy days.

Q. Now referring to Page 1 of the study which you prepared for O'Melveny & Myers—Let me ask you a question before I refer to this. Have you found in the course of your work in this area that grocery retailing is a very competitive field?

A. Yes, I think it is a very competitive field.

Q. Have you found that most grocery stores, including the stores operated by Von's and Shopping Bag, which were the subject of this study, face competition from a number of stores?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Do they face heavy competition from a number of stores?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Now referring to Page 1 of your study prepared for defense counsel, and referring to the column entitled "Von's Store No. 1," does this column indicate the percentage of the persons interviewed on the Von's parking lot who stated that they buy most of their grocery shopping from a particular store?

A. 77 per cent are the people who said "Yes."

Q. Does this show that 77 per cent of the people interviewed stated that they did most of their grocery shopping [fol. 25] at that particular Von's store?

A. Yes.

Q. Then 23 per cent of those interviewed by inference would have stated that they did not do most of their grocery shopping, or they stated that they did most of their grocery shopping at some store other than Von's store?

A. Yes.

Q. Going to the next line on that column, does that indicate that 15 of the people interviewed, or 5 per cent of all interviewed, stated that they did most of their grocery shopping at the Shopping Bag store?

A. Yes.

Q. Would that indicate that——

A. It doesn't indicate which Shopping Bag. It is just "a Shopping Bag."

Q. It might be a Shopping Bag that would be some Shopping Bag in addition to the Shopping Bag store in Whittier?

A. Well, it's a Shopping Bag. It was in Whittier. The assumption was that it was a Shopping Bag in Whittier. The chances are that is a Shopping Bag in Whittier.

Q. Does the study also show that the Alpha Beta chain also represented 5 per cent?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you conclude as to this Von's Store No. 1 that Shopping Bag and Alpha Beta were the hardest competitors of that Von's Store No. 1?

[fol. 26] A. Well, I would want to go over—We had an additional question, "Which market is your second choice for grocery shopping?" And I think that that brings out the competition. And in that—We have that table twice. We have it percentaged against all the people and we have it percentaged against the people who do most of their shopping at Von's. And this Page 2 is against those who do most of their shopping at Von's. And, let's see, Thriftimart was the second choice of 16 per cent, Alpha Beta of 13, Safeway of 12 and Shopping Bag of 10, Gateway of 5, Market Basket of 3, McDaniels and so on. And then all other stores, which probably just get about one mention, was 17 per cent. And then we had 22 per cent who said it didn't make any difference as a second choice, they either had none or they had no preference for a second store.

Q. But doesn't this indicate that of all the people interviewed, referring to Page 3, 14 per cent listed Shopping Bag as their first or second choice and 16 per cent listed Alpha Beta as their second choice?

A. I don't see the 14 per cent for Shopping Bag.

Q. If you would add the 5 per cent that is listed for Shopping Bag as their first choice and the 9 per cent who listed Shopping Bag as their second choice, wouldn't that be 14 per cent?

A. Well, you couldn't—You don't want to add the percentages if they are worked on different bases.

[fol. 27] Q. Aren't these worked on the same bases, if you add Page 1 and 3, aren't they both worked on the same bases?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. And then if you add Page 4, Page 4 is worked on the same basis, is it not?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question because I don't believe it is. I think there is a smaller universe on Page 4.

The Witness: Page 4 is based on the base as Page 2. One is the first choice and one is the second choice.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What is Page 5 based on?

A. Page 5 is based on the total.

Q. So Pages 1, 3 and 5 are based on the same universe.

A. Yes.

Q. And from Pages 1, 3 and 5 would you form the conclusion that 22 per cent of all persons interviewed on the Von's parking lot in Whittier also shop at the Shopping Bag Stores?

A. Well, I would prefer to just base it on what we found.

Q. Isn't that what you found?

A. We found that 5 per cent of the people that we found on that parking lot did most of their—said they did most of their shopping at Shopping Bag. And we found that a second choice, that 9 per cent we asked mentioned Shopping Bag. But 16 per cent also mentioned——

[fol. 28] Q. Which page are you on now?

A. 3. 9 per cent.

Q. And 16 per cent——

A. Is Von's. And 9 per cent. And then we say, "Are there any other markets where you sometimes shop?" There again we had that mention of a 3 per cent. So we have Von's with 77, 16 and 3, if you want to add it that way.

Q. But Shopping Bag had 5, 9 and 7.

A. But one is a first. I think it is more specific and more meaningful to apply it just the way we presented it.

Q. But you presented it both ways. You presented it this way too.

A. But we didn't add it up, because one is a first choice, "Where you do most of your shopping?" and one is a second choice, and then the other is a different question entirely, "Are there any other markets where you sometimes shop?" And this was really just exploring where people ever shop, where you sometimes shop. So I don't think you should add up those percentages unless you want to say that they are places where they sometimes shop.

Q. Isn't that what that would show, that 22 per cent of the persons on the Von's parking lot on that given day sometimes shop at Shopping Bag?

A. Yes, sometimes. If we put it at that level.

Q. And then going over to the next column on the Whit-

[fol. 29] tier store, the Whittier store shows that 5 per cent——

Mr. Vaughn: Which Whittier store?

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag No. 2.

Q. That shows that 5 per cent of the people on the Shopping Bag lot shop at Von's most of the time, that an additional 5 per cent list Von's a second choice——

A. That is four actually.

Q. We are on Page 3.

A. Excuse me. Three, yes.

Q. Five. And 3 per cent list Von's as a sometimes choice, which means that——

A. 13 per cent.

Q. —that 13 per cent of those interviewed sometimes and all the times, or a second choice, shop at Von's. And then going to the next——

Mr. Vaughn: No, wait a minute. Are you going to ask her the question there or are you making a statement?

Mr. Coyle: Isn't that what that indicates?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question because this obviously involves double counting and is ambiguous and misstates the facts.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does that involve double counting?

Mr. Vaughn: Can I finish stating my objection? I think it assumes facts not in evidence and contrary to the evidence, because you are counting in the Von's percentage people you counted in the Shopping Bag percentage.

[fol. 30] Mr. Coyle: I will restate my question to the witness.

Q. Do Pages 1, 3 and 5, as they relate to the people on the Shopping Bag Store No. 2 parking lot when this sample was taken, show that of all the people interviewed on that lot 13 per cent stated that they shop at the Von's store either for most of their groceries as a second choice or sometimes?

A. Yes, it does.

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question. I think it improperly summarizes the evidence.

Mr. Alsup: When you are saying 13 per cent you said they are shopping most of the time.

The Witness: Some of the time.

Mr. Alsup: Your question would be more accurate if you limited it to "sometimes."

Mr. Coyle: Q. 13 per cent said that they shopped there sometimes, 10 per cent said that they shopped there most of the time or as a second choice, and 5 said that they shopped there all the time.

A. No. Just 5 said they shopped there as a second choice and 5 said as a first choice.

Q. And 3 said sometimes.

A. Sometimes.

Q. And the total is 13 that shop there sometimes——

A. Sometimes.

Q. —or most of the time or as a second choice.

[fol. 31] A. I say you are adding up three times.

Mr. Vaughn: Mrs Corey, wait until I finish my objection. I object to the question as improperly summarizing the the evidence and being argumentative, and it being contrary to the evidence.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Let me clarify something. On this page 5, in answer to Question 7—look first on Page 4 where you state, "In answer to Question 1, 'Where do you do most of your grocery shopping?' " and Question 7, "Are there any other markets where you sometimes shop?" Now, directing your attention to Page 5, those nine persons who state that they sometimes shop at Shopping Bag, would those nine persons—I mean the ten persons who say they sometimes shop at Von's store, would they include the 16 persons who say they do most of their grocery shopping at the Von's store? It obviously wouldn't.

A. No.

Q. And referring to Page 3, would those ten persons include the 16 persons listed on Page 3 who state that Von's is their second choice?

A. No. As you see, we went to every extreme to try to get the complete shopping questions.

Q. You had a preceding line of questions.

A. We were trying to explore in depth as much as we could their first choice, their second choice and any other. [fol. 32] So we were leaning over backward to get the complete shopping pattern.

Q. And when you add the 16 persons on Page 1 to the 16 on Page 2, and the 10 on Page 5, there isn't any double counting, each of these persons is a different person: isn't that correct?

A. That is right. I thought I had already told you that.

Q. That is what I thought too.

Now going to the next column relating to Shopping Bag Store No. 3, does this column show that Von's accounted for most of the grocery shopping done by 5 per cent of the persons interviewed on the parking lot?

A. Yes. Would it help if I would show you how the statistical tables are read? That is what it does show.

Q. I think I know how they are read. I am just trying to get it on the record. And does Page 3 show that for Shopping Bag Store No. 3 17 per cent of the persons interviewed listed Von's as a second choice?

A. That's right.

Q. And then going to Page No. 5, does it show that 13 per cent of the persons interviewed listed Von's as a second choice as a place where they sometimes shop?

A. That's right.

Q. So that 35 per cent of the persons interviewed at Shopping Bag Store No. 3 would list Von's as a store [fol. 33] where they sometimes shopped?

A. Yes. "Sometimes" could be very infrequent, however, in the third question. It is not defined.

Q. "Sometimes" would also include anything other than the second choice. If they had a third choice it would fall within the "sometimes."

A. That's right, it could. But, as you know, the "No preference" goes up very high in Question 7. We have the people who could name no third store on the bottom line.

Q. Does that "No preference" mean that——

A. That included the people who could name no third store.

Q. But nonetheless 5 per cent of the people interviewed sometimes shop at Von's Store.

A. Shopping Bag No. 3, Store No. 3.

Q. And referring again to Page 1, with respect to Shopping Bag Store No. 2, is Von's at least the second strongest competitor of Shopping Bag Store No. 3 with respect to accounting for most of the persons interviewed, the grocery purchasers?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being ambiguous, uncertain and unintelligible.

Mr. Coyle: If the witness understands it she can answer.

The Witness: This is on Page 1 you are asking as their second choice?

Mr. Coyle Q. No. I am asking you, what does that [fol. 34] show as to the competition between Shopping Bag and these other stores listed?

A. I am asking is this Shopping Bag Store No. 2?

Q. 3.

A. That is what I didn't get. Well, at first it shows that Shopping Bag was listed 71 per cent, which is good.

Q. That is Shopping Bag's own parking lot and you would expect that.

A. That's right. And Alpha Beta is second as a specific store. Miscellaneous stores got 9 per cent of the market and 3 per cent have no preference. 5 per cent named Von's, 4 per cent Thriftimart and 2 per cent Gateway.

Q. And that means that four more people named Alpha Beta than named Von's, and Von's was named by more people than any other store with the exception of Alpha Beta.

A. With the exception of Alpha Beta and all the little stores.

Q. Those little stores were——

A. That was 22.

Q. That was no particular store.

A. No, It was the fact that there are some little stores in the area that got 9 per cent of the business and 3 per cent had no preference.

Q. Then going over to the second choice, Page 3, does that indicate that 42 people named Alpha Beta as their second choice and 37 people named Von's as their second choice?

[fol. 35] A. And 42 named Shopping Bag.

Q. But this is again on the Shopping Bag parking lot, which would indicate again, would it not, that Von's and Alpha Beta were Shopping Bag's heaviest competitors on the basis of this study?

A. I would say that Gateway could be mentioned as a competitor with 15.

Q. They are a competitor, Thriftimart is a competitor too.

A. Yes.

Q. Is Market Basket a competitor?

A. Yes, Market Basket.

Q. Would Ralphs have been a competitor?

A. All of those stores were mentioned and 36 of them mentioned those other stores that come up even more as a competitor.

Q. So there would be a number of competitors, but at least the second strongest competitor to that particular Shopping Bag store would be Von's.

Mr. Vaughn: The second?

Mr. Coyle: The second strongest competitor.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that asks for a conclusion which is not warranted by that one table alone.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness as to that particular store on the basis of that study.

Q. What does it prove?

[fol. 36] A. As I say, the first thing I think of importance is that 18 per cent named Shopping Bag as their second choice and then 18 Alpha Beta and Von's and 17 per cent named it compared with the large percentage that Shopping Bag got as the first choice. It is mentioned, yes, the 17 per cent figure is correct.

Q. And it indicates that that Shopping Bag and Von's did compete with each other, doesn't it?

A. It indicates that 17 per cent centioned Von's as a second choice for grocery shopping in that area on the Shopping Bag parking lot.

Q. What does that show to you?

A. Simply what I say, that 17 per cent indicated Von's as a second choice.

Q. On the basis of this tabulation appearing on Pages 1, 3 and 5 with respect to Whittier, are you able to form any conclusion as to whether there was much or little competition between these particular Von's and Shopping Bag stores?

A. Frankly I am a marketing research expert in the techniques of doing these surveys. I think that as to the amount of competition I wouldn't say that it was a great deal of competition between one store and another. In fact looking at it it would seem to me that that was an area in which it would call for more stores to build up more competition because of the heavy Shopping Bag penetration in three. And so many of the stores weren't mentioned at all, you see.

[fol. 37] Q. You mean there is an area where there was not much competition?

A. I would say that Shopping Bag did not have much competition in this area. Because we go back—What did they mention on Page 1? Shopping Bag was 71 per cent and then it was mentioned 18 per cent, and then it was mentioned 8 per cent. And the number of stores mentioned first on Question 1, "Where do you do most of your grocery shopping?" there were very few mentioned. It would seem to me that that is an area where the competition was fairly light.

Q. The competition is weak in Whittier.

A. It was light. There was not much competition in that area.

Q. Does Von's have much competition in that area?

A. Well, Von's was not in that area.

Q. In Whittier, I mean. Does the Von's Store in No. 1 in Whittier have much competition?

A. It has a little more, I would say. While it has 77 per cent who do most, but there are more stores mentioned in Questions 1 and 4. Only a few more, but there are more stores mentioned in the Von's Store No. 1 than in the Shopping Bag No. 3.

Q. Does Shopping Bag No. 2 have much competition in that area?

A. The other is high, the 19 per cent.

Q. Does that indicate competition?

[fol. 38] A. Yes, it indicates competition of a group of little stores. Its preference is not so great either at Shopping Bag in No. 2.

Q. Would this table indicate that the Von's-Shopping Bag and the two Shopping Bag stores in Whittier had so little competition that they could fix their prices independent of their competition?

A. I think I am being asked about things that I was not asked to study. I would just say that I don't think there is any area that stores can fix their prices without thinking of competition. I don't know any area, as we mentioned the mobility and so——

Q. Yes.

A. —when people, as far as I know, when their prices are more that it is because of their service or—I would say no.

Q. Your conclusion would be that these stores, the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in Whittier could not fix their prices without considering the prices charged by these other stores listed here as being second choices or sometimes choices or the consumer?

A. This is not in the scope of this study at all, sir, as you know. It is not in the scope of this study. We didn't get into the subject of price at all.

Q. I am just trying to ascertain what you mean when you say that there is little competition.

[fol. 39] A. I would imagine on the map there were not as many stores in that area. I am not talking about price. I am talking about the location of stores.

Q. You are talking about the number of stores?

A. Yes.

Q. But these stores that are listed here are competitive with each other?

A. They were competitive, yes, to the extent in which they are mentioned here as the store which—As I say, we go back to the wording of the question, "Where did you do most?" and "What is your second choice?" and "Are there any other markets where you sometimes shop?" That is the way that I would like to prepare it, since this is just repetitious of what we presented in the tables. To get it in the record I would be glad to go over this as fast as we can.

Q. I have to ask any questions which I feel are necessary here.

With respect to the Downey store, Shopping Bag Store No. 7, referring to Page 1 of your study——

Mr. Coyle: Let us go off the record for a minute.

(Discussion off the record.)

(A short recess was taken.)

(Whereupon, at 12:40 P.M., Wednesday, May 22, 1963 an adjournment was taken until 9:00 A.M., Friday, May 24, 1963.)

[fol. 40] (Whereupon, at 9:30 A.M., Friday, May 24, 1963, the taking of the deposition of Dorothy D. Corey was resumed at the same place, the following persons being present:)

Appearances of Counsel: Same

* * * * * * *

[fol. 41] DOROTHY D. COREY, having been previously duly sworn, deposed and testified further as follows:

Mr. Coyle: Would you mark this map showing the area in the vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue as Corey Exhibit No. 2 for Identification.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as Corey Exhibit No. 2 for identification and was returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Direct examination. (Continuing)

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mrs. Corey, I refer you to Paragraph 4 on Page 10 of your affidavit in which you discuss the competition which Von's would face with a store in the vicinity of Woodruff and Carson Street, in which you state that Von's was an insignificant factor in this area served by Hiram's, Iowa Pork Shop, McCoy's, Boy's, Thriftimart, U-Tel-Em, Market Basket, Greater Central Market, Alpha Beta, Safeway, Shorty's, Cole's, F & W Market, Royal Market, McDaniel's, Clark's, Plowboy's Market, Jim Dandy, Ralphs' and Raisin, among others. I show you this map which has been marked for identification as Corey Exhibit No. 2 and ask you if it is a map which shows the area in the vicinity of Carson [fol. 42] Street and Woodruff Avenue.

A. Yes.

Q. Does the green star on the map locate the intersection of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue?

A. Yes.

Q. I ask you whether or not the red numeral 2 indicates the location of the Iowa Pork Shop.

A. I assume it does. I would have to refer back to the——

Q. How far would that Iowa Pork Shop be from the green star? I think there is a scale on the other side of the map.

A. This scale is two miles.

Mr. Vaughn: Do you have a ruler?

Mr. Coyle: I believe the green circle indicates two miles.

A. If it does it would seem to be about two and a quarter miles. I don't have a ruler but it would seem to be about that.

Well, it's about two and a quarter miles.

Q. Referring to the number 19 on that map, which I understand is the location of Ralphs, how far is that from the star?

A. It's about four and a quarter.

Q. And that is four and a quarter in a straight line, and on the highway it would be somewhat longer than that, would it not?

[fol. 43] A. I suppose, depending upon how you draw that.

Q. And referring to No. 20, which is the location of the Raisin Market, how far is that from the star?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as assuming facts not in evidence, namely that this is the Raisin Market. I will object to the former questions insofar as they assume that this map indicates the location of any particular market, on the ground that it assumes facts not in evidence.

Mr. Coyle: I am stating that that is the location, or that I have been informed is the location of the Raisin Market.

Mr. Vaughn: I will stand on the objection.

Mr. Coyle: If Mrs. Corey wants to check the map later on with her study she can.

The Witness: This is about four miles.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is that in a different direction than the Ralphs Market which you previously looked at?

A. What number did you say was Ralphs?

Q. No. 19.

A. Yes, it is in a slightly different direction.

Q. And referring to No. 10, which I have been informed and believe to be the Safeway Market, how far is that?

Mr. Vaughn: The same objection.

The Witness: It's about three miles.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now referring to No. 8, which is the location of the Greater Central Market——

Mr. Vaughn: The same objection.

[fol. 44] The Witness: About the same distance, about three miles.

Mr. Coyle: Q. These are some of the stores which you state in your affidavit would be competition to a Von's store located at the intersection of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue, are they not?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as assuming facts not in evidence and contrary to the evidence. The affidavit says, "That this customer survey shows Von's was an insignificant factor in an area served by——" and listing a number of chains. It does not say that Von's would be or was in competition with all or any of these stores.

Mr. Coyle: These are stores that you found would serve the customers in the vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue, are they not?

A. I believe that we surveyed an area around that, and of course you always have overlapping. For example, if someone is living here they are much closer to Store 10. If they are within a two-mile radius here they are very close. So you have this overlapping situation in any consumer study. And if they lived in this area they would be closer to Store 15.

Q. And all of the stores would be serving customers residing in that two-mile area?

A. Not all of the customers, probably.

Q. But some of the customers?

A. But it always happens that way.

[fol. 45] Q. They would be competitive factors in that way?

A. It always happens that way, that customers in any particular area can go in any direction and they don't all live in one spot.

Q. And they are served by the stores that surround them?

A. Usually they are served by the stores that surround them, yes.

Mr. Coyle: Would you mark this as Corey Exhibit No. 3 for Identification, which is a map that shows the area in the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard.

(The map referred to was marked by the notary public as Corey Exhibit No. 3 for Identification and was returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mrs. Corey, I show you Corey Exhibit No. 3 for Identification and ask you whether it shows the area in the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Referring to the green star on that map, I ask you whether or not that plots the intersection of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard.

A. Yes, I believe it does. It is a little hard for me to see but I believe it does. This is Whittier and this must be Santa Gertrudes.

[fol. 46] Q. I refer you to the red dot marked No. 10 and I am informed that that is the location of the Ralphs' store. I ask you how far that is from the green dot.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to that on the ground that it assumes facts not in evidence and move to strike the question as it contains testimony.

The Witness: This is the same scale. About three and a half miles, I'd say, or three miles.

Mr. Coyle: Q. That measurement of three miles, is that the measurement between the intersection of Santa Gertrudes and Whittier Boulevard and Philadelphia and Comstock Streets?

A. No. It's over three, I would say. The dot, I can't tell exactly where it is.

Q. But it is over three miles?

A. It is over three miles, maybe three and a half.

Q. Is that the intersection of Philadelphia and Comstock?

A. On 10?

Q. Yes.

A. It looks to me as if it is Harley and Pickering, but I can't tell, Bailey.

Q. Do you know the location of the Ralphs Market that you referred to in Paragraph 5 of your affidavit?

A. Well, I can't recall the exact location. Did you say 10 was a Ralphs?

[fol. 47] Q. Yes.

A. There is Pickering and one called Comstock. Yes, there is Comstock. What is the other one?

Q. Philadelphia.

A. Oh, yes, here is the spot. Yes, that is the location.

Q. And that is the location of the Ralphs' store?

A. It was, yes.

Q. Referring to the dot marked 13, I ask you whether or not that plots 424 East Philadelphia.

A. Well, it would seem to from the spot, yes.

Q. Is that the location of Orcutt's Whittier, which you referred to in Paragraph 5 of your affidavit on Page 10?

A. I believe it was at that time.

Q. Would you tell us how far that is from the green star?

A. Well, it's over three miles.

Q. Now referring to Corey Exhibit No. 2 for Identification, I ask you whether No. 19 is 10th and Cherry.

A. Yes, it's 10th and Cherry.

Q. Is that the location of Ralphs Market that you referred to in Paragraph 4 of your affidavit?

A. I believe it is.

Q. Now referring to No. 20 on that map, is that the intersection of Orange and Waldron?

A. It seems to be the intersection of Orange and Wardlow.

[fol. 48] Q. Was that the location—yes, Wardlow. I am sorry—of Raisin's that you referred to in your affidavit?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Referring to No. 10, is that the intersection of Bellflower and Cedar?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that the location of the Safeway which you referred to in your affidavit?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to No. 2, on Corey Exhibit No. 2 for Identification, is that the intersection of Palos Verdes and Stearns?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the location of the Iowa Pork Shop that you referred to in Paragraph 4 of your affidavit?

A. I believe so.

Q. Referring to No. 8 on Corey Exhibit No. 2, is that the intersection of Artesia and Bellflower?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the location of the Greater Central Market that you referred to in your affidavit?

A. I believe so.

Q. Could you tell us how far that No. 8 is from the green star?

A. It is, I would say, about three miles.

[fol. 49] Q. You stated that you made these surveys in the vicinity of Carson and Woodruff Street with respect to the survey discussed in Paragraph 4 of your affidavit and the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard in Paragraph 5 of your affidavit. How wide an area did you use to make this survey?

Mr. Vaughn: May I show her the report, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: We say in the report that the survey was made within a three-mile radius around the intersection of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is it your normal procedure to take a three-mile radius when you make surveys of this type?

A. If there is a normal procedure it is our normal procedure to discuss the problem with the client and define the problem and adapt the universe that will solve his problem. It would depend upon whether we were working in a very highly populated area, a widespread area, physical boundaries and so on.

Q. Was this area that you made this survey in a heavily populated area, or these areas?

A. I don't think it was in—— It wasn't what I would call a heavily populated area in '56.

Q. Was it an average area in '56?

A. It varied. There were wide spaces of open territory in '56.

[fol. 50] Q. Are there still wide spaces of open territory?

A. Well, I haven't driven around it recently. But I could have the block statistics run. We have them on IBM cards and are trying to get more from the Census, but it is so hard to get it.

Q. But from your own experience you wouldn't know whether——

A. It has grown, I know that. But I don't know whether it is heavily populated today or not.

Q. In making this survey, which you made for O'Melveny & Myers, and which you discussed commencing on Page 3 of your affidavit, you state that 3,000 interviews were made. I think that Mr. Von der Ahe yesterday testified that his stores would have between three and six thousand customers in a week's period. Now, this survey was made for 11 stores. What would be the approximate universe? Could you give us an approximate universe that these 3,000 interviews would represent?

A. No, I couldn't because I don't know the universe of Shopping Bag. And three to six is a big—— You mean you are talking about the population?

Q. Yes. I am trying to find out what each of these interviews would represent. If it were 3,000 customers per store on an 11 store basis how many families would these interviews represent?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being confusing and ambiguous. If you take it store by store you [fol. 51] might have something. But to take 11 stores and add them all together and add all the interviews together, I don't think you get anything.

The Witness: We didn't add them together in the report for the simple reason that we were studying area by area and store by store.

Mr. Coyle: Q. All right. We will do it store by store then. With respect to Store No. 1, that is Von's Store No. 1, you or your report indicate that you made 341 interviews with respect to Von's Store No. 1. If that Von's store had 3,000 customers would each of these interviews represent 10 customers?

A. Yes.

Q. And 20 if it had 6,000?

A. That's right.

Q. So each of these interviews would represent between 10 and 20 customers.

A. Yes. I told you the other day that is not the way we arrive at a sample. It is the size of the sample and not the universe that counts, and in a case like this the number of customers has nothing to do with it.

Q. With respect to Shopping Bag Store No. 2 you took 294 interviews.

A. Yes.

Q. In this case it would represent a little more than 10 customers on this minimum figure of 3,000?

[fol. 52] Mr. Vaughn: That assumes facts not in evidence, that that is a minimum figure.

The Witness: I have no idea about what the number of customers that Shopping Bag Store No. 2 had in a week or a day. I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: Q. I show you a map which is designated "Area 2, Von's, 151 Brookhurst, Garden Grove Shopping Bag, Brookhurst and Katella, Garden Grove," and ask you if it's an exhibit which you prepared or had prepared for O'Melveny & Myers for use in this case.

A. Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question. It is not, because there are some lines on there that Mrs. Corey didn't put on.

Mr. Coyle: The overlay Mrs. Corey did not put on.

Mr. Vaughn: That's right. And neither did O'Melveny & Myers.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring to this red dot, the northernmost red dot on the map, could you state what the intersection of that dot is?

A. It seems to be Orangethorpe and Hawthorne.

Q. Could you tell me how far that red dot is from the red star which indicates——

A. I think these are the same maps. They look like the Security map.

Q. The red star which indicates the Von's store.

[fol. 53] A. It would seem to be about five miles.

Q. Is that a single red dot or is that more than one red dot?

A. I don't know now. It may be just a single red dot.

Q. It could be two red dots?

A. It could be, but maybe just a single red dot.

Q. Would that indicate that 10 or 20 families if it's a single dot, or 20 or 40 families if it's a red dot would shop——

A. I think we have it on the tape.

Q. Why don't you check on your tape and see how many dots this is.

A. I don't see it. I can't find it. Here it is, Brookhurst and Orangethorpe, four.

Q. Does that indicate four red dots?

A. At Brookhurst. Frankly, I can't find it.

Q. Do you find Brookhurst and Orangethorpe?

Mr. Vaughn: On the map?

Mr. Coyle: On the map, yes.

Mr. Vaughn: May I help her?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: Let us see if it is Brookhurst. It says "Hawthorne." Maybe there is Brookhurst——

Mr. Vaughn: It appears to me, at least, that that is Brookhurst and later in another half a block it changes to Hawthorne. But that is Brookhurst and Orangethorpe.

[fol. 54] Mr. Coyle: Q. Would that be four families—four interviews that were located in that vicinity?

A. Orangethorpe at Brookhurst are four.

Q. That would be four interviews and each of those interviews would represent between 10 and 20 families, would they not?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as assuming facts not in evidence.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know how many families each of those interviews would represent?

A. No, because, as I told you, I don't know how many customers.

Q. It would represent just four customers, would it not?

A. Yes, it would represent more than four.

Q. And depending upon the total number of customers at that particular Von's store it would represent perhaps as many as 20 customers.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being speculative.

Mr. Coyle: In making your study in the Garden Grove area you made 350 interviews, according to the report. If that Von's store had 6,000 customers each of those interviews would represent 15 customers, would they not?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to that on the grounds that it assumes facts not in evidence and that it is argumentative. [fol. 55] Mr. Coyle: She is an expert witness. I am asking her a hypothetical question.

Mr. Vaughn: You are also asking her an argumentative question.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking her how many it would represent.

Q. How many would each interview represent if that particular Von's store had 6,000 customers?

Mr. Vaughn: The same objection.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking her anyhow.

Mr. Vaughn: I realize that and I am objecting anyhow. She may answer.

The Witness: Based on sampling, of course, it would never represent an exact number because there is always a certain plus or minus in any sampling process. But it would probably—But it would certainly represent more than four.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And quite a few more than four. The Von's store, you know, would have quite a few customers more than 350.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being argumentative.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Would you know that the Von's store would have quite a few more than 350 customers?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as calling for a conclusion, "quite a few more than."

Mr. Coyle: Q: Would you know that the Von's store [fol. 56] would have more than 350 customers?

A. Well, I would assume they would. We didn't make a census, we made a sampling.

Q. You observed the store, didn't you?

A. The interviewers did.

Q. And on the basis of observing the store and making the 350 interviews can you draw any conclusion as to whether the Von's store had more than 350 customers?

A. I would say they have more than 350 customers, yes.

Q. Would say they have ten times more than 350 customers?

A. Well, yes.

Q. Fifteen times more?

A. I don't know.

Q. So they would have at least ten times more than 350. Would that indicate then that the four interviews would represent at least 40 customers?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question——

Mr. Coyle: I am asking her if it would.

Mr. Vaughn: Let me make my objection, if I may, for the record.

Mr. Coyle: Make your objection.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being argumentative, calling for a conclusion and being speculative.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now answer the question.

A. Well, Gentlemen, I don't know whether—It could [fol. 57] represent 40, it could represent 35 and maybe it would represent 45.

Q. Or 60?

A. No, I wouldn't say it would represent 60.

Q. Would the customers living in that area and patronizing the Von's store have to pass other stores on the way to the Von's store?

Mr. Vaughn: You mean living in the area of Brookhurst and Orangethorpe?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: I think they would. They would have too. They could drive around them but you would think that normally they might.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Normally they would pass other stores.

A. Yes.

Q. Now referring to this intersection, could you state what that intersection is?

A. It seems to be Bolsa and Adams. It also seems to change its name up here to Stanton.

Q. Could you tell me how many Shopping Bag customers you located in the vicinity of Bolsa and Adams?

A. We have one at Highway 39 and Bolsa.

Mr. Vaughn: I think this is Highway 39 as well.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you just have a single dot there?

A. Yes.

Q. How far would that be, that single dot? How far [fol. 58] would that be from the green star?

A. It seems about five miles.

Q. Then going over to this green dot, what intersection is that?

A. That is the intersection of 5th Street and Jackson.

Q. How many green dots do you have there?

A. I don't see it here but it looks to be one.

Q. How far is that from the green star?

A. It is about the same, about five miles.

Q. Would customers patronizing the Shopping Bag store from that area have to pass other stores normally to get to the Shopping Bag store?

A. I imagine there are stores in the area, yes.

Q. Referring to this green dot over here, would you locate that intersection?

A. It looks like Memory Lane and Bristol.

Q. How many interviews does that represent?

A. This one?

Q. Yes.

A. It's a little larger. It could be two.

Q. Could it be more than two?

A. I don't think it is. It could be one, it could be two.

Q. Calling your attention to this intersection up there that we discussed first, which represented four interviews, is that dot down there any larger or any smaller?

[fol. 59] A. To me it seems a little smaller.

Q. It is very difficult to tell from these dots how many interviews?

A. Yes.

Q. How far is that from the green star?

A. That is about the same, about five miles.

Q. Would those customers have to pass other stores normally to get to the Shopping Bag store?

A. I would say so.

Q. Now referring to the cluster of red dots around the green star indicating Von's, do those dots indicate Von's customers that live in the vicinity of the Shopping Bag store?

A. Yes.

Q. And how many of those red dots make up that cluster of red there?

A. Twenty-two.

Q. Would each of those interviews represent maybe 35 or maybe 45 families, according to your previous testimony?

A. I don't know about that.

Q. Would you know how many customers were represented by those 22 dots?

A. No, I don't. Twenty-two, at least, of course.

Q. And maybe each of them represented as many as ten customers?

A. That's right.

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as being [fol. 60] confusing and calling for a conclusion. The word "represented" is being used, I think, in a non-statistical sense here.

Mr. Coyle: Q. When you make these interviews don't each of these interviews represent something more than just a single interview?

A. We usually use the word "projectable." Whether it is projectable or not.

Q. Are these projectable, these interviews?

A. Yes, they are projectable.

Q. How many would these 22 interviews project to?

A. As I say, they might project to ten. I don't know the total universe, I told you that, and that is why I can't testify to that.

Q. It might project to more than ten or less than ten but you say that ten is about what you think they project to?

A. That would be more——

Q. It would probably be conservative, wouldn't it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Now referring to this overlay which is now attached to this exhibit, which you didn't make, would you say that that overlay, on the basis of your study, would accurately plot out the market area served by these two stores?

A. I don't know. You mean back at that time in 1956?

Q. Yes. Based upon your interviews.

[fol. 61] Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question. The map doesn't purport to show and doesn't show the trading area of the two stores. It shows the trading area of each store. You have wide open spaces here covering most of it.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking Mrs. Corey on the basis of her interviews would she be able to plot the area served by the two stores on the basis of her interviews.

Mr. Vaughn: I think she has. The dots show the areas.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking her.

The Witness: It would depend upon the problem that you were solving. You are including, as you say, a great deal of scattered territory in here.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But there are customers of both stores located even outside that area, are there not?

A. Well, very scattered customers.

Q. But isn't that what determines the trading area?

A. This study was given as of a certain day and as of a certain day someone may be traveling through, maybe going from work and what have you, as of a certain time. I think that the map itself is more indicative of where the customers come from than this line. It shows the cluster where the customers are clustered.

Q. This study of yours was prepared to solve a particular problem, was it not?

A. It was—— Yes, it was done to approach a particular [fol. 62] problem, to bring up some answers to particular problems.

Q. What was the problem it was prepared to answer?

A. I believe we stated in here, in our report.

Q. Would you refer me to the specific place?

A. That we were requested to conduct a survey to determine the amount of competition existing between Von's and Shopping Bag Markets at those locations in close proximity to each other.

Q. And those locations were in close proximity to each other?

A. They were the closest of all the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

Q. These were the only Von's and Shopping Bag stores that you studied for the purpose of determining the competition between them?

A. Yes.

Q. And you made no findings as to any of the other stores?

A. No.

Q. Would a store with three and a half million dollars annual sales have normally in the Los Angeles area a larger draw area than a store with two and a half million dollar sales?

A. Well, I wouldn't say. It would depend on the location of the store.

[fol. 63] Q. If at a given area a store had sales of three and a half million dollars would it have a larger draw area than a store with two and a half million dollar sales located across the street from it?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as being speculative. So many factors come into that that you haven't eliminated them.

Mr. Coyle: This is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Vaughn: It is an improper hypothetical question.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness if she can answer that.

Q. Could you answer this hypothetical question?

Mr. Vaughn: Do not answer until I finish stating my objection, Mrs. Corey, hopefully without interruption.

You are asking her a hypothetical question and not including all of the factors that go into a result such as how much each customer spends at the store and the like, and I object to it as an improper hypothetical question.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Would the Von's store on this map have a larger draw area than the Shopping Bag store?

A. You mean just depending upon geography alone?

Q. On the basis of the fact that the Von's store had a three and a half million dollar annual sale and Shopping Bag two and a half million.

Mr. Vaughn: Doesn't that assume facts not in evidence?

Mr. Coyle: This is a hypothetical question.

[fol. 64] The Witness: We have a hypothetical question that Von's has a volume of what?

Mr. Coyle: Q. Three and a half million.

A. And that Shopping Bag has——

Q. Two and a half million.

Mr. Vaughn: The same objection.

The Witness: I wouldn't say that it does.

Mr. Coyle: Q. That wouldn't indicate that one has a wider draw area than the other?

A. Not necessarily. It might or might not. You couldn't answer it just on that. You couldn't possibly answer it on that basis.

Q. What other factors would you have to know?

A. Well, I went into a great many of the factors the other day, it is in the testimony, that it would depend on the store, the amount that they sell. As you remember, I mentioned the quality of the meat, one may have a good parking area the other may not. That one may be on a better side of a wide avenue and that one may have better management. The lost sale, not keeping a good inventory, is very important. And one may stock—may pay better attention to the brands. There is the arrangement of the store, the areas. All of those things go into the success of a store or increased sales. I don't know. One may have a liquor department and one may no.. And one may have a good meat department. One may be heavy on vegetables. It is not just the groceries alone that depend upon the volume. [fol. 65] One may be open longer hours. One might be open on Sundays and the other might not. All of these things have to be considered. It is not just the one factor.

Q. So would it be your conclusion then that there is no hard and fast rule as to the draw area of a given store?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question using the phrase "hard and fast rule." Relating to what?

Mr. Coyle: Q. That there is no one criterion that determines the draw area of a given store.

A. Well, that is an entirely different question than the one you asked me.

Q. What determines the draw area of a given store?

Mr. Vaughn: What do you mean "determines"? I don't understand it.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What factors do you have to take into consideration to arrive at the draw area of a given store?

A. Well, I mentioned some of them. However, if you are just talking about geography, if one store is in Garden Grove and the other store is in San Fernando, certainly geography has a part. The people in San Fernando aren't going to go to Garden Grove to do their shopping. So that could determine the draw area on that. But these stores are relatively close together. Or when I am talking about stores that could be relatively close together then I don't think geography is the only thing.

[fol. 66] I did mention one factor there, the fact about a big avenue or freeway, or something that people might not want to cross, or there could be a natural boundary such as a river bed or something that would affect it. But from looking at the map here it doesn't seem to me that there is any natural boundary there that would affect the draw area.

Q. There are no barriers on that map that you see that would affect the draw area.

A. I don't see any between these two stores.

Q. Is there a railroad shown on that map?

A. Yes. This goes down on this side.

Q. Would that railroad affect the draw area there?

A. I would frankly have to see—I don't know how it is crossed over.

Q. Based upon those interviews that you conducted would you conclude that it has affected the draw area?

A. Well, we have some coming down Chapman, which is evidently a direct line, as you can see. There is a direct line here on Chapman.

Q. And are people crossing that railroad to get to those stores?

A. They evidently go up to Chapman and then go over. There is a way of going.

Q. Isn't there generally a way of going across the railroads in this area?

A. There is.

[fol. 67] Q. Railroads are not much of a barrier in this area, are they?

A. I wouldn't say that railroads are our big barriers. Maybe freeways are bigger barriers. But generally there is a way of doing anything, but it may not be the most convenient way. And convenience is an important factor.

Mr. Coyle: I am through now.

Mr. Vaughn: I have a few questions.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Mr. Coyle has referred to your survey of the vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue. I show to you a document entitled "Consumer Shopping Habits in the vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue, Lakewood, for Von's Grocery Company, February 1956." Is that a report which your organization prepared, Mrs. Corey?

A. Yes.

Q. In making that report did you confine your interviews to the immediate vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue?

A. Well, according to our report the survey was made between a three-mile radius around the intersection of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue.

Q. That means that you would go three miles in all [fol. 68] directions in order to find those who you would interview; is that correct?

A. That's right. We described the areas bounded on the north by Artesia Street and on the south by portions of the Pacific Coast Highway and the most southern limits of the Los Angeles County line. The east and west boundaries are roughly the Los Angeles County line and the City of Lakewood's western limits, respectively.

Q. Was this a survey to determine consumer preference for particular stores in the area surveyed?

A. Yes.

Q. I refer you—I suppose this is Page 2 of your report. Am I correct in saying that you asked for consumer preference in meat, vegetables, groceries and fresh fish with regard to various markets; is that right?

A. Yes. The question was, "Where do you generally buy your meat?" Where do you generally buy your fresh fruit and vegetables?" and "Where do you generally buy your groceries?"

Q. Would you tell me what percentage of the customers asked "where do you generally buy your groceries?" responded Iowa Pork Shop?

A. Iowa Pork Shops on groceries, 4.8.

Q. How about Ralphs?

A. .2.

Q. Have you any way of knowing from the information [fol. 69] now before you whether those .2 per cent of the persons interviewed lived in this area?

A. Not exactly where they lived. They lived within the three-mile radius.

Q. They could have lived three miles away from Carson and Woodruff in the direction of the Ralphs' store; isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. How about with respect to Raisin Market, how many said they generally bought their groceries at Raisin's Market?

A. .2.

Q. How about Safeway?

A. 2.4.

Q. How about Greater Central?

A. 8.9.

Q. If a store has a two mile draw area and one of its competitors four miles away has a two mile draw area, are they in competition, in your opinion, Mrs. Corey?

A. They would be more in competition by the people who lived on the two miles from either one, that line of people. I mean this is a completely overlapping situation. You don't draw a boundary and then stop. I mean it's an overlapping situation. So they would be in competition with the people who live closer to one store or the other, and the competition would vary.

Q. So that a store with a two mile drawing area could [fol. 70] be in competition with a store three and a half or four miles away from it; isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Mr. Coyle also referred you to the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard. I now show you a report called "Consumer Shopping Habits in the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes and Whittier Boulevard." Is this also a report prepared by your organization, Facts Consolidated?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. What area did you conduct your interviews in in this instance?

A. That was within a three-mile radius around the intersection of Santa Gertrudes and Whittier Boulevard.

Q. That is three miles in all directions; is that correct?

A. In all directions, yes.

Q. Again what question did you ask people interviewed?

A. We ask again, "Where do you generally buy your meats?" "Where do you generally buy your fresh fruits and vegetables?" and "Where do you generally buy your groceries?" And then the reason that fish was on there, we later on asked, "Do you ever buy fresh fish, and if 'Yes,' where do you buy it?" So it is a smaller sample of whoever buys fresh fish.

Q. What percentage of those persons contacted or interviewed said they generally bought their groceries at Ralphs?

A. Four per cent.

[fol. 71] Q. What percentage said they usually bought their groceries at Orcutt's Whittier?

A. 2.5.

Q. I take it that you are again unable to tell us from the information before you where those particular customers or particular persons resided in that area.

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. They could have resided three miles away from the——

Mr. Coyle: You are testifying, Mr. Vaughn.

Mr. Vaughn: Q. Is it possible that they could have resided——

Mr. Coyle: You are still testifying.

Mr. Vaughn: Q. —three miles away from Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard from Ralphs or Orcutt's Whittier?

A. Yes, within three miles. Up to three miles.

Q. Are you a member, Mrs. Corey, of any professional societies or associations?

A. Well, I am a member of the American Marketing Association, I am a member of the American Statistical Association, I am a member of the American Association for Public Opinion Research, and our firm is a member of the American Management Association, and I am a member of some advertising clubs. I think that's about it.

Q. Has your firm or have you ever conducted any surveys to determine the effectiveness of food advertising in [fol. 72] metropolitan papers as compared to other types of newspapers?

A. Effectiveness, yes, and more readership rather than effectiveness.

Q. You have conducted your surveys to determine what number of people read particular newspapers?

A. Yes. And what they read them for.

Q. Do you have an opinion, Mrs. Corey, based upon your research, as to what type of newspaper carrying food advertising is most often read for the purpose of reading food advertising in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. I would say that the paper that we call the controlled circulation newspaper that comes out on Thursday morning, some of them are published twice a week, some three times a week, there is even one published four times a week, are read more for food advertising than any other type of paper.

We did a great deal of work in media research and we made a study called "The Penetration Efficiency of Newspapers." We made three of those covering all the newspapers in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. This includes the metropolitan papers, the daily community papers and the weeklies. There are almost 400 papers included in this study.

And in working with the newspapers, one group called the Los Angeles suburban newspapers, Los Angeles area suburban newspapers, LOSAN we call it, we learned that [fol. 73] they have 144 markets advertising in their newspapers.

Q. What is a market?

A. A food market.

Q. I see.

A. One hundred forty-four different food advertisers in their newspapers, which I would say represent about one-third of the control circulation newspapers.

Q. Where are these controlled circulation newspapers distributed? Is one paper distributed across the metropolitan area or how is that done?

A. No. Some of them have very small areas, some have larger ones. But they are designed to serve the immediate community.

For example, one group called the Herald American have 13 different stores, so they can be localized to serve each area such a La Mirada, such as West Compton, such as East Compton. They are very, very local. The purpose is to give local news and serve the local advertising.

Q. Have your surveys showed, Mrs. Corey, that more or fewer people read food advertising in these types of papers than in metropolitan newspapers?

A. The food advertising is read more in these papers than in any other type. Not only the metropolitan but in the community newspapers such as the Long Beach and Pasadena, Glendale News Press and so on. These are—Some of them are—These are the newspapers designed [fol. 74] primarily to serve the food markets. In fact their problem is to show that people read them for something else other than food. Because when they go out to sell advertising the advertiser says, "We know everybody uses them for shopping for food but we don't know that they use them for something else." And that has been their problem, to show that they do read them for other things other than food.

Mr. Vaughn: No further questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. How many people read these controlled newspapers for food advertising?

A. Well, I would say that it varies a little bit by area within the County. On the whole I would say that about 85 per cent of the housewives in Los Angeles and Orange read them for food advertising.

Q. What percentage of the housewives do the shopping in Los Angeles and Orange Counties?

A. When I say "the housewives," I also mean the men. The people who do the shopping—people who shop read them for food advertising.

Q. What percentage of the households in Los Angeles and Orange Counties get one or the other of the metropolitan newspapers?

[fol. 75] A. One or the other of the metropolitan newspapers? I am calling on my memory, and I deal with figures so much of the time that I don't try to memorize them. I try to go back and I may have to correct myself. But I would say about—You are talking about the dailies, not the Sunday?

Q. Yes. Either at a newsstand or have it delivered at their home, one or the other.

A. I would say that it is about 45 per cent.

Q. 45 per cent of the people in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the circulation of the Times?

A. I don't remember what it is. It is not all in Los Angeles and Orange County, of course. But I could get that figure. It wouldn't be difficult for me to get you the circulation of all the papers. I do have them in my office, the Audit Bureau circulation figures.

Q. Is it necessary for a chain like Safeway to advertise in the metropolitan papers?

A. It wouldn't be.

Q. It wouldn't be?

A. It wouldn't be necessary.

Q. Could they do as well without advertising in the metropolitan newspapers?

A. That is in the matter of the judgment of the advertising manager.

[fol. 76] Q. But they advertise in the metropolitan newspapers?

A. I believe they are now.

Q. You know they are, don't you?

A. I believe they are. They are also advertising in community papers and they advertise in the control shopping newspapers.

Q. Doesn't Von's advertise in the metropolitan newspapers?

A. I believe they do.

Q. Didn't Shopping Bag prior to the merger?

A. I don't know whether they did or not.

Q. You don't know whether they did or not?

A. Not all of the chains. In fact I know that all of the chains do not advertise in the mets.

Q. How many chains are you talking about when you say "all the chains"?

A. Well, there again I will have to go back and list all the number of chains. I believe there might be about 25. I would say that basically about half of them may do that. They go in and out. I can remember when something may happen and they decide they are not going to go into the metropolitan newspapers or they may decide that they are not going to go into a community paper. They make a study of their advertising plans from year to year and they change.

Q. Do they all advertise in these controlled papers that you mentioned?

[fol. 77] A. I would say that 95 per cent of them do.

Q. 95 per cent of what?

A. Of practically all markets. And I don't have any incidents where the chain does not advertise.

To go into that, I remember one time one of the chains became angry at one publisher and went out of the paper and then instead of depending upon the metropolitan paper and the community paper they devised their own, if you want to call it a throwaway, and they printed that and they circulated it themselves from door to door, because they couldn't——

Q. What chain are you talking about?

A. Well, actually at that time, this was some time ago, it was Safeway in one area. And they quit doing it and went door to door.

Q. Which area was that?

A. It was an area in the Valley. This was a long time ago.

Q. How long ago?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Ten years ago?

A. Probably ten years ago. About ten years ago.

Q. At least ten years ago? But that is the only incident that you know of that this happened?

A. Oh, if I went—No. If I went back over the records I can remember Sears & Roebuck doing—This is not a food [fol. 78] store. But these markets change their policy overnight. But I would say that they depend by and large, the big dependence is on the controlled circulation newspaper for the chains and the small markets. All of them, independent markets, everyone.

Q. What do you define as a chain, Mrs. Corey? You are talking about chains.

A. There are different definitions.

Q. What is your definition? What have you been meaning when you spoke about chains?

A. I have been thinking of stores that have 12 or more.

Q. That is your definition of a chain, an organization with 12 or more stores?

Mr. Vaughn: That is what she said.

Mr. Coyle: I am just clarifying it.

Q. That is your definition?

A. I have been thinking of that, that that would be 12 or more, yes.

Q. How many stores does Safeway have?

A. I don't know and they won't tell you.

Q. They have 12 or more?

A. They have 12 or more.

Q. And they do advertise in the metropolitan papers?

A. I believe they are now; I believe they are. Personally I don't shop at Safeway and I don't know. I haven't paid any attention. I have been out of town. As I say, their [fol. 79] policy changes. But I assume they have ads in the metropolitan papers.

Q. What about Ralphs?

A. I believe they do too.

Q. And Von's you know does?

A. I believe they do.

Q. Does Market Basket?

A. Probably. I don't recall.

Q. Does Mayfair?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Does Fox still have ads in the metropolitan papers?

A. I don't know whether they do or not. I have no Fox in my area so I don't know about Fox.

Q. Do you know whether Safeway has an ad in the controlled papers?

A. Yes, I know they do.

Q. How do you know that?

A. Because I have been looking over some of the control circulation papers in behalf of another client of ours.

Q. Does Von's?

A. Yes, they use some. They don't use all. They use some, depending on their advertising manager's choice.

Q. Is radio and TV a medium of advertising for grocery stores?

A. I don't know whether they use it very much or not. [fol. 80] I don't think they do. They might do it more for image advertising. I mean I remember that Von's a number of years ago, they had a movie or something in the afternoon, I believe, or maybe it was in the evening. I never watched it. But I believe they did have a movie on TV. And I don't know whether any of the others have or not.

Q. Do you know what percentage of the chains of 12 or more stores advertising budget goes into metropolitan newspaper advertising in this area?

A. No, I don't know. But I think that would be easy to find out, what percentage goes into metropolitan, what percentage goes into community and what percentage goes into control circulation newpapers.

Q. But you don't know right now?

A. No, I don't.

Q. You have been talking about these surveys that you made in the vicinity of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue and the other one in the vicinity of Santa Gertrudes and Whittier Boulevard, and you have stated that you don't know where the persons interviewed lived.

Mr. Vaughn: On the basis of the information now before her, that is what she said.

Mr. Coyle: Q. On the basis of your report you don't know that. Do you know whether they all lived within this three-mile radius?

A. Yes, because we did the interviewing in the home and [fol. 81] we didn't go beyond the three-mile radius. They were in-home interviews.

Q. Was the purpose of this study to develop facts for Von's Grocery in connection with their consideration of possibly a store in that area?

A. Yes. We say that.

Q. Did Von's actually open a store at the intersection of Carson Street and Woodruff Avenue?

A. I believe they did.

Q. And did Von's also open a store at the intersection of Santa Gertrudes Avenue and Whittier Boulevard?

A. I believe they did.

Q. Had they those spots under consideration when you made this survey?

A. Yes.

Q. And you took a radius of three miles from those locations to make your interviews to determine whether they should locate a store there?

A. Yes.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

Mr. Vaughn: I have none.

Mr. Coyle: That is all.

RESEARCH

A Monthly News Letter prepared for Western Advertising by Facts Consolidated

NOTEBOOK

DR. GEORGE GALLUP IS BEING QUESTIONED before a committee by Congressman Clarence J. Brown:

Mr. Brown: "Dr. Gallup, what is the largest sampling that you make in the United States, the largest number, in order to pass on a given question?"
Dr. Gallup: "On a given question?"
Mr. Brown: "Yes."
Dr. Gallup: "3,000 is a typical sample."
Mr. Brown: "3,000 over the United States?"
Dr. Gallup: "Yes; over the United States."
Mr. Brown: "How many counties are there in the United States?"
Dr. Gallup: "3,070, I believe."
Mr. Brown: "You then make a sample of polls of a little under one per county in the United States?"
Dr. Gallup: "That is right. And I might add that is more than we would need to take it. If we took 1,500, it would probably keep within the margin of error that we claim."

That Was Ten Years Ago. Today in research we are still trying to convince people that sampling errors are determined by the size of the sample and not by the size of the population. A random sample of 400 out of a population of 50,000,000 is just as reliable as a random sample of 400 out of a population of 5,000. (—practically. Read the "fine print" at the end of this article.) We had better be right about this because some "relatively small" samples are being used today.

This Can All Be Discussed with the use of algebra but let's see if we can't figure it out intuitively. Suppose that 40% of the adults read newspapers in Town A (200 adults in the population), 40% in Town B (600 adults), and 40% in the United States (millions of adults). The readers are designated with asterisks (*) in the charts below and the others with circles (o). If we select a random sample of 10 adults from any one of these areas, about 4 out of the ten will be newspaper readers. Sometimes we will get 3 or 5 or perhaps 2 or 6 but—we will not be farther from the truth in the larger areas than we will in Town A.

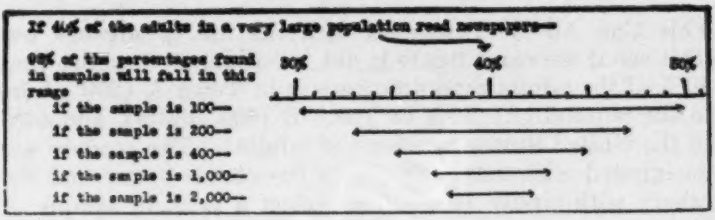
[fol. 85] If the Number of Items in the Population has nothing to do with our sampling errors, what does affect these errors? The size of the sample. Other things being the same, samples of 200 have smaller sampling errors than do samples of 100. However, if the sampling error of a sample of 100 is to be cut in half, the sample must be increased to 400, that is, it must be quadrupled.

Sample Results Are Either Above or Below the Truth (except in those rare cases when they coincide with the truth). By "sampling error" we mean the difference between the truth (say, 40%) and the sample percentage (say, 38%). In the chart below, we can see that the range of sample percentages around the truth varies as the sample size varies. For example, if we use a sample of only 100, we would not be surprised to get a sample percentage as low as 32% when the population percentage is 40%. But with a sample of 1000 from a population which has a percentage of 40%, for example, we would rarely have a sample result of less than 37% or more than 43%.



60% Has the Same Sampling Error That 40% Has. If 40% is subject to a 3% sampling error, 60% has the same error. Percentages of less than 40% (or more than 60%) have smaller sampling errors than does 40%. Percentages nearer 50% have larger sampling errors.

What About Relatively Large Samples? We have picked our examples carefully in the first part of this article and have not made the following statement which is obviously nonsense: "A sample of 990 out of a population of 1,000 has the same sampling error as a sample of 990 out of a population of 1,000,000." There just can't be much sampling error in a sample of 990 out of 1,000! We must carefully modify our opening statements now to read: "The size of the population does not affect the sampling error unless the sample is a sizeable part of the population." Usually the sample is not a sizeable part of the population—usually far less than 10% or even 1%. But let us compare (1) a sample of 1,000 from a population of 10,000 (this is 10%) and (2) a sample of 1,000 from a population of 10,000,000. If the percentage being measured is about 40%, we would be reasonably sure that our error was no greater in the first case than 2.93% and no greater in the second case than 3.08%. This is not a substantial difference and we go back to our first statements: It Is the Size of the Sample That Counts!

AFFIDAVIT OF VICTOR HINSON

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

VICTOR HINSON, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am the Secretary of Von's Grocery Co.

In October, 1960, attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. requested me to conduct a survey of the following Von's and Shopping Bag stores which, they advised me, the Government contended were in competition for the same customers prior to the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag:

Present Von's Store No.	Store No. Prior to Merger	Location
4	Von's 4	Monterey Park
5	Von's 5	Downey
22	Von's 22	Reseda
26	Von's 26	Garden Grove
27	Von's 27	Whittier
29	Von's 29	Alhambra
31	Von's 31	West Covina
32	S.B. 32	West Covina
33	S.B. 33	Anaheim
35	S.B. 35	Downey
39	S.B. 39	Reseda
40	S.B. 40	Montebello
41	S.B. 1	La Habra
51	S.B. 11	San Marino
56	S.B. 16	Alhambra
60	S.B. 20	Pico Rivera
61	S.B. 22	Whittier
67	S.B. 27	Monterey Park
68	S.B. 28	La Puente

I instructed each store manager of the above stores to record the names and addresses of the first 200 persons cashing checks at his store on various Fridays and Saturdays between October 21 and December 9, 1960. These names and addresses were then copied onto lists which were returned to me. Those lists are Exhibit AA.

I then procured maps of the areas surrounding the above stores. My secretary, working under my supervision, inserted on those maps an appropriately labeled marker at the location of each store involved in the study. She then located on those maps the address of each person named in the above referred to lists and placed a pin in the map at that address. The color of the pin used corresponded to a color assigned to the store at which the person had cashed his check.

In some cases, the addresses of two or more customers of one store were so close together that a pin could not be used for each customer. In such cases, then, a single pin represents two or more customers of one store.

I believe that the pins so located on those maps (which are Exhibits AB through AE) fairly depict the residences of typical customers of the above named stores and outline the area from which such stores draw their customers.

Victor Hinson.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 22 day of October, 1962.

AFFIDAVIT OF ROY L. BOUQUE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

ROY L. BOUQUE, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am a partner in the firm of Lybrand, Ross Bros. and Montgomery, a national firm of certified public accountants. In 1960, and again in 1961, Lybrand was asked by attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to make an analysis and study of certain aspects of the retail grocery business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. That study was made and conducted by members of Lybrand's central research staff with the assistance of personnel from the Los Angeles office. The purpose of this affidavit is to set forth the results of our study.

Analysis of Trading Areas of Selected Von's and Shopping Bag Stores

In order to determine the extent of competition between Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger, we made a study in 1960 of the trading areas or "draw" areas of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores which we were informed the Government contends were near enough to each other to compete for the same customers. The purpose of this study was to determine whether and to what extent competition actually existed between Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger by determining whether and to what extent the draw areas of the stores in question actually overlapped.

It is generally believed by retailers and other authorities * that the vast majority of the customers of a typical supermarket in the Los Angeles metropolitan area live within two miles of the store. In fact, it is most unusual for a store to draw any significant number of customers from as far as two miles away, while many stores in highly populated communities have a draw area of less than a mile. Nonetheless, for purposes of our study, we assumed that each store had a possible trading area of from 1½ to 2 miles, and accordingly, we made an analysis of each of the stores in question based on a possible or theoretical draw area of 1½ miles and another possible or theoretical draw area of 2 miles.

Next, it is apparent that in only a very few instances can trading areas be defined in a perfect circle with a radius of 1½ or 2 miles. One of the obvious reasons for this is that barriers to traffic such as freeways, railroads, water channels, hills and the like may inhibit or entirely prevent access to a particular store from within a theoretical circular draw area. Therefore, by plotting and analyzing traffic barriers and other similar factors which influence the actual draw area of each store in question, we arrived at what we have called the "adjusted draw area," or that segment of the theoretical draw areas which is not cut off from the store by some traffic or other barrier.

Next, we determined from census figures, the population and number of dwelling units in each theoretical draw area, each adjusted draw area, and, in any case where there was an overlap in the theoretical or adjusted draw areas of a Von's and a Shopping Bag store, in each such overlap area.

Finally, in recognition of the fact that normally customers do not (except on a basis of personal preference which cannot be measured statistically) pass one supermarket to shop at another supermarket further down the road, we also took into account the markets operated by major competitors of Von's and Shopping Bag which might be found in the theoretical or adjusted draw areas studied.*

The detailed results of our study are set forth in Appendix I to this affidavit. In addition, we have prepared maps to depict graphically what is stated in words in the appendix. The conclusions which necessarily follow from our analysis is that prior to the merger, there were few

---

* It was not feasible to list or mark on our maps all of the stores operated by competitors in these areas. Also, since the study was made other stores have been opened in many of those areas.

 See Page 6, supra, for explanation of maps. It is suggested that those maps be referred to in connection with any review of the store-by-store analysis which follows.

areas from which both a Von's and a Shopping Bag store drew customers, and that those areas of everlap which did exist were small both in terms of size and population. Hence, we conclude that there was very little actual competition for the same customers between Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger.

The following is a summary of our findings:

1. Summary.

Prior to the merger, Von's operated 28 stores and Shopping Bag 36 in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Several other stores were planned by both concerns. We were advised that the Government contends that competition between Von's and Shopping Bag occurred in 20 areas, each of which could be served by both an operating or planned Von's store and an operating or planned Shopping Bag store as of the date of the merger. The foregoing study of those areas shows that:

1. If a 1½ mile adjusted draw radius is used, there were only 9 instances of any sort of overlap between the draw areas of a Von's and a Shopping Bag store, whether planned or actually operating. If a 2 mile adjusted draw radius is used, there would be 11 instances of such overlap.

2. The total population in those areas of overlap was 104,320 if a 1½ mile adjusted radius is used, and 237,390 if a 2-mile adjusted radius is used. These totals represent less than 1.6% and 3.6%, respectively, of the total population of 6,668,975 people who inhabited the Los Angeles metropolitan area as of the date of the merger.

3. There were at least one, and more often several, supermarkets operated by competing concerns within every overlap area but one.* Of course, those stores being in

---

* The one overlap area referred to here was the overlap in trading areas between Von's proposed store in Northridge at Nordhoff and Reseda Boulevard and Shopping Bag's proposed store in Granada Hills. Those store locations were nearly four miles apart, so that there is no 1½ mile overlap area. The 2 mile overlap area is very small, containing only 2,400 residents. Since the merger, plans to open the proposed Shopping Bag store have been abandoned and the lease has been assigned to Food Giant which is now operating a store at that location.

the areas of overlap themselves were almost invariably much closer and more convenient to residents of those areas than were either the competing Von's or Shopping Bag stores. In view of this fact, it is quite probable that as a matter of economic reality neither Von's nor Shopping Bag had much chance of luring customers in those overlap areas. As a result, it would be an overstatement to say the competition between Von's and Shopping Bag involved 3.6% or even 1.6% of the population. It is a more logical conclusion that competition between the stores of the two companies was virtually non-existent.

2. Explanation of Maps.

As is stated above, we have also prepared maps which graphically depict the results of our study. These maps are Exhibits AG through AL. By a series of overlays the maps show the Von's and Shopping Bag stores either operating or planned as of the date of the merger, the locations of competing markets, theoretical trading areas, main physical barriers to access and population.

On the face of each map itself (marked 1), we have located each Von's and Shopping Bag store operating or planned as of the date of the merger. A blue dot represents a Von's store. An orange dot represents a Shopping Bag store. In order to depict the theoretical trading areas of the stores which we studied, blue circles have been drawn around each Von's store which is within 4 miles of a Shopping Bag, and orange circles have been drawn around each Shopping Bag store within 4 miles of a Von's store. The inner circle shows the circumference of the theoretical 1.5 mile draw area. The outer circle represents the circumference of the 2 mile draw area. If the circles around any store are broken, it means that the store was only planned as opposed to operating at the time of the merger.

The first overlay (marked 2) depicts by green dots stores operated by other chains having more than 10 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area as of the date of the merger.

The second overlay (marked 3) shows natural or man-made barriers to access marked in red. This overlay also shows by yellow hexagons, or six-sided figures, the location of stores operated by chains with 4 to 10 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In some cases this overlay also contains orange squares which show the location of stores operated by concerns with 1, 2 or 3 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In other cases these stores are similarly depicted on the next overlay (marked 4).

The overlay marked 5 shows population. The first of these overlays which we prepared is appended to the map of the San Fernando Valley. (Exhibit AJ.) In that case we depicted population by the use of black circles, each of which represents 200 persons. On all the maps subsequently prepared we used a yellow square for each census tract. Those yellow squares contain two numbers separated by a line. The number above the line indicates population. The number below the line indicates the number of dwelling units.

All of the above overlays were prepared based on information available in September, 1960. The last overlay (marked 6) was prepared on the basis of additional information to November, 1961. The blue dots on that overlay show the location of Von's stores opened since the merger. The circles around them show the 1.5 and 2 mile theoretical draw areas. This overlay also depicts the locations of discount houses with food departments (by purple squares), the stores opened since September, 1960, by chains with more than 10 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area (by green squares), and stores opened since that date by chains with between 4 and 10 stores in the area (by yellow squares).

As is stated above, it was not feasible to indicate the locations of all stores which competed with Von's and Shopping Bag stores in the areas studied so that to some extent our maps and analyses understate such competition.

Statistical Data (Exhibits — and —)

As part of our study we prepared certain charts and tables. The first table (Exhibit AM) lists the leading 20 chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area as of June, 1960, and shows their sales and share of the market for the years 1948, 1954 and 1958, and the first 6 months of 1960. (The figures used were compiled in the manner explained in paragraph 20, pages 24 to 25, and in paragraph 19, pages 22 to 24, of the document entitled "Statement in Support of Defendant's Proposed Exhibits", filed in this action on December 18, 1961.)

Exhibit AM shows, among other things:

1. The share of the market enjoyed by the market leader, Safeway, declined from 14.2% in 1948 to 7.7% in 1960. The second-ranked concern in 1948, 1954 and 1958—Ralph's—experienced a decline in share of the market from 6.9% in 1948 to 6.4% in 1960.

2. In 1948, no retail grocery company other than Safeway or Ralph's had more than 2.5% of the market. By 1960, there were 8 concerns with more than 3%. Despite their growth, these 8 concerns had 41.3% of the market in 1960, meaning that the majority of sales in this area were still accounted for by smaller chains and independents.

3, In 1948, Safeway and Ralph's combined enjoyed sales amounting to 21.1% of the market, while in the same year, the remaining 18 concerns listed had combined sales representing only 15.4%. By 1960, the situation had changed dramatically. Safeway and Ralph's had 14.1% of the market between them, and the remaining chains listed had 39.8%.

4. Seven of the firms listed were not in business at all in Los Angeles in 1948. Among them is Food Giant which ranked fourth in the area in 1960 with 29 stores and 4.6% of the market. As late as 1954, Food Giant had only two stores and less than 1% of the market.

5. The obvious conclusion to be drawn from the foregoing is that the size and relative strength of the market leaders in 1948 apparently offered no deterrent to the growth and entry of smaller concerns. Indeed, the market share enjoyed by the leaders in 1948 has declined significantly while other firms experienced growth.

We have been advised that the Government has sought to show that the grocery business in Los Angeles has become more concentrated in recent years. They have pointed to the increase of the share of the market enjoyed by the top 20 concerns in the last decade as evidence of such an increase.

Statistically, we feel that this comparison is of questionable value because the "top 20" 10 years ago consisted in part of different firms than are in the "top 20" today. As a result, the comparison of the two offers only a highly qualified insight into the changes which have occurred in grocery retailing in the last decade. Perhaps of greater importance, however, is that the Government's comparison ignores the significance of change in the entities which make up the top 20. The very fact that the top 20 today is different than the top 20 10 years ago, or that 7 firms in the top 20 today were not even in existence in 1948, is evidence of an absence of concentration and a strong indication of competitive vitality.

But if change in the share of the market enjoyed by any chain or group of chains is indicative of a change in degree of concentration, we believe that it would be as significant, if not more so, to consider changes in the market share of the top 3, 5 or 8 as well as the top 20. With this thought in mind, we have made an analysis of the comparative share of the market enjoyed by the top 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 15 and 20 chains in each of the years from 1950 to 1960. We have made this analysis in order to compare it with the Government statistics with respect to the top 20 only. However, we still feel that the value of such statistics is impaired where it can be shown in any grouping of chains that the entities which make up that grouping are different from one period to another. Our statistics appear in Exhibit AN in table and in graph form. (Again, the figures used were compiled in the manner explained in paragraph 19, pages 22 to 24, of the document entitled "Statement in Support of Defendant's Exhibits" filed in this action on December 18, 1961.)

Exhibit AN shows that:

1. The combined share of the market enjoyed by the top 3, 4 and 5 chains steadily declined from 1952 to 1959, the year before the merger in question. Even after the merger, which has the effect of combining the third and fifth ranked concerns and thus necessarily increasing the combined share of the market of the top 3, 4 and 5 correspondingly, their market share was still below its 1952 high. Therefore, measured by the sales of these concerns—the market leaders—and using the same method of analysis employed by the Government, it is obvious that concentration has decreased.

2. The share of the market enjoyed by the smaller firms in the top 20 increased. With the market share of the top 5 showing a steady decrease from 1952 through 1959, it can only be concluded that the remaining chains in the top 20 were solely responsible for the increase by the top 20 as a whole. This tends to support our conclusion based upon an analysis of the performance and growth of each of the companies in the top 20 in 1960 (see supra) that smaller concerns have grown stronger. To us this indicates a decrease in concentration and an absence of domination by a few concerns. It also shows that the market position of the area leaders has not inhibited the growth of smaller concerns.

Our last table in this section deals with the comparative sales of Von's and Safeway. The records of the two companies for the year 1960, the year in which Von's and Shopping Bag merged, shows that Safeway's sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area exceed Von's by more than $11,000,000.

	Von's	Safeway	Difference
Total Sales (000)	$172,488	$184,313	$ 11,825 (A)
Percent of total food store sales (B)	6.9	7.4	.5
Percent of total grocery stores sales (C)	7.5	8.0	.5
Number of stores	66	146	80

(A) Safeway sales are 6.9% greater than Von's sales.
(B) Food sales in 1960 stipulated as $2,500,000,000.
(C) Grocery sales computed as 92.4% of total food sales. Estimated percentage based on trend line extension of the percentage relationship of grocery sales to food sales for the years 1954 to 1958.

Discount Houses

We found that the sale of food in discount houses has become a factor of increasing importance in the grocery business in Los Angeles, particularly in the past few years. As late as 1959 and 1960, discount food operations were both few in number and importance, but as of the end of 1961, there were approximately 40 discount houses selling a complete line of grocery products in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

These outlets can charge lower prices than do conventional supermarkets in the area. This is in part due to the fact that discount houses have lower operating costs and in part because often times low food prices are used to attract customers who may buy appliances and other merchandise on which markups are higher. Also, surveys have indicated that average sales per customer* and average sales per square foot of selling space are higher in discount houses than in supermarkets.

Also the discount house offers the advantage of complete one-stop shopping, and as hereinafter noted, we found that a discount house draws its customers from a much greater area than the conventional supermarket.

First, Lybrand obtained from Von's a survey made between June 29 and July 1, 1961, of customers of those three discount houses. The survey was conducted by a part-time employee of Von's who took down the license numbers of 675 cars parked in the parking lots of the Big A in Canoga Park, CMA in Anaheim and CAL Stores in Lakewood, all discount houses with food departments. Von's security department then obtained the addresses of the owners of 289 of those 675 cars. With this information, Lybrand plotted on a map the draw areas of each of the above discount houses. (Exhibit AP.) Those draw areas are depicted by lines running out from the discount houses to the residences of those whose cars were observed in the discount houses' parking lots.

Because it was believed that the above sample of discount house customers may have been relatively small, a similar study was conducted on October 14 and 15, 1961, under the supervision of Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery. This time, an employee of Von's security department copied down the license numbers of a total of 4,190 cars parked in the parking lots of the above discount houses. 24% of those license numbers, selected at random, were checked with the California Department of Motor Vehicles and the address of the owner of the car was thus obtained. Lybrand then prepared an overlay for the map previously referred to (Exhibit AP) to depict the draw areas, based upon those addresses, of each of the above discount houses in the same manner as in the case of the earlier study.

The results of the two studies are substantially similar and show that the trading areas of the above three discount houses are six miles or more.

The following shows the results of the study conducted in October, 1961, under our supervision:

Approximate Radial Distance of Residence of Customers of Three Discount Department Stores

Approximate Distance	The Big A	CMA Anaheim	CAL Stores Lakewood
Two miles or less	144	115	57
Two to four miles	117	49	11
Four to six miles	12	48	177
Over six miles	119	74	83
	392	286	328

Thus, it was observed that more than 25% of the customers surveyed lived more than 6 miles from the discount houses at which they did their shopping. Compare this draw area to that of a conventional supermarket which draws the vast majority of its customers from no more than 2 miles away, and it can be seen that discount houses are already a potent competitive factor in Los Angeles. In fact, the majority of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are within 6 miles of a discount house. Therefore, it would appear that Von's and many other chains and independents in Los Angeles are already in direct competition with discount food stores.

The idea of food departments in discount houses is attracting the attention of grocery men and other retailers. In 1961, Thriftimart, a local grocery chain, acquired MORE Department Stores, which operates 4 discount houses with food departments in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Foods Co., a chain of 6 supermarkets, is operating a large food department in the Big A discount house in Canoga Park. May Co. plans to introduce self-service food departments "complete with carts, baskets and check-out desks" in three of its Los Angeles department stores, according to announcement of its president, Morton D. May. Food Giant, Lucky Stores, Thriftimart and Mayfair, for example, are all now selling food through discount outlets.

It is therefore quite apparent that operators of discount houses and even department stores are becoming, if they are not already, the competitors of more conventional grocery retailers. This is only another indication of the dynamic and ever changing competitive atmosphere in which the grocery business, particularly in Los Angeles, is conducted.

Indeed, change seems to be the pattern in Los Angeles. In the 2½ years since the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, this area has not only seen the emergence of discount food retailers, but also an influx of two powerful and large national chains which rank among the nation's leaders in terms of number of stores and total food sales. They are American Stores, which acquired Alpha Beta, and Food Fair, which is now operating Fox Markets. These developments, like most of those occurring in the Los Angeles food industry, can mean only one thing—keener, more vigorous competition.

Financing New Supermarkets

A significant factor in the competitive situation of the retail grocery trade in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is the ability of a qualified operator to enter into competition with the existing businesses in this area. In this section we analyze the financial considerations affecting a qualified entrant who opens a new supermarket. It should be understood that lower costs could be anticipated if a smaller store were being opened or acquired from another operator.

In so doing, we have selected a hypothetical supermarket with 16,000 square feet of storage space. The business is assumed to have been started in 1961 by an independent operator having no other stores or supermarkets. It is also assumed that the supermarket would not have a separate warehouse, but would be supplied by a wholesaling organization, such as a cooperative, delivering directly to the store. (Appendix II to this affidavit contains the Reference Tables which support our conclusions.)

If the above conditions are assumed, one may expect a financial situation of the following approximate magnitude:

		$	Reference Table
1. The total capital required to establish such a supermarket would be consisting of:		290,000*
Merchandise inventory	$ 76,000		1
Equipment and supplies	100,000		2
Structural additions and improvements	104,000		3
Leasehold deposit	10,000
Real estate (leased)	—
2. The independent operator would be entitled to expect financing in the amount of		172,000 consisting of:
Merchandise inventory by suppliers to cover one turnover	59,000		1
Equipment and supplies	61,000		2
Structural additions and improvements	52,000		3
3. Thus, he would have to make an initial cash investment of		118,000	(1 minus 2)
However, this cash investment could be reduced if the operator decided to acquire vendor-loaned or used equipment			2(2)
Moreover, cash investment in inventory could be reduced by special arrangements with suppliers			1(A)
4. With a total space of 16,000 square feet, the operator would have about 11,000 square feet of selling space. This should produce annual sales of		1,700,000	4
5. On this volume, annual profit after deducting proprietor's salary, depreciation, amortization, interest, federal income taxes and other operating expenses, would amount to		26,000	4

* Source: Chain Store Age, December 1960, Pg. 38 et seq.
(See detail in tables set forth in Appendix II.)

 Trade sources indicate that banks have lent up to 60% of the fixed asset investment without guarantee, and that individual companies have financed stores through sale of stock to local investors.

"Formulas for Financing", Reprinted from National Association of Retail Grocers of U.S. Bulletin, Chicago, Ill. (a collection of reprints), Pg. 7 et seq.

		$	Reference Table
6. The cash generated from the business would amount to		48,000
consisting of
Annual profit, as above	$26,000		4
Depreciation and amortization	22,000		4
This would be sufficient to repay the borrowed capital of $113,000 in less than three years
7. For the net cash invested in the business of		118,000	3 above
the operator would have earned a profit—over and above his salary—of		26,000	4
This represents in excess of 20% a year on his investment.

From the foregoing information, which is supported in detail by data in the four tables in Appendix II, it will be seen that a qualified operator can enter into the retail grocery trade for a relatively low capital outlay; he can earn a satisfactory profit on the capital he needs to invest personally; and he can retire his long-term debt within about three years of starting business.

Appendix I

The following is a store-by-store, area-by-area analysis of our findings with respect to the overlap in draw areas of those Von's and Shopping Bag stores which the Government contends were near enough to each other to compete for the same customers.

I. The Monterey Park—Alhambra—Montebello—San Marino Area (Map—Exhibit—)

Analysis of Trading Areas.

1. Von's No. 4

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Monterey Park at 2280 Atlantic Boulevard, a main artery, near the East Los Angeles Junior College. Uninhabited areas, about 30% of the 2-mile draw area, lie to the northwest and northeast. The Long Beach Freeway lies 1.5 miles to the west and northwest. Whittier Blvd. cuts across 1.5 miles southwest of the store. The 2-mile draw area is bounded on the south by the Union Pacific R.R.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	58,300
Within 2-mile radius	96,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	18,300
Within 2-mile radius	35,100

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border of the 1.5-mile zone on the west.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	58,300
Within 2-mile radius	82,800

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	18,300
Within 2-mile radius	32,100

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 2 medium-chain stores

Von's No. 29

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Alhambra at 1000 E. Valley Boulevard, two blocks west of New Avenue and 0.5 mile north of the San Bernardino Freeway. The Alhambra Wash lies 0.75 mile to the east. The Southern Pacific R.R. runs 1 mile to the northwest.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	54,000
Within 2-mile radius	87,000

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	20,300
Within 2-mile radius	32,500

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	5 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	10 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	5 medium-chain stores
	2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Southern Pacific R.R. is a barrier to the north; the freeway is a barrier to the south; and the Alhambra Wash is a barrier to the east. The adjusted draw area is a strip about 1.25 miles in width, 2.25-2.75 miles long, and bisected by Valley Boulevard running its length.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	18,400
Within 2-mile radius	20,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	6,500
Within 2-mile radius	6,900

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 larger-chain store
	2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	1 larger-chain store
	2 medium-chain stores

3. Shopping Bag No. 11

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located at the center of San Marino at 2270 Huntington Drive near the intersection Huntington and San Marino Avenue. The 2-mile draw area touches a line of the Santa Fe R.R. on the north, and the Pacific Electric R.R. runs within the 2-mile draw area on the south. The store is located about 0.25 mile from the Huntington Library.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	34,900
Within 2-mile radius	62,200

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	12,000
Within 2-mile radius	23,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	2 smaller-firm stores
	2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Santa Fe R.R. forms a barrier at the south end of the draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	34,900
Within 2-mile radius	61,000

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	12,000
Within 2-mile radius	22,400

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	2 medium-chain stores
	2 smaller-firm stores

4. Shopping Bag No. 16

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Alhambra at 2200 W. Valley Boulevard. The store is 0.75 mile west of Atlantic Boulevard and 0.5 mile north of the San Bernardino Freeway. The Southern Pacific R.R. splits the draw area into three parts. The Alhambra Wash comes within two miles of the store. An open area exists to the south.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	45,700
Within 2-mile radius	74,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	16,700
Within 2-mile radius	27,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 medium-chain store
	2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The railroad line north of the store forms a barrier to access from the northern part of the draw area. The San Bernardino Freeway runs parallel to the railroad south of the store. The actual draw area is a strip 0.75 mile in width and 3-4 miles long, with a major traffic artery, W. Valley Boulevard, bisecting the strip lengthwise.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	16,000
Within 2-mile radius	23,600

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5,900
Within 2-mile radius	9,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store

5. Shopping Bag No. 27

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in the heart of Monterey Park at 12776 Garfield Avenue, near the post office, one block from the intersection of Garvey and Garfield Avenues. Two large uninhabited areas lie to the south and west. The San Bernardino Freeway is located 0.5 mile to the north. The Southern Pacific R.R. lies 1.5 miles northwest of the store. The Alhambra Wash is located 1.75 miles to the northeast.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	50,300
Within 2-mile radius	81,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	18,100
Within 2-mile radius	29,300

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 1 Von's 2 medium-chain stores 1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores 1 Von's 2 medium-chain stores 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

A barrier is formed by the Santa Ana Freeway 0.5 mile to the north. South of the Freeway, the Alhambra Wash forms a barrier 1.75 miles to the east.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	29,400
Within 2-mile radius	49,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	11,200
Within 2-mile radius	18,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores 1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores 2 smaller-firm stores

6. Shopping Bag No. 40

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Montebello at 1201 W. Whittier on the edge of the center city. The store is 0.75 mile west of the Rio Hondo River. Two uninhabited areas lie to the north and southeast of the store. The Union Pacific R.R. runs through the area 0.5 mile south of the store. The Santa Fe R.R. touches the southwest edge of the 2-mile draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	29,800
Within 2-mile radius	54,300

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	10,300
Within 2-mile radius	17,900

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 larger-chain store
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Rio Hondo River is a barrier for all residents of the 2-mile draw area east of the river. A small pocket of residents east of the river within the 1.5-mile area do have reasonable access to the store and are considered part of the draw. The railroad does not appear to constitute a significant barrier.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	28,500
Within 2-mile radius	39,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	9,700
Within 2-mile radius	13,400

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 larger-chain store
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas.

1. Von's No. 4 and Shopping Bag No. 16

Theoretical Overlap Area

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area lies in Coyote Pass, an uninhabited area, and at least ⅔ of the 2-mile overlap area lies there also. The Pass is situated in the center of the overlap zones.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	0
Within 2-mile zone	12,700

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	0
Within 2-mile zone	3,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	0
Within 2-mile zone	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None

General Observations:

Coyote Pass forms a natural barrier between the two stores and residents would have to take roads leading past other stores. Four larger-chain stores and one smaller-firm store lie closer to the residents in the overlap area than the subject stores.

2. Von's No. 4 and Shopping Bag No. 27

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 1.75 miles long and 0.5 mile in depth. The 2-mile overlap area is 3 miles long and 1.5 miles in depth. About ⅓ of the 2-mile overlap area lies in Coyote Pass and is uninhabited. Part of the same zone contains the Garvey Reservoir. Atlantic Boulevard and Garfield Avenue are the only through north-south streets in the overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3,900
Within 2-mile zone	19,300

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1,300
Within 2-mile zone	6,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	0
Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Same as above.

General Observations:

Four other stores are closer for the customers within the overlap zone than are the two subject stores. Because Atlantic Boulevard and Garfield Avenue are the only through north-south streets in the overlap area most potential customers in the overlap area could be intercepted by other stores on their way to the subject stores.

3. Von's No. 4 and Shopping Bag No. 40

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is almost nonexistent. The 2-mile overlap area is bisected by Beverly Boulevard and is approximately ⅔ uninhabited.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	800
Within 2-mile zone	16,000

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	280
Within 2-mile zone	5,800

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	None
Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Same as above.

General Observations:

Four larger-chain stores and one smaller-firm store lie either closer or as close as the subject stores. In addition, the two main thoroughfares giving access to the area, Garfield Avenue and Beverly Boulevard, intersect in the center of the overlap zone; potential customers could be intercepted by at least one other store.

4. Von's No. 29 and Shopping Bag No. 16

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The center axis of the 1.5 and 2-mile overlap areas is Atlantic Boulevard. The length of the 1.5-mile overlap area is 2 miles; the depth is 1 mile. The center axis length of the 2-mile overlap area is 3.25 miles; its depth is 2 miles. The Southern Pacific R.R. and San Bernardino Freeway cross both overlap areas. Coyote Pass bounds the 2-mile draw area on the southwest.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	11,150
Within 2-mile zone	39,950

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	4,870
Within 2-mile zone	11,450

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	6 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reason for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The crossing of the overlap area by the Southern Pacific R.R. and the San Bernardino Freeway form barriers for both the 1.5-mile and 2-mile overlap areas. These barriers decrease the overlap area to a square mile (1 x 1 mile) for the 1.5-mile overlap area and for the 2-mile area to dimensions of 1 by 2 miles.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	6,630
Within 2-mile zone	16,730

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	2,830
Within 2-mile zone	6,910

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 1 medium-chain store

General Observations:

Two other stores are located on Valley Boulevard approximately midway between the subject stores and could intercept potential customers in the adjusted overlap area.

5. Von's No. 29 and Shopping Bag No. 11

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile draw area radii intersect with virtually no area between them. The 2-mile overlap area is 2.75 miles long and 1 mile deep. Atlantic Blvd. intersects with the west corner of the 2-mile area and the Southern Pacific R.R. curves through the area with an intersection at the east corner. The Alhambra Wash is located on the southwest edge of the 2-mile overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	13,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 2-mile zone	5,160

Major Competing Stores:

Within 2-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The Southern Pacific R.R. forms a barrier on the south side of the 2-mile overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	9,930

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 2-mile zone	3,970

Major Competing Stores:

Within 2-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores 1 smaller-firm store

General Observations:

The Southern Pacific R.R. and the Alhambra Wash form barriers between the two subject stores and divide the overlap area into twc parts. The number of other stores in each segment of the overlap area and adjacent thereto are about equal in number.

6. Von's No. 29 and Shopping Bag No. 27

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile radius overlap is 2.75 miles long and 2 miles wide. The 2-mile radius overlap area is 3.75 miles long and 2.75 miles wide. The Southern Pacific R.R. passes through the 2-mile overlap area at the northwest edge of the 1.5-mile zone. The San Bernardino Freeway crosses both zones and the Alhambra Wash passes through the 2-mile zone on the northeast. An uninhabited area, Coyote Pass, lies on the southwest edge of the 2-mile overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	31,700
Within 2-mile zone	54,980

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	12,170
Within 2-mile zone	21,170

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores 2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	6 larger-chain stores 3 medium-chain stores 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

Reasons:

The Southern Pacific R.R. forms a barrier to the customers in the 2-mile zone on the northwest edge of the 1.5-mile overlap. The San Bernardino Freeway is a barrier to the customers on the north who are more than 0.5 mile south of Valley Blvd. The Alhambra Wash cuts off customers on the east edge of the 2-mile overlap zone.

General Observations:

The San Bernardino Freeway is a barrier bisecting both the 1.5- and 2-mile overlap areas. This effectively splits the area between the two subject stores. The number of other stores in each of the two sectors is approximately equal.

II. The West Covina—La Puente Area (Map—Exhibit—)

A. Analysis of Trading Areas.

1. Von's No. 31

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in West Covina at 973 S. Glendora Avenue near Cameron Avenue. An uninhabited area, the San Jose Hills, is located on the southeast and removes a portion of the 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas. The San Bernardino Freeway crosses both the 1.5- and the 2-mile draw areas 1.25 miles to the north. Walnut Creek also crosses both draw areas 1 mile to the north. The area is characterized by a great number of dead-end streets so that traffic is channeled onto the main thoroughfares. A line of the Pacific Electric R.R. is on the north edge of the 2-mile draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	38,620
Within 2-mile radius	77,210

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	10,370
Within 2-mile radius	20,500

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 1 Shopping Bag 2 smaller-firm stores
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores 2 Shopping Bag 1 medium-chain store 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The San Bernardino Freeway is a barrier which cuts across the 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	33,520
Within 2-mile radius	57,230

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	8,900
Within 2-mile radius	14,820

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 1 Shopping Bag 2 smaller-firm stores
Within 2-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores 2 Shopping Bag 1 medium-chain store 2 smaller-firm stores

2. Shopping Bag No. 28

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The store is located in La Puente at 15427 Amar Road near the intersection of N. Glendora Avenue, 1.75 miles north of the Southern Pacific R.R. line. On the east a portion of both the 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas are in the uninhabited San Jose Hills. The 2-mile draw area on the north is bordered by Walnut Creek. La Puente Hill lies within the 1.5- and 2-mile draw area on the southeast.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	32,510
Within 2-mile radius	54,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	8,330
Within 2-mile radius	14,020

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 2 smaller-firm stores
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 1 Von's 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

On the southwest the Southern Pacific R.R. forms a barrier to potential customers in both the 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	32,110
Within 2-mile radius	54,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	8,230
Within 2-mile radius	13,820

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
	2 smaller-firm stores
Within 2-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	2 smaller-firm stores

Shopping Bag No. 32

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in West Covina at 1170 W. Garvey Blvd., near Sunset Avenue, and bordering the San Bernardino Freeway. The store is adjacent to the center of the City of West Covina. Walnut Creek lies 0.25 mile south of the store and a line of the Pacific Electric R.R. borders the 1.5-mile draw area on the north.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	43,620
Within 2-mile radius	73,730

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	12,040
Within 2-mile radius	20,060

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
Within 2-mile radius	11 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The San Bernardino Freeway immediately to the north of the store is a barrier reducing the theoretical 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	17,200
Within 2-mile radius	36,440

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4,650
Within 2-mile radius	9,770

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas.

1. Von's No. 31 and Shopping Bag No. 28

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 2.25 miles long and 1.25 miles in depth. The 2-mile overlap area is 3.5 miles long and 2.25 miles in depth. Glendora Avenue bisects both areas through the shorter dimension. The San Jose Hills lie in the southeast portion of the overlap area and decrease their area by about 10 and 20% for the 1.5- and 2-mile area, respectively.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	14,700
Within 2-mile zone	39,280

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3,840
Within 2-mile zone	10,230

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 2 smaller-firm stores
Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Same as theoretical overlap area.

General Observations:

The subject stores may be considered, for practical purposes, as being located on the same street, Glendora Avenue, and lie in the strip between the 1.5- and 2-mile overlap areas, separated by a distance of 1.75 miles. Two other stores are located on Glendora Avenue between the subject stores. Two other larger-chain stores are adjacent to Sunset Avenue which runs parallel to Glendora Avenue, and approximately 0.5 mile to the west.

2. Von's No. 31 and Shopping Bag No. 32

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile draw area overlap is 2.75 miles long and 2 miles in depth. The 2-mile area is 3.75 miles long and 3 miles deep. The San Bernardino Freeway crosses both draw areas as does Walnut Creek, the latter forming the lengthwise axis of the two overlap areas. On the southeast edge of the 2-mile overlap zone is the San Jose Hills, an uninhabited area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	23,820
Within 2-mile zone	54,970

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	6,530
Within 2-mile zone	14,350

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	5 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap:

The San Bernardino Freeway is a barrier to about 40% of the 1.5- and 2-mile overlap areas north of the freeway.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	18,720
Within 2-mile zone	36,270

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	5,080
Within 2-mile zone	8,970

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

General Observations:

Because of the road network potential customers on the west side of both areas could be intercepted by a competitor's store before arriving at either Von's or Shopping Bag Stores. The existence of Walnut Creek midway between the two stores forms a partial barrier to the free movement of customers.

III. The Downey—Norwalk—Pico Rivera Area

(Map — Exhibit —)

A. Analysis of Trading Areas.

1. Von's No. 5

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Downey at 10001 Paramount Boulevard, near the intersection of Florence Avenue and Paramount. The store is situated in a well populated district. The Rio Hondo River is located approximately 0.5 mile northwest of the store. A branch of the Southern Pacific R.R. runs about 1 mile southwest of the store. The Santa Ana Freeway is located approximately 0.75 mile northeast of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	48,500
Within 2-mile radius	79,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	15,600
Within 2-mile radius	25,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The area within which the store is situated is confined by the Rio Hondo River, Southern Pacific R.R. and the Santa Ana Freeway.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	30,100
Within 2-mile radius	34,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	9,800
Within 2-mile radius	11,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store

2. Von's (Planned in Norwalk)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

This store was to be located in Norwalk at the junction of Norwalk Blvd. and Imperial Highway. However, the developer of this property was unable to obtain a satisfactory zone variance and, as a result, all plans for the construction of a store at this location have been abandoned. There is a residential area on the south and west of this property with the area on the north and east being largely undeveloped. The Santa Ana Freeway runs 0.25 mile southwest of the store. Firestone Blvd. and the Southern Pacific R.R. are on the southeast about 0.5 mile away. The Santa Fe R.R. is located about 1 mile to the east.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	56,900
Within 2-mile radius	64,500

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	14,220
Within 2-mile radius	20,320

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	2 medium-chain stores
	3 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Santa Fe R.R. forms a barrier on the east and the Santa Ana Freeway a barrier on the northwest. The Southern Pacific R.R. on the west is also a barrier.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	19,200
Within 2-mile radius	21,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4,830
Within 2-mile radius	6,490

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 larger-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores

3. Shopping Bag No. 20

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Situated in Pico-Rivera at the intersection of two main roads, Washington Boulevard and Passons Boulevard. The San Gabriel River cuts the territory in a north-south direction about 0.5 mile east of the store, and the Santa Fe Railroad cuts across about 0.75 mile to the south. The Rio Hondo River cuts thru 1.5 miles to the west. The area to the west and north is relatively unpopulated.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	46,500
Within 2-mile radius	66,150

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	12,500
Within 2-mile radius	18,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Rio Hondo and San Gabriel Rivers and the Santa Fe and Union Pacific Railroads are barriers enclosing and reducing the draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	20,300
Within 2-mile radius	22,200

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5,500
Within 2-mile radius	6,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	None
Within 2-mile radius	None except one Shopping Bag

4. Shopping Bag No. 35

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Store located in Downey at 9058 E. Firestone Boulevard, near the intersection of Lakewood and Firestone Boulevards. The San Gabriel River passes through the draw area 0.75 of a mile to the southeast. The Southern Pacific R.R. bisects the area less than 0.25 mile southwest of the store. The area to the south of the supermarket is nonresidential.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	41,000
Within 2-mile radius	79,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	13,500
Within 2-mile radius	24,100

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	2 medium-chain stores
	2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

San Gabriel River limits access to the area on the east and the Santa Ana Freeway to areas on the northeast.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	36,300
Within 2-mile radius	64,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	11,650
Within 2-mile radius	20,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas.

1. Von's No. 5 and Shopping Bag No. 35

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The major axis of the 1.5-mile overlap area is 2.5 miles and the depth is 1.5 miles. The major axis of the 2-mile overlap area is 3.5 miles and the depth is 2.25 miles. The Southern Pacific R.R. passes through both overlap zones. The area is characterized by a grid network of roads and high population density.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	16,070
Within 2-mile zone	41,310

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	5,790
Within 2-mile zone	17,020

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The overlap area is cut on the southwest by the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	14,690
Within 2-mile zone	29,660

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	5,320
Within 2-mile zone	13,240

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store

General Observations:

There are four other stores within a short distance of the potential customers in the adjusted overlap area.

2. Von's No. 5 and Shopping Bag No. 20

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is very small and sparsely populated. The 2-mile overlap is crossed by the Pacific Electric R.R., the Santa Fe R.R., the Rio Hondo Branch of the Los Angeles River and the Santa Ana Freeway. Rosemead Boulevard and Telegraph Road intersect almost in the center of the two overlap areas. About a third of each overlap area is uninhabited.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	600
Within 2-mile zone	11,520

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	160
Within 2-mile zone	2,290

Major Competing Stores:

None

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

General Observations:

The two railroads, the Santa Ana Freeway and the Rio Hondo River are all barriers separating the draw areas of the subject stores into two distinct zones.

3. Von's (planned in Norwalk)* and Shopping Bag No. 35

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

There is no 1.5-mile overlap area. The Santa Ana Freeway and the two railroads pass through the 2-mile overlap area. The San Gabriel River runs just west of the overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	10,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 2-mile zone	2,400

Major Competing Stores:

Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

Reason:

The railroads and freeway each form barriers which cut up the road network.

---

* Not now to be opened due to difficulties in obtaining necessary zone variance—see p. 45.

General Observations:

The two stores are separated not only by the river but also by the railroad and the freeway. There is only one principal road between the two stores and four other stores are located adjacent to this artery.

IV. The Reseda—Canoga Park—Granada Hills—Northridge Area (Map — Exhibit —)

A. Analysis of Trading Areas.

1. Von's No. 22

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The store is located in Reseda at 18247 Sherman Way, between Reseda Boulevard and Linden Avenue. The Sepulveda Flood Control Basin extends into the 1.5- and 2-mile draw areas. The draw areas are divided into three segments by branches of the Los Angeles River. Bull Creek bounds the 2-mile draw area on the east. A line of the Southern Pacific R.R. crosses the draw areas at the edge of the 1.5-mile radius on the south and the Ventura Freeway bounds the 2-mile draw on the south.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	50,000
Within 2-mile radius	83,180

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores
	4 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	7 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Los Angeles River and Wilbur Wash are barriers which reduce the theoretical draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	39,480
Within 2-mile radius	56,230

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 5 medium-chain stores

2. Von's (Planned in Canoga Park)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The store is to be located in Canoga Park at 20151 Roscoe Boulevard at Winnetka Avenue. One line of the Southern Pacific R.R. crosses the draw area 1 mile to the north and another line 1.5 miles to the west of the store. Most of the theoretical draw area beyond the tracks on the north is uninhabited. Browns Canyon Wash crosses the draw area 1 mile west of the store and Wilbur Wash crosses 1.5 miles to the east.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	32,790
Within 2-mile radius	54,860

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores 2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The railroad on the north, Browns Canyon Wash, and Wilbur Wash are all barriers diminishing the theoretical draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	22,380
Within 2-mile radius	33,570

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 larger-chain store 1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile radius	1 larger-chain store 1 medium-chain store

3. Von's (Planned in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Reseda Boulevard)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The store is to be located in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Reseda Boulevard. Limekill Canyon Wash and Montaria Lake bound the 2-mile draw area on the northwest. Wilbur Wash and Aliso Canyon Wash cross the draw area 0.75 mile west of the store and the Southern Pacific R.R. crosses the draw area 0.5 mile to the south.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	23,700
Within 2-mile radius	45,030

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Wilbur Wash and Aliso Canyon Wash are barriers as is the Southern Pacific R.R.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	8,680
Within 2-mile radius	12,430

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	2 medium-chain stores

4. Von's (planned in Granada Hills)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

To be located in Granada Hills at the intersection of San Fernando Mission Boulevard and Woodley Avenue. About a third of the draw area lies in Bull Canyon. Bull Creek is 0.25 mile west of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	37,400
Within 2-mile radius	52,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

Bull Creek is a barrier which impedes customers from access to the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	19,400
Within 2-mile radius	29,800

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores

5. Von's (planned in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Woodley Avenue)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

To be located in Northridge near the intersection of Nordhoff Street and Woodley Avenue. Bull Creek runs through the draw area approximately 0.5 mile to the west of the store. A flood control channel passes through the draw areas on the east boundary of the 1.5-mile draw area. The Southern Pacific R.R. crosses the draw area 1 mile south of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	29,200
Within 2-mile radius	52,400

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The flood control channel and Bull Creek are barriers which limit access to the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	22,600
Within 2-mile radius	30,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	2 larger-chain stores
	1 smaller-firm store

6. Shopping Bag No. 39

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The store is located in Reseda at 19333 Victory Boulevard near Tampa Avenue. The Los Angeles River is north of the store. A line of the Southern Pacific R.R. lies 0.5 mile south of the store. The Chalk Hills are within the southwest segment of both draw areas. The Wilbur Wash passes through the draw area 0.75 mile east of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	38,930
Within 2-mile radius	67,230

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores
	3 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	3 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Draw Area

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Los Angeles River forms a barrier to the north of the store and the Southern Pacific R.R. a barrier to the south.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	9,000
Within 2-mile radius	12,300

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	None
Within 2-mile radius	None

7. Shopping Bag (unscheduled)

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

This store was to be located in Granada Hills near the intersection of San Fernando Mission Blvd. and Balboa Blvd. Upon further consideration, Von's has decided not to open a store at this location. The lease has been assigned to Food Giant which is now operating a store there. The position where the store was to be situated is bounded on the east by Bull Creek and on the west by Aliso Canyon Wash which are 1 mile and 1.5 miles distant, respectively, from the store site. Bull Canyon extends into the theoretical draw area on the north.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	34,600
Within 2-mile radius	43,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5- and 2-mile radii	1 larger-chain store
	1 Von's
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

Bull Creek and Aliso Canyon Wash are barriers which decrease the size of the theoretical draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	27,300
Within 2-mile radius	26,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5- and 2-mile radii	1 larger-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas.

1. Von's No. 22 and Shopping Bag No. 39

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 2.5 miles long and 1.25 miles in depth. The 2-mile overlap area is 3.75 miles long and 2.25 miles in depth. Both areas are divided into thirds by the Los Angeles River and Wilbur Wash. A line of the Southern Pacific R.R. passes through this 2-mile area and intersects with the 1.5-mile overlap area and the latter's southeast corner.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	16,400
Within 2-mile zone	39,650

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
	2 medium-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores
	2 medium-chain stores

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

General Observations:

The Los Angeles River and the Wilbur Wash are barriers which tend to impede potential customers from going to adjacent areas. The barriers provide a separation between the subject stores.

2. Von's (planned in Canoga Park) and Shopping Bag No. 39

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 1.5 miles long and 0.5 mile in depth and is situated between Wilbur Wash and Browns Creek. The 2-mile overlap area is 3.25 miles long and 1.5 miles in depth. The Los Angeles River, Wilbur Creek and Calabasas Creek run through the 2-mile overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	5,000
Within 2-mile zone	24,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
	1 medium-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
	1 medium-chain store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

General Observations:

The waterways form barriers separating the subject stores.

3. Von's (planned in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Woodley Avenue) and Shopping Bag (unscheduled * in Granada Hills).

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap has dimensions 1.25 by 0.25 miles. The 2-mile overlap has dimensions 3 by 1.25 miles. Bull Creek passes through both overlap areas.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1,600
Within 2-mile zone	13,600

Major Competing Stores:

None.

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

General Observations:

Bull Creek is a barrier which separates the theoretical overlap areas.

* Not opened. Food Giant operating a store at this location now.

4. Von's (planned in Granada Hills) and Shopping Bag (unscheduled * in Granada Hills).

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 2.75 miles long and 2 miles in depth. The 2-mile overlap is 3.75 miles long and 3 miles in depth. Bull Creek runs through both overlap areas and between the two stores. Both zones are bisected by San Fernando Mission Boulevard.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	20,000
Within 2-mile zone	33,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

General Observations:

Bull Creek is a barrier which separates the two stores.

---

* Not opened. Food Giant operating a store at this location now.

5. Von's (planned in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Reseda Blvd.) and Shopping Bag (unscheduled * in Granada Hills).

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

There is no 1.5-mile overlap area. The 2-mile overlap area is 2.25 miles long and 0.75 mile in depth. The Aliso Canyon Wash crosses the overlap area on the northwest.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	3,000

Major Competing Stores: None

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reason for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The Aliso Canyon Wash is a barrier to the northwest section of the theoretical overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	2,400

Major Competing Stores: None

General Observations:

Most of the area is uninhabited. The inhabited section has much better access to the Shopping Bag store; however, one and probably two other stores in the draw area of the Shopping Bag store would be more convenient to a number of customers because of the street pattern.

---

* Not now planned to be opened.

6. Von's (planned in Northridge at Nordhoff Street and Reseda Boulevard) and Shopping Bag No. 39

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

There is no 1.5-mile overlap area. The 2-mile overlap area is 2.0 miles long and 0.5 miles in depth. Wilbur Wash runs through the 2-mile overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 2-mile zone	3,800

Major Competing Stores:

None.

Adjusted Overlap Area:

None.

Reason:

Wilbur Wash is a barrier which separates the two stores.

General Observations:

The Wilbur Wash divides the theoretical overlap area approximately in the middle. Furthermore, there are eight competing stores within the 1.5-mile draw area of the Shopping Bag store and four competing stores within the 1.5-mile draw area of the Von's store.

V. The Garden Grove Area

(Map—Exhibit ——)

A. Analysis of Trading Areas

1. Von's No. 26

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Garden Grove at 12151 Brookhurst Ave. near the intersection of Chapman Ave. The store is in the heart of a populated residential area. The Pacific Electric R.R. crosses Brookhurst Ave. in a northwest to southeast direction 0.25 mile south of the store. Another Pacific Electric branch runs 1.5 miles north of the store. A branch of the Southern Pacific R.R. is located at the western edge of the 2-mile draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	51,500
Within 2-mile radius	87,500

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	15,400
Within 2-mile radius	24,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5 larger-chain stores 1 Shopping Bag 2 medium-chain stores 1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	9 larger-chain stores 1 Shopping Bag 2 medium-chain stores 2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Southern Pacific line that bounds the 1.5-mile draw area on the north constitutes a barrier; the Pacific Electric line which essentially bisects the entire drawing area constitutes a partial barrier.*

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	42,290
Within 2-mile radius	53,030

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	12,370
Within 2-mile radius	15,370

Adjusted Draw Area:

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	1 medium-chain store
	1 smaller-firm store

* Population and dwelling units in the area beyond the Pacific Electric Railroad tracks were computed as follows:

a. It was assumed that the core of business does not extend beyond the 1.5-mile radius;
b. Half of the estimated population within 1.5 miles from the store were assumed potential customers.

2. Shopping Bag No. 33

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Anaheim at 9922 Katella Ave. near the intersection of Brookhurst Ave. One branch of the Pacific Electric R.R. is located 0.25 miles to the north while another branch is located 1.25 miles to the south. These two lines intersect at the western edge of the 2-mile draw area. The Santa Ana Freeway is located on the northeast edge of the 2-mile draw area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	55,920
Within 2-mile radius	90,530

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	15,710
Within 2-mile radius	25,550

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores 1 Von's
Within 2-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores 1 Von's 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

One line of the Pacific Electric R.R. forms a barrier for potential customers in the 2-mile draw area to the southwest. The Santa Ana Freeway at the edge of the 2-mile draw area to the northeast forms a barrier.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	54,510
Within 2-mile radius	85,090

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	15,350
Within 2-mile radius	23,190

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores 1 Von's
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores 1 Von's 1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas

1. Von's No. 26 and Shopping Bag No. 33

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area has a length of 2.5 miles and a depth of 1.75 miles. Both stores are located within the 1.5-mile overlap. The two Pacific Electric R.R. lines lie within the overlap area. The 2-mile overlap area is 4 miles in length and 2.75 miles in depth.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	30,780
Within 2-mile zone	57,330

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	9,170
Within 2-mile zone	16,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The 1.5-mile adjusted overlap is for all practical purposes the same as the 1.5-mile theoretical overlap. For the adjusted 2-mile overlap the Pacific Electric R.R. line on the north is assumed to be a complete barrier.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	30,780
Within 2-mile zone	47,520

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	9,170
Within 2-mile zone	12,990

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores
	1 medium-chain store

General Observations:

In the 1.5-mile adjusted overlap area about half the customers are as close, or closer, to other larger-chain stores, and about a fourth of the customers will likely be drawn by another market on the way to the subject stores.

In the 2-mile adjusted overlap area, potential customers west of Brookhurst Ave. who use the most convenient avenues of approach leading to the Von's store could be intercepted by another store. In addition, potential customers in the eastern part of the zone are as close (and in some cases, closer) to 3 other larger-chain stores (just outside the zone) as they are to the subject stores.

VI. The Whittier Area:

(Map—Exhibit——)

A. Analysis of Trading Areas.

1. Von's No. 27

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in E. Whittier at 15740 Whittwood Lane, near Whittier Boulevard. A large unpopulated area exists to the north, starting about 0.5 miles from the store. The Pacific Electric R.R. runs through a portion of the draw area 0.5 mile south of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	30,100
Within 2-mile radius	51,700

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	8,260
Within 2-mile radius	20,100

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores
	1 Shopping Bag
	2 medium-chain stores
	2 smaller-firm stores

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The railroad limits access to the store from the South. Valley Home Avenue, a main road, and lack of a convenient east-west access limits the draw area to that section west of Valley Home Avenue.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	22,900
Within 2-mile radius	29,200

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	6,100
Within 2-mile radius	8,200

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores

2. Shopping Bag No. 1

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in La Habra at 1611 W. Whittier Blvd. near Hacienda Road. The population of the theoretical draw area is concentrated into an area approximately 0.75 mile north and south of Whittier Blvd.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	33,300
Within 2-mile radius	42,600

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	9,800
Within 2-mile radius	12,700

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	6 larger-chain stores
	1 Von's
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The Pacific Electric R.R. 0.75 mile south of the store limits access from the south; hills exist about 0.75 mile to the north. A main road, Valley Home Avenue, and lack of convenient east-west access, limits the draw area to the west at Valley Home Avenue.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	19,300
Within 2-mile radius	20,300

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	5,200
Within 2-mile radius	6,000

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	3 larger-chain stores
Within 2-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores

3. Shopping Bag No. 22

Theoretical Draw Area:

Description:

Located in Whittier at 1183 Quad Way near Painter Avenue. Store is centered in a heavily populated area near the intersection of two main roads (Painter Ave. and Whittier Blvd.) Two branches of the Pacific Electric R.R. run to the south and west of the store; the northern branch nearly bisects the area, coming within 0.25 mile southwest of the store.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	48,800
Within 2-mile radius	57,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	14,900
Within 2-mile radius	18,300

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	7 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Draw Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Draw Area:

The railroad limits access to the store from the west and south. Location of other stores north of Whittier Boulevard, and the traffic barrier presented by the Boulevard confines the draw area to the south of the Boulevard. A small area south of the railroad is included, however, because of absence of other stores there.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile radius	13,900
Within 2-mile radius	16,100

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile radius	4,000
Within 2-mile radius	4,600

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile radius	1 smaller-firm store
Within 2-mile radius	1 smaller-firm store

B. Analysis of Overlapping Trade Areas.

1. Von's No. 27 and Shopping Bag No. 1

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 2.5 miles in length by 1.25 miles in depth. The 2-mile overlap area is 3.25 miles in length by 2.25 miles in depth. The Pacific Electric R.R. passes through both overlap areas. Whittier Boulevard runs east and west through the overlap area.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	10,600
Within 2-mile zone	13,740

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	2,900
Within 2-mile zone	5,350

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores
	1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The 1.5- and 2-mile overlaps are characterized by a hilly area which naturally shunts the hill customers either to the Shopping Bag area or to the Von's area. The Pacific Electric R.R. forms a barrier to the south.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	10,600
Within 2-mile zone	13,400

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	2,900
Within 2-mile zone	5,200

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1 larger-chain store
Within 2-mile zone	4 larger-chain stores

General Observations:

Due to the lack of good east-west through streets, the main traffic artery is Whittier Boulevard where intervening stores are located. There are a number of other stores in the immediate vicinity of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

2. Von's No. 27 and Shopping Bag No. 22

Theoretical Overlap Area:

Description:

The 1.5-mile overlap area is 1.75 miles long and 0.5 mile in depth. The 2-mile overlap area is 3.25 miles long and 1.5 miles in depth. The Puente Hills lie to the north of the overlap areas. About 20% of the overlap area is to the south of the Pacific Electric R.R. Whittier Boulevard runs roughly east and west and bisects the draw areas.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	4,980
Within 2-mile zone	13,680

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	1,220
Within 2-mile zone	3,980

1800

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	None
Within 2-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores 1 medium-chain store 1 smaller-firm store

Adjusted Overlap Area:

Reasons for Adjusting Overlap Area:

The 1.5- and 2-mile overlap zones contain a sparsely populated area at the north end and, on the south, the Pacific Electric R.R. forms a barrier. Whittier Ave. is the only through street between the two stores.

Estimated Population:

Within 1.5-mile zone	3,500
Within 2-mile zone	6,900

Estimated Number of Dwelling Units:

Within 1.5-mile zone	800
Within 2-mile zone	2,100

Major Competing Stores:

Within 1.5-mile zone	None
Within 2-mile zone	2 larger-chain stores

General Observations:

1. The two subject stores serve a small overlapping group of potential customers.
2. Three other larger-chain stores all located on Whittier Blvd. between the two subject locations serve the same group of potential customers.
3. A lack of through-streets parallel to Whittier Blvd. between the two subject locations limits traffic between the stores.

Appendix II

Table 1

Merchandise Inventory Investment for a Typical Supermarket Producing $1.7 Million Annual Volume

	Total Investment(1) (At Cost)	Operator's Estimated Cash Outlay Required
Meat	$ 8,500	$ 8,500(A)
Produce	2,000	2,000(A)
Groceries and nonfoods	57,000	— (B)
Frozen foods	2,000	— (B)
Dairy	5,300	5,300(A)
Baked goods	700	700(A)
Total	$75,500	$16,500

(1) Total inventory investment amount and breakdown into meat, produce and a total for the four remaining merchandise groups are from: Calvet M. Hahn, "What Will It Cost To Open A New Supermarket in 1961?", Chain Store Age, December 1960, Pg. 38 et seq. The total of $65,000 for the four remaining merchandise groups was distributed by individual merchandise group on the basis of the distribution of items in these groups given in "The Dillon Study", Progressive Grocer, N.Y., (a collection of reprints of seven articles published from May to November 1960, Pg. D74) after adjustment to a cost basis on the basis of the gross margin given for each group.

(A) A reduction in the cash outlay required might be expected from the following:

About 40% of meat inventory consists of semiperishable meats, such as smoked, cured, processed and preserved meats ("12th Annual Consumer Expenditures Study", Food Topics; N.Y., Vol. 14, No. 15, September 1960, Pg. 74ff.). These are subject to credit terms from wholesalers, cooperatives and voluntary buying groups. The estimated reduction in cash outlay if semiperishable meats were bought on credit terms would be $2,500.

Most dairy equipment, according to trade sources, is available on a "vending machine" loan basis, under which the supermarket would receive credit terms on dairy products.

Produce and baked goods are, according to trade sources, obtainable in some cases with credit terms.

(B) These classes of products would be expected to require no immediate cash payment as terms are generally available to cover at least one turnover of inventory.

Table 2

Estimated Equipment and Supplies Investment for a Typical Supermarket Producing $1.7 Million Annual Volume

	Total Investment(1)	Operator's Estimated Cash Outlay Required
Front end (checkstands, registers, carts and office)	$ 21,600
Meat department	30,000
Frozen foods and ice cream	9,800
Dairy department	5,100
Produce department	9,000
Grocery, nonfoods, baked goods	20,700
Total store equipment and supplies	$ 96,200	$38,500(2)
Truck	4,000*	800(3)
Grand total	$100,200	$39,300

(1) Calvet M. Hahn, "What Will It Cost To Open A New Supermarket in 1961?", Chain Store Age, December 1960, Pg. 38 et seq.

(2) On a 40% down-payment basis. If the dairy department equipment were to be supplied by the vendors the cash outlay for store equipment and supplies would be approximately $36,400.

(3) On a 20% down-payment basis.

* Amount given in Chain Store Age, December 1960, op cit., includes an item of $12,000 for truck and trailer. This was reduced to $4,000 to cover estimated cost of small truck for single store operator, who receives direct delivery from suppliers and does not require trailer-truck combination.

Table 3

Pro Forma Annual Earnings of a Supermarket Producing $1.7 Million Annual Volume

1. Sales
11,000 square feet of selling area (out of a total of 16,000 square feet) producing $32,700 a week for 52 weeks		$1,700,000
2. Gross profit at 17.6% of sales(1)		$ 299,000
3. Expenses payable in cash
Store labor expense at 7.5% of sales(2)		$ 128,000
Advertising and promotion at 1.0% of sales(3)		17,000
Store supplies at 0.9% of sales(4)		15,000
Store rent and real estate at 1.8% of sales(5)		31,000
Heat, light and power at 0.5% of sales(6)		9,000
All other at 1.9% of sales(7)		32,000
Total		$ 232,000
4. Expenses not payable in cash
Depreciation on equipment and additions(8)		$ 12,000
Amortization of improvements(9)		10,000
Total		$ 22,000
5. Net operating profit before and after income tax
Gross profit		$ 299,000
Expenses payable in cash	$232,000
Expenses not payable in cash	22,000	254,000
Net operating profit before tax		$ 45,000
Federal and state income taxes		$ 19,000
Net operating profit after tax		$ 26,000

(1) Based on typical gross profit of 18.3% of sales as reported by Super Market Institute Survey covering 1959 operating results and appearing in "Twenty-Eighth Annual Survey—Facts in Grocery Distribution", Progressive Grocer, N.Y., 1961 edition, Pg. F23. The gross profit percentage was reduced by .07 percentage point to present a more conservative estimate of the net profit potential. Gross profit as used above is the excess of sales over the actual cost of sales (merchandise).

(2) Based on Super Market Institute typical 1959 operating results as reported by Progressive Grocer (op. cit.). The typical store labor expense of 7.0% reported was increased by 0.5 percentage points to be more conservative in computing the estimated net profit.

(3) Based on Super Market Institute typical 1959 percentage as reported by Progressive Grocer (op. cit.). The reported typical advertising and promotion expense of 2.3% was reduced by 1.3 percentage points to be more representative of a single supermarket using more limited local advertising and promotion. Promotion expense includes tape plan and stamp plan costs.

(4) Based on Super Market Institute typical 1959 figure of 0.9% as reported by Progressive Grocer (op. cit.).

(5) Based on 1.8% figure for supermarkets leased from independent landlords as reported in "Facts About New Super Markets Opened in 1960", Super Market Institute, January 30, 1961, Pg. 12. Typical 1959 Super Market Institute figure is 1.2% for this item.

(6) Based on Super Market Institute typical 1959 figure of 0.5% as reported by Progressive Grocer (op. cit.).

(7) All other expenses include proprietor's salary, transportation, telephone, interest on outstanding indebtedness, taxes, freight charges and miscellaneous expenses. The typical figure reported by Super Market Institute as "all other expenses" covers three entries in the pro forma statement above: All other expenses, Depreciation and Amortization. (These were broken out separately to estimate cash generated.) The Super Market Institute figure reported was 4.3%, this was adjusted downward by 1.1 percentage points to 3.2% to make it more representative of a single supermarket with no separate warehouse and a smaller operating overhead. Depreciation and amortization (see notes 8 and 9 below) were estimated on the basis of the initial investment, and the difference between this amount and 3.2% of sales was entered as "all other expenses" in the pro forma statement above.

(8) Equipment and certain structural additions involving an initial investment of about $120,000 were depreciated on a 10-year straight-line basis.

(9) Structural improvements involving an initial investment of about $80,000 were amortized on an 8-year straight-line basis.

[fol. 1] DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT BF

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

No. 336-60-CC

[Title omitted]

Deposition of ROY LAWRENCE BOUQUE, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, at Room 806, Federal Building, Los Angeles, California, commencing at 2:00 P.M., Tuesday, May 28, 1963, before Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R., Notary Public, pursuant to oral stipulation.

[fol. 2] APPEARANCES OF COUNSEL:

For the Plaintiff: James J. Coyle, Esq. and John F. Hughes, Esq. Attorneys for the U. S. Department of Justice
Antitrust Division, 1602 Federal Building, Los Angeles, California.

For the Defendants: Johnson, Bates & Sheffield, Esq. and O'Melveny & Myers, Esqs.
William W. Alsup, Esq. and William M. Vaughan, Esq.
By: William W. Vaughan, Esq.
433 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California.

(Also Present: Prof. William F. Brown).

[fol. 3] ROY LAWRENCE BOUQUE, having been first duly sworn, deposed and testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Bouque, would you please state your full name and address for the record, please.

A. Roy Lawrence Bouque. Business address is 545 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California.

Q. Are you a partner in the firm of Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?

A. I am.

Q. How long have you been a partner in this firm?

A. I have been a partner about one year.

Q. How many partners does this firm have?

A. Being a national firm I don't know offhand how many there are throughout the nation. There are 12 in the local office.

Q. How many people are there in the local office?

A. There are 140 persons in the local office.

Q. Are there various classes and types of partners? Are there senior partners and junior partners?

A. No. The partnership is based——There is a regional partner by title who is responsible for the [fol. 4] activities in the Western Region. There is a partner designated from among the partners in the local office as partner-in-charge of the office to handle administrative problems. Then the remaining partners handle their particular clients.

It so happens that we do have a differentiation in that we have those partners who devote their time to the audit side of our activities and there are two partners in the office, one of whom is myself, that devote our time exclusively to the management and consulting phases of our activities.

Q. Would it be fair to characterize you as a management consulting partner?

A. Well, I am a partner in the firm of Lybrand and my activities are devoted to management consulting.

Q. What were you prior to approximately a year ago when you became a partner?

A. I was a manager in the Management Consulting Division of Lybrand's in Los Angeles.

Q. Do you have any central research staff in Los Angeles?

A. We do not have a central research staff in Los Angeles. If you mean by "central research staff," do we have Ph.D.'s and things of that nature in the local staff, we do not.

Q. Where is your central research staff?

[fol. 5] A. The central research staff is in New York.

Q. Did the central research staff direct and control the study which you embodied in your affidavit?

A. The way the engagement was operated was that Dr. Tibor Fabian was in overall charge of the engagement from the central research staff. He had working for him a consultant from the New York central research staff and three men from the local Los Angeles staff. In turn these men reported administratively to the partners in the Los Angeles office.

Q. Who were the three men who were working locally?

A. The three men were Herb McLanahan, I believe Harry Heath and Nelson Gilbert or Gilbert Nelson. I have forgotten what the sequence is between those two names.

I might add that I did not participate in the initial phases of this particular study. I was on another engagement at the time. However, since then I have reviewed the working papers and report and familiarized myself with the facts and conclusions drawn.

Q. When did you first become associated with this project?

A. It was in the fall of 1961 when I first got into phases of the engagement.

Q. When had the field work been completed?

A. What field work are you referring to?

Q. Was there any field work done in connection with [fol. 6] this project?

A. Can you define what you mean by field work so I understand?

Q. You describe to me what sort of work was done in preparing this study.

Mr. Vaughn: May I say that it is broken down into three phases and I think you will get better answers if you refer to one phase and the other phase and the other phase. It is broken down in the affidavit.

Mr. Coyle: I will withdraw that question and come to it later.

Q. You mentioned a consultant in New York. What was his name?

A. Seymour Kwerel.

Q. Is he employed by someone other than Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?

A. At the time he was employed by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery. He is no longer with the firm.

Q. He was a full-time employee?

A. He was a full-time employee.

Q. Where is he now?

A. I couldn't say. I don't know.

Q. You say in 1960 Lybrand was asked by the attorneys for Von's Grocery Company to make an analysis and study of certain aspects of the retail grocery business. When in 1960 was this request made?

[fol. 7] A. I would have to refer exactly to records but it was sometime right around July, as I recall.

Q. When was this analysis and study completed?

A. The field work—Well, here I am getting into some timing of dates and precisely which I cannot give you the exact timing on this thing. The field work was done during the fall of 1960 and the actual date of the report I can't recall.

Q. Was it prior to the subsequent request in 1961? In other words, was it——

A. It was prior to that time.

Q. Was it completed prior to the 1961 request?

A. That is correct.

Q. When was the 1961 request made?

A. This was made about August or September for a followup, an updating of the data because of the time lag between the initial study and the deferment of the trial and they wanted the data brought up to date.

Q. Was there any work done as a result of the 1961 request other than the updating of the work done in 1960?

A. It was primarily the updating but it was the covering of the new aspect of the importance of discount stores that was brought into the picture.

Q. And that was the only work that was done in 1961 other than updating the 1960 work?

A. There were a few charts and so forth, an [fol. 8] interpretation that we developed subsequent.

Q. Which were they?

A. They were the exhibits included in the data presented to the government.

Q. Which exhibits?

A. I would have to refer to that to give you the exact number of the exhibits.

Mr. Vaughn: May I ask him if these are the exhibits to which he refers?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: These are the exhibits to which I referred.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Were they based on work which you had done in 1960?

A. Well, this is based on work done in 1960 and '61, both.

Q. Is it correct then to say that other than these exhibits, which I will describe as an exhibit entitled "Percentage of the total grocery store sales by various groups of chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, 1950-1961" and "Percentage of total grocery store sales by various groups of chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, 1950-1960," the first one being a table and the other a graph. And a third document entitled "Comparison of sales from 1948 to 1960 of the 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, using June 30, 1960 ranking."

In addition to these exhibits and the portion of [fol. 9] your affidavit dealing with discount houses the balance of your report is based upon work which was done in 1960, except that it was brought up to date in 1961?

A. There was one further exhibit which I believe has been submitted entitled "Comparison of the number of stores and the 1960 sales of Von's and Safeway in the Los Angeles metropolitan area."

Q. Is that an additional exhibit?

A. Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: Actually that is set forth in the affidavit, but it was part of, I believe, the work done in 1961.

Is that correct?

The Witness: This statement last referred to was developed in 1961.

Mr. Coyle: Q. How long have you been doing management consulting work?

A. I have been doing it for about nine-ten years.

Q. What is your background in the field, your academic background?

A. My academic background is a Master's in business from Stanford University, Palo Alto.

Q. Have you done any market survey or market study work involving questioning respondents or questioning consumers to determine their shopping habits in that period?

A. I have not been in this particular area. I have participated in economic and marketing type surveys in [fol. 10] my career.

Q. But none in this area?

A. Not for particular grocery chains and things of this kind, sir.

Q. On Page 2 of your affidavit you state, " . . . we assumed that each store had a possible trading area of from one and a half to two miles, and accordingly, we made an analysis of each of the stores in question based on a possible or theoretical draw area of one and a half miles and another possible or theoretical draw area of two miles."

Was this assumption made prior to the time that you participated in this survey? Was this assumption made in 1960 when the field work was done?

A. That is correct.

Q. You yourself made no survey or no study or no market study in connection with the field work that was done in 1960 because you weren't associated with the project at that time; is that correct?

A. Since the time I have become involved in the particular study and under discussion here I have reviewed the working papers, familiarized myself with the report, reviewed the conclusions that were drawn, the assumptions made, and am in complete concurrence with the facts as drawn by our staff at the time and as presented in the affidavit.

Q. Who made the original assumption that there was a possible trading area of from one and a half to two miles? [fol. 11] Was this done in New York?

A. As to the individual who made this particular decision I would assume it was made on the basis of a team operation. This is the way we do our work. That you have the man in charge, who is a principal in the firm, or a partner, the supervisor on the job and the other staff men. And based on the facts that they gather from observation, from talking to people in the field, from reading other survey reports or periodicals, from these facts they develop their conclusions and make their assumptions.

Q. You say, "It is generally believed by retailers . . ." How many retailers were interviewed in connections with this project?

A. I am not familiar with the exact number of retailers they discussed this with.

Q. Do you know whether they had a sample or made a survey?

A. I know that they talked with various retailers about this during the course of the examination.

I know the staff was out making interviews. Now, the exact number I don't know. Certain interviews were made by Dr. Fabian and Seymour Kwerel.

Q. Is Dr. Fabian from New York?

A. Dr. Fabian is also from New York.

Q. And he is employed by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?

[fol. 12] A. He was employed. He is no longer with the firm at this time.

Q. You state that you familiarized yourself with their records. How many retailer interviews have you read that they made? Did they make reports of these retailer interviews?

A. None that I am aware of. There is such a mass of data that it fills a couple of file drawers—three file drawer cabinets.

Q. In that familiarizing yourself with their working papers you never ran across any reports of retailer interviews that they had made?

A. No, I did not.

Q. You say, "It is generally believed by retailers and other authorities . . ." and cite Richard L. Nelson. What other authorities did Dr. Fabian rely upon when he determined the market area?

A. I am not sure. I don't know all that he relied upon but I do know that a couple of those involved would have been Facts Consolidated.

Q. That is Dorothy Corey?

A. Dorothy Corey. And also This Week I believe made a study in which they——

Q. What is "This Week"?

A. It is the periodical that comes out in the various newspapers. It is sort of a magazine type section to your [fol. 13] Sunday paper.

Q. Which edition?

Mr. Vaughn: You are interrupting him and not permitting him to finish his answers.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

The Witness: You will have to read back to me what I said. I don't recall where I was.

(The reporter read the record commencing on Page 12, Line 14 to and including Page 12, Line 23.)

The Witness: A study was made by the staff of this particular magazine in which they indicated in this survey that the normal draw area was from one and a half to two miles for a supermarket.

Mr. Coyle: Q. This was in a Sunday supplement of a newspaper?

A. This was a particular survey that was made that was reported by them.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Bouque, before Mr. Coyle interjected the words "Dorothy Corey," had you finished your answer about Facts Consolidated?

The Witness: Here again I don't recall the exact wording where I was cut off.

Mr. Coyle: Do you want the question read back to him, Mr. Vaughn?

Mr. Vaughn: Maybe he can just repeat whatever it was [fol. 14] that he was about to say about Facts Consolidated or whatever he did say.

The Witness: Can you read that back to me so I can see what I said.

(The reporter reread the record commencing on Page 12, Line 14 to and including Page 12, Line 23.)

The Witness: Regarding Facts Consolidated, Dr. Fabian was familiar with the data, which based on account of the individuals patronizing the store indicated that the primary draw area or the bulk of the people drawn into a store were from a mile and a half to two miles away.

Mr. Coyle: Q. This is material which Facts Consolidated prepared for Von's Grocery, is it?

A. That is correct.

Q. Dr. Fabian discussed the matter with Mrs. Corey, did he?

A. I am not aware whether he discussed it with her or just read the report.

Q. Have you ever discussed it with her?

A. I have not.

Q. Have you read her reports?

A. I have scanned portions of the report that applied to the bulk of the customers coming from this range of a mile and a half to two miles.

Q. Have you looked at her work papers?

[fol. 15] A. Only the report.

Q. As far as you are concerned it is just her work and you don't know whether it is accurate or not, you are just assuming that it is accurate; is that correct?

A. I would assume that the work prepared by her was accurate.

Q. This article in This Week—Is This Week a national publication?

A. Let me mention something here, or reiterate, that I am not familiar with the various ones that Dr. Fabian referred to at the time he made this decision. I know that This Week has an article, the exact timing of when this article was issued I don't recall offhand. But this study was made by the staff of This Week and was issued in a brochure which I have screened.

Q. And those are the only authorities that you relied upon to draw this conclusion?

Mr. Vaughn: That assumes facts not in evidence and I object to it on that ground.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What other authorities did Dr. Fabian rely upon to conclude that you should use the one and a half to two miles?

A. I am not familiar with this. I would have to, if you wish, search the records and get the additional source that he relied upon, but I do not know them offhand.

Q. In your search of his records you can't recall any [fol. 16] other sources? You said you had searched his records.

A. I have reviewed his records but because of the mass of data I cannot recall all of the means, numbers and people contacted, periodicals reviewed and the like. It is too much.

Q. How long was Dr. Fabian with the Lybrand firm?

A. I do not know how long Dr. Fabian was with them. He was with the firm prior to my coming with the firm, I believe. But it was a number of years that he was with Lybrand.

Q. How long have you been with the firm?

A. Three and a half years.

Q. Where were you before you came with the firm?

A. I was with Booz, Allen & Hamilton, management consultants, prior to that time.

Q. Were you in their Chicago office?

A. I was in their Los Angeles office, Seattle, and worked in the Philippines for three years.

Q. How long were you in the Los Angeles office prior to coming to Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?

A. I moved from the Seattle office to Los Angeles and stayed in the Los Angeles office just a matter of a few days before I transferred—moved to Lybrand.

Q. So that you have really only been down in this area about three and a half years; is that correct?

A. No. I worked for Booz, Allen & Hamilton in—I joined them in 1954 and worked for them in Los Angeles [fol. 17] prior to going to the Philippines.

Q. Specifically what date did you come to work with Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?

A. I came to work for them in October 1959.

Q. So far as you know was Dr. Fabian's work generally in the New York area?

A. Dr. Fabian's work covered the entire United States. As a central research staff he was called to do engagements throughout the United States.

Mr. Vaughn: By the way, may I inquire of the reporter as to whether Dr. Brown's appearance is noted in the record.

The Notary: I show him as being "also present."

Mr. Coyle: Q. Was there an original draft of this report prepared prior to the time you became associated with this project?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you incorporated any of that draft into your report?

Mr. Vaughn: In his affidavit, you mean?

Mr. Coyle: Q. In your affidavit, yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to Page 2 again, to the first full paragraph on Page 2, is that the language appearing in the original draft?

A. Original draft of the report?

Q. Yes. That was prepared prior to the time you came [fol. 18] on the project?

A. Without referring to the actual draft report, the affidavit has naturally reshaped and condensed a lot of the information that was given in the report. So as to exact wording, the context, the sense is there as given in the report.

Q. So it would be your testimony, then, that Dr. Fabian and Seymour Kwerel made this assumption of one and a half to two miles on what they assumed was generally believed by retailers and other authorities?

A. Yes, it was based on the data that they were able to gather through, as I understand it, interviews, reviews of other surveys of this nature.

Q. That is what you gather it was based upon?

A. Yes.

Q. On Page 3, Line 1, you say, "Next, we determined from census figures . . ." When you use the word "we," are you referring to Dr. Fabian and Mr. Kwerel and these other people who were on the project prior to the time you came on it?

A. We use the term "we" as the firm, "we did this." In other words, the firm stands behind the report and the affidavit.

Q. But these determinations were made prior to the time that you came on the project, were they not?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 19] Q. So grammatically it would be more proper to say, "they determined it"?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as being argumentative. The witness has stated the fact and you are just arguing with him.

Mr. Coyle: I am just asking the question.

Q. Was it "we" or "they"?

A. As a partner in the firm, the firm is "we."

Q. But you were not a partner when this study was made.

A. No. This is terminology normally used in the firm.

Q. Not in affidavits.

Mr. Vaughn: I move to strike Mr. Coyle's remark about what should or should not be in an affidavit. It calls for an expert opinion, for which he is not qualified.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now, on Line 8 in parentheses you say, "Except on a basis of personal preference which cannot be measured statistically." Is that your conclusion, that personal preference cannot be measured statistically?

A. The phrase is, "which cannot be measured statistically"?

Q. Yes. Is it your opinion that personal preference cannot be measured statistically?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as assuming facts not in evidence and contrary to the evidence. You have obviously taken a parenthetical phrase out of the [fol. 20] paragraph and out of context in order to ask that question. That is not what the import of the statement is.

Mr. Coyle: Maybe the witness can tell me what the import of the statement is.

Q. Do you mean to imply here that personal preference cannot be measured statistically?

Mr. Vaughn: I object on the same ground.

Mr. Coyle: Let him answer.

The Witness: What we are saying here is that our study was a statistical analysis in large part and that in arriving at our conclusions we did not have a firm basis upon which to measure any personal preferences. Such as a particular housewife likes the looks of a store, or prefers for innumerable reasons as to why they would go to one store rather than another, it is difficult to arrive at a statistical measure of this.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But those personal preferences can be measured statistically, can they not?

A. I am not enough of a statistician to say positively that it would not be very difficult to evaluate this statistically.

Q. Do you base this conclusion on any authorities to the effect that these personal preferences cannot be measured statistically?

A. I am not aware of the authorities used by Dr. Fabian and his staff.

[fol. 21] Q. From your review of Facts Consolidated's studies did you draw any conclusion as to whether or not Facts Consolidated was attempting to measure these personal preferences statistically?

A. I think from a review of their charts and figures it was very clear to my mind that people have certain preferences when they will be residing near one store and will go some place else. But how do you read in an individual's mind as to why he wants to go to a particular store? Is it price, the store is clean, the particular manager they like, the sales people are courteous. A myriad of reasons why a person will go.

Q. Back on Page 2, on Line 4, the statement is made, ". . . that the vast majority of the customers of a typical supermarket in the Los Angeles metropolitan area live within two miles of the store." Can you tell us what the phrase "vast majority" means in terms of percentages?

A. Well, this percentage will range, but taking, for example, the Facts Consolidated report I think the number within these limits of one and a half to two miles indicated anywhere from 63 per cent up to 90 plus per cent, with an average of about 85 per cent.

Q. Is 63 per cent the vast majority?

A. It is a large majority, yes.

Q. And you made no studies of your own to determine where the vast majority of the customers lived?

[fol. 22] Mr. Vaughn: You mean interviews with customers?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. I am asking if he made any studies of his own.

The Witness: The purpose of our review was to—In other words, there are many ways to make a review and ours was assigned by our client to make a statistical approach to this particular problem by assuming what the draw range of a particular store was, based on prior surveys and interviews, facts we could garner to come to some assumptions which in our judgment were valid. Using these particular facts we drew the draw radii around the particular stores. And using these circles we then statistically determined what the extent of competition, if any, was between the particular stores.

So we did not interview any individual customers of a store. This was not within the scope of our survey.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And this was done by the two doctors before you became associated——

A. Plus the additional men from the Los Angeles office.

Q. And they reviewed the Dorothy Corey studies, the book by Richard L. Nelson and maybe they made some interviews but you haven't found any reports of any of those interviews. Is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as improperly summarizing the witness' testimony. You can't go back, Mr. Coyle, over 45 minutes of testimony and try to sum [fol. 23] up what the man has said. His testimony stands.

Mr. Coyle: I can ask this witness what this assumption is based upon.

Mr. Vaughn: I object to it as being asked and answered a couple of times.

Mr. Coyle: I will let him answer.

The Witness: Would you please restate that because I have lost track of it.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Can you review again for us what this assumption of the one-and-a-half to two-mile draw area was made from?

A. The assumption of the one-and-a-half to two-mile draw range, my understanding, my interpretation from the report, from my conversations with the people involved in this particular original survey was that they based this on other reports, discussions with other retailers in order to arrive at this assumption which they made in their judgment as valid and then proceeded to make the analysis on that basis.

Q. With whom have you discussed this project who was engaged in the original work?

A. I have discussed this particular project with Tibor Fabian, and briefly with the other people involved.

Q. When did you discuss it with Tibor Fabian?

A. The principal time when I got involved in this was in 1961, at which time there was the updating survey. But [fol. 24] naturally when he was visiting the Los Angeles office to do this work, his dropping in to say hello, we discussed what was coming on. But really the facts were not discussed until I got involved in the survey in 1961.

Q. When you made this theoretical assumption that the draw area was between one and a half and two miles did you take into consideration that draw areas might vary depending upon the size of the store or the parking facilities available at a particular store?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to your characterization of the assumption as a theoretical one. I don't know that that appears any place in the testimony and hence assumes facts not in evidence.

Otherwise you may answer the question, Mr. Bouque.

The Witness: The assumption that—I have to go back to my original statement that the assumptions were based on the judgement of Dr. Fabian and his staff, based on their review of prior reports, their studies and conversations with various people in the field. And they arrived at this conclusion that this was the proper area.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Regardless of the size of the store or the parking facilities of the store this would be the proper area for drawing a theoretical draw area?

A. Statistically they determined, based on their analyses of other reports, which considered many different sizes of stores, these other particular studies, I assume [fol. 25] they made a review of various sizes. I mean they just took supermarkets, they are not all the same size. And from this they arrived at the fact that the majority of customers come from this area.

Now, I recognize that some people, because of personal preferences, will come from further away. But by the same token some people close to Von's may go further away to some little corner store or to a Thriftimart or any other market simply because they have a preference for going that way.

Q. So far as you know the only study you can name that they relied upon was Dorothy Corey's studies?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as improperly summarizing the evidence and assuming facts contrary to the evidence. He talked about "This Week," too.

Mr. Coyle: Q. You just mentioned that Dr. Fabian had used this draw area to determine this one-and-a-half to two-mile range in order to determine his theoretical draw area on the basis of studies which he had reviewed. What studies are you able to name that you know he reviewed other than Dorothy Corey's studies?

A. Well, as I mentioned previously, I am not aware of all the studies involved. There was too much data for me to recall the documents that were reviewed.

It is mentioned right in the affidavit, Richard L. Nelson, 1958, Page 49, is one of the other studies referred [fol. 26] to by Dr. Fabian. And I am sure there were others. Plus, as I said before, discussions with people in the industry.

Q. You say you are sure there were others. Can you name any of the others?

A. For the fourth time I would have to say I do not know all the studies that they have used as a basis for their assumption. If necessary I will be glad to get a list of them for you.

Q. Can you name right now any studies that were used other than the two that you have mentioned?

A. Well, it is a definition of the term "study." I believe we mentioned Mr. Nelson, Facts Consolidated, and I know it is referred to in This Week report. As I mentioned earlier I am not sure of the exact date of the This Week study.

Q. You don't know whether Dr. Fabian read that?

A. I know he read it.

Q. And that is a Sunday supplement to a newspaper, is it not?

A. It was a brochure prepared by people who work on This Week supplement. And I am not in a position to say whether it actually appeared in This Week's Sunday supplement or not.

Q. With respect to Richard L. Nelson what is his background in the field of market research?

A. I am not prepared to indicate what his particular [fol. 27] background is. I do not know offhand.

Q. Do you know whether he is an authority or not?

A. I am not competent to evaluate whether he is an authority. I assume, because Dr. Fabian is a skilled consultant, that he would use the data provided by people who are knowledgeable in the field that they are reporting upon.

Q. Now referring to Page 20 of your revised affidavit——

Mr. Vaughn: What do you mean by "revised affidavit"?

Mr. Coyle: The second affidavit as contrasted with the first.

Mr. Vaughn: You are talking about the document entitled "Affidavit of Roy L. Bouque" which we supplied to you. We supplied to you a previous one.

Mr. Coyle: I have two. I just want to make sure that I am talking about the second one.

Mr. Vaughn: All right.

The Witness: Page 20, Appendix I.

Mr. Coyle: Q. That is correct. You refer to Von's No. 4. How large a store is Von's No. 4 in square feet?

A. I do not know the exact square footage of the Von's Stores—of this particular store.

Q. Have you inspected this store?

A. I have not personally inspected this store.

Q. When you drew this theoretical draw area would that draw area have a radius of two miles when you draw [fol. 28] the theoretical two-mile area?

A. Would you repeat the question?

Q. When you drew these theoretical draw areas around Store No. 4 would the two-mile draw area have a two-mile radius and the one-and-a-half-mile draw area have a one-and-a-half-mile radius?

A. That is correct. From the store.

Q. Then you state, "The Long Beach Freeway lies 1.5 miles to the west and northwest." How does the Long Beach Freeway affect your theoretical draw area?

Mr. Vaughn: Which one? We have two.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Either one. How does the Long Beach Freeway affect either of your theoretical areas?

A. Well, the Long Beach Freeway—I would have to refer to the map to be absolutely sure. But as long as the freeway is on the perimeter of the one-and-a-half-mile radii this would have little effect. I will retract that statement. The theoretical draw area is strictly a radius of one and a half or two miles from the store. The fact that the freeway is in it does not change the boundaries of the theoretical draw area.

Q. And within the 1.5-mile radius of the theoretical draw area around Von's Store No. 4 did you conclude that there were 58,300 residents?

A. Forgetting the Long Beach Freeway, one-and-a-half-mile radius from the store we computed the estimated [fol. 29] population to be 58,300 people.

Q. What source did you use to make that computation?

A. The source used is the census areas which had a population by segments or areas, shall we say, within the 1.5-mile radius.

Q. What census was used, that is what year census?

A. I would have to refer to the notes. I do not know offhand.

Q. Do you have your notes?

A. Not with me.

Q. Was this done before you came on the project?

A. This was done before I came on the project.

Q. You refer to it as an estimated population. How did you estimate the population from the census data?

A. We took the census data in a particular area, and assuming an even distribution, except when it was clearly evident that a particular locale was mountainous and people couldn't live there, and depending upon where the radii bisected a particular area and added up these particular census figures.

Q. Did the census tracts fit exactly on the three-mile radius—or the two-mile radii and the one-and-a-half-mile radii?

A. They didn't fit exactly on it. As I said, we had to assume a proportionate distribution in the census tract unless it was clearly indicated that it was a mountainous [fol. 30] area or it was completely empty, or there was a drainage basis, or things of this nature which precluded people from living evenly within a census tract.

Q. These judgments were made prior to the time you came on the project, were they not?

A. That is correct.

Q. Were any criteria set up to determine which were the mountainous and which were the drainage tracts and which were the areas where people would not be living?

A. It was clearly evident by looking at the particular maps——

Q. Which maps?

A. The maps which have been included as exhibits, on the table over there, are part of the maps that were referred to in developing this information.

Q. When you found that within a two-mile radius, or your predecessors found within a two-mile radius that there were 96,100 people living there; is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question insofar as it refers to "the predecessors." Mr. Boque has said that he has reviewed the facts that his predecessors had to work with.

Mr. Coyle: Q. When you came on the project had a determination been made that within the two-mile radius there were 96,000 residents?

A. This first phase of the survey was completed before [fol. 31] I came on the project. But I, as indicated, reviewed and discussed this with the people, and in our normal practice, in management consultant, and many other professions, you have a lot of subordinates that are doing a lot of other work, the detailed work, and based on your confidence in people they arrive at certain conclusions which you review and accept if you feel they are valid.

Q. But the procedures that were set up for doing this was prior to the time you came on the project.

A. That is correct.

(A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, referring again to Page 20 of the Appendix I, does this theoretical area represent the area in which between 60 and 90 per cent of the customers of a given store reside?

A. Which theoretical draw area are you referring to? There are two of them.

Q. The theoretical two-mile radius draw area.

A. Yes. From the facts as I know them the majority of the people that come from this two-mile radius would range anywhere from 60 to 90 plus per cent of the customers.

Q. So as many as 40 per cent of the customers might then reside outside of the theoretical draw area based upon your assumptions.

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as being argumentative and speculative.

[fol. 32] You may answer, however.

The Witness: Yes, it is possible that in some cases if the store was drawing 60 plus per cent of their people from a two-mile radius it is evident they would have to draw the balance of it outside the two-mile radius.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now, you have in addition two estimated population figures showing estimated number of dwelling units. How were the estimated number of dwelling units ascertained?

A. That was drawn on the same basis as the estimated population, from the census tract figures.

Q. Do the census tract figures portray the number of dwelling units in a given area?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Have you used census figures in the past in doing management work?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you found them to be reliable?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they the best figures available for doing this type of work?

A. I think that is too broad a statement to say that they are the best figures. You have got to find out what you are searching for.

Q. Were there any other figures more reliable than these available to you?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to that as assuming a fact [fol. 33] not in evidence. You are assuming that there is more than one source for this information.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is there more than once source for this information?

A. Offhand I couldn't say what those sources might be.

Q. You don't know of any other sources, though, do you?

Mr. Vaughn: You mean for estimated population and estimated dwelling units?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: Well, there are estimates made by various people as to the population in the area. I have seen them in periodicals. The exact source I don't know. Some of them were probably drawn from census figures and then projections based on the estimated numbers of people that have come in the area and things of this nature.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What are the census years? When was the last census taken, Mr. Bouque?

A. I don't know offhand. I can't say positively.

Q. Did you ever update any of the census material prepared as part of this project subsequent to the time that you became associated with it?

A. No.

Q. You refer on the top of Page 21 to "Major competing stores within 1.5-mile radius," and refer to three [fol. 34] larger-chain stores. Does the word "larger" mean that they were larger than the Von's store in the area?

A. It means that the stores are a member of a chain of more than ten stores.

Q. And the one medium-chain store.

A. Is a chain that has four to ten stores.

Q. So far as you know is there any difference in size between any of these chain stores?

A. To my personal knowledge I do not know the various sizes of these particular stores. They are supermarkets but I do not know the exact store footage.

Q. Do you know the trading area of these stores?

A. This was not within the scope of our survey to determine the trading area of these particular stores.

Q. Do you know whether they would have a theoretical trading area of one and a half to two miles?

A. To make the type of study we did we approached their trading area on the same basis as we did for the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

Q. Did Dr. Fabian assume that they had the same trading area as the Von's store to make this study?

A. I wouldn't be in a position of assuming what was in his mind at this point. However, based on the judgment that was exercised in the assumptions made from a valid basis in our estimate, we would assume that these stores would have the same draw area, one and a half to two [fol. 35] miles, whatever it might be.

Q. Did the Dorothy Corey studies or the Facts Consolidated studies, which you referred to, relate to the draw area of stores other than the Von's and Shopping Bag stores?

A. The portion of the report that I saw applied only to the Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

Q. Now referring to Line 7 of your affidavit, Page 21, you state, "The Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border on the 1.5-mile zone on the west." Was that determination made prior to the time you became associated with this project?

A. As I stated before, this portion of the work was documented prior to my association with this study.

However, I have, again, reviewed material associated with the development of this report.

Q. Was a consumer preference study undertaken to determine whether the Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border of the 1.5-mile zone?

Mr. Vaughn: By Lybrand?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: That was beyond the scope of our particular survey and we did not make a consumer preference study of this.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Did you resort to any consumer preference study as to this barrier?

[fol. 36] A. I cannot refer to my own knowledge as to specific studies that they referred to but I do recall conversations with them indicating—or their discussions regarding the fact that a natural barrier such as a freeway does impede the movement of people and that they had concurred in other people's review of the situation. They drew this as a part of their conclusions.

Q. With whom did you have these discussions?

A. With Tibor Fabian.

Q. Who were the other people whose conclusions he relied upon to arrive at this determination?

A. As I stated earlier, I do not know the people, plus the fact just from your own judgement and looking at an area and seeing a natural barrier going to the center of the area, it is natural that it is going to impede the progress of people. Grocery stores are a matter of convenience and if you have to go around a barrier, go around something, it does from a barrier to easy access to the store.

Q. How many undercrosses or overcrosses were available to people residing on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway within the one-and-a-half-mile theoretical draw area?

A. This again was beyond the scope of our particular engagement.

Q. Was any traffic study undertaken to determine how much traffic passed over or under the Long Beach Freeway?

[fol. 37] A. I do not—A study was not made because it was beyond the scope of the work outlined by our client.

Q. Did your client give you a memorandum outlining the procedures you were to follow?

A. The client indicated a particular problem and what they wanted done. We then developed our own approach to this thing to develop the conclusions as we saw them.

Q. Did you make a determination as to whether it is necessary to interview consumers to determine whether a freeway will act as a barrier?

A. Again this was beyond the scope of what our client requested. There are many ways to make an analysis of a particular problem and our particular assignment was to arrive at a conclusion based on this theoretical draw area which we developed and imposed upon a map, and based on our judgment and review of periodicals. As I recall, Facts Consolidated made personal checks on people who shop at the stores and that was their particular engagement. Ours was strictly from an objective statistical analytical approach of terrain, draw area and the like. We did not interview any consumers.

Q. Did you assume for the purpose of adjusting your draw areas that a freeway will form a barrier to a draw area?

A. Well, you have to take a look at the total situation. It is not a complete barrier, it impedes. Again, it depends on the access and other stores in the area as to how much of a barrier it performs. So you have to take each [fol. 38] individual situation and analyze it.

Q. What criteria do you use to analyze these individual situations?

A. You approach on the basis, which we did on the maps which were submitted as exhibits, we drew the draw area and then we imposed upon the draw area the various natural obstacles, taking a look at this, based on our judgment and knowledge of the area, we proceeded to arrive at these conclusions.

Q. What criteria did you use, other than the location of this freeway on the map, to determine that this freeway was a barrier?

A. Well, the existence of a natural barrier is going to impede or cause people to go to some other place. For instance, if you have a store next to a freeway and you live right across the freeway and there is no access for a mile in either direction and there is a store three-quarters of a mile away, yet because this store is only 200 yards away from you it forms a natural barrier and you will not go there.

So based on our judgment and looking at the particular barriers, in this particular case the Long Beach Freeway, or in the case of others such as the Los Angeles River and the like, we looked at the terrain, these natural barriers and then looking at the competition in the area arrived at how effective this barrier might be.

Q. When you looked at the competition in the area you [fol. 39] assumed that all the chain stores in the area were the same size, did you not?

A. Again I do not know the sizes of the various stores in the particular area. I don't know whether this is a conclusion you can draw that they were the same size, because I don't know. I do not know the facts.

Q. Do you know how Dr. Fabian measured the qualitative importance of these various chain stores in the area as major competitors?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question. You just passed me over with that word "qualitative."

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know whether Dr. Fabian made any evaluation of the competitive importance of the chain stores in the area?

A. Well, as indicated earlier, you have to take a look at each one of these, and based on your judgment, of the location of the store that is under review, whether it be Von's or Shopping Bag. Then looking at the barriers that are in the vicinity and then looking at the other stores, we looked at the larger ones, in other words the larger-chain stores, the medium-chain stores and the like. We did not get down into the small stores.

So we just looked at the bigger ones, and seeing that they were much more accessible, and then going back to the basic assumption that the normal draw area is one and a half to two miles, unless there is some barrier that impedes [fol. 40] them, you come to what we feel is a valid conclusion that they would go to the store that is most accessible to them under most circumstances.

Q. When you undertook to adjust this draw area did you make any assumption as to the percentage of the Von's customers who would give convenience as their reason for preferring one store over another?

A. Here is a fact I am not aware of. You say "give convenience as the fact." I am not aware of these particular customer preferences. We had to go to this on the assumption of the normal draw area.

And here again you have to develop your assumptions and sort of ride with them. In this case the one and a half to two miles. We recognize that based on personal preferences people will come from outside the area and also we recognize that people within their draw area will go some place else. We assume that this will balance out over the long run.

Q. Is it correct in saying that you assume that just as many people will come into a draw area as will go out of a draw area in order to do their grocery shopping?

A. I wouldn't say that is a specific generalization. I would say, again based on studies, we find that people come from beyond the two-mile draw area for many reasons. Again the personal preference, the fact that it is a straight line to a particular store, there is no other store [fol. 41] within their—they are three miles from the store and they are the closest store to them and it could be six miles that is the closest store to them.

Q. Does driving time enter into the location of the draw area?

A. As I stated, the draw area established here, based on the studies, has been set, based on our assumption, which is as valid as anybody else's, we had to come to a conclusion based on the facts we had gathered from several sources, that the majority of the customers come from these particular radii.

Mr. Coyle: Would you read the question back again, please.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

Mr. Vaughn: I think he answered the question. He said he would not make that as a specific generalization and went on to explain.

Mr.Coyle: Q. Would you assume that some people go out of the two-mile radius to purchase their groceries and some people from without the two-mile radius will come into the two-mile draw area to purchase their groceries?

A. I think this has been substantiated by Facts Consolidated, which points out that people do have preferences and will move from a matter of a few blocks from a store and go some place else which is a mile or so away.

Q. Therefore, would it be correct to say that [fol. 42] competition may well exist between two stores whose two-mile draw areas do not intersect?

A. I will get your phrasing right there. Is it safe to assume what?

Q. That two stores whose two-mile theoretical draw areas do not intersect may well compete with each other?

A. I think that I have to go back again to the statement, people do go from beyond two miles to go to a particular store based on personal preference as well as freeways and the like.

Q. On Page 5 of your affidavit you use the term "competition between the stores." What do you mean by the word "competition" on Line 10, Page 5?

A. Well, by competition they are competing for the same customers or the people in the same draw area. We are saying in this particular instance that this refers to the overlap of the draw areas.

Q. Is that based upon the assumption that people won't come in from outside the draw areas or won't go outside the draw areas?

A. This is contrary to everything that I have ever said to this point. We said that people do come from beyond a one-and-a-half-mile or two-mile radius. We said that people basically, the majority of the people, will come from within this radius, but people, because of natural preference, will come from distances beyond two miles. [fol. 43] Q. And do stores that are more than four miles apart compete for these people who for personal preferences or other reasons aren't bound by the two-mile draw area?

A. Well, you are stating a fact that you said "four miles apart" in a two-mile draw. The two-mile draw meets right in the center of the two stores four miles apart.

Q. But some people will go more than two miles, will they not?

Mr. Vaughn: He has answered that question at least ten times. I am going to object to it on the ground that it has been asked and answered.

Mr. Coyle: Will you read back the question before the last one, please.

(The reporter read the pending question as follows:

"Q. And do stores that are more than four miles apart compete for these people who for personal preferences or other reasons aren't bound by the two-mile draw area?")

Mr. Vaughn: There has got to be a limit to the number of times you can ask one question, Mr. Coyle. I don't know how that limit is going to be imposed.

Mr. Coyle: When I get an answer I understand I will stop asking it.

The Witness: Would you please repeat that?

(The reporter reread the question.)

[fol. 44] The Witness: That question is unclear to me. Could you rephrase it?

Mr. Coyle: Q. I think that you testified that there are some customers who will go outside the two-mile theoretical draw area of a store to purchase their groceries. On the other hand, there are other customers from outside the two-mile radius who will come into the theoretical draw area to purchase their groceries.

A. Excuse me. Aren't both those things the same thing?

Q. The same phenomena with respect to these that are inside the draw area and outside the draw area. My question is: When you set up these overlap areas, superimposing one two-mile theoretical draw area upon another theoretical two-mile draw area, aren't there other customers who are not in that overlap area who would be potential customers of either of the two stores and wouldn't the two stores compete for the patronage of those customers? Do you understand that question?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as being ambiguous, uncertain and unintelligible. If I understand it it has been asked and answered.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you understand the question, Mr. Bouque?

A. I am confused by the question.

Q. Do you suppose if it were read to you you might [fol. 45] understand it?

Mr. Vaughn: You don't have to answer that. It is immaterial.

Mr. Coyle: Read it to him, please.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. We will pass this question until we get to the overlap areas themselves.

Returning to Page 21, you state, "The Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border of the 1.5-mile zone on the west." Is it your testimony that this Long Beach Freeway doesn't form an absolute barrier?

Mr. Vaughn: Does not?

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does not.

A. Does not.

Q. And that some customers will pass under or over the freeway to get to the Von's store?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you don't know how many customers will pass under or over the freeway to get to the Von's store.

A. We don't know the exact number as to how many will do this, no.

Q. What kind of a number do you know as to how many will do this?

A. Here again this is a judgment factor. You can't isolate the question in this manner by saying the Long [fol. 46] Beach Freeway restricts so many people. It is the total situation in this environment, the Long Beach Freeway and other stores in the area which determine, in our judgment, the numbers of people that were restricted or impeded, shall we say, in moving around this.

Q. How many stores were there on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway?

A. I would have to refer to the maps to tell you exactly. First of all, how many stores are beyond the Long Beach Freeway I don't know. This takes the entire universe.

Q. Do each of those stores enter into your judgmnt?

A. Again going back to our basic assumption that normally a housewife, or whoever is shopping in the store, the majority of the customers are going to shop this store based on convenience within these draw areas.

Q. By "majority," how large a majority do you mean?

A. Well, as stated earlier, we referred to surveys, one of them being the Facts Consolidated, which we indicated the majority could change from 63 to in excess of 90 per cent of the customers that fall within the two-mile radius of the store.

Q. Is it your understanding, and was it your assumption, that Facts Consolidated's figures and the workings of Dorothy Corey led to the conclusion that the 60 to 90 per cent of the customers residing in the two-mile radius shopped on the basis of convenience?

[fol. 47] Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as being uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible. He said 63 per cent and not 60.

Mr. Coyle: Reread the question and see if he understands it.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

Mr. Vaughn: I also object to that as having been asked and answered. He has told you repeatedly the number of things that he relied upon to determine the draw area of a particular store. You asked him to repeat it once, you have asked him to repeat it twice, and this is the fourth or fifth time you are asking him to repeat what he based that on.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Let him now answer the question, please.

The Witness: The determination of the draw area was based on a series of facts obtained from various sources, be they reports or discussions with people in industry as indicated before, upon which we in our judgment stated an assumption of this 1.5- to two-mile radius, and it was on this basis that we conducted our survey.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Which people in the industry were these conferences or discussions held with?

A. As I indicated——

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as having been asked and answered. You know very well, Mr. Coyle, that you cannot get away with this in the courtroom. You [fol. 48] cannot ask the witness the same question up to a dozen times. I do not think that it is proper for you to try and do so here and I very strenuously object to your doing it.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now go ahead and answer it.

A. As I stated before I am not aware of the individuals that he discussed this with.

Q. When you made your affidavit did you assume that more than 48 per cent of the persons who shopped at Von's shopped there because of convenience?

A. Where does this 48 per cent come in?

Q. I am asking you. I am just asking you, did you assume that more than 48 per cent of the customers who shop at Von's shop there because of convenience?

A. I do not know the individual reasons as to why a person shops at a particular store. There are a myriad of reasons as to why they shop. One of the principal reasons is convenience. But there are many reasons. As to the exact percentage, this was beyond the scope of our work. I do not know the facts.

Q. You do not know whether 48 per cent or 58 per cent of the people who shop at Von's shop there because of convenience?

A. This was beyond the scope of our study and I am not aware of the facts involved here.

Q. You did not take that into consideration when you set up your procedures?

[fol. 49] A. We took a statistical approach based on, as I have said several times before, based on various sources and which no reasons were given as to the specific percentages of why people shop at a particular store. We based it on the results of these surveys that showed so many people, or percentage of so many people came to a store from within these given 1.5 or two-mile radii.

Q. Now referring to the figure on Line 12 of Page 21, 82,800 people, which is 7,300 people fewer than the population estimated for the theoretical draw area. Upon what did you base that reduction in the population in the adjusted areas?

Mr. Vaughn: Do you want to add that again?
Mr. Coyle: It is more than that.
Mr. Vaughn: 13,300.
Mr. Coyle: Thirteen three.

Q. What did you base that reduction of thirteen three on?

A. The reduction of thirteen three, the reasons for adjusting the draw area was based on looking at, again, the situation that existed in the draw area of this particular store looking at the physical barriers that would impede the access of people to the stores, the other competition in the area, and based on our judgment the resulting figure for the adjusted draw is 13,300 less than the theoretical draw.

Q. Is that the total population residing on the other [fol. 50] side of the Long Beach Freeway?

Mr. Vaughn: Within the two-mile draw area?
Mr. Coyle: Within the two-mile draw area.
The Witness: I would have to check the charts to determine this, but I would assume that it would not be the total number of people, because there will be people that will be coming to the Von's store. As I say, the barrier impedes, it does not prohibit the people from moving.

Mr. Coyle: Q. If it is the total population residing on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway would it be your testimony that the adjusted draw area understates the population that would be available to the Von's store?

Mr. Vaughn: That is a speculative question, to which I object.
Mr. Coyle: It is his judgment that I am asking for.
The Witness: I am going to have to have the question repeated. I don't follow your question.
Mr. Coyle: Would you repeat the question, please.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: I am trying to figure out what you mean by this statement.

Mr. Vaughn: He is asking you, subject to my objection, if the total population on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway and within the two-mile draw area were eliminated as potential customers of the Von's store would that understate the number of people who were potential cus-
[fol. 51] tomers of the Von's store.

Isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Witness: Now it is that the Long Beach Freeway is a permanent barrier, that they can't come through?

Mr. Vaughn: That is not what he asked.

Mr. Coyle: Q. You have already testified, I believe, that it was not a complete barrier.

A. Right.

Q. I am asking then would you be understanding the estimated population of the adjusted draw area if you eliminated all the persons residing on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway within the two-mile limit from your theoretical draw area?

Mr. Vaughn: To which I have the same objection.

Is there some aspect of it that you don't understand?

The Witness: I just don't understand the question, what he means by this understating of population available to Von's store. There is 13,300 people in the area and that is the total population over there beyond the freeway.

Mr. Vaughn: Does that answer your question?

Mr. Coyle: No. I am asking him whether or not in doing this he eliminated the entire population residing on the other side of the Long Beach Freeway within the two-mile zone.

Mr. Vaughn: In arriving at his adjusted draw area.

[fol. 52] Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: Did you or didn't you?

The Witness: First of all that is not the entire population on the other side of the freeway.

Mr. Coyle: Q. It is not the entire population on the other side of the freeway within the two-mile area?

A. I would again have to check the maps to be accurate. But, as I pointed out earlier, this population, this estimate of the 13,000 difference by adjusting it is our best estimate of the people in that area beyond the freeway who would probably shop at another market, that they would be impeded from coming to the Von's Store No. 4 in this case.

Q. It is not the entire population.

A. It is not the entire population.

Q. What percentage of the population is it?

A. I do not have those facts. I can get them but I don't have the facts in my head at this point. I would have to review the maps and the census figures.

Q. If we can find the maps perhaps you can review it.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Coyle, are these maps that you had prepared from maps that we had Lybrand prepare?

Mr. Coyle: To the best of my knowledge, yes, these are the maps that we had prepared from maps that Lybrand prepared.

Mr. Vaughn: The census figures which appear on this [fol. 53] copy of the map, which you had prepared, are missing for the three crucial areas in question. It looks like they were there but they are not any longer.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, I show you a map entitled "San Gabriel Valley Area," which I understand is to be an exhibit attached to your affidavit——

Mr. Vaughn: It is a copy of an exhibit to be introduced.

Mr. Coyle: Q.——it is a copy of an exhibit to be introduced as part of your affidavit. I refer you to the store known as Von's No. 4 and ask you if you can locate it on this map.

A. It is right here (indicating).

Q. You have located it. Now I ask you if there is a one-and-a-half and two-mile radius drawn around Von's Store No. 4.

A. There are.

Q. Now I ask you whether the Long Beach Freeway is plotted along the one-and-a-half-mile zone on the west.

A. Yes.

Q. Now I ask you whether or not you have used that Long Beach Freeway as the boundary in adjusting your draw area.

Mr. Vaughn: Which draw area?

Mr. Coyle: Q. In adjusting your 1.5-mile draw area for this store.

[fol. 54] A. Not in adjusting the 1.5-mile radius because——

Q. In adjusting the two-mile radius?

A. Yes, in adjusting the two-mile radius.

Q. Now I ask you the total population residing within the adjusted draw area as shown on the map.

A. The figures that should be on the map are missing.

Mr. Vaughn: He is asking within the adjusted draw area.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, within the adjusted draw area.

The Witness: Would you repeat your question again?

Mr. Coyle: Q. I am asking if you can compute the total population residing within the adjusted draw area as shown on this map.

A. For the two mile.

Q. For the two-mile area minus the area west of the Long Beach Freeway.

A. Yes, I would be able to compute it by taking the particular areas.

Q. Could you do that now from this map that is in front of you?

Mr. Vaughn: He has already done it in his affidavit. Do you want him to do it again?

Mr. Coyle: What I am trying to ascertain is whether he excluded everybody residing west of the Long Beach Freeway.

The Witness: It would take some time to compute these [fol. 55] because there are going to be some prorations on this, but it can be computed.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But you cannot compute it from the map.

A. It would take some time to do it.

Q. Can you do it if we give you a ten-minute recess?

Mr. Vaughn: If I don't miss my guess, that is going to take a half an hour to do, but he can do it. He has to take each one of these census tracts and determine what percentage of them are in the overlay area—I don't know if he has the tools to do that—and then prorate the population of that census tract. There must be 10 to 12, maybe a dozen census tracts as to which he has to do that. Do you want him to do that?

Mr. Coyle: I would like to get the answer to the question as to whether or not he excluded everybody residing west of the Long Beach Freeway.

Mr. Vaughn: That is your ultimate aim.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

Mr. Vaughn: Can you answer that question without doing this?

The Witness: To the best of my knowledge——

Mr. Coyle: Q. That doesn't answer it. Do you know whether or not?

A. Mr. Coyle, as we have indicated on several previous occasions these figures were developed by our staff prior to my participation in this work. Therefore, I am not [fol. 56] familiar with the intimate details of exactly how they did it. It would be my assumption, if you are willing to accept this, that the total population in that area beyond the Long Beach Freeway in the two-mile radius, the total population was not excluded from our figures.

Q. That is your assumption but you do not know.

A. That is correct.

Q. Now referring to this map marked San Gabriel Valley area, and referring to the Von's Store No. 4 and the Shopping Bag store located in Montebello——

Mr. Vaughn: In Montebello at Greenwood and Whittier?

Mr. Coyle: I presume that is the address.

Q. Does the map indicate that there is an overlap in the one-and-a-half and two-mile draw areas of the Von's Store No. 4 and the Shopping Bag store in Montebello?

Mr. Vaughn: You are now talking about theoretical as opposed to adjusted draw area?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: There is an overlap in the theoretical draw areas at both the one-and-a-half and two-mile radii.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now referring to the first overlay, which plots competitive stores, does that overlay indicate that there are two Safeways, a Market Basket and an A & P in the area of either the Montebello store or the Von's No. 4?

A. That is correct.

Q. We are now placing the overlay showing freeways [fol. 57] and railroads. Does this overlay show all freeways and all railroads that are in either the Montebello or the Von's No. 4 draw areas?

A. On a quick review, yes. It includes the Union Pacific, Santa Fe, Long Beach Freeway and the Rio Hondo Wash.

Q. On the basis of anything shown on this map have you adjusted the draw area for either the Montebello store or Von's No. 4?

A. On the basis of this map——

Mr. Vaughn: That is Von's No. 4 and Shopping Bag No. 40, if I may aid the witness in order to speed this along.

The Witness: Yes, there were adjustments in both the draw areas in both of the situations here.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Were the adjustments on Von's No. 4 the adjustments that we have been discussing?

Mr. Vaughn: You mean the Long Beach Freeway only.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And on what page of your amended affidavit do you discuss the Shopping Bag store on?

A. We discuss the Shopping Bag Store No. 40 on Pages 27, 28 and 29, in which case we indicate there is an adjustment to the draw area of Shopping Bag No. 40.

Q. What are those adjustments?

A. The reasons for the adjustments is the Rio Hondo River is a barrier for all residents in the two-mile draw [fol. 58] east of the river. A small pocket of residents east of the river within the 1.5-mile area do have reasonable access to the store and are considered part of the draw. The railroad does not appear to constitute a significant barrier.

Q. Will you show me where the river is?

A. It is right along here (indicating).

Q. How do the residents between the river and the one-and-a-half-mile radius get to the Shopping Bag store?

A. They would come down, if they shop at Shopping Bag, they would probably come down Whittier Boulevard.

Q. Is there a bridge across the river?

A. It indicates on the map that there is.

Q. Is there one bridge or two?

A. One bridge across Whittier Boulevard.

Q. Are there any other bridges across there?

A. Way up on Beverly Boulevard there is a bridge, and way down on Washington there is a bridge.

Q. There are three bridges across the river there, are there not?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you take anything other than the existence of the river into consideration when you determined that the people residing east of the river and within the one-and-a-half-mile radius would have access to the Shopping Bag but the people residing east of the river between the one-and-a-half and two-mile radii would not have access to Shopping Bag?

[fol. 59] A. Well, as indicated in the affidavit, it was pointed out the small pocket of residents east of the river within the 1.5-mile area do have reasonable access and they would in the main use Whittier Boulevard for access to the Von's store.

Q. Did you make any study to determine if they would in the main use the Whittier Boulevard bridge?

A. Well, I again did not make the actual determination. I reviewed the facts. But based on the map in front of me, the principal access, if people were going to the Von's store, such as myself, Whittier Boulevard is the method by which I would approach the Von's store since, one, the Washington Street bridge is way down south several miles from Whittier, and which is an uninhabitated area between Whittier and Washington, and that there appears to be no access immediately from this little pocket to Beverly Boulevard without going some distance in the other direction.

Q. The people residing between the one-and-a-half and the two-mile radius east of the river, is the Whittier Boulevard bridge accessible to them?

A. Yes.

Q. Are any other bridges accessible to them?

A. The Beverly Boulevard bridge would be accessible to them.

Q. And was there another bridge up north that is accessible to them?

[fol. 60] Mr. Vaughn: That is Beverly Boulevard.

The Witness: This is Beverly Boulevard.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is there a bridge south that would be accessible to them?

A. There is a bridge accessible to them on Washington Street.

Q. Are there any stores shown on your map between that pocket on the east of the river between the one-and-a-half and two-mile draw area that those people could shop at other than the Shopping Bag store?

A. Yes. There is the one here labeled "CR." I don't recall the code offhand.

Q. Is there anything on the map to indicate that that store "CR" is more accessible to those people than the Shopping Bag store?

A. Based on the black dot in the center it indicates that it is between—that that store is between Von's and their home if you came down Whittier Boulevard.

Q. How much closer to them is it than the Von's store?

Mr. Vaughn: This is a Shopping Bag store, is it not?

Mr. Coyle: This is a Shopping Bag store.

Q. Aren't they just about on the same block?

A. They are about two or three blocks away.

Q. At most?

A. At most.

Q. Do you think that that store would be more of a [fol. 61] deterrent to those people residing between the one-and-a-half and the two-mile radius than to the people residing within the one-and-a-half-mile radius, the people on the east side of the river, to the Shopping Bag?

Mr. Vaughn: And the river is a deterrent to their shopping at Shopping Bag.

Mr. Coyle: Q. When you determined that the people residing east of the river, between the one-and-a-half and two-mile radius, would not shop at the Shopping Bag store but the people residing east of the river within the one-and-a-half-mile radius would shop at the Shopping Bag, did that store marked "CR" play any part in that determination?

A. Again this was a judgment factor which I did not participate in at that time. I am not able to verify this fact at this time.

Q. Reviewing the material did you find that it had played any part in their determination?

A. There was nothing that I saw that was documented on this thing. Again, people in exercising judgment don't necessarily always document each individual item considered at this particular point.

Q. Now referring to the barrier on the west——

Mr. Vaughn: I thought he was not finished with the answer and there was an interruption on the answer to the question on what other stores were available to the people in that area.

[fol. 62] Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

The Witness: Well, again the determination where people are going to go is a total situation.

Mr. Vaughn: Had you completed your answer with respect to what other stores are available to the people east of the river?

Mr. Coyle: Why don't we read my last question back to him.

Mr. Vaughn: That wasn't the last question. It was a prior question where you stopped the answer in order to inquire about this particular store, I thought.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure that he had completed that one.

Q. Now returning to the barrier on the west, which I think is the Long Beach Freeway, did you take any competitive stores into consideration when you evaluated that freeway as a barrier?

Mr. Vaughn: This one over here?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: Again I was not in on the actual determining judgment factor as to what entered into each of these individual decisions. All these factors played a part in arriving at the adjusted figure, the barrier, the accessibility of other stores that are involved in this particular decision, I am sure.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does the map show any competitive stores more accessible to those people residing between [fol. 63] the two-mile barrier and the two-mile radius and the Long Beach Freeway than Von's Store No. 4?

A. This particular map does not indicate. It is at the edge of the map and there are no other stores indicated on this map.

Q. In your review of the work do you know whether or not they took any stores into consideration?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Were the records available which would show you whether or not they took any stores into consideration?

A. As I indicated previously there are two or three file cabinets full of data. I have perused through portions of this rapidly and I am not able to identify all the minute details of what is in each one of these folders.

Q. In your entire review of their work have you ever reversed or changed any determination they previously made?

A. Again this report, these maps, were prepared by the staff and submitted prior to my participation in the survey.

Q. And you haven't changed any of them?

A. I have not analyzed these to make a change. It was submitted as an affidavit. Again, the people are experienced in this area and prepared this based on their own best judgment. They reached their assumptions and carried through on their judgment as to what the facts were, submitted their reports and the figures and data, [fol. 64] maps and so forth that were submitted in evidence to the Court.

Q. And they were submitted to defense counsel.

A. To defense counsel.

(A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, I show you a map entitled "Southeastern Area," which I believe to be a copy of an exhibit you intend to attach to your affidavit. I ask you if you can locate Von's Store No. 26 on this map. Is that store located in Garden Grove at 12151 Brookhurst Avenue?

A. That is correct.

Q. I ask you whether the map shows the one-and-a-half and two-mile theoretical draw areas for that store.

A. They do.

Q. On Page 66 of your affidavit do you list the estimated population within the one-and-a-half and two-mile radius?

A. We did.

Q. In listing this estimated population do you take into consideration any competing stores in the area?

A. The estimated population is based upon the population encompassed by the 1.5-mile radius and the two-mile radius, irrespective of the stores in the area.

Q. You say there are five larger-chain stores, one Shopping Bag, two medium-chain stores, one smaller-firm store. When you say "smaller-firm store," you don't necessarily mean that it is a smaller store, do you?

[fol. 65] A. It is a smaller firm. In other words, an independent or possibly a two- or three-store chain.

Q. We have placed the first overlay on the map. I wonder if you could name for me the major chain stores within the one-and-a-half-mile radius.

A. From what store?

Q. From the Von's store.

A. Well, there is a Safeway and "THR"—Thriftimart—Mayfair, Safeway and Food Giant. There are five stores within the 1.5-mile radius of the Von's location.

Q. Would you name for me the stores that are within the two-mile radius of the Von's store?

Mr. Vaughn: The major chain stores?

Mr. Coyle: Major chain stores.

The Witness: Again Safeway, Mayfair and Thriftimart are the stores, in addition to the five mentioned.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now we have placed the third overlay on the map and I ask you whether it indicates any major barriers?

A. The principal barrier in the area of the Von's Store No. 26 is the Pacific Electric line which bisects the area of the Von's store—approximately bisects the draw areas, the 1.5 and the two-mile draw areas of the Von's store.

In addition there is the Southern Pacific line which runs—Pacific Electric Railway, which is a subsidiary of the Southern Pacific, is near the 1.5-mile radii on the north side.

Q. Did you determine that the Southern Pacific that [fols. 66-67] bounds the 1.5-mile draw area on the north constituted a barrier?

A. Yes. The railway, the Pacific Electric, constitutes a partial barrier in this area.

Q. I was referring to the Southern Pacific line. Did you find that it constitutes a barrier?

A. The Southern Pacific line is the owner of Pacific Electric Railway. They are one and the same.

Q. The Southern Pacific line is the one up here at the north edge along the 1.5-mile draw line.

A. Correct.

Q. Does it constitute a partial barrier or a complete barrier?

A. It would constitute a partial barrier.

Q. It would constitute a partial barrier. And you would not subtract from the population in the adjusted area, of the theoretical draw area of the total population residing between the Southern Pacific line on the north and the two-mile radius?

A. It was assumed, as stated on Page 67 of the report, that the core of the business did not extend beyond the 1.5-mile radius.

Q. Where was that assumed on the report?

A. On Page 67.

Q. Is that referring to the Pacific Electric line or to the Southern Pacific line?

[fol. 68] Mr. Vaughn: Actually that is probably a misprint of those. Both of those are Pacific Electric, according to the map. Southern Pacific owns the Pacific Electric and that is apparently where the discrepancy has arisen. They are one and the same.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is it your testimony that the Southern Pacific line on the north and the Pacific Electric line which bisects the area are barriers of the same magnitude?

A. Would you repeat that last question?

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: No, they are not barriers of the same magnitude.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What magnitude is the Southern Pacific line on the north? Is that a complete barrier?

A. It was assumed that the core of the business did not extend beyond this 1.5-mile radius. There were naturally people who, as we have stated before, would on personal preference come there. But with the Shopping Bag store there and the Food Giant and Mayfair and the rest of them in the immediate vicinity, I would say for all practical purposes they would be shopping at the other stores. They are closer.

Q. I am trying to understand the statement that the Southern Pacific line that bounds the 1.5-mile draw area on the north constitutes a barrier. Is that this line that comes right across and turns north?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 69] Q. That constitutes a barrier. Then the Pacific Electric line which essentially bisects the entire drawing area constitutes a partial barrier. Is that this diagonal line that looks on this map as though it almost goes through Von's store?

A. That is correct.

Q. When you went about adjusting the population from your theoretical area to your adjusted draw area for the Von's store what did you do with the population residing between the Southern Pacific line, that is the northern line that turns and runs north? What did you do with the population residing between that barrier and the two-mile radius?

A. I would want, as a matter of fact—I could not tell you absolutely what determination was made in this specific instance, but based on the fact that there are several larger chains nearer the home owner's residence than they are to the Von's store and the fact that there is this barrier there, probably for all practical purposes and based on the statement on Page 67 this population was probably excluded from the adjustment to the adjusted draw area.

Q. Do you know whether it was excluded or not?

A. I would have—On a statement of fact I do not know exactly what was done in this particular instance.

Q. Do you know whether in this whole affidavit which you have written, and this appendix to it, when a line is designated as a barrier whether or not you always [fol. 70] assumed that it is a complete barrier and that nobody residing outside that barrier is computed within the estimated draw area unless there is a notation such as there is here that it is a partial barrier?

A. Well, again, as we have stated, we had to make some assumptions as to the draw areas 1.5 and two miles, and then we inserted the natural barriers and other barriers that are in the area based on the stores or supermarkets in the area. All these are determinants as to how many or what adjustment you would make, rather, in your estimate.

As I was not in on each individual adjustment, because of the judgment factor that enters in there, I cannot as a statement of fact tell you exactly what was done in each individual instance.

Q. Can you tell us what was done in any instance?

A. I can tell you the approach that was made. As I said before I did not get into this particular phase of the study. It was completed prior to my coming into this situation.

Q. Referring to Von's No. 4, which we discussed previously on Page 20, in which it says that the Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border of the 1.5-mile zone on the west, do you know whether or not the population residing in the area between the Long Beach Freeway and the two-mile radius was treated any differently for adjustment purposes than the population residing between [fol. 71] the Southern Pacific line and the two-mile radius in Garden Grove?

A. I imagine—As a statement of fact I do not know. Seeing the two maps I would say there would be a difference in judgment exercised in these two areas.

Q. Now referring to Shopping Bag No. 33, which I believe is located in Anaheim at 9922 Katella Avenue, can you locate that?

A. I have.

Q. Does this map show the one-and-a-half and two-mile draw area radii for the Shopping Bag store?

A. It does.

Q. Do the two-mile and one-and-a-half-mile radii for the Shopping Bag Store No. 33 intersect with the radii for Von's Store No. 26?

A. They do. Von's 26 and Shopping Bag 33, both the 1.5 and the two-mile radii intersect.

Q. As a matter of fact, isn't the Von's within the one-and-a-half-mile Shopping Bag radius and the Shopping Bag store within the one-and-a-half radius of the Von's store?

A. The Von's store and the Shopping Bag store are in the overlap area of the one-and-a-half-mile radii.

Q. Has it been your testimony that the Shopping Bag store would draw some customers from outside its two-mile radius?

The Witness: Would you read that question back?

[fol. 72] (The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: I have indicated in our previous discussions that a Shopping Bag store could draw customers from beyond the two-mile radius.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know from the surveys and reports that you read that they do draw some customers from outside the two-mile radius?

A. This was not part of our survey. However, I have seen the Facts Consolidated report which showed that there were customers going to certain Von's stores, not necessarily this particular one, from beyond the two-mile range.

Q. Have you ever seen any studies showing that either a Von's store or a Shopping Bag store draws no customers from outside the two-mile radius?

A. No.

Q. So would it be your understanding that they all draw at least some of their customers from outside the two-mile radius?

A. I would believe that is a valid assumption.

Q. Would some of the customers of the Shopping Bag store residing outside the two-mile radius also be customers of this Von's store shown on this map?

Mr. Vaughn: Would Shopping Bag customers be Von's customers; is that what you are asking?

Mr. Coyle: Let me rephrase the question.

Q. Would some of the Shopping Bag customers residing [fol. 73] outside the Shopping Bag two-mile radius live within the Von's two-mile radius?

A. It is entirely possible on a preferential basis that certain persons would prefer to shop at either Von's or Shopping Bag in preference to the other. And surveys, again Facts Consolidated, in one particular one—I do not recall the store names—it showed several people lived almost adjoining the Von's store and doing their shopping at Shopping Bag and vice versa.

Q. As a result of this fact that some customers come from outside the two-mile radius would it be proper to say that the overlap area shown on this map does not portray all the competition between Von's and Shopping Bag?

A. If I understand your question correctly, surveys have indicated that both stores draw from beyond their two-mile radius. So they would be getting customers from beyond that distance.

Q. And they would compete in areas other than the overlap area?

A. This is entirely possible on a preferential basis that people will come from beyond this two-mile radius.

Q. And you don't mean to say in these exhibits that the competition between the two stores is limited to the overlap area.

A. We won't say that competition is limited to the overlap area, no, exclusively to that area.

[fol. 74] Q. Now we put the overlay back down on the map of the southeastern area. Does this overlay indicate that there were six larger-chain stores plus Von's within the one-and-a-half-mile radius of your theoretical one-and-a-half-mile draw area around the Shopping Bag store?

A. It does.

Q. Does it show that within the two-mile radius there were seven larger-chain stores, one Von's store, one store of a medium-sized chain and one store of a smaller firm?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now we put down the overlay showing barriers. I ask you if there were any barriers on the one-and-a-half or two-mile draw areas of the Shopping Bag Store No. 33.

A. There are two—There is one line of the Pacific Electric Railway which forms a barrier for potential customers in the two-mile draw area to the southwest. The Santa Ana Freeway at the edge of the two-mile draw area forms a barrier.

Q. That is located at the northeast edge?

A. That is beyond. It is on the edge there.

Q. Is the Southern Pacific line within the draw area of the Shopping Bag store?

Mr. Vaughn: Which, Pacific Electric?

Mr. Coyle: Southern Pacific line.

Mr. Vaughn: We are calling the one that runs——

Mr. Coyle: The one on the north.

Mr. Vaughn: ——west to east and then turns north the [fol. 75] Southern Pacific line.

Mr. Coyle: I believe that is the one he calls the Southern Pacific line in the document.

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Is the Southern Pacific line running through the Shopping Bag draw area?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it run through both the one-and-a-half and the two-mile areas?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you treat that as a barrier?

A. This is a partial barrier, yes.

Q. Did you treat that as a partial barrier for the Shopping Bag store?

A. That is the question I just answered, yes.

Q. Referring to your affidavit, can you show me where on the affidavit that you state that you treat the Southern Pacific line as a partial barrier?

A. I stand corrected. The adjusted draw area is spelled out in the report that the Pacific Electric Railroad forms a barrier for potential customers in the two-mile draw area in the southwest, the Santa Ana Freeway in the two-mile area to the north.

Q. Does this exhibit and does your appendix to your affidavit indicate that you treated the Southern Pacific line as a complete barrier with respect to Von's No. 26 [fol. 76] but did not consider it a barrier with respect to Shopping Bag No. 33?

Mr. Vaughn: The document speaks for itself and I object to the question on that ground. As a matter of fact, you are improperly summarizing what the document says.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness.

Q. What does the document show, the document being both the exhibit and your report, as to the treatment of the Southern Pacific line as a barrier with respect to Shopping Bag No. 33 and Von's No. 26?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question insofar as it relates to the document, which I assume you mean is the affidavit and its appendices, because the best evidence is the document. As a matter of fact, you have not characterized the document correctly. The adjusted overlap area is there.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness how he treated the——

Mr. Vaughn: He may answer the question. I am merely stating my objection.

Mr. Coyle: I just hope he understands the question.

The Witness: As stated in the reasons for the adjusted draw area on Page 67, the Southern Pacific line bounds the 1.5-mile draw area on the north and constitutes a barrier.

Mr. Coyle: Q. That is with respect to Von's Store No.——

A. Von's Store No. 26.

Q. How did you treat that Southern Pacific line with respect to Shopping Bag No. 33?

Mr. Vaughn: What the document says or what he says?

[fol. 77] Mr. Coyle: I am asking him how he treated it.

The Witness: Again the document states for Shopping Bag No. 33 the reasons for the adjusted draw area, the one line of the Southern Pacific Railway forms a barrier for potential customers in the two-mile draw area to the southwest. The other railroad line has not been cited in the document. This document was prepared prior to my association with the survey.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know the reasoning and the judgments that were made to treat the Southern Pacific line as a barrier with respect to the Von's store but not as a barrier with respect to the Shopping Bag store?

A. As I stated earlier I can express an opinion only as to what judgment was exercised by the staff who worked on this engagement. And I have cited previously the factors that were considered generally in this total survey as to the effectiveness of a particular barrier.

Q. Can you tell us how the Pacific Electric line was treated in making the adjustment of the theoretical draw area with respect to Von's No. 26 and Shopping Bag No. 33?

A. You are asking two questions.

Q. I am asking you how this Pacific Electric line was treated with respect to Von's 26 and Shopping Bag 33.

A. Excuse me, I misunderstood the question the first time. The Pacific Electric, which essentially bisects the entire drawing area on Von's 26, constituted a partial [fol. 78] barrier. In the case of the Shopping Bag No. 33 it also formed a barrier. In this case at the two-mile draw area to the southwest of the Shopping Bag store.

Q. In adjusting the theoretical draw area of Shopping Bag No. 33 you reduced the estimated population within the two-mile radius by 5,440 people. Where did those people reside?

A. These people would have resided to the southwest—correction. Again not having participated in the survey but using my judgment as to what happened at this particular point, it was that the people who were subtracted from the theoretical draw area probably lived to the southwest of the Pacific Electric line.

Q. Would they reside between the Pacific Electric line and the two-mile limit or between the Pacific Electric line and the one-and-a-half-mile limit, or between the one-and-a-half-mile limit and the two-mile limit to the southwest of the railroad?

A. This is a question of fact which I cannot answer at this time.

Q. Was this Pacific Electric Railroad considered a partial barrier with respect to the Von's store and a complete barrier with respect to the Shopping Bag store?

A. Did you say the Pacific line bisected?

Q. Yes. It is referred to as a partial barrier with respect to the Von's store. My question is: What kind of [fol. 79] a barrier is it with respect to the Shopping Bag store? Is it a partial barrier or something other than a partial barrier?

A. It is a partial barrier.

Q. And it was treated exactly the same with respect to the Shopping Bag store as it was to the Von's store?

A. What do you mean by "treated exactly the same"?

Q. In determining whether or not how many people you were going to subtract in adjusting your draw area.

A. This was an adjustment made by the staff.

Q. Was it before you came on the case?

A. All of the exhibits, or this exhibit was prepared prior to the time I came on the case when they made the judgment factor and developed these particular figures.

Q. So that you really can't testify as to exactly what they did when they made these adjustments, can you?

A. I can't testify as to exactly what they had in their mind at the time they made the individual decisions. Again I have relied in my review of the documentation surrounding this report on the capability of the staff to gather the facts, analyze them and come to conclusions which they have felt were sound and I relied on their judgment as I came in subsequent to the time all these factors were discussed.

Q. When you refer to "the staff"——

A. I am including Dr. Tibor Fabian and Seymour Kwerel.

[fol. 80] Q. You are also relying on the standards that he set up that the staff was going to use in making these judgments.

A. That is correct.

Q. And you didn't participate with him in setting these standards when he set them?

A. I did not participate in setting the standards.

Q. Now referring to the overlap area with respect to these two stores, how did you treat the Pacific Electric Railroad line in computing your adjusted overlap area?

A. In this particular——

Q. Excuse me. I think perhaps that the Pacific Electric Railroad line, as used here, is the same line that was referred to as the Southern Pacific line on Page 67.

A. That's correct.

Q. With that correction how did you treat the Southern Pacific Railroad line, which is here referred to as the Pacific Electric line?

A. The adjusted overlap area at the 1.5-mile adjusted area is, for all practical purposes, the same as the 1.5-mile theoretical overlap. For the adjusted two-mile overlap the Pacific Electric line on the north is assumed to be a complete barrier.

Q. On what did you base that assumption?

A. The assumption, again, is what the staff assumed and I am not able to say what their assumption was at the particular time. Well, in large part based on the [fol. 81] general observations of the adjusted overlap area it is indicated there that because of the existence of several larger-chain stores to the north of the Pacific Electric, or Southern Pacific, whichever is appropriate here, it therefore acted as a barrier in adjusting the overlap area.

Q. Was this adjustment made prior to the time you came on the case?

A. That is correct.

Q. In evaluating the Alpha Beta Food Store to determine its relationship to this barrier did you take into consideration the parking facilities of Alpha Beta?

Mr. Vaughn: Which Alpha Beta? There are two.

Mr. Coyle: Either of these Alpha Betas.

The Witness: As stated previously, the individual weights or factors given in a specific instance I am not aware what was in the minds of the individuals making the evaluation. I was not a member of the team which established the charts and the estimates given on Page 70.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Did you ever inspect this area?

A. By "inspect," do you mean going out to the store itself?

Q. Yes.

A. I did not, no.

Q. You don't know how many crossings there were on these railroad crossings or how easy they were to cross?

A. I have not been out to the locale so I couldn't tell.

[fol. 82] Q. Was any study made to determine whether these were overhead railroads?

A. I know of no overhead railroads in the area.

Q. They are all surface crossings.

A. You said overhead railway.

Q. I meant overhead crossings.

A. I have not observed this locale so I couldn't tell you whether there were surface streets across the top of the railroad or whether there were underpasses or overpasses.

Q. Or how many or what streets they were on?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to that. He didn't say that.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know how many there were, or what streets they were on?

A. By a physical observation I have not made it. However, looking on the map it is apparent that there are many streets which are crossing that particular railroad.

Q. Both of these railroads?

A. That's right.

Q. Now referring to the material contained between Pages 1 and 7 of your affidavit, were all the conclusions in that portion of the affidavit based upon this work and the studies which took place prior to the time you became associated with this project?

A. Give me a moment to look through it.

Q. Sure.

A. Certain statistics on Page 4, Item 2, Line 24, were [fol. 83] computed subsequent to the—were computed by men under my direction.

Q. Which statistics were those?

A. The total population, the areas of overlay was 104,320 if a 1.5-mile adjusted radius was used and 237,390 if a two-mile adjusted radius was used. These totals represent less than 1.6 per cent and 3.6 per cent respectively of the total population of 6,668,975 people who inhabit the Los Angeles metropolitan area as of the date of the merger.

Q. To what extent did you or people under you compute these figures?

A. The basic data was already compiled but they had not proceeded with the analysis to determine what percentage the people in the adjusted radius constituted of the total population.

Q. In other words, all you did was compute the 1.6 and 3.6 per cent; is that correct?

A. That is correct. Based on the basic data developed.

Q. But the 104,320 people in the one-and-a-half-mile adjusted radius and the 237,390 people had been computed by them.

A. This is based on the figures given in the affidavit.

Q. And they had been ascertained——

A. They had been ascertained but not totaled.

Q. So you just took their papers and totaled them up [fol. 84] without going into the basis for the adjustments; is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: In making this calculation that he is now referring to?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: In this calculation I took their figures, added up the totals, these two different draw overlap areas and made the computation.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now you have a total population of 6,668,975 people. As of what year was that the population in the Los Angeles area?

Mr. Vaughn: This was as of the date of the merger.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness.

Mr. Vaughn: The document says it.

Mr. Coyle: Q. As of the date of the merger. Is that a census figure as of the date of the merger?

A. Well, again the particular figure was developed by the staff I had and they took this from data available. I am sure that part of it came from the census, because if the census was not taken at that exact moment the figure had to be interpolated.

Q. When did the merger take place, Mr. Bouque?

A. March 28, 1960.

Q. You don't know when the last census was prior to March 1960?

A. As stated previously, I don't recall the exact date. [fol. 85] Q. Do you know whether the populations in these adjusted radii were projected from any census?

A. The figures as indicated on the chart I did not participate in the determination of.

Q. Other than that everything in this portion of your affidavit between Pages 1 and 8 is based on work done prior to the time you were associated with the project.

A. No. On Page 7, Line 13 it discusses the last overlay prepared as a basis for additional information, November 1961. I participated in an overall supervisory capacity during the gathering of the data indicated here regarding discount houses. Again Tibor Fabian was in complete charge and I was acting as liaison for the Los Angeles staff with the New York central staff for the work on the initial gathering of the data.

Q. Is there anything else in this portion of your affidavit, between Pages 1 and 8, which is based on something other than work done prior to the time that you joined the project?

The Witness: On a quick look through I cannot see any other, Bill. Do any come to your attention?

Mr. Vaughn: You are testifying, Mr. Bouque.

The Witness: Based on a review again of the affidavit, with the two exceptions noted previously—other than the two exceptions noted all the data was gathered and written up prior to my participation in the study.

[fol. 86] (A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring to Page 8 of your affidavit, you state that you have made certain statistical charts and tables and then in parentheses you refer to figures which were compiled in the manner explained in Paragraph 20, Pages 24 to 25, and in Paragraph 19, Pages 22 to 24, of the document entitled "Statement In Support Of Defendant's Proposed Exhibits." Do you have a copy of that document entitled "Statement In Support Or Defendant's Proposed Exhibits"?

A. Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: I will supply you with a copy.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Now referring to Page 24 of that document, and referring specifically to the column on Line 4 marked "Total Food Sales" and referring to the item on Line 6, of $1,303,948,000, can you tell me what products are contained in those sales?

A. I can tell you generally of the items included in the food sales would be the grocery staples, the dairy products and meat.

Q. Excuse me for interrupting. Can you define "grocery staples" for me?

A. Let me say there are the non-negotiable items, which would be groceries, I am thinking in terms again as a layman, of the canned items, dried box items and things of that nature.

Q. Excuse me again for interrupting. Would you in[fol. 87] clude packaged soap chips?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question on the ground that it assumes facts contrary to the statement which says he took this from another source, the Bureau of Census, plus certain projections.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking him what items did the Bureau of Census include in this category of total food sales.

The Witness: I would have to refer at this particular point to the actual census figures to itemize the items included by the U. S. Bureau of the Census.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What book of the U. S. Bureau of the Census did you get?

A. 1954 and 1958.

Q. Did you get the 1948 book of the Bureau of the Census?

A. No. The estimates—For the years as stated in the affidavit, for other years——

Q. Which page and which line?

A. Page 23, Line 1. "For other years total grocery store and food sales were estimated. These estimates were based on the assumption that such sales increased at an even rate between the census years 1948, '54 and '58—that such sales increased at a median rate between the census years 1948, 1954 and 1958."

Q. I ask you, did you get census figures for 1948?

A. No. The figures were estimated based on the [fol. 88] assumption that sales increased at an even rate.

Mr. Vaughn: Do you understand his question?

The Witness: Apparently I don't.

Mr. Coyle: Q. I asked you if you got census figures for the year 1948. You say you estimated them on the assumption that sales increased at an even rate between 1948, 1954 and 1958. Without being argumentative, it would seem that you would have to have census figures for '48.

A. I misinterpreted your question. I had the census figures for '48, '54 and '58, and then between these periods we assume they came at an even rate and we extended this for the period beyond the '58 census.

Q. Now my question to you is: What products were included in this total food sales for the year 1948, where you began your projection?

Mr. Vaughn: If you know, Mr. Bouque.

Mr. Coyle: Q. I am asking you if you do know.

A. I do not know precisely all the products included.

Q. Do you know the volume of the census reports in which you ascertained these figures?

Mr. Vaughn: The volume?

Mr. Coyle: Q. From what document did you get the 1948 figure that you used to begin your projection?

A. I can't tell you the exact name of the report. I would have to refer to it. I do not know the exact title at this point. There is too much time that has gone on. [fol. 89] Q. Do you know whether or not Census publishes a figure for food sales in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in billions of dollars?

A. In billions.

Q. A dollar food sale figure for the Los Angeles area?

A. For what periods?

Q. Published for 1948, 1954 and 1958.

Mr. Vaughn: May we go off the record a minute?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Does this figure which you list for the year 1954 purport to be the total food sales in the area or total food store sales in the area?

Mr. Vaughn: If you wish to have my stipulation, Mr.

Coyle, I will stipulate it is total food store sales, composed of grocery stores, delicatessens, meat markets and dairy.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness.

The Witness: I would say that the total figure there indicates the total food sales in the grocery stores at that particular period.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Which figure is this now?

A. The figures on Line 6 on Page 23.

Q. Line 6 on Page 24?

A. 24, sir.

Q. Line 6 on Page 24, the first figure indicates total [fol. 90] grocery store sales; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And the second column, is that total food sales or total food store sales?

A. Total grocery sales——

Q. That is total grocery store sales?

A. It is, as indicated on Lines 8, 9 and 10, Page 23, the list prepared shows the total list of grocery store sales and total food sales enjoyed by each of the chains.

Q. That is my question, whether or not you purport to be showing total food sales or total food store sales.

A. Let me double check my figures.

It is time that I have to break off and I can check these to be absolutely sure when we return.

Q. Before you leave let me get on the record then that I would appreciate it if you would also ascertain for us whether or not when you adjust these theoretical draw areas to find the adjusted draw areas whether you exclude all the population within the areas or whether you only exclude part of the population within the areas encompassed by the barriers in the circles.

And I would also appreciate it if you would be prepared to tell us for the years 1948, 1954 and 1958 the census figures which you used for total grocery store sales and total food sales, or whether that is total food store sales for those same years and the census source from which [fol. 91] you obtained those figures.

(Whereupon at 6:00 o'clock P.M., Tuesday, May 28, 1963 an adjournment was taken until 9:00 o'clock A.M., Tuesday, June 4, 1963.)

[fol. 92] (Whereupon, at 9:00 o'clock A.M., Tuesday, June 4, 1963, the taking of the deposition of Roy Lawrence Bouque was resumed at the same place, the following persons being present:)

APPEARANCES OF COUNSEL:

For the Plaintiff: James J. Coyle, Esq. Attorney for the U. S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, 1602 Federal Building, Los Angeles, California.

For the Defendants: Johnson, Bates & Sheffield, Esqs. and O'Melveny & Myers, Esqs. William W. Alsup, Esq. and William W. Vaughn, Esq. By: William W. Vaughn, Esq., 433 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California.

Reported by: Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R.

[fol. 93] ROY LAWRENCE BOUQUE, having been previously duly sworn, deposed and testified further as follows:

Direct examination. (Continuing)

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Bouque, have you secured figures showing the total grocery store sales and total food sales for the year 1948?

A. I have some revised figures here for the total grocery store sales and the total food store sales during the period 1950 through the first six months of 1960.

Q. You say total food store sales; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. It is not total food sales, it is total food store sales.

A. The meaning was intended to be total food store sales.

Q. And every place in your affidavit where you use the words "total food sales" you are referring to "total food store sales."

A. That's correct.

Q. What do you define as a food store?

A. A food store is as defined in the 1958 Census of Business Retail Trade, California, in Appendix I, Food [fol. 94] Stores. It is under the major group 54, which indicates that it includes grocery stores, including delicatessens, meat markets, fish markets, fruit and vegetable stores, candy, nut and confectionery stores, dairy product stores, retail bakeries manufacturing, retail bakeries non-manufacturing, egg and poultry dealers and others.

Q. Are there any stores which sell groceries and related products which are not included in the category of food stores?

Mr. Vaughn: Would you read that back, please?

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: Well, by definition the food store category in the Census indicates that these are the stores that are included in the figures presented in the exhibit. The other category includes establishments not elsewhere classified, primarily selling specialized lines of foods such as coffee and tea stores, spice shops, health food stores and so forth.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Are they included in the food store category?

A. They are included in the food store category.

Q. Department stores that sell any groceries and related products?

A. It is not indicated in here. However, by definition food stores include establishments primarily selling food for home preparation and consumption. There is not a [fol. 95] separate category spelled out. I am not able to say positively at this time just how it was categorized by the census people.

Q. My question was: Do department stores sell any groceries and related products?

Mr. Vaughn: What department stores?

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do any department stores in this area sell any groceries and related products?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as calling for a conclusion as to what a department store is.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness.

Q. Does every store which sells groceries and related products fall into that category of food stores?

A. Does every store selling groceries fall into this category?

A. Yes.

A. I assume that the stores, department stores, would not be categorized as a food store even though they might sell some specialty item.

Q. They might sell some groceries and related products?

A. They might sell—I am trying to think of the word—exotic foods and things of this nature. But this is really beyond—I would say they would not be categorized—My assumption is that they would not be categorized as a food store.

Q. But do they sell any grocery or related items?

A. Be more specific.

[fol. 96] Mr. Vaughn: You are asking if any department store in the Los Angeles area sells grocery items and related items?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: In Los Angeles what do you mean by "department stores"?

Mr. Coyle: Q. I will give you one, the Broadway. Does the Broadway sell any groceries and related products?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you ever been in the Broadway?

A. Yes. I very seldom go into the Broadway. I go into a specialty store for my clothes. I do know that some of these department stores have some of these exotic items. I cannot spell it out.

Q. Do they sell drug items that are sold in grocery stores?

Mr. Vaughn: If you know, Mr. Bouque.

The Witness: Well, here again you are taking a real broad category of items. What is a drug item? Department stores sell various kinds of items.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do they sell tooth paste?

Mr. Vaughn: Isn't that outside the issues in this case, Mr. Coyle? I will object to it on that ground.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think it is. I want to know what "total food sales" means.

The Witness: The total food sales is indicated by the census figures which spells out these particular items. It [fol. 97] goes right down the list what is included by food stores, and the census spells it out. I will reiterate, if necessary, the categories of stores that are included in their categories as food stores.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do food stores sell any non-food items?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is included in this total sales figure?

A. That is correct.

Q. Does a food store category include grocery store sales?

A. That is correct.

Q. How did you arrive at this figure $1,303,948,000?

Mr. Vaughn: For what year?

Mr. Coyle: For the year 1950 of the total food sales.

The Witness: The total food sales in the year 1950 was arrived at by taking the census figures of 1948 for total food store sales and the total food store sales from the census figures for 1954.

Mr. Coyle: Q. What was the total food store sales for the year 1948?

A. The total food store sales for 1948 in terms of thousands of dollars is 1,094,706.

Q. What was it for 1954?

A. For 1954, again in terms of thousands of dollars, it is 1,722,540.

Q. Then what was it for 1958?

[fol. 98] A. For 1958 it was 2,216,472.

Q. How did you arrive at the figure 1,303,948 for 1950?

A. To arrive at the figure we subtracted the figure for 1948 from 1954. The difference was, again, in terms of thousands of dollars 627,834, which meant an average increase per year of 104,639. And then adding this last figure to the '48 figure and each subsequent year you will arrive at the total figure for 1954.

Q. Would you repeat that average figure for me, Mr. Bouque?

A. The average increase was 104,639.

Q. Then you would add that 104,639 to 1,094,706,000; correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And adding that to this figure you would get $1,199,335,000 for 1949; is that correct?

A. Three hundred forty-five.

Q. And you get 1,303,984,000 for 1950?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you got 948 on your table, I believe.

A. That is a typographical error.

Q. It should be 984?

A. Right.

Q. That is a typographical error, you say.

A. That is correct. Because when you add the figure [fol. 99] 104,639 to the 1950 total you will come up with 1,408,623,000.

Q. Then you would add 104,639 to your 1950 figure and you would get $1,408,623,000.

A. That is correct. Doing that each year to '54.

Q. From then on you add $104,639,000 up until 1954.

A. That is correct.

Q. I was confused because of that one typo.

A. That typographical error threw you off.

Q. And then between 1954 and 1958 what figure did you use?

A. We took the figure for 1958 and subtracted the figure for 1954, and using this same technique took the average increase per year of $123,483,000 and added it to the '54 and then cumulative up to 1958.

Q. You added——

A. We added the 123,483,000, which is the average increase per year, to the 1954 figure of 1,722,540,000.

Q. What figure did you add to that?

A. We added 123,484,000.

Q. When you add this to 1,722,540,000 the figure of 123,483,000——

A. For 1954.

Q. We are talking about food store sales.

A. The figure for 1955 would be 1,722,540,000 plus 123,483,000.

Q. What does that give you?

[fol. 100] A. That would give you 1,846,023,000.

Q. And you show 1,827,734,000 on this tabulation.

A. This figure would have to be adjusted to the 1,846,023,000.

Q. Then what figure would you add to the 1,846,023,000?

A. We would add 123,483,000 to the 1,846,023,000.

Q. What would that give you?

A. It would be 1,969,506,000. And then adding the same figure, 123,483,000 you come up for 1957 with 1,092,-989,000. And then adding the 123,483,000 to the '57 figure you come up with the 1958 census figure of 2,216,472,000.

Q. So all of these figures on your affidavit are incorrect.

A. The figures have to be adjusted because the census changed—in obtaining the figures for 1958 the staff man failed to turn over a page and left out three categories, which is the difference between the 2,143,318. So this difference had to be added to that figure to come to the correct figure of 2,216,472,000. And therefore the figure has to be adjusted for the '54 to '58 period in total food sales.

Q. Total food store sales.

A. Total food store sales.

Q. What census book did you get this figure of 2,216,-472,000 from?

[fol. 101] A. We got this from the 1958 Census of Business Retail Trade of California, Page 522, Table 103.

Q. Could I see it, please?

How did you get the figure of 1,097,663,000 for the year 1950 for grocery store sales?

A. The same technique was used for arriving at the grocery store sales as for the interim years on the total food store sales. We took the figures from Table 102, Page 4—05 of the 1948 census figures, which were in thousands of dollars, 920,335. And then taking the figures in the 1954 census, which was 1,487,116, a difference of 566,781, or an average increase per year of 94,463. That figure was added to the total grocery store sales figures up through the 1954 figure, which was obtained from the census figures.

Q. Did you have any basis for assuming that the increase in food store sales would be the same each year in the period 1948 to 1954?

A. It is difficult to determine what the actual trend of the sales were between these periods. And we took the approach, because there were no figures available in intervening years, of taking an even spread in the actual dollar sales between the two years.

Q. You conducted no studies or did no research to determine whether that was a constant increase or whether it was a sporadic increase?

A. We took the available sales figures from 1948 and [fol. 102] available figures for 1954.

Q. You mean the census figures.

A. The available census figures for those two years and then because there were no census figures in between those two years, we assumed for purposes of this computation that there was an even trend. It is possible that it did not increase at an even trend for every year.

Q. Were there any recession periods in the economy during that period? Was 1951 a recession year?

A. What do you mean by "a recession year"?

Q. Economic setbacks, unemployment and average income is down.

A. I do not know exact figures. We have had problems in various years. Unemployment we have with us consistently.

So here again just how much this would affect the sales figures is entirely problematical as to your judgment. So rather than attempt to second guess what happened in each year, since people have to continue to eat, we assume an even increase for purposes of trying to identify a trend.

Q. You made no adjustments for changes in the economic picture for recessions?

A. The adjustments were made by bringing the figures into line for the two accurate figures we had. In between this time it was only a supposition.

Q. Were there any strikes in the retail food industry during the period 1948 to 1954?

[fol. 103] A. I believe—The retail trade industry I know has had a number of strikes. What happened in those specific years I do not know.

Q. Do strikes affect the total sale of groceries and related products in the area?

A. This is entirely hard to say since the people have to eat and all the stores do not go out at the same time. So people manage to get food by going to other stores.

Q. Did the consumption go down during the strike period?

A. I think this is beyond the scope of our survey, determining if people eat less during a strike period.

Q. Did the population increase less in the same period on a year-to-year basis?

A. The population has increased. I do not recall the figures offhand, whether it increased at an even base at this point.

Q. You made no inquiry into the population trends when you assumed that you had this average increase during this period of six years?

A. The population trend did increase during this period. There has been a constant influx of people into this particular area.

Q. But you don't know on a year-to-year basis whether it is consistent or whether it is sporadic?

A. I would have to look at the figures at this point. [fol. 104] To my recollection it has been thoroughly stable. Now, what is stable is something else.

Q. In 1948 food store sales were 1,094,706,000 and the grocery store sales were 920,335,000. Would it be correct to say that sales of food stores other than grocery stores were 174,371,000?

A. What was your figure again?

Q. 174,371,000.

A. That is correct.

Q. That is sales of food stores other than grocery stores?

A. Food stores other than grocery stores.

Q. And then in 1954 could you tell me what the sales of food stores other than grocery stores was?

A. 235,424,000.

Q. And then in 1958 what was the sale of food stores other than grocery stores?

A. 208,159,000.

Q. So that in the period 1954 to 1958 the sales of food stores other than grocery stores declined.

A. That is correct.

Q. How did you arrive at the figures for the years 1959 and 1960 for food store sales?

A. The food store sales for 1960 were stipulated at 2,500,000,000.

Q. What do you base that assumption on?

[fol. 105] A. This was stipulated in a court order.

Q. Which court order?

A. As per Paragraph 26 on Page 6 of the pretrial conference order.

Q. What does it say? What does that pretrial conference order say?

A. It stipulates that the level of total food store sales to be at 2.5 billion dollars.

Q. For what year?

A. For 1960.

Q. Does it say that in that paragraph in the order?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question. The paragraph speaks for itself.

Mr. Coyle: I want to know what the witness read in that paragraph.

The Witness: This particular figure was given to me by M'Melveny & Myers.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Have you ever read the pretrial conference order?

A. I have not read the pretrial conference order.

Q. So this is based entirely upon a figure that was given you by O'Melveny & Myers.

A. I base this on a figure given me by O'Melveny & Myers from the pretrial conference order.

Q. And they represented to you that the pretrial conference order stated that the total food store sales in [fol. 106] 1960 was 2.5 billion dollars?

A. They indicated to me that this was the amount agreed upon in that pretrial conference order.

Mr. Vaughn: I will so stipulate that we said that to him.

Mr. Coyle: Q. That is the only basis that you have for making these conjectures?

A. That is correct.

(A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, do you know whether household supplies are sold in grocery stores?

A. What do you mean by household supplies? If you mean cleaners and soaps and so forth, yes.

Q. That is correct.

A. Yes.

Q. Are they sold in any stores other than food stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether drugs and sundries are sold in grocery stores?

A. When you say "grocery store," are you including supermarkets and things of this nature which handle many departments?

Q. Do you include supermarkets in your category?

A. I do, yes. They do sell drugs.

Q. Are those items sold in stores other than food stores?

[fol. 107] A. Drugs are definitely sold in other than grocery stores.

Q. And sundries?

A. That is correct.

Q. Are fruits and vegetables sold in stores other than food stores?

A. They are sold but they are not at such as stands and farmers. They are not included in these figures, the census figures.

Q. Are frozen foods sold in stores other than grocery stores?

Mr. Vaughn: Now other than grocery stores.

The Witness: Other than grocery stores?

Mr. Coyles: Q. Yes.

A. Yes, they can be sold in others.

Q. Are they sold in stores other than food stores?

A. Such as?

Q. Frozen strawberries, are they sold in drug stores?

A. I have never been in a drug store that sold frozen strawberries.

Q. Is bakery goods sold in stores other than food stores?

A. I am trying to recall seeing bread in a drug store but I don't recall it.

Q. Can you buy bread at a gas station?

A. This would be a highly isolated instance. I don't [fol. 108] know whether it is done in the L.A. area. I have seen it done.

Q. You don't think gas stations sell many grocery items?

A. No, I don't.

Q. How about milk depots?

Mr. Vaughn: What about them?

Mr. Coyle: Q. Drive-in milk depots, do they sell grocery items?

A. Are you referring by "milk depots" to these new small drive-in stores that have been established on corners with access?

Q. Yes.

A. They sell a wide range of items other than milk.

Q. Are they included in the food store category?

A. I would assume that the census picked up these particular figures. If they had inquiry about them they would be picked up.

Q. How about soaps and detergents, are they sold in stores other than food stores?

A. I have seen some kind of soaps sold in drug stores.

Q. Don't most stores carry laundry detergents?

A. On some of these larger drug stores that handle a wide range of products they do carry all types of items, including soaps of all nature and the like.

Q. What were your increments between the year 1958 [fol. 109] and 1959 on food store sales?

A. On food store sales the increment between 1958 and 1959 was 141,764,000.

Q. What was it on grocery sales?

A. The increment difference between 1958 and 1959 was 149,455,000.

Q. Grocery sales?

A. Grocery store sales. That is correct.

Q. Would you give me that again?

A. The increment of grocery sales added to the 1958 figure was 149,455,000.

Q. How did you arrive at this increment of 149,000,000?

A. We arrived at this increment in the following manner: We took the stipulated total food store sales for 1960——

Q. You mean you took the sales that O'Melveny & Myers told you was stipulated.

A. That is correct. Using this figure for the first six months we divided that figure—rather we used that figure, the 2,500,000,000 to represent the entire year for 1960. We then, looking at the trend of food store sales and grocery store sales for the period 1954 to 1958, we extended the increase of grocery sales for these succeeding periods, one a full year and one a six-month period, as nine-tenths of 1 per cent increase. Because during the period 1954 to 1958 there had been a percentage increase [fol. 110] of 4.3 of grocery sales to food store sales. This is about 1.1 per cent increase per year on an average basis.

Being conservative we said that it probably increased .9 per cent for this 18-month period or, shall we say, two-year period. Then using that percentage we applied it to the stipulated figures and to the computed figure for the food store sales to arrive at the grocery store sales for those two periods.

For example, the percentage of grocery store sales to total food store sales was computed to be 91.5 for 1959. We applied this figure to the 2,358,236,000. We increased that figure 91.5 by the nine-tenths of 1 per cent to 92.4 for 1960. Applying this figure to the stipulated sales figure for total food store sales we arrived at 2,310,000,000 sales. Then taking half of that you arrive at the sales for the first six months of 1960.

Q. Have you ever made any study to determine what percentage of total sales of grocery stores and related products are accounted for by food stores?

A. The review made was based on this relationship between 1954 and 1958 figures.

Q. The question I asked you was: Have you ever made any study to determine what percentage of total sales of groceries and related products are made by food stores?

A. I reviewed these figures in the census to arrive at this conclusion.

[fol. 111] Q. Did you compute that the total food store sales is the same as total sales of groceries and related products?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as calling for a conclusion of this witness as to what groceries and related products means. I might know what it means.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know what that means?

A. I would like to keep the definition within the census context because these are the figures used to form a basis which we refer to.

Q. You are using census figures up to 1958.

A. That is correct.

Q. After 1958 you are not using census figures.

A. We are using the census figures to project the trend because the exact figures are not immediately available.

Q. You are using, in addition to the census figures, one assumed figure that O'Melveny & Myers supplied you with and represented to you to be total food store sales.

A. That is correct.

Q. And they represented that it was total food store sales.

A. That is correct.

Mr. Vaughn: And that was our understanding at the meeting of the pretrial conference.

Mr. Coyle: Q. They didn't state to you that it was total sales of groceries and related products?

A. No. They indicated——

[fol. 112] Q. Go ahead.

A. They indicated to me that the figure, the 2,500,000,000 coincided with the figures given in the census as total food store sales.

Q. The census doesn't publish any figures for total sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, does it?

A. The census provides in this retail trade area statistics, it provides the figures covering the items which I itemized earlier in this deposition.

Q. Covering types of stores, not items at all, but type of stores; isn't that correct?

A. The stores that sell this type of item.

Q. Categories of stores?

A. Categories of stores.

Q. But groceries and related products are sold by stores not in these categories, are they not?

A. I think you would have to be more specific to say what you mean.

Q. Soaps and household supplies, candies and liquor and these other items are sold by stores other than food stores, are they not?

Mr. Vaughn: Objection. It assumes a conclusion, really, that groceries and related products includes soaps, detergents and liquors.

Mr. Coyle: It doesn't assume a conclusion at all.

[fol. 113] Mr. Vaughn: It certainly does.

Mr. Coyle: Q. If I tell you the pretrial conference order defines groceries and related products as groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables and household supplies and drugs and sundries——

Mr. Vaughn: Are you reading from the pretrial conference order?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

Mr. Vaughn: May I see it, please? What is your question?

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness if any of those items are sold by stores other than food stores.

The Witness: Candy, nuts and soaps are sold in stores other than grocery stores.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Other than food stores. Are they sold in drug stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Department stores?

A. Those items are sold to the extent to which they are sold. I am not capable of saying.

Mr. Vaughn: Have we just expanded our line of commerce to include all liquor store sales and all specialty store sales?

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness a question. I am asking the witness how he assumed that a statement that [fol. 114] total sales of grocery stores and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area is the same thing as total food store sales in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Mr. Vaughn: All right. It sounds to me, though, from the import of your question, that you are now including in the universe all the drug store sales, all the liquor store sales, all sales of groceries and related products from no matter what establishments. Those figures don't have any relevance, if that is your interpretation of the line of commerce.

Mr. Coyle: I am just trying to find out what this witness did to arrive at these figures.

Q. You say you related your projected total food store sales figure to the total grocery store sales figure on the basis of a percentage of .9 something.

A. .9 per cent. It would be percentage in 1958 of grocery store sales to total food store sales, which was 90.6.

Q. In 1958.

A. In 1958.

Q. What was it in 1954?

A. In 1954 it was 86.3.

Q. In 1948?

A. In 1948 it was 84.1.

Q. Will you repeat that?

A. '48 is 84.1. In 1954 it was 86.3 and in 1958 it was 90.6.

[fol. 115] Q. You use 90.6 in your computations beyond 1958

A. Use 90.6 in our computation beyond 1958.

Q. I think we established that sales of food stores other than grocery stores in 1950 was 174,000,000.

A. What year did you say?

Q. 1950 it was 174,000,000.

A. 194,722,000.

Q. In 1954 it was 231,000,000, I think.

A. 235,424,000.

Q. In 1954 it was 208,000,000, I believe.

A. That is correct.

Q. In 1960 under your figures what would the sales of food stores other than grocery stores be?

A. Are you speaking of the first six months or the entire year?

Q. For the entire year.
A. It would be 190,000,000.
Q. So that in the period between 1954 and 1960, according to your calculations the sales of food stores other than grocery stores declined by 45,000,000; correct?
A. Approximately that figures, yes. Would you restate that question?

Mr. Vaughn: Would you read it back please, Mr. Reporter.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: 45,000,000 betweent 1950 and—— [fol. 116] Mr. Coyle: Q. 1954 and 1960.

A. That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. These tables——
A. Reflect all the figures that we have been talking about here.
Q. —which you describe in your affidavit, Pages 8 through 12, were these tables prepared under your supervision?
A. Yes, they were.
Q. And this is the work that you were repsonsible for, that is personally responsible for, as an employee of Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery?
A. That is correct.
Q. Now referring to this exhibit showing percentage of total grocery store sales by various groups of chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, you state that the source is records of companies obtained under court order; two, Los Angeles Examiner estimated sales, chain grocery stores in the Los Angeles primary area, 1950 to 1960. How did you use the Los Angeles Examiner in preparing this table?
A. To get a running start, so to speak, the Examiner publishes these sales figures referred to each year and they list about 25 to 28 stores.
Q. Chains of stores?
A. Chains of stores. Using thes figures to find the [fol. 117] stores that are in this top group, we then used the records obtained under court order from the FBI and took those figures, where they were available for the stores in the top 20. Where the sales obtained under court order did not go back to 1948, in a few instances we had to use the Examiner figures, which are based on either information they have garnered from the particular chain or their estimate of the sales based on their experience in the area.

Q. What years did you use the Examiner data?

A. We used the figures obtained under court order for practically all the figures. There were certain figures used in the 1948-50—it is in the 1948 figure a few stores were used. We used the Examiner figures.

Mr. Vaughn: He is not talking about this exhibit now, he is taking about this one.

The Witness: He said 1948. You were looking——

Mr. Coyle: Q. I am talking about this exhibit (indicating). Which years, I am asking you, did you use Examiner data?

A. I would have to refer to the detailed records to tell exactly at this particular point. I know that the figures, for example referring back to the comparison of sales from 1948 to 1960 of the 20 largest chains for the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company we had to use the Los Angeles Examiner estimated sales figures. So we had to use those Examiner sales figures in specific instances where [fol. 118] the figures had not been obtained under court order for individual stores. There were very few that we used.

Q. But you can't state now which instances?

A. I would have to go back into the detailed working papers to do it. But I know there were very few, because most of the figures were available from the records obtained under court order.

Q. Did you ever check the actual figures with the figures published in the Los Angeles Examiner?

A. Which figures are you referring to?

Q. For specific chains. Did you ever compare Ralphs figures with the Examiner's figures?

A. As I stated previously, we used the FBI figures furnished under court order whenever they were available. There were fluctuations between the figures provided by the Examiner and the actual figures obtained under court order in some instances.

Q. Now referring to this comparison of sales from 1948 to 1960 of the 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, using June 30, 1960 ranking, you list a figure for Safeway Stores of $130,000,000 in 1948. Was this figure obtained from the Los Angeles Examiner?

A. No. As stated by the letter "B," the 1948 census sales figures of the top four chains less the actual sales that were available for Ralphs, Mayfair and Von's.

Q. Where did you get the census figures for the top four [fol. 119] chains for the year 1948?

A. The top four figures, the census figures, were furnished by O'Melveny & Myers to us.

Mr. Vaughn: Do you want me to say where I got them?

Mr. Coyle: I will ask the witness.

Q. Did you know that the census has furnished total sales figures for the top four, top eight, top 16 and top 20 chains for the years 1948, 1954 and 1958?

A. Would you repeat that?

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: I did know that the figures were furnished in 1948 for the top four stores since I was furnished this figure by the O'Melveny & Myers office.

Mr. Coyle: Q. But was that the only census figure that O'Melveny & Myers furnished you?

A. That is the only census figure they furnished us for this particular table, yes. We used other figures under the court order which were obtained from the FBI records, actual sales of these particular stores.

Q. Now referring to this graph showing percentage of total grocery store sales by various groups of chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, did you know that the year 1959 was a strike year?

A. I did.

Q. Did that account for the dip in the market shares of these chains from 1958 to 1959?

[fol. 120] A. On a judgmental basis, yes, because the other stores remained open. While the major chains were tied up in the strike there would be some loss of sales.

Q. And does the graph show that in 1960 the chains had gained back their losses?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to that on the ground that the graph speaks for itself.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking the witness whether he understands that.

The Witness: The graph projects, based on the stipulated sales, the anticipated grocery sales by these stores for the entire year 1960 based on the projection of .9 on an average each year beyond 1958.

Mr. Coyle: Q. The other day, Mr. Bouque, you talked about these barriers to competition in these areas that were marked off. Did you check the records to find out whether you eliminated the entire population living beyond these barriers?

A. I checked with the people who made the estimates and basically they excluded the people beyond the barrier. I emphasized the word "basically" because there are other conditions in some cases and you have to take each one individually, as to whether with some of the people it might have acted as a partial barrier rather than a complete barrier.

Q. In every instance where they used it as a partial barrier is it so indicated in your exhibit?

[fol. 121] A. You have to analyze the situation on each individual chart. They have indicated in many of the instances that certain ones were partial barriers and that a certain pocket of people pass the barrier and so forth. Each one has to be analyzed on its own merits.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Referring to Appendix I, coming to Page 21 of your affidavit, you say, "The Long Beach Freeway forms a barrier at the border of the 1.5-mile zone on the west." Was that a complete barrier or partial barrier?

A. That was a complete barrier.

Q. There are underpasses and overpasses across the freeway, aren't there?

A. That is correct, at irregular intervals.

Q. Referring to Page 22 you state, "The Southern Pacific Railroad is a barrier to the north; the freeway is a barrier to the south; and the Alhambra Wash is a barrier to the east." Are all of those complete barriers?

A. You will have to pull out the map and analyze each one to arrive at a figure—or a judgment.

Q. You don't know as of now whether they are a complete or partial barrier?

A. Each one I cannot tell you offhand which one is complete and which one is partial.

Mr. Coyle: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

[fol. 122] Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, I show you copies of the exhibits which you prepared for O'Melveny & Myers in connection with this lawsuit and which show the various stores and your theoretical and adjusted draw areas for the stores and ask you to locate Von's Store No. 4 on those maps.

A. Here is the No. 4 store.

Q. Is this the Long Beach Freeway?

A. This is the Long Beach Freeway.

Q. You designated that as a barrier and considered it a complete barrier; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now can you find Von's Store No. 29?

A. (The witness indicated.)

Q. Now referring to the Southern Pacific Railroad, which you designated a barrier on the north, can you find it?

A. (The witness indicated.)

Q. Is that a complete or partial barrier?

A. For what area are you referring to? Are you referring to the 1.5 or the two-mile radius as a barrier?

Q. I am asking you whether you have used it as a complete or partial barrier in adjusting your theoretical draw area.

A. As indicated previously, the basic supposition was used by the people making this evaluation of the adjusted draw. The basic premise was that the natural barriers tended to form a complete barrier. But when they had to [fol. 123] look at the surrounding environment to determine where it actually became a permanent barrier or not.

For example, you will note on the overlays that just beyond the barrier are five major stores beyond the railroad, which is between these stores and Von's. And in addition there is a lack of direct access to the Von's store.

So in evaluating this one, without itemizing each individual figure, this acts as a substantial barrier for potential customers shopping at the Von's store.

Q. You look at this as a natural barrier?

A. Natural and man-made barriers. Railroads, freeways, those are man-made barriers.

Q. Did you use that as a partial barrier or a complete barrier in adjusting your draw area, or do you know whether you used it?

A. I would have to actually go over all these detailed figures on each individual case to determine whether it excluded everybody or not. As I repeated before, you took the picture as it was based on the distance of the barrier from the immediate store. Based on the competition as to whether this really acted as a complete barrier or not, whether there were roads that provided—People are not going to go across the so-called barrier and drive a circuituous route to Von's ordinarily if there are five or six stores within a very short distance of their homes. [fol. 124] If they were living right here (indicating) and they have to come down here a ways to get to Von's, they are probably going to go to these stores (indicating) unless they have a high preference for a particular store.

Q. Were any surveys made whether they had a high preference?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to that as having been asked and answered.

The Witness: This would be beyond the scope of our work of interviewing individual people.

Mr. Coyle: Q. How did you take into consideration these other stores in the area if you made no interviews?

A. This is a judgmental factor. First of all I know how we do our shopping.

Q. You personally?
A. Yes.
Q. Based upon your own experience.
A. Yes, family experience. I won't go driving a great distance.
Q. That is not much of a universe, is it?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to it as being argumentative.
The Witness: You asked for a judgment and I gave it to you.

Mr. Coyle: Q. This is the judgment that these other people made. You didn't make it.
A. This, as I stated some time ago, was an attempt [fol. 125] statistically to arrive at these draw areas around a given store. And based on observation of the maps, the barriers, the people, the way the streets flow, the way the traffic flowed, based on the streets dead ending against these particular areas, also in reading other material, where people shop, the judgment was made in each case as to what the draw should be.
Q. How much field survey did they do?
A. It was not intended that our work would be in the field talking to people. The men on the job did take several trips to some of the stores in contention. Specifically I do not know which stores but I do know they went into the area and looked at the stores and the immediate vicinity to be aware of what the area was like.
Q. Now referring to this adjusted draw area for Von's Store No. 29, is it your testimony that you would have to check your records to determine whether or not the Southern Pacific Railroad or the freeway to the south of the Alhambra Wash were used as complete or partial barriers?
A. It was my testimony that I would have to pour over the maps and come up with a judgmental figure as to how they arrived at their particular figures.
Q. Wouldn't it appear from the mathematical calculations that they made whether they excluded the entire population or part of it?
A. The drafts of the reports show the total figures. [fol. 126] The calculations are not available here in Los Angeles.

Q. Would they be in New York?

A. The staff, as I indicated earlier, who were out here working on this engagement, after gathering the data they went back to New York and wrote up the report.

Q. At the termination of the previous deposition I think I asked you to ascertain whether these were partial or complete barriers.

A. You asked me, as I understand it, what was the approach used on these barriers. As I mentioned several times, the approuch that the individuals who did this, the approach they made——

Q. I was more specific. I asked you to find out cases where they were partial or complete barriers.

Mr. Vaughn: That is completely false, according to my understanding. You asked him whether or not the barriers were regarded as complete or partial.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. That is what I want to know.

Mr. Vaughn: I didn't understand it to be a case-by-case analysis, by any manner of means. It was not my understanding at all. And in my discussions with Mr. Bouque after the deposition I so stated to him. So that was not done. I don't think you made yourself clear, if that was your intent.

Mr. Coyle: Q. I will ask you now. Could you go through this appendix or consult your records and indicate whether each of these are partial or complete barriers?

[fol. 127] A. We could go through it but it would be a tremendous job.

Q. Wouldn't the records in New York show that?

A. I would have to double check on that. A lot of these were worksheet papers. I think the better approach on this thing would be to take a look at these maps—it is going to take a long time—and take the ones that compare with the figures and see what they actually did.

Q. All right, then, you tell me now whether or not on Von's No. 29 the Southern Pacific Railroad was used as a partial barrier to the north or a complete barrier.

Mr. Vaughn: If he knows.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: I don't know offhand.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Can you tell from these maps?
A. I would have to do a lot of figuring. It is going to take some time to figure it out.
Q. Well, sit here and figure, I guess.

Mr. Vaughn. Do you intend to go store by store and have him figure each one?
Mr. Coyle: Sure. I intend to be——
Mr. Vaughn: You will be here until the trial.
Mr. Coyle: We can adjourn the deposition and let him go over to this office and sit down and do it.
Mr. Vaughn: Who is going to pay him for that work?
Mr. Coyle: He is your witness, Mr. Vaughn. He is [fol. 128] simply being deposed.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: Q. Mr. Bouque, in some instances your Appendix I indicates that you treated certain barriers as partial barriers. Do you know whether they were any instances in which you treated barriers as partial barriers and did not so state in your appendix?

Mr. Vaughn: He asked you whether you know whether there are any such instances.
The Witness: I do not know whether there are any such instances which are not mentioned in the report as I did not do the detailed analysis personally. There are several mentioned in the survey—in the appendix, but I do not know whether all of them have been enumerated.

Mr. Coyle: Q. Do you know whether there were any instances in which barriers were treated as complete barriers in preparing this Appendix I?
A. It appears that the barrier of the freeway to the west of Von's Store No. 4 was a complete barrier. But I would have to again say that I would have to compute them to be absolutely sure for purposes of swearing that that was a complete barrier. Generally they consider a barrier such as this a complete barrier and modified it based on surrounding circumstances.
Q. When you say "they," you mean the people——
A. The people who did the survey.
[fol. 129] Q. You have never rechecked their figures to ascertain whether they correctly computed these adjusted draw areas?

A. I have not completed the figures in detail, no. It would be a horrendous job to do.

Q. You didn't supervise them when they did it?

A. No. I was no way associated with the work in this initial phase of drawing the maps and so forth.

Q. Referring to Page 16 of your affidavit, did you prepare this portion of your affidavit?

A. You mean did I do the basic research work on this particular store?

Q. Yes.

A. No. This was done during the phase in which they developed the maps and this other information.

Q. When you refer to "they," who was responsible for this portion of the information?

A. Dr. Tibor Fabian was responsible for it.

Q. This hypothetical situation that he put in here?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether he based it on these various publications he lists?

A. That is correct. Each one of these figures that is indicated, such as on Page 16, the total capital required to establish such a supermarket would be $290,000, asterisk, and the source is Chain Store Age, December 1960, Page 38.

Q. Now referring to this other portion of your affidavit [fol. 130] dealing with discount houses, did you do this portion of the work yourself?

A. Let us define what you mean by did I personally. Again, the discount house work was the second phase here in October of 1961 and was under the direct supervision of Dr. Tibor Fabian. However, at this particular point I was keeping in contact with him and knew what was going on. I was in touch with this particular work.

Q. But he developed the program.

A. He developed the program, wrote the instructions for taking the counts in the store, determine the number of license numbers that should be checked with the Department of Motor Vehicles and directed the men in preparing the map which is furnished as an exhibit.

Q. What did you do with that?

A. I kept myself informed at this time because he was from our central research staff and because this had been going on over an extended period which had been unanticipated at the time. When this work came up in October I kept informed so that I would know what was going on.

Q. Did you know that you were going to sign an affidavit then?

A. At that particular time I was not aware that I would be signing an affidavit.

Q. Or that you would be a witness?

A. At that time, no.

[fol. 131] Q. When did you first learn that you were going to be a witness?

A. Before this affidavit was actually prepared, and I have forgotten the exact time. It is a few months ago when I first learned that I would be giving it since Dr. Tibor Fabian had left our firm.

Q. I am going to ask you, Mr. Bouque, to go through this Appendix I and indicate by letter or otherwise to us which were partial barriers and which were complete barriers.

A. This means every single store or are you going to take a sampling basis?

Q. I really think that when you check into it you will find that you can answer it with one sentence, that they are complete barriers unless otherwise indicated in the appendix.

A. Unless otherwise indicated. This means that I have to go through——

Q. Unless your records show the instructions. I am sure Dr. Fabian must have had some instructions as to what procedure would be followed.

Mr. Vaughn: He has made the request. We will see what we can do.

Mr. Coyle: Otherwise I have no more questions.

[fol. 132] Cross-examination.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Mr. Bouque, during our prior session of this deposition Mr. Coyle asked you what census figures you used in connection with the preparation of the maps that we have been referring to, that is what population census figures you used in connection with that portion of your study which is summarized on Page 1 through 7 of your affidavit. Have you had an opportunity since that time to determine what census figures were in fact used in that portion of your study?

A. The figures used on the census tracts was the preliminary census report for 1960. The counting was done in April of 1960. We took this preliminary report, PC(1-6).

Q. Where did you obtain these preliminary census figures?

A. The preliminary census figures for the overlay were obtained from the Los Angeles Times, who had an advance copy or the preliminary census report, which they made available to us.

Q. Have you since that time checked those census figures in general with the final 1960 census report?

A. The preliminary figures do not agree exactly with the final census figures. However, in the three, four, five or six tracts that we took the difference between the actual figures and the preliminary figures—or I should say the final report and the preliminary figures was very small.

[fol. 133] Q. If you will refer to Page 4 of your affidavit, Line 28, and to the total population figure 6,668,975, where did you get that figure?

A. That figure was from the preliminary census report which the staff working on the job obtained in August of 1960.

Q. That is the preliminary 1960 census?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Bouque, you have revised, have you not, the figures which you used for total grocery stores and total food store sales for the years 1950 through the first six months of 1960 since the first time that you signed this affidavit?

A. That is correct.

Q. And we have inserted substitute pages to reflect the changes that will be necessary in your affidavit as a result of those changes; is that not right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And those changes were based upon your second examination of census figures and computations based thereon; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. The affidavit does not include the total universe figures for total grocery store sales and total food store sales which you ltimately used in connection with the preparation of your statistics; is that right?

[fol. 134] A. The year 1948 is what you are referring to?

Q. No. The years 1950 through 1960. Those figures are not set forth in the affidavit, they are set forth in another document to which the affidavit refers; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And the figures in that other document have now been found to be inaccurate; isn't that right?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Vaughn: I wonder if we could arrange to have Mr. Bouque prepare an exhibit which would show total grocery store sales and total food store sales for the year 1950 through the first six months of 1960 and submit copies of that to the reporter so he can attach it to the deposition, to Mr. Coyle for the government and to ourselves, and then the reporter will mark that document Exhibit 1 to Mr. Bouque's deposition? If that is agreeable with counsel we will do it that way.

Mr. Coyle: That is agreeable with me.

Mr. Vaughn: Q. In other words, Mr. Bouque, you will supply the reporter and all counsel with a copy of this exhibit which will show total grocery store sales and total food store sales for the year 1950 through the first six months of 1960.

A. I will prepare a typed copy of the handwritten draft and supply that.

Q. Those will be the figures on which you based your [fol. 135] computations as set forth in your affidavit and the exhibits referred to therein; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

(The notary public after completion of the deposition was furnished by the witness the exhibit above referred to and it was thereafter marked Bouque Exhibit No. 1 for Identification and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Coyle: I have some questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Mr. Bouque, referring to Pages 22, 23 and 24 of the document entitled "Statement In Support Of Defendant's Proposed Exhibits," do these pages accurately and correctly set forth the compuations which you have used in making the revised list showing total grocery store sales and total food store sales which you are going to submit?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't understand the question. Are you asking if these figures are accurate?

The Witness: The figures on Page 24, which we will be submitting in an additional exhibit to correct the figures, were used—the corrected figures were used in preparing these exhibits.

Mr. Coyle: Q. And were the methods described on [fol. 136] Pages 22, 23 and 24 used to arrive at these corrected figures which you are going to submit?

A. That is correct.

Q. And on Pages 22, 23 and 24, when you use the words "Total food sales" you really mean "Total food store sales"?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

Mr. Vaughn: I have none.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Coyle: The government is agreeable to closing the deposition at this time subject to the understanding that the witness will attempt to ascertain whether these barriers were used as complete or partial barriers in adjusting the theoretical draw areas.

Mr. Vaughn: With the understanding that we do not now at the present time know just how far we will have to go or just what work will be required or just what records will have to be obtained in order to develop that information. All we are saying is that we will exert our best efforts to complete that job.

Mr. Coyle: With the understanding that if the witness doesn't know himself how they were used he is to try to ascertain what the people who prepared the exhibits did when they prepared them.

Mr. Vaughn: That is my understanding of what he is going to try and do.

[fol. 137] (Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Bouque, would you be agreeable to waiving the signing of the deposition if counsel for the various parties agree that your deposition without signature may be introduced in court just as if it were signed?

The Witness: I do.

Mr. Coyle: That is agreeable to the government.

Mr. Vaughn: It is agreeable to the defendant.

[fol. 138] State of California,
County of Los Angeles, ss:

I, Harold M. Leibovitz, a Notary Public within and for the County of Los Angeles and State of California, do hereby certify:

That prior to being examined the witness named in the foregoing deposition, Roy Lawrence Bouque, was by me duly sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; that the said deposition was taken down by me in shorthand at the time and place therein named, and thereafter reduced to typwriting under my direction.

I further certify that it was stipulated by and between counsel, with the consent of the witness, that the signature of the witness to the said deposition be waived, and that it shall possess the same force and effect as though read and signed by the said witness.

I further certify that I am not interested in the event of the action.

Witness my hand and seal this 6th day of June, 1963.

Harold M. Leibovitz, Notary Public in and for the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT BH

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Civil No. 336-60 C

[Title omitted]

AFFIDAVIT OF GODFREY M. LEBHAR

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

GODFREY M. LEBHAR, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am a member of the Bar of the State of New York. Since 1925 I have been the Editor-in-Chief of Chain Store Age, a monthly publication dealing with matters of interest primarily to chain store operators and managers of chain stores in all fields. Specialized editions of Chain Store Age are published to cover each of the fields in which chain stores play an important role, of which the grocery field is one. I have devoted most of my business life to reporting and interpreting chain store activities. I am the author of "The Chain Store—Boon or Bane?" published by Harper & Brothers in 1932, and "Chain Stores in America, 1859-1950," published by Chain Store Publishing Corporation in 1952. A second edition of the latter appeared in 1958, and a third edition is now in preparation for publication early in 1963.

I am the Chairman of the Board of Lebhar-Friedman Publications, Inc., publishers of Chain Store Age, Shopping Center Age and Discount Store News. I am also Chairman of the Board of Business Guides, Inc. a subsidiary of Lebhar-Friedman Publications, Inc.

Business Guides, Inc. publishes annual directories of chain stores in the United States and Canada. One of such directories covers the grocery field. It is called "Directory of Supermarket and Grocery Chains." Such directories are available for the United States and Canada as a whole or for particular States and regions. The directory covering the State of California, which sells for $12 a year, lists the chains doing business there, by county, and provides such additional information as the address of the chain's principal office, the names of its owners, officers and principal buyers, and the number of stores it operates. For the purposes of the directory, a chain is definied as a concern which operates two or more stores.

Business Guides, Inc. maintains a large research staff to keep track, from various sources of information, of the changes which occur in business covered by our directories. These directories are prepared for and used by suppliers and others whose business requires them to know the details of chain store operation. For this reason, it is necessary that our directories be accurate, and we do everything possible to see that they are. Our sales of directories and customer reaction indicate that we are doing a good job in this respect.

For the January, 1962 issue of Chain Store Age, I wrote an article entitled "Small Chain Virility a Bar to Monopoly." In this article I attempted to analyze statistics developed by Business Guides, Inc. with regard to the number, size and growth of grocery chains, both large and small, throughout the United States from 1953 to 1961. As a result of that article, I was asked by the attorneys for Von's Grocery Co. to make a similar survey and analysis of grocery chains in Los Angeles and Orange Counties—which two counties are hereafter referred to as "the area." The purpose of this affidavit is to set forth the results of that study.

Because of the reduced geographical scope of this study, the data compiled is more detailed than was practicable in the case of the nationwide study. Indeed I was able, with the cooperation of the Research Director of Business Guides, Inc., to make an actual case-history of each of the 270 chains of two or more stores which were listed for the area not only in our 1953 and 1962 directories but in each of the directories for the intervening years.

For this purpose, we first constructed a master-list identifying the 270 chains in question. Then we broke them down into four categories as follows: (a) 47 chains listed in the area in both 1953 and 1962; (b) 49 chains listed in the area in 1953 but not in 1962; (c) 71 chains listed in the area after 1953 but not in 1962; and (d) 103 chains listed in the area in 1962 but not in 1953.

The chains in each of these four categories were then broken down into four groups based on the number of stores operated by each. Group I included all chains with 2 or 3 stores in the area. Group II included those with 4 to 9 stores. Group III included those with 10 to 99 stores. Group IV included those with 100 or more stores.

A summary of the terminal data for the years 1953 and 1962, respectively is presented in the following table:

Table 1

Group	No. of Companies			No. of Stores Operated
	1953	1962	% change	1953	1962	% change
I. 2 and 3 stores.....	56	104	+86%	130	231	+77%
II. 4 to 9 stores.....	30	22	−27%	170	115	−32%
III. 10 to 99 stores.....	9	23	+155%	229	592	+158%
IV. 100 or more stores...	1	1	—	175	147	−16%
Total.....	96	150	+56%	704	1,085	+54%

The statistics contained in Table 1 indicate strongly that the existence of larger chains as shown in Groups III and IV and their growth both in number and size over the last decade has not posed any threat or deterrent to the entry and growth of other grocery concerns. It will be noted that firms with only 2 or 3 stores grew in number from 56 to 104 during the period in question. This represents an increase of 86% as compared to an increase in the number of chains with 4 or more stores from 40 to 46, or only 15%.

Furthermore, when these statistics for the area are compared with similar statistics for the United States as a whole, the vigor and growth of small chains in the area become even more apparent. Table 2, from the study which appeared in the January, 1962 issue of Chain Store Age and which has been previously referred to, gives the national picture as follows:

Table 2

Group	No. of Companies			No. of Stores Operated
	1953	1961	% change	1953	1961	% change
I. 2 and 3 stores....	2,013	2,527	+25%	4,654	5,690	+22%
II. 4 to 9 stores.....	587	616	+ 5%	3,040	3,272	+ 7%
III. 10 to 99 stores...	256	258	—	6,069	6,360	+ 5%
IV. 100 or more stores	23	25	+ 9%	14,115	15,310	+ 8%
Total.....	2,879	3,426	+19%	27,878	30,632	+ 9%

A comparison of Table 2 with Table 1 shows that whereas the number of food chains increased 19% and the number of their stores 9%, the number of food chains in the area increased 56% and the number of their stores 54%. Actually, the increases in both instances parallelled the population gain in the respective areas.

Next, from the data in our master-list, supplemented by the records of Business Guides, Inc., we followed the course of each of the 270 chains involved from their first appearance in our directories until 1962. The results are summarized as follows:

Group I (2 or 3 store chains)

Table 1 shows that in 1962 there were 104 chains with 2 or 3 stores each as compared to 56 in 1953. However, this does not mean that only 58 new chains were born in the decade. The grocery business is more dynamic than that. Our records show that at various times between 1953 and 1962, a total of 208 chains of 2 or 3 stores each were doing business in the area. This total consisted of the 56 chains noted in 1953, 5 chains which had 4 or more stores in 1953 but which had only 2 or 3 by 1962, and 143 new 2 or 3 store chains.

What happened to those 208 chains in the decade under study? As we have seen, 104, or precisely 50%, were still operating 2 or 3 stores in 1962. Seven of them had expanded and were operating 4 or more stores by 1962, and 27 were operating only one store each by that year. Therefore, 138 of those 208 concerns, or 66%, were still in business in one form or another in 1962. Of the remaining 70 chains, 12 were acquired by other concerns, and 58, or 28%, had gone out of business for reasons which our records do not reveal.

In my opinion, the fact that 147 new 2 or 3 store chains were born in the area during the last decade and that the majority of chains of that size remain in business shows that competition from larger chains does not offer any barrier to the entry and success of smaller concerns, and, moreover, that Los Angeles has seen in the past and can expect to see in the future the emergence of a significant number of new single store operations and chains to compete for the patronage of an increasing population.

The birth of 147 new 2 or 3 store chains in 10 years is indirect evidence of the prosperity of single store operators. For, while our directories do not contain information concerning grocers who operate only one store, I know from experience and from the history of grocery chains that 2 or 3 store chains do not ordinarily come into the picture fully matured in one year. Almost without exception, such chains are the outgrowth of a successful one-store operation whose proprietor is not content to remain a single store operator and who has the wherewithal to open a new store usually derived from the profits made from his first store.

Group II (4 to 9 store chains)

Table 1 shows a decrease in the number of chains in this Group from 30 to 22 between 1953 and 1962. However our records show that in addition to the 30 chains in the group in 1953, 26 chains entered the group after 1953 and before 1962. Of these 26, 6 were in Group I chains which expanded, and 20 were chains which did not exist as such in 1953.

This means that at various times between 1953 and 1962, 56 grocery chains in the area had from 4 to 9 stores. Of these 56 chains, 5 dropped into Group I by disposing of their stores, 2 became single store operators, 11 were acquired by other concerns, 8 discontinued operations altogether and 8 expanded to move into Group III, leaving 22 in Group II in 1962.

As an illustration of the growth potential of grocery chains in the area, our data reveals that the 8 companies which had expanded sufficiently to move from Group II to Group III by 1962 were operating a total of 46 stores when first listed but by 1962 had a total of 103 stores! It also shows that the 6 chains which climbed from Group I in 1953 to Group II in 1962 increased the number of their stores from 15 to 33, and that 17 other chains which came into the picture after 1953 and were operating a total of 53 stores when they were first listed were operating a total of 146 stores by 1962. Here, I believe, is graphic evidence of the virility of small chains in the area and the competitive opportunity available to them.

Group III (10 to 99 store chains)

Table 1 shows that the number of Group III chains increased from 9 to 23 in the period under study. This increase came about as follows: in addition to the 9 chains listed in 1953, 8 chains entered the Group from Group II, one chain climbed all the way from Group I, and 7 chains which were not in existence in 1953 had grown big enough to make Group III by 1962.

This makes a total of 25 chains with 10 to 99 stores each. Of these 25, however, two merged with other concerns, and thus gave us the 1962 total of 23. One of these mergers is the one under consideration in this case.

Analysis.

From the foregoing facts and statistics and the detailed study we made of the area, I draw the following conclusions:

1. The retail grocery business in the Los Angeles metropolitan area today is less concentrated and more fragmented than in 1953, as is obvious from the following facts:

a. The number of chain store competitors has increased from 96 to 150, or 56%. The number of their stores has likewise increased from 704 to 1,085, or 54%.

b. The increase has occurred in the number of both large and small chains. Chains of 10 stores or more have increased in number from 10 to 24, or 140%. Chains of 2 to 9 stores have increased in number from 86 to 126, or 46%.

c. The increase in number of competitors is highlighted by the fact that since 1953, 174 new chains were born in Los Angeles. Some of these new ventures failed; some of them were acquired by other concerns; some of them had cut back their operations by 1962; but a significant number of them succeeded, and apparently continue to prosper as independent competitive forces. Indeed, 7 of the 24 chains operating 10 or more stores each by 1962 were not in business at all in Los Angeles as chains in 1953.

2. The apparent willingness and ability of grocers to expand and create new chain entities at the staggering rate of more than 17 a year, and the growth potential of new chains, precludes in my opinion the possibility that the retail grocery business in Los Angeles will become either monopolistic or oligopolistic in the foreseeable future. It must be remembered that in 1953, only 10 chains with as many as 10 stores each were operating in the area. These chains are recognized as being among the best managed, most successful and most aggressive supermarket operators in the country. They themselves have engaged in expansion programs of significant proportions since 1953. Yet, 10 years later, instead of having swept aside all competition and being left alone to compete among themselves, these same 10 chains are now faced with the necessity of competing against no less than 14 new chains of 10 or more stores each, a significantly greater number of smaller chains and a host of successful single store operators, of whom many are affiliated with powerful voluntary chains or other cooperative groups.

Moreover, if the past in any way foretells the future, it is obvious that today's small chains and independents will, in many cases, respond to the urge to expand. In such circumstances, it seems inescapable that competition will become even more vigorous in the area, that more entities will be competing and that there is and will be no threat of domination of the market by one or a few firms.

3. The growth of independents into chains and of small chains into larger ones, as reflected in the studies which have been summarized herein, demonstrates convincingly that small concerns don't have to remain small in Los Angeles. If there were any kind of built-in disadvantage by reason of smaller size, the dramatic history of growth expansion and prosperity which is documented herein would not have been recorded.

Deposition of GODFREY M. LEBHAR, a witness, taken by libellant pursuant to notice, at the offices of Lebhar-Friedman Publications, Inc., 2 Park Avenue, New York 16, N. Y., on May 16, 1963, at 10:00 a.m., before Laurence H. Hennefeld, a Shorthand Reporter and Notary Public of the State of New York.

[fol. 2] APPEARANCES:

James J. Coyle, Esq., and Malcolm F. Knight, Esq., Assistant United States Attorneys Proctors for libellant, Federal Building, Los Angeles 12, California.

Messrs. O'Melveny & Myers, Proctors for respondent Von Grocery Co., 433 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California. By: William W. Vaughn, Esq., Advocate.

It Is Hereby Stipulated and Agreed, by and between the proctors for the respective parties herein, that the signing, sealing, filing and certification of the within deposition be waived.

It Is Further Stipulated and Agreed that all objections, except as to form, are reserved to the time of trial.

GODFREY M. LEBHAR, called as a witness by libellant, being first duly sworn by the Notary Public (Laurence H. Hennefeld), testified as follows:

Examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

[fol. 3] Q. Mr. Lebhar, would you state your full name and address for the record, please?

A. Godfrey M. Lebhar, office address 2 Park Avenue, New York.

Q. Are you affiliated with an organization known as Business Guides, Inc.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your position with that organization?

A. I think I am chairman of the board.

Q. What is the business of Business Guides, Inc.?

A. Publishers of business directories.

Q. Do these directories purport to be a census?

A. What do you mean by a "census"?

Q. An actual count of business firms.

A. That is not the purpose of them, but that is in effect what it is.

Q. What is the purpose?

A. The purpose of it is to provide the names and addresses and other details of the names included in the directory.

Q. How do you ascertain the names to include in——

A. Oh, we have many ways.

Q. Would you name those ways, please?

A. Yes. We have—you see, this business guide is a sub- [fol. 4] sidiary of Lebhar-Friedman Publications, of which I am also the chairman, which publishes a trade magazine, Chain Store Age. So, Business Guides has access not only to such data as our publications compile, but also the services of our field staff of subscription solicitors who travel the whole country the whole year round on a full time basis getting subscripitions for our magazines. That is one source of information. We will call that the field force.

Q. What other sources do you have?

A. We have trade publications, newspapers——

Q. What trade publications?

A. Grocery trade publications, as far as this particular field is concerned.

Q. Could you name the trade publications?

A. Why, there are so many I couldn't begin to name them all by names. All the leading trade publications. Supermarket News, Progressive Grocer, local retail grocery papers, so far as the grocery field is concerned. I am confining my answers largely to the grocery field now because we are interested in the grocery field, department store field and other fields too.

We have access in many cases to the membership lists of what are known as voluntary chains or cooperative [fol. 5] groups from which we can cull the names of chains.

After all our directories aren't interested only in——

Q. How many cooperative groups are there in the U. S.?

A. Oh, I would imagine—I am guessing now because I haven't made any real count of this recently. When you speak about cooperatives are you separating them from voluntary? There are two separate kinds.

Q. First voluntary cooperatives.

A. Well, I would say in the area of at least a thousand.

Q. How many of these do you have access to their records?

A. I couldn't tell you offhand. I don't personally compile these records, you understand.

Q. You don't personally compile these statistics?

A. No, we have a staff of 20 or 30 people, a full time staff doing this work.

Q. What is your relationship to the staff?

A. I am the chairman of the board of the company. I am the editor-in-chief of the publications.

Q. Do you have any statistical training?

A. No.

Q. Did you have any experience in statistical gathering [fol. 6] or statistical work before coming to this——

A. Only self-taught, I would say. After all, I have been publishing Chain Store Age since 1925, 38 years, in the course of which we have had to publish a numerous selection of data in our publication. I am not speaking about directories, so I have constantly had the responsibility of supervising the work of those who actually do the compiling.

Q. You mean the writers and the reporters?

A. Writers, reporters, our research department. We have a research department.

Q. When did you organize your research department?

A. Well, it may not have been called a department. We always had somebody here that was competent to do research work.

Q. Do you have a research department?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you organize the research department?

A. Probably four or five years ago we called it a department—no, it is longer than that. We have had it for about 11 or 12 years. The head of it has just retired and left us. I know he was with us 10 or 11 years so we have had it at least as long as we have had him.

Q. Does he have a pretty free hand in conducting the [fol. 7] research of his department?

A. Fairly free hand, yes.

Q. You leave it up to his judgment as to what to do?

A. Yes. He was a man of great background, graduate from the school of—Harvard School of Business, Yale University. That was his field.

Q. Rather than your field, it was his field?

A. I am talking about his particular job. I don't do the job of everybody in this organization, naturally.

Q. Business Guides publish directories. Do they publish directories for chain stores?

A. Yes, that is all they publish.

Q. Just for chain stores? When did the Business Guides first start publishing a directory of supermarket and grocery chains?

A. Well, the business was started by an individual before it became affiliated with us, and his experience goes back I believe to 1936.

Q. When did it become affiliated with you?

A. Oh, about 17 or 18 years ago.

Q. Referring to the Los Angeles metropolitan area, how large a field force do you have out there?

A. We only have one circulation man.

Q. One circulation man?

[fol. 8] A. Who covers the area.

Q. What area does he cover?

A. California.

Q. The whole state of California?

A. Yes.

Q. What are his duties?

A. To solicit subscriptions.

Q. To your magazine?

A. Yes.

Q. Does anyone subscribe to your magazine other than a grocery chain?

A. Oh, yes. I mean if an independent wanted to subscribe—we don't solicit the subscriptions from other than grocery chains but we don't deny anybody that wants to buy it.

Q. Do suppliers also——

A. Certainly.

Q. How many subscriptions do you have in the State of California?

A. Oh, I couldn't break it down that way, although our ABC Report which gives a complete breakdown of our circulation would give the exact data. If you want it I can get it from our circulation department.

Q. What would the ABC report show?

[fol. 9] A. It would show the number of subscribers to each of our various editions. You know we publish Chain Store Age in various editions. One for grocery store chains, variety store chains, drug store chains, restaurant chains and so forth. It would show the total circulation for each of those editions, specifically now the supermarket and grocery edition. It would give you a breakdown by states of the number of subscribers in each state, it would give a breakdown of classifications of what businesses they are in, whether they are store managers, store executives, independents, voluntary chains, manufacturers, miscellaneous, and so forth.

Q. When you set up the directory of supermarket and grocery chains for a given year, what specific data do you put into the directory?

A. Well, this is a continuous operation. For instance, we have just got off the press our 1963 directory of supermarket chains. Right now we are starting to compile the material, day by day, from all the sources from which we get such material, to be used when we go to press at the end of this year. This is to cover current changes that come to our attention from any source, to verify the material we had in the last edition, and then long before we get ready to go to press we send questionnaires to every chain listed [fol. 10] in the directory with a clip out of the material we published in the last edition, ask them to make any changes or corrections or additions.

That would go to the big chains with the list of all their buyers and so forth and even to the fellow of two or three store chains.

Q. Do you ask them to return those lists to you with the questions?

A. Yes, it is a questionnaire they fill out. We ask them for the locations of each of their stores.

Q. Do they return the questionnaires if there is no change?

A. Well, I wouldn't say they all do, no.

Q. How many questionnaires did you send to the Los Angeles metropolitan area last year?

A. Well, that I can't answer of my own knowledge because I didn't take care of that.

Q. You don't know that?

A. No.

Q. You wouldn't know then what percentage of response you got from those questionnaires?

A. Well, no, I don't know. To answer specifically I don't know what percentage. I think it is a very great percentage, but in the case of those who do not respond we then use [fol. 11] the telephone, we keep after them until we get whatever information is available. We don't rely exclusively on the questionnaire, of which I believe there are two or three mailings at intervals before the final date.

After we get no reply from a company, and I understand we never fail to get a reply from all fair-size companies, like Safeway or Alpha Beta or anything like that, they give us complete information to go in our directories.

Are you familiar with our directories?

Q. No. Do you have a directory? Maybe we can look at them.

A. Yes. This is the 1962 directory which forms the basis for the data in my statement. You see it is arranged geographically.

Q. You publish the Chain Store Age and Chain Store Directory, grocery chain store. Do you also publish a drug store chain directory?

A. Yes.

Q. What other types of directories do you publish?

A. We publish a department store directory, restaurant directory, variety store directory, a directory of cooperative and voluntary chains, a directory of discount store houses.

Q. How do you determine what constitutes a grocery [fol. 12] chain?

A. Of course, we have no other than the ordinary understanding, census understanding. A store with more than 50 per cent of its gross—of its sales are in groceries or predominantly groceries.

Q. Do you ask these people what——

A. No, I don't know whether we ask them that so specifically, but we don't have to ask Safeway whether they were a grocery firm, do we?

Q. No——

A. These things are common knowledge.

Q. I was thinking of Louis Stores, Inc., Bay Shore Station, Oakland.

A. Well, we have the basis of our original report. It comes from a field man. He will say, "A grocery store has been opened at such and such an address by so and so and he has a second store which is opening next week."

From that basis we conclude he is a chain.

Q. If he acquires a second store?

A. Yes, I say if he opens or acquires another store. We wouldn't put him in until he has two stores.

Q. How would you determine whether he is a grocery store or a butcher shop, for example?

A. If it were a butcher shop we wouldn't put it in. It all [fol. 13] depends upon the source from which we get it. If it is by visit, on actual visit, we rely upon our own salesmen who knows what kind of a store he is in. If it is a newspaper clipping—incidentally, I didn't mention among our sources we have a very big newspaper clipping service, and if a newspaper clipping from a local newspaper says that, "John Jones opened his third grocery store at such and such a place," we do take that—we don't take it for granted because we then send a questionnaire to the address.

We don't pick up these things by hearsay. We write to the company direct, to the individual direct. I assume that if he didn't have a grocery store why he would say, "I am in the drug store business," or whatever business he is in. There is nothing mysterious about that.

Q. What percentage of responses do you get on these questionnaires that you mail?

A. I think a great percentage.

Q. Do you know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Does anybody here know?

A. Yes, I imagine so. The man that supervises the preparation of the mailing, Mr. Torpy, the head of the research department of the Business Guides.

Q. You don't know?

[fol. 14] A. No.

Q. What newspapers do you clip in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. All of the newspapers. We don't clip them ourselves. We subscribe to clipping service bureaus who clip local newspapers all over the country for us. Several clipping services.

Q. What services are they?

A. Well, I haven't had much contact with them myself, but—I mean in recent years, but I think Luce is one of them. That is one of the big ones. I don't know who the others are.

Q. You say that one of your sources of information are the cooperatives. What cooperatives do you get information from in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Oh, I think—I know we have got it from Certified.

Q. What kind of information would you get from Certified?

A. A list of their members.

Q. A membership list?

A. Yes, and also Spartan's which is a subsidiary.

Q. What information do you get on that membership list?

A. Only the—all that we are interested in is whether the [fol. 15] same man has more than one store.

Q. That appears from the information——

A. The membership. His name appears. It will give us the name of the man, John Jones, and if we have John Jones in two different addresses, why we use that as the basis for sending a questionnaire to him. Don't forget, the information we get is not picked up and used just as we get it. We use that as the basis for further inquiry. We keep a card index of every name that is in that directory and all of the other directories. We have a case history of every one of those companies from the time they first appeared, came to our notice.

Q. You say you have a field force of one man in California?

A. I said our field subscription man, yes.

Q. What is his name?

A. Offhand I couldn't tell you.

Q. Where is he located?

A. He probably works from Los Angeles.

Q. Do you know him?

A. I can find out. I don't know offhand. We have a staff of so many people I don't remember the names of them.

Q. Do you have a subscription man in Oregon?

A. I don't know. It could be a man from San Francisco [fol. 16] could cover that.

Q. Do you have a man in San Francisco?

A. I don't know. I will have to check those things. We only have 12 altogether covering the country.

Q. The same man covers the whole State of California?

A. Yes, and possibly the other western states. I mean the Pacific coast states.

Q. He might be located in San Francisco rather than Los Angeles?

A. I think—it might be, yes.

Q. Might he also cover states like Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it be correct to say that your directory, insofar as it relates to the Los Angeles metropolitan area, is based upon information which you get from this one subscription man, from the newspaper clipping service and from the membership lists of Certified and Spartan?

A. No, it wouldn't, because that wouldn't include the newspaper clipping services——

Q. I mentioned the newspaper clipping services.

A. Did you include trade papers?

Q. No, I didn't. We haven't talked about trade papers [fol. 17] A. I mentioned before, Supermarket News.

Q. What do you get from trade papers?

A. The opening of new stores.

Q. The opening of new stores by the major chains. If John Jones acquires a small grocery store in an adjacent neighborhood, it is likely it would not be noted in the Supermarket News?

A. If it isn't noted we wouldn't get it. We only get what is noted, and that applies to trade papers, newspapers or any other source. What appears in these books is what we do get. I can't tell you what we dont' get.

Mr. Vaughn: You also didn't mention the questionnaires which he has testified to.

The Witness: That is to verify the leads. Let's call all this stuff what we have talked about as providing leads for entries in our books. We follow them up in various ways by questionnaires, and so forth. Once they appeared in our book in one edition we don't let them get away very easily without finding out whether they should appear in the next edition. The first step, as I said, is to send a questionnaire two or three months before.

That is followed up, I believe, in reasonable time, maybe six weeks later, by a second questionnaire.

[fol. 18] If that fails to bring in the response on way or the other we use in important cases long distance telephone. We have to in the case of California.

Q. If you don't get a lead you can't send a questionnaire?

A. That is right.

Q. The leads come from the field force, from the trade publications, from the newspaper clipping service and from Certified and Spartan?

A. Well, there may be other—I am quite sure there are other voluntary chains and cooperatives operating in that area.

Q. Which ones?

A. I don't know them but I say there are others operating in California and Los Angeles.

Q. You don't know whether they make their records available to you or not?

A. I don't know, no.

Q.Have you ever made a tabulation of the number of chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area based upon your statistics or your directories for anyone other than the defendants in this case?

A. No.

Q. This is the first time you have done this?

[fol. 19] A. Yes. That is right.

Q. Have you ever made a tabluation in terms of the total number of stores or chains in the United States for anyone other than the defendants in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. For whom have you done this?

A. Well, we have done it. We haven't done it for anybody else. I made a study of the national situation to publish in Chain Store Age, and it appeared in January 1962. That was the basis for the request which came from Von's for us to make a specific study covering the Los Angeles area. If we could make a similar study as the one we published in January 1962, they thought it would be useful to them in this case.

Q. What years were covered by the Chain Store Age article?

A. 1952 to 1961.

Q. For every year?

A. No, just the terminal years. We took the 1953 directory and analyzed it and broke it down and compared it with the 1961 directory for Los Angeles, which first came later on, the study was made later.

We were able to use 1953 as the starting point but in that case we took all the intervening years too. We made [fol. 20] a study of each directory from 1953 to 1962 inclusive. That is a ten year span, so each—the directory for each of those years for the Los Angeles and Orange Counties was analyzed and compiled into a master list.

Q. You say "for 1953." When you referred to 1953, which directory do you use?

A. I am using—those references are to directories. They would really refer to the previous year. In other words, the 1953 directory would reflect the conditions that prevailed in 1952, and so would the 1962 directory, it would relate to the data we compiled during 1961.

Q. Would it be fair to say that essentially this Table 1 in your affidavit actually reflects 1952 through 1961?

A. That is right. 1953 to 1961, that is correct.

Q. 1952 and 1961?

A. I beg your pardon.

Q. It would be 1952 and 1961?

A. That is correct. Let me correct my answer regarding the national study. The first year was the same. The 1953 directory was it. The 1961 was different in the Los Angeles study.

Q. That Table 2 would actually reflect 1952 and 1960?

A. That's right.

[fol. 21] Mr. Vaughn: You are now referring to Table 2 in Mr. Lebhar's affidavit, are you not?

Mr. Coyle: Correct.

Q. How many subscribers did you have in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in 1962?

Mr. Vaughn: Subscribers to what?

Mr. Coyle: Grocery Chain Store Age.

A. I couldn't tell you offhand and I wouldn't guess a number. We have it in our ABC report which is the audit by the ABC Bureau, and that is correct.

Q. Is that broken down by Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Oh, no. I though you were referring to California.

Q. Do you have a record broken down by the Los Angeles metropolitan area that would show your total number of subscribers in the area?

A. It could be that our circulation department arranges its addresses by cities. I think it probably does, but that would have to be obtained. I wouldn't have that.

Q. Does it ever happen that you will get a new subscriber and find that he has been a chain for ten years?

A. Well, I suppose it could happen. I don't know that it ever has.

Q. That would be a new lead? Would it ever happen [fol. 22] that he had been a chain for two or three years?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to your question as speculative.

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether you ever get subscriptions from people who have been chains for a number of years?

A. Put it the other way and I think you have the answer. We don't have a subscription today from many a chain that is in existence. I wouldn't say "many," so naturally when we do get the subscription for the first time we are getting a subscription—we are talking about a magazine now—from a chain which had been in existence for a number of years before we got it.

Q. You also get new leads when you get these new subscriptions?

A. That is true.

Q. Have you ever revised any of your directories to show these chains which were actually in existence but you didn't have a lead on them?

A. They were probably in the directory long before we got the subscription. We use the directory information for the basis of getting subscriptions.

Q. Do you get subscriptions from chains that weren't in your directory and had been in existence?

[fol. 23] A. It could happen, but I don't know.

Q. You don't know whether or not you do?

A. I don't know whether or not we ever got a subscription from a chain which had been in existence for some time whose name did not appear in our directory. I don't know that that ever occurred.

Q. You don't know one way or another?

A. No, I don't know that it did or it didn't.

Q. Do you know what percentage of all the chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area appear in your directory?

A. Well, we hope that they all do. When you are talking about chains you are talking about two or more stores, aren't you.

Q. Yes. But you never made a door to door canvass or area canvass to determine what percentage of coverage you had in your directories?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as assuming a fact not in evidence, namely that not all of them are in the directory.

Mr. Coyle: I will rephrase the question.

Q. Have you ever made a door to door canvass or census in the Los Angeles metropiltan area to determine whether you have all of the chains in the area in your directory?

A. No, we haven't.

[fol. 24] Q. In this study that you made for the defendant Von's Grocery, I believe you said that you had made it for every year between—you have listed 1953 but that is really 1952—and 1961. I wonder if you could tell me the number of chain stores in operation in the Los Angeles metropolitan area for each of those years starting with 1953.

A. I am afraid I will have to do some work on it. I've got the master list but we would have to add them all up. You see what we did, the first thing we did when we undertook this job was to analyze the directories for each year from 1953 to 1962, inclusive, listing from each directory the names of all chains in the area with two or three stores. They were ten separate lists. Those ten separate lists were then amalgamated to give us that master list.

Q. What were those ten separate lists?

A. Ten separate directories. The question you have just asked me was as to whether I could give you the total number of chains for each of those intervening years. Well, we didn't add them up because it wasn't required for these tables.

Q. What do these figures indicate here, "3/3"?

A. That means three stores of which three were supermarkets. The first figure is the number of stores. It wouldn't necessarily all be supermarkets. They could have [fol. 25] a small store.

Q. What do you define as a supermarket?

A. Our definition has changed through the years as the market has changed. I believe for our directory purposes we don't regard as a supermarket a store that does less than $10,000 a week, which would be $520,000 a year. If it's volume is less than that we would not regard that as a supermarket.

Q. Do you apply the same definition in every part of the country?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Have you observed a trend toward larger and larger supermarkets in the United States?

A. Very definitely.

Q. Have you ever compared your count on the number of chain stores in a given area to Bureau of Census figures?

A. No, I haven't. I mean—in this connection, you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Have you ever compared your count with any source material or any reference material to determine its accuracy?

A. If you are asking me in connection with this study [fol. 26] that I made, no, because the sole purpose of this study was to take the data we had, analyze it and report what it showed. That is all we did. We didn't go beyond that.

Q. It showed the total number of listings that you had based upon the leads which you got from this one man field force, from the trade publication, from the newspaper clippings and from the cooperatives?

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question as improperly summarizing the evidence and asking this man to trace a half hour's evidence and summarize it in one question, which you tried to do before.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking him what sources of leads he has.

Mr. Vaughn: You have asked him before. The question has been asked and answered at least twice before.

Q. Did you understand the question?

A. I'd like him to repeat it.

(The question was read.)

A. (Continuing) Not entirely from that. We have other sources.

Q. What other sources?

A. Information that comes to us from people in the trade.

[fol. 27] Q. From word of mouth, you mean?

A. Yes, word of mouth. We have Dun and Bradstreet's reports, which we check. One thing I didn't mention which takes a lot of space in our organization here, we have the telephone directories from every little community throughout the United States, including not only the A. T. & T. directories, but even the independent telephone companies. Not only A. T. & T. telephone, the big companies. We go through that with a fine-tooth comb.

Q. Go through what?

A. The telephone books, to check names and addresses and telephone numbers because you will find that our directories include the telephone numbers.

Q. I am looking at page 4 of your tabulation, a notation showing that a chain of four stores called the Desert Fair first appeared in your 1956 listing.

Would you make any check in that situation to determine whether or not that chain may have been in existence prior to the first listing?

A. No, we would have no occasion to do that because, after all, the directory we had published for previous years was already in existence. We couldn't change it.

Q. If that firm had been in existence your previous years would have been understated?

[fol. 28] A. That is quite correct.

Q. Another instance. Fine's Food indicates four stores in 1956 and no previous indication of any stores, and Foodland Markets indicates four stores in 1955, no previous indications.

Mr. Vaughn: Is that part of a question?

Mr. Coyle: I am just saying that is so.

Mr. Vaughn: I would move to strike Mr. Coyle's testimony in that respect.

Q. Referring to page 6 of this work paper and calling your attention to the notation for Garvey Markets, could you tell me what that notation indicates to you?

A. That in the 1954 directory we listed Garvey Markets with five stores, including two supermarkets.

Q. Do your directories or your records indicate whether Garvey Markets was in existence as a chain prior to 1954?

A. Neither prior nor subsequently. If it is not listed in our book we have no information about it.

Q. Did your follow-up questionnaire indicate what happened to Garvey Markets?

A. That I couldn't answer about a specific case.

Q. Would it be shown on this master list if it had indicated what had happened to them?

A. No. The fact that it does not appear in a subsequent [fol. 29] edition of the directory is reflected in my comments on the disappearance of some chains that are included in this entire list of 270 companies represented in this list

Q. You would assume that Garvey Markets is out of business?

A. We assume. We have no information, and I so state in my affidavit. We have to assume where we could get no further information from them, or in some cases, further work sheets would show in some cases that we did receive information that they liquidated or sold their stores.

Now, it could be that in that particular case I can give you the answer. Garvey Markets. We have no information as to what became of them. Our records do not disclose.

Q. May I see this document you have just referred to?

A. This is a breakdown of all this material.

Q. You would assume in the case of Garvey Markets that Garvey Markets came into existence in 1954 and went out of existence in the same year?

A. I would not assume that at all. I would assume that in preparing our directory for 1954 we had information that Garvey Markets was operating five stores, of which two were supermarkets. Whether that information was correct or not I don't know. It came from the same way we get most of our information stuff, which is 99¾ correct, [fol. 30] we believe, and from then on we don't know what happened.

Q. You used the term "99¾ correct." You made no statistical study?

A. No, I am using that——

Q. In a layman's sense, not in a statistician's sense?

A. Only by—let's put it this way. We assume that our lists are correct to a very great percentage otherwise we wouldn't sell $500,000 worth of these directories every year.

Q. Your total sales are $500,000 a year?

A. Yes, for the directories.

Q. Does that include your drug store directories?

A. Other drug store directories too, department stores, all of them.

Q. How much do the directories cost?

A. I think this grocery one—they vary in price. You will find it in the front of the book. It is $40. The department store one would be $50. It depends really upon their thickness, but I think we publish no directory that costs less than $25. That is for the nation. We also publish directories taken from the national for individual states, and they may sell for $2 or $3 or $12.

Q. They all go into this $500,000 total?

A. That's right.

[fol. 31] Q. How many grocery directories do you sell in a year?

A. Well, I'd have to hazard a guess. We have the actual number, of course, but I would say probably 3,000.

Q. 3,000 directories?

A. Yes.

Q. In the whole United States?

A. Yes.

Q. How many directories would you say in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. I don't know. We don't sell them to chains, don't forget. We sell them to suppliers. The directories are not sold to chains. The chains themselves are not interested in having a directory of chains. We sell them only to manufacturers and suppliers.

Q. When you referred to the 3,000 that you might sell in the grocery trade, was that including these various state directories?

A. Yes, that is an innovation of only the last two or three years and I don't think those individual state sales amount to more than a few thousand dollars a year.

Q. Could you get for us a count of your total subscription list in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. You are speaking of Chain Store Age now.

Q. For Grocery Chain Store Age.

[fol. 32] A. Yes.

Q. I would like that for every year covered by your study so we will see the movement. The first year and the last year.

Mr. Vaughn: You want the number of subscriptions he has to Chain Store Age?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, by grocery chains.

The Witness: I couldn't get it for Los Angeles. Again I was thinking of states because the ABC statement is broken down by states.

Q. Let's get it for California.

A. For California, and I will see how far back we can go.

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know that I see the materiality of that.

A. I have found for 1962, the 1961 and 1960.

Q. Are those the only years you have them for?

A. Well, we have them but I thought after you see what it is it may not be useful to you at all. I don't know. I see in California we had 3941 subscriptions in the year ending 1962. For the year 1961, California subscriptions amounted to 4080. That one will indicate what it was for 1960.

Q. For the record, would you state what it was for 1960? [fol. 33] A. Yes, 3967.

Q. Referring to this document which you have identified as an ABC report which is marked "For the six months ending December 31, 1960," could you again tell us how many subscribers to your grocery edition of Chain Store Age you had in State of California?

Mr. Vaughn: To which I will object on the grounds of irrelevancy. It doesn't seem to me that subscriptions to Chain Store Age have any relevance to this question at all.

Mr. Coyle: I think it will prove to be relevant.

A. The number of paid subscribers we had in California for the November 1960 issue was 3967. You will note a comment here that this is not an average of the circulation for six months, because, naturally, it does vary, and the notation further says that "Total paid circulation of this issue was .10 per cent less than the average total paid circulation for the period."

Q. Referring to the ABC report for the six months ending December 31, 1961, could you tell us what your paid circulation was?

Mr. Vaughn: Same objection.

A. I would like to state first for clarification that ABC [fol. 34] stands for Audit Bureau of Circulations, which is a national organization supported by national advertisers, advertising agencies and publications for the purpose of taking an audit of the circulation of publications which bases their advertising rates on their claimed circulation.

This is an outside auditing organization for which those publications who are willing to submit to it have to pay a very substantial fee to send in their auditors once a year or twice a year and make a complete audit of all the subscriptions we claim to have, how many are in arrears and how many are truthfully paid. Answering your question, I would say that the circulation, the paid circulation of the November 1961 issue of the grocery edition of Chain Store Age in California was 4080.

That, according to the notation of the audit was .28 per cent less than the average total circulation for the six months period.

Q. Now I wonder if I could trouble you to get the ABC reports for 1953 and 1954?

A. I'll see if I can get them. I don't know whether he has got those back that far. He probably has his original working papers if he doesn't have the blue sheets. ABC has nothing to do with the sales of our directories so we don't have any such records of that at all. All we would [fol. 35] have would be total sales of directories for each year as a business report, but we certainly wouldn't have it broken down by Los Angeles and it would have no relevance because they are sold to suppliers.

Q. Your leads come from your subscription lists?

A. No, only partially.

Q. I know.

A. Partially.

Q. It does come partially from your subscription list?

A. Partially.

Mr. Vaughn: When you say "subscription list," you are meaning subscription list to the magazine Chain Store Age?

Mr. Coyle: I want to ask the witness that question.

Q. The leads that come from your subscription list, what subscription list do they come from?

A. Chain Store Age Grocery list.

Q. That is where your leads come from?

A. Yes. In other words, our directory division has access to all the data that the publications compile, which would include new subscriptions. In other words, it is one organization and all the data that one compiles is available to the other.

[fol. 36] Q. Then I do want what I originally said, your subscription, your total number of paid subscriptions in the years 1952 and 1953, if you could get them for us.

Mr. Vaughn: I don't think you have to do that, Mr. Lebhar. I don't see the materiality of it and if you know from your own knowledge whether they were greater or less or what they were, you can answer the question.

Mr. Coyle: Let him get it. It will only take him a minute to get it. We are here——

Mr. Vaughn: No.

Mr. Coyle: The witness has testified that this is one of his sources of leads, and I just wanted to see how big a source of leads it was in 1952.

Mr. Vaughn: Maybe you can——

A. I could hazard a guess that it probably isn't five per cent source of our leads.

Q. It is not five per cent of the source of your leads?

A. Less than five per cent. I would hazard that guess. It is a very minor source of leads. After all we don't get so many new subscriptions in the course of a year.

Q. How much of your subscriptions go up during the period 1952 and 1962 in the Los Angeles area?

A. That I wouldn't say offhand.

[fol. 37] Q. They have been increasing?

A. Oh, yes. Whether in this particular state or not, I don't know, but I would say our total circulation has increased every year since we have been in business.

Q. There is no reason to suppose that it hasn't been increased in California?

A. I would be pretty sure it has.

Q. And in the Los Angeles area?

A. Yes. Except, in one particular—let me qualify that. You see, we publish our grocery edition in two editions; one for store managers and one for executives.

One we call the Executive Edition and the other the Store Manager Edition. Through the period of years we have been discussing, the number of chain stores has declined and therefore the number of copies going to store managers would tend to decline over that period.

Q. The number of chain stores has declined?

A. Certainly.

Q. In the Los Angeles area?

A. Yes.

Q. You say in the period between 1953 and 1962 the number of chain stores in the Los Angeles area has declined?

A. Well, probably not in the last ten years. I was going [fol. 38] back. I mean with the trend toward biggers stores, the number of grocery stores has declined, and that has had some effect on the number of copies going to chain units.

Now, it could be that that trend has changed so that in 1962 compared with 1953, a particular chain might have almost as many units as it did in the previous time. In some notable cases like Safeway we know that they have fewer units in the Los Angeles area than they had in 1952.

Therefore, the number of copies of the managers' edition that goes to Safeway managers would be fewer today than it was then.

Q. Those copies that go to managers wouldn't be a lead for you anyhow because you already have Safeway?

A. No, that is why I say the leads that we get from our subscriptions are relatively unimportant.

Q. They are five per cent of your leads, you say?

A. I say I don't believe they would exceed five per cent.

Q. What per cent of your leads would you get from the trade publications?

A. Well, I am not going to attempt—that would be pure speculation. I don't know. I don't do the work myself.

[fol. 39] Q. Wasn't it speculation when you said "five per cent"?

A. I did say it was speculation. I said I would hazard a guess, and that is only a guess. It is not an accurate figure.

Q. It would be specultion for you to say where the majority of your leads come from?

A. I wouldn't want to speculate as to which was the greatest. They come from so many different sources I don't know what proportions come from each source.

Q. Referring to page 7 of your work sheet and the notation for Hughes Markets, I wonder if you would tell us what the notation shows with respect to Hughes Markets in 1955 and 1956?

A. It shows that our directory for 1955 did not include Hughes Markets but that our directory for 1956 included Hughes Markets having four stores, of which all were supermarkets.

Q. Would you assume from that notation that Hughes Markets was not a chain prior to 1956?

A. That would be guessing. I don't know the history of it. I know that Hughes came out of Fitzsimmons I think originally, and it could be that he started opening four stores fairly rapidly. He was an experienced chain store man.

[fol. 40] Q. That is what your study would——

A. If you are asking me, I don't know. I am assuming how I would account for the fact that Hughes was operating four stores in 1956 and our directory showed him operating none in 1955. At least we didn't include him. He might have been operating four for the last 20 years. It could be that we missed him entirely, but I know that wasn't the fact because I happen to know the man and I know he was with Fitzsimmons' chain. I think I am right on that. Then he started in business for himself.

Q. Your records wouldn't show the precise year when he opened as a chain?

A. I think it would. I think our card index on this market, the case history that I tell you we obtain on each one of these companies would give us the whole story.

Q. The case history that you used to prepare that sheet showed that Hughes Markets wasn't operating as a chain in 1955, and that is the type of case histories that you based your study on, is it not?

A. I don't get the import of your question.

Q. Is the case history that you used to prepare this table as it relates to Hughes typical of the case histories that you have used to prepare——

A. That I don't know. I haven't got the case history in [fol. 41] front of me so I don't know whether it is typical.

Q. Is this the case history?

A. No. When I refer to the case history I am referring to the card index we maintain of each one of these companies. Now, that card may disclose when Mr. Hughes opened his first store. He may have opened it in 1954. He may have opened it in 1953. I doubt it but he may have. It will tell the story as we have it to justify why we have him listed in 1956 as operating four stores.

That is what our case history would disclose.

Q. But if he were operating two or more stores prior to 1956 your study would be in error as to that situation, would it not?

A. If it didn't include that it would be in error. That is two assumptions. Number one, that he was operating two or more before that and number two, that we didn't include it.

Q. You haven't included it?

A. We haven't included it.

Q. That is definite, you didn't include him before——

A. That is right, yes.

Q. Referring to page 5 of your work sheet, could you tell us what page 5 shows as to Fine's Food and Foodland Markets?

[fol. 42] A. Referring to Fine's Food our directory for 1956 listed it as a chain with four stores of which two were supermarkets, then located in Sun Valley but later in Los Angeles.

Q. With respect to Foodland Markets?

A. The reference to Foodland Markets indicates that our directory for 1955 listed it as a chain operating four stores of which four were supermarkets.

Q. With respect to both of these listings——

A. They were the earliest entries.

Q. They were the earliest entries——

A. In our directories.

Q. You don't know whether they were operating as chains prior to that time?

A. No. I don't.

Q. Referring to page 6 of your work paper, could you tell us what your work paper shows for the Great A & P?

A. Great A & P shows—let me say did show when the paper was prepared no information whatever but later a notation was put on it to indicate that in 1953 A & P was operating 17 stores in the Los Angeles area, of which 17 were supermarkets, and in 1962 they were operating 21, of which 21 were supermarkets.

Q. Would that——

[fol. 43] A. That is in addition to the work sheet that was not taken from the directories.

Q. Would that indicate that your directories have not shown A & P in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. I might not have given the number of stores. That is what I am talking about. It might have listed A & P.

Q. Do you know whether it did or didn't?

A. Well, look at 1962 and you will see. Directory for 1962 lists A & P as operating 29 stores in eight California counties. It does not specifically say how many were in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, so this information was obtained from some other source. It was not in the directory.

Q. Do you know what source that information was obtained from?

A. That I can't tell you at this time.

Q. Who made this work sheet up?

A. Mr. Torpy, Joseph Torpy.

Q. Is you affidavit based upon this work sheet?

A. Yes.

Q. You didn't make the work sheet up?

A. No.

Q. Who is Torpy?

A. Joseph Torpy is the head of the research department [fol. 44] of the directory division.

Q. He would know where that material came from but you don't know where it came from?

A. No, this is my notation, not his. The work sheet, the photostat as you see it, all the markets on it were put on by me, not by Torpy.

Q. Did you supervise the preparation of this work sheet?

A. No. Indirectly; he is the head of the research department and I asked him to make the analysis, which he did, and we checked the names of the individual cities to see whether they were in the two counties involved.

Q. You have never done anything like this before?

A. Yes, we did do it in the 1962 for this article on the national picture.

Q. But not for a local area?

A. No.

Q. Referring to page 8 of the work sheet, could you tell us what page 8 shows with respect to Kory's Markets?

A. It shows that our directory of 1955 showed that this company was operating five stores in Los Angeles at that time, of which five were supermarkets.

Q. Does it indicate that Kory's was not operating as a chain prior to that time?

A. It does not indicate that it was not operating as a [fol. 45] chain but it indicates that our directories prior to 1955 did not include it.

Q. It was not reflected as a chain prior to 1955 when you——

A. Not in these directories.

Q. Or in your affidavit?

A. No. My affidavit is based entirely upon what appears in this master list.

Q. Your affidavit would show Kory's Markets as a new entry with five stores in 1955, would it not?

A. New entry in our directory, yes.

Q. You would reflect it as a new entry into the market in your affidavit?

A. No, I would not—you mean talking about in breaking down the list?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, certainly.

Q. Referring to page 10 of your work sheet, can you tell us what the work sheet shows with respect to Pix Markets?

A. It showed that our directory of 1960 listed them as operating 13 stores in the area.

Q. Did it show Pix prior to 1960?

A. No.

[fol. 46] Q. Would Pix be reflected in the table that you incorporated in your affidavit as a new entrant with 13 stores in 1960?

A. Yes, new entry in our directories and my comments are based entirely upon what our directories show.

Q. Based upon your experience, is it somewhat unusual for a chain to spring up with 13 stores?

A. Well, it has been unusual in the past, but with the bantam type of operation coming into the picture in recent years it wouldn't be unusual at all to see a company open 10 or 15 right off the bat. There it involves a small investment.

Q. Referring to page 11 of your work sheet, can you tell us what the notation is for the S & K Markets?

A. That in 1955 our directory for that year listed them as operating two stores, both supermarkets, and that—that is all the work sheet itself lists, but I have a notation on that that they were later sold to Pix.

Q. In what year were they sold to Pix?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you make the notation?

A. Yes, I made this notation. But, that probably came from our data we have in the office. In other words, we went through every one of these names to find out what [fol. 47] became of them, and if our case history that we have on S & K Markets disclosed that they were sold to Pix, presumably it was in the first year in which they didn't appear in our directory as a separate entity.

Q. Would it be in the first year they didn't appear or in the last year they appeared?

A. It would probably be in the first year. After all if they were sold to another company there wouldn't be a hiatus. I assume that they were sold the year following their appearance as a separate entity in our directory.

Q. Referring to page 13 of your work sheet can you tell us what that page shows with respect to Tops Markets and U-Tel-Em Markets?

A. It shows with reference to Tops Markets that our directory for 1954 indicated that they were operating four stores, of which four were supermarkets, and the entry for 1956 shows that they were operating two stores of which two were supermarkets and that thereafter they did not appear in our directories.

Q. What was the first entry shown for Tops?

A. 1954. It showed four stores.

Q. Do your records indicate that they made a new entry in 1954?

A. My records——

[fol. 48] Q. Do they show that they were not operating as a chain prior to 1954?

A. It shows that this was the first time that we discovered them. What was the other one, U-Tel-Em?

Q. U-Tel-Em.

A. Our directory for 1954 listed them as operating six stores, of which six were supermarkets, and they appeared in each directory for each of the successive years until 1957, inclusive.

In the last year they were indicated as operating ten stores and a notation, not the work sheet but a notation shows that in 1957, in February 1957 they were sold to Mayfair.

Q. Your work sheet indicates also, does it not, that U-Tel-Em was not operating as a chain in 1953?

A. 1953, correct.

Q. Referring to your affidavit, to page 6, you state I believe that in the period covered by your affidavit, that is in the period between 1952 and 1961, that two firms with ten or more stores merged with other concerns. Is that correct?

A. What paragraph are you referring to?

Q. The top paragraph.

A. Yes.

[fol. 49] Q. Referring to page 3 of your work sheet and calling your attention to Clark's Markets, can you tell us what it shows as to the termination of Clark's Markets?

A. The work sheets show nothing but the notation on it added subsequently indicates that in 1958 Clark's Markets were sold to Food Giant.

Q. Was Clark's Market a chain of ten or more stores?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to page 7 of your work sheet, can you tell us what the work sheet shows as to the termination of the Iowa Pork Shops?

A. The work sheet itself showed that the last entry for Iowa Pork Shops was in the 1958 directory, at which time they were operating 11 stores. The notation on the work sheet shows that thereafter they were sold to Fox, and therefore did not appear in subsequent directories.

Q. That was a chain of ten of more stores also?

A. Obviously.

Q. Referring to page 11 of your work sheet can you tell us what it shows as to the termination of the Raisin Markets?

A. The work sheet itself showed that our directory for 1958 showed that that company was operating 13 stores, that thereafter it was sold to Alpha Beta—the work sheet [fol. 50] doesn't show that but the notation on it shows that. It was thereafter sold to Alpha Beta.

Q. Could you tell us what your work sheet shows on page 11 as to the termination of the Shopping Bag Store?

A. It shows that as of our 1960 directory they were operating 37 stores and the notation on the work sheet shows that thereafter they were merged with Von's.

Q. And they were a chain of more than ten stores?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you testified that the work sheet shows that the U-Tel-Em Markets were a chain of ten or more stores sold to Mayfair?

A. I don't know whether I testified to that but that is true.

Q. To recapitulate, your affidavit says that two concerns with two or more stores merged with other chains in the period?

A. I can't take that out of context.

Q. I want to know what it means.

A. You have to read the whole thing. I will have to read it all to tell you what it means. The reference to two chains merging with other concerns on page 6 of my affidavit does not imply or state or mean to state that only two chains merged with other concerns. The two chains that are re-
[fol. 51] ferred to in that statement were Jim Dandy Markets of Los Angeles, which were sold to Lucky in 1956 and Shopping Bag—they had ten stores at that time. They operated ten stores in 1953, and Shopping Bag of Los Angeles which operated 25 in 1953 and merged with Von's.

That is the reference to the two chains of the 25 which are listed as operating—of the 24 operating ten or more stores in 1962.

Q. Referring to page 7 of your work sheet, would you tell us what page 7 shows with respect to Jim Dandy?

A. It shows that in 1956 they were operating nine stores and that thereafter they became Lucky. They were merged with Lucky, presumably.

Q. How do you show these other stores in your tables here, the stores such as Clark's, Iowa Pork Shops and U-Tel-Em?

A. Let's see. Let's take one at a time and see what classification they are in, because that will tell me what table to look for.

Q. Take Iowa Pork Shops.

A. That is included as a chain which operated six stores in 1953 and were sold to Fox in 1958.

Q. Wasn't that a chain with ten or more stores?

A. No, not in 1953. This particular section is accounting
[fol. 52] for what happened to the chains that were in existence in 1953, and that is all it says.

Q. How many chains of ten or more stores were in existence in 1953?

A. In 1953 we had eight that were in existence in 1953 and in 1962, in both years. We had two that were in existence in 1953 but were not in existence in 1962, and in 1962 we had seven that were not in existence in 1953.

Q. Referring to page 5, the bottom of page 5 and the top of page 6 of your affidavit, you don't purport to show there the chains which entered what you call group 3 subsequent to 1953 and were acquired or otherwise left the grouping prior to 1962?

A. That is true. The statement covers just what it says it does. It covers only the chains with ten to 99 stores, the number of them that were in existence in 1953 and the number that were in existence in 1962, jumping from nine to 23, and accounts for who they were and how they came about, and it explains in detail how we arrived at 23 chains in 1962 in this category where there were only nine in that category in the 1953 directory.

That is all it purports to show. It doesn't cover anything more or anything less.

Q. I do not want to argue with you. It seems that in [fol. 53] some of these other discussions of group 2 and group 1 I think you do indicate which are the chains that entered the group and subsequently left?

A. Well, that may be another observation. These are observations. It could be somebody else studying this data could arrive at a lot more conclusions but these are the conclusions that I arrived at and I thought were pertinent.

Q. Referring to table 1, page 3 of your affidavit, does it show that there were 704 chains, according to your records and your figures, 704 chains in 1952, which you show for 1953, and that of those 704, 300 were chains of nine or fewer stores?

Mr. Vaughn: It doesn't show that.

A. No.

Mr. Vaughn: It shows 704 chain stores, not chains.

Q. A chain from two to nine stores would represent 42.6 per cent of all chain stores?

A. If that is the correct percentage. It is 300 out of a total of 704 in the year 1952 as represented by our 1953 directory.

Q. Then in the year 1962 chains of two to nine stores had increased to 346 or 31.8 per cent of the total number of [fol. 54] stores operated by chains in the area?

Mr. Vaughn: I object to the question as argumentative.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking him if it is true.

Mr. Vaughn: I know you are asking him if it is true but you are asking him to perform a mathematical act here which he has not so far as I know heretofore performed.

Mr. Coyle: Would you mark this as an exhibit, please?

(Sheet entitled "Table 3" marked Lebhar Exhibit 1 for identification, as of this date.)

Q. I show you Lebhar Exhibit 1 and ask you whether this exhibit shows the total number of chains of two to nine stores and chains of ten or more stores shown on your table 1 in your affidavit.

Mr. Vaughn: You are now asking him about the figures in the line under "Number of stores," not the percentage?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

Mr. Vaughn: Does that conform with table 1 in the affidavit?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

A. Correct.

[fol. 55] Q. If those percentages are mathematically correct, would it indicate that chains of ten or more stores accounted for a larger percentage of all stores operated by chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in 1961 than in 1952?

A. It would, with this qualification. That you will notice in the table that the chains with four to nine stores declined from 30 in 1953 to 22 in 1962, and the reason for that decline which is explained in the affidavit, I believe, was because many of them were promoted to group 3 by expansion, so with fewer chains in the smaller group you had more chains in the larger group and therefore the number of stores in—the increase of number of stores is accounted for in that way. The mathematics are there.

(Sheet entitled "Table 4" marked Lebhar Exhibit 2 for identification, as of this date.)

Q. Mr. Lebhar, have you ever undertaken to make a tabulation or a count of the total number of stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, whether they be chains or independents?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. You, from your own knowledge, don't know what the total number of chains——

A. No, I don't.

[fol. 56] Q. Referring to Lebhar Exhibit 2 for identification and also referring to Table 1 of your affidavit, does table 1 indicate that in 1953 there were 40 chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area with four or more stores and that those 40 chains operated a total of 574 stores?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Is this reflected in Lebhar Exhibit 2 for identification under the column "40 chains with the most stores"?

A. Correct.

Q. Referring again to table 1 of your affidavit, does this table show that in 1961, which you indicate as 1962 because of the date of the directory, 24 chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area with ten or more stores were operating 739 chains in that area?

A. 739 stores, yes, it does.

Q. Referring to the first column of Lebhar Exhibit 2 for identification, and referring to the figures given for the total number of stores operated by all grocery stores, if the total number of stores operated by the 40 chains with four or more stores in 1952 is expressed as a percentage of all grocery stores operated in 1952, would the percentage be approximately 10 per cent?

Mr. Vaughn: You don't have to answer that, Mr. Lebhar, unless you can tell the reporter——

[fol. 57] A. Yes, I can say that that is approximately correct.

Q. Would the percentage of stores operated by the 24 chains with the most stores in 1961 be greater than the percentage shown for the 40 chains in 1953?

A. Yes, in——

Mr. Vaughn: I will object to the question. Obviously this is an argumentative exhibit and the question is therefore argumentative in that in the second column on your proposed Lebhar No. 2 you have listed all chains with four or more stores while you in the last column there have listed only chains with ten or more stores. You are comparing apples and oranges, in other words.

Mr. Coyle: We are trying to show that the 24 chains with the most stores in 1962 had a bigger percentage of all stores than the 40 chains with the most stores in 1953, and I think it is obvious from the tables submitted by the witness in his affidavit.

Mr. Vaughn: My objection still stands. Naturally he may answer the question.

A. (Continuing) The only way I can answer the question, if the figures for the total number of grocery stores operating in the area is correct, then the mathematical percentage of 739 in 1962 of the figure given is correctly [fol. 58] stated as 16 per cent, which is more than 10.3 per cent.

(Sheet entitled "Table 5" marked Lebhar Exhibit 3 for identification, as of this date.)

Q. Referring to Lebhar Exhibit 3 for identification, is the figure of 704 chains of two or more stores for the period 1953 or 1952 the figure which is derived from your affidavit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to the figure 1085, is that a figure which was derived from——

A. That is also derived from it.

(Sheet entitled "Table 6" marked Lebhar Exhibit 4 for identification, as of this date.)

Q. Referring to Lebhar Exhibit 4 for identification, does your affidavit at page 4 show that there were 208 chains of two and three stores operating in the Los Angeles metropolitan area at some time during the period between 1952 and 1961?

A. It does. You specify two and three store chains?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Does it show that during that period 58 of those chains went out of business?

A. Yes.

[fol. 59] Q. Does it show that 12 of these chains were acquired?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to Lebhar Exhibit 4, therefore, are those figures 58, 27 and 12 the figures reflected in your affidavit?

Mr. Vaughn: Isn't that argumentative? Either the answer to the question is yes or no depending upon what the affidavit says, and doesn't the affidavit speak for itself?

Mr. Coyle: It clarifies the affidavit.

A. No, I think it muddies the affidavit myself, because what I said was that the group 1 chains that we reduced to single stores were still in business and there are 27 of those, so that only 58 were out of business.

Q. I think that is what I have listed there.

A. You total these together whereas I separated them.

Q. Your affidavit does state that of the 208 chains operated at some time, during some time in the area two to three category, 97 are no longer operating as chains or are out of business, acquired or operating as single——

A. Yes, it says so in effect. It doesn't say so in so many words.

Q. Referring to the group 2 discussion in your affidavit at page 5 and to the portion of the Lebhar Exhibit 4 for [fol. 60] identification, does Lebhar 4 for identification in the column which reads "8, 1, 5 and 11" portray or describe it as happening in your discussion of group 2 on page 5?

Mr. Vaughn: May it be understood that I have a continuing objection to these questions on the ground that they are argumentative. I see one error right away.

A. Yes. I say two became single stores, not five. That is one error.

Q. Other than that two, that two are reduced to single stores rather than one——

A. Yes, I think that is correct with that one change.

Q. Referring to your affidavit, page 5, you state I think that five stores which had been in group 2 at some time during the period had dropped back into group 1 by disposing of certain of their stores prior to 1962 and then later you state that six stores or chains climbed from group 1 into group 2. Would this indicate that in the combined category of two to nine stores for the period 1953 through 1962 there were a total of 253 stores?

A. I couldn't come to that conclusion from what you just said, but I am not disputing the fact.

Q. What I have done is add the 208 to 56 and subtracted the figure 11 which is the six which climbed up and the [fol. 61] five which went back.

Mr. Vaughn: I am just not smart enough to figure out whether that is right or not right on the spot, to tell you the truth.

A. I am afraid I can't really clarify that because I would have to study these figures to answer it accurately. I assume that you have it right.

Q. Referring again to the stores which were listed in your discussion of group 2 in the four to nine store chain and were subsequently acquired, I think that the previous testimony brought out that some of those stores grew into chains of more than nine stores prior to the time they were acquired, isn't that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Stores like U-Tel-Em?

A. Yes, I think it did, although I am not too sure whether any of those chains were in existence in 1953. Were some of them in existence or did they all come in after 1953, then get to the point where they had ten stores and they were then taken over. I am not too sure. I can probably——

Q. We have a chain like Raisin Markets. Raisin Markets is one example.

A. That was in existence in 1953, achieved a status of [fol. 62] 13 stores in 1958 and then was sold, yes. I don't know whether there are 11 of those. The 11 might have included some of those.

Q. The 11 would have included some of those?

A. Yes, it would have included those.

Q. Mr. Lebhar, in connection with your work do you ever make or prepare any estimates as to what percentage of total sales in the area are accounted for by chains?

A. No. We don't have occasion to. You are speaking about the area of Los Angeles?

Q. Yes.

A. We are not especially interested in Los Angeles. We don't even—we do it for the country at large, chain store proportion of sales for the country at large, we do that annually, but we don't do it for any specific district.

Mr. Coyle: I'd like to have this marked as Lebhar Exhibit 5 for identification. Lebhar Exhibit 5 is the work sheets which we have been referring to in the course of this.

The Witness: I referred to in my affidavit as the master list.

(Work sheets marked Lebhar Exhibit 5 for identification, as of this date.)

[fol. 63] Examination.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Sir, you referred to Mr. Joseph Hughes as formerly being with Fitzsimmons. Just for the record, Fitzsimmons changed its name to Thrifty Mart, did it not?

A. It did.

Q. I would like to clarify again, if it is not already clear on the record that in your affidavit and with particular reference to the discussion heading group No. III on page 5 that what in effect you did there was to take the nine chains which were shown as operating ten or more stores in 1952, subtract from those nine the two which merged with other concerns prior to 1961 and then added to those seven chains the newcomers into group 3. Isn't that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And it does not purport to show the chains which may have risen from group 2 to group 3 between 1952 and 1962 and prior to 1962 were acquired by other concerns?

A. That is right or disappeared for other reasons.

Q. Have you made any computation, sir, which would show what percentage of the stores opened by chains since 1953 were opened by one of the chains in group 3, that is, having ten or more stores in 1953, and what percentage were opened by chains which increased in size from group 2 to group 3 between 1952 and 1961?

[fol. 64] A. I did make some calculations, only this morning, to satisfy my own curiosity, and I found that chains with ten or more stores between 1952 and 1961 added 335 units to the 404 operated in 1952.

That figure is based, when we speak about opening stores, this is net result. They may have opened two stores and closed one, but I mean the total number of stores operated by the chains with ten or more stores in 1952, according to our 1953 directory, had altogether 404 stores, whereas in 1961, as revealed by our 1962 directory, they had 335 more, which makes a total of 739.

Now, then, of these 335 stores which were added, 241 or approximately 75 per cent were added by group 2 chains or newcomers since 1953.

Another observation, the chains with ten or more stores increased—well, it is repeating what I said—from 404 to 739, again a gain of 83 per cent. Of these eight largest chains which were in existence both in 1962 and 1961 increased their number of stores from 369 to 465, a gain of 25 per cent.

The names of the chains involved and the figures are available on this compilation of mine.

Mr. Vaughn: I have no further questions.

[fol. 65] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. When you say "opened," you mean they show more stores? Some of them may be acquired?

A. That's right.

Q. Most of them might have been acquired?

A. That's right. It is immaterial for my particular purpose. I am talking about where the number of stores, 1085 stores shown in my table 1, where did they come from.

Q. When you refer to Safeway, is Safeway one of the eight largest chains?

A. Yes.

Q. Safeway shows a decline in total number of stores?

A. That's right, so it naturally effects the result.

Q. Is Safeway closing small stores and opening large stores?

A. I presume they are. Yes.

Q. It is common knowledge that that is what they are doing?

A. Yes, it is common knowledge. All the chains are doing that.

Q. These eight largest chains which you have shown as increasing by 25 per cent in number of stores, they would be opening the supermarkets rather than the smaller categories of stores?

[fol. 66] A. That would be true of all chains whether they have two or three or four to nine or whatever.

Q. Would it be true of Speedy Marts?

A. Well, unless they were bantam stores. But the trend towards bigger stores applies to them all.

Q. Some of these are acquiring stores. When they are acquiring stores aren't some of them acquiring smaller stores?

A. I don't under stand the question.

Q. In other words, when you compare the percentage of increase in total number of stores of the eight largest chains with the other chains in order to make it meaningful in terms of impact on the market, don't you have to know the size of the stores?

A. But we don't know it in either case so we assume that whether a chain has five stores today or 205 stores its newer stores will presumably be of the bigger type because that is the trend.

Q. Do you assume that this increase in total number of stores operated by the chains of ten or more stores results from building new stores rather than acquiring existing stores?

A. It results from both. Naturally if there had been any merger——

[fol. 67] Q. Isn't it a fact that a chain such as Bob's Supermarket as selling stores to firms such as Mayfair?

A. Will you show me the reference?

(Document handed to witness.)

That is not a chain of ten or more stores.

Q. But they are selling stores to Mayfair which is a chain of ten or more stores?

A. Yes.

Q. So Mayfair is growing by acquisition?

A. That is true.

Q. There is no way of knowing what the size of Bob's Supermarket is, whether it is a $250,000 a year store or a $2 million a year store?

A. No way of telling it from the statistics, the size of any store.

Mr. Knight: This is your handwriting here in pencil? Did you write this up?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Knight: I am a little confused. I thought you stated on the record that you were working just this morning and you had prepared this.

The Witness: That's right. I was working on this material this morning because this list was a comparison which Mr. Von had made himself without all these figures or any [fol. 68] of this stuff on it.

Mr. Vaughn: That is my handwriting on it in pencil.

The Witness: He is telling me that he had tested my list against his information and it checked out, so I had this list and then I made this compilation myself this morning before I came here.

Mr. Vaughn: I will certainly stipulate that the handwritten part there is my own. The pencil marks are my own.

The Witness: The names of the chains, that is all you had.

Q. When you referred to the eight largest chains you are referring to the eight largest chains in terms of total number of stores operated?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that the eight largest in terms of total number of stores operated in 1953 or in 1962?

A. 1953.

Q. You have checked this table with your master sheet?

A. Yes—well, from my material taken from the master sheet, yes.

Q. When you refer to chains as newcomers since 1952, you are referring to them in terms of your exhibit? They [fol. 69] appeared as newcomers on your exhibit?

A. That's right. That is correct.

Q. You include as newcomers firms such as the Speedee Marts which you show?

A. Yes, newcomers to the area.

Q. I wonder if you could find Speedee Mart for me on this master sheet.

A. No, we couldn't find it because they are not listed in our Los Angeles—this is only a list of Los Angeles chains and Speedee Mart, Speedee Mart has its headquarters outside of Los Angeles.

Q. How did Speedee happen to be on this list?

A. Because they operate stores in the area.

Q. Why aren't they on your master list?

A. The master list includes only those chains which have headquarters in the particular cities that are in the county. That is what our directory shows.

Q. I don't understand this at all. I don't see why Speedee is on this——

A. Well, I will show you. I think it is the same explanation I gave you when you queried me about A & P. You see A & P is listed in our directories for the number of stores it operates in that unit but they are not all necessarily in the two counties that we are interested in, so I [fol. 70] will have to get that from an independent source, how many were in. I think we will find that is true of Speedee too. That Speedee Mart is not included in our master list because it is not included among the chains which have headquarters in Los Angeles or in any of the cities in Los Angeles or Orange Counties.

Q. Do I understand you correctly as saying that your master list doesn't include chains whose heaquarters is outside the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. It includes it in the areas in which they—the directory—take Safeway for a good example. Safeway's headquarters is in Oakland. So, we don't call that a Los Angeles chain. But we do include in our compilation, not in the directory, the number of stores which Safeway operates in the counties in which we are interested.

Q. But you didn't include the Speedee Stores?

A. No.

Mr. Vaughn: I think I can clear this up if you would like for me to save a little time and right from the master list that we have been talking about.

Mr. Coyle: Let the witness do it.

The Witness: I state here at the end of the master list. Other chains with headquarters outside of the area operated stores in the area as follows:

[fol. 71] Lucky Stores, Speedee, Stater, U-Tote-Em. Their headquarters are all outside of the two counties. Page 14 of the master list.

Q. You show Lucky Stores with 16 supermarkets. Is that correct?

A. It shows Lucky Stores operating 16 markets in the area.

Q. Is that supermarkets in the area?

A. Yes.

Q. What kind of stores was Speedee operating?

A. I believe bantam stores, aren't they?

Q. What is the dollar sale of a bantam store?

A. It could be $300,000, $500,000, it could be any amount, depending upon how successful it is.

Q. Wouldn't that make a supermarket under your——

A. Not necessarily, no. A supermarket involves the number of the items carried, the size of the store and many other things.

Q. You say that Speedee wasn't listed in 1953 but was listed in 1962. It is not listed in 1963 or 1962.

Mr. Vaughn: You are arguing with the witness. You don't have to answer that question.

Mr. Coyle: I am asking him.

Mr. Vaughn: You made a statement.

[fol. 72] A. I said that Speedee wasn't listed in our directories as operating stores in Los Angeles or Orange Counties in 1953 and it was not listed in our 1962 directory as operating stores in those counties. This information that is found on page 14 of the master list came from an independent source.

Q. What independent source?

A. From our data that we have in our offices here.

Q. What year did those 27 Speedee Stores begin operating——

A. That I don't know.

Q. They may have been operating in 1953, as far as your records show?

A. Yes, but I don't believe they were. As far as this record shows, no. I am sure our own records will show when they came into the picture.

Q. The same is true of the Lucky Stores. Your records don't indicate when the Lucky Stores came into the area?

A. No. The master sheet doesn't. I won't say that our records don't.

Q. The master sheet that you used in preparing these exhibits?

A. That's correct.

Q. And you used this master sheet to prepare this?

[fol. 73] A. And which is supplemented by other data I obtained from our regular files.

Q. Referring again to this slip of paper from which you have been testifying, this paper shows the Lucky Stores and the Speedee Stores as opening up in the Los Angeles metropolitan area subsequent to 1953, does it not?

A. It would indicate that in 1953 we didn't have them listed.

Q. But it wouldn't be indicated from your work sheet, it would be indicated from this sheet of paper that Mr. Von wrote out and showed you?

A. The fact that it wasn't in the work sheet would indicate that they weren't in the area in 1953. As a matter of fact, I am just looking up Lucky Stores in the directory, and that is listed in San Leandro. That is where their headquarters is. They operate stores in Arizona, California and Washington.

Naturally, we don't include them in our listings when we come to discuss chains operating in—with headquarters in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

Q. Could you look up Safeway in your listing?

A. We don't list Safeway as being in Los Angeles, under the geographical heading of Los Angeles. We say that they occupy a division office operating 190 stores in the follow-

[fol. 74] ing states and counties. California, about half a dozen or a dozen states, Nevada, and so forth. This is not an entry that would appear in our master list showing the number of chains with headquarters in the counties that we are interested in.

Q. As a matter of fact, in your master list, did you or did you not treat Safeway differently than you treated Lucky Stores and Speedee?

A. No, I didn't. I treated them exactly the same. The master list had no data for Safeway. As I say, that was inserted later as you can see by the red ink figures.

Q. From some outside source?

A. Yes.

Q. You did have beginning data on Safeway?

A. From some outside source. The master list shows no more information about Safeway because its headquarters are in Oakland than it shows about Lucky because its headquarters are in L[illegible]idro. They are identical treatment.

Q. But you got more information on Safeway from this outside source?

A. Yes, I did. It could be for all I know that Speedee was not operating in 1953.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't know.

[fol. 75] Q. It may or may not?

A. I rather think it wasn't. I think it is a relatively new chain myself.

Q. But you don't know?

A. No.

Mr. Coyle: I have no further questions.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Sir, don't you have some further information about Lucky in the master list?

Mr. Coyle: You are leading the witness. It is your witness.

Q. I'd like you to refer to your master list and specifically page 7 and the entries behind the name Jim Dandy. Does that tell you anything about when Lucky entered the market?

A. No, it only tells me when Lucky acquired the Jim Dandy Stores. They might have been in the market. I am not sufficiently familiar with their history. They might have been in existence before they acquired the Jim Dandy Stores.

Q. That entry "New Lucky" doesn't mean there is a new entry in this market for Lucky, I take it?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether Mayfair has acquired more stores than it has sold in the last decade?

[fol. 76] A. I couldn't say offhand.

Q. Finally, referring to the piece of paper which we have referred to here on which appears my handwriting and yours, I gave this to you, did I not, Mr. Lebhar, yesterday to merely show some work that I had done to confirm the work that you had done?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did I ask you to make any computation based upon anything that I had handed you?

A. I do not.

Q. Did I suggest any change?

A. You did not know anything about it until I mentioned it here.

Q. Did I suggest any change be made in what you were going to say today by reason of anything on this piece of paper?

A. No, sir.

Q. And any impression to the contrary which may have been created by Mr. Knight or Mr. Coyle's questions is inaccurate, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: You should not characterize us——

Mr. Vaughn: You characterized me, Mr. Coyle, and I will characterize you. I have nothing further. Mr. Lebhar, [fols. 76a-77] would you stipulate to waiving the signing of your deposition in this case with the understanding that counsel will review it and if they regard it as accurate they will waive your signature also and stipulate to that waiver?

The Witness: I so agree.

(Whereupon, at 12:40 p.m., the deposition was closed.)

Transcript of Proceedings—June 14, 1963

DEFENDANTS REST

Mr. Vaughn: Defendants rest.
The Court: Does the government have anything?
Mr. Coyle: Yes. We have two witnesses.
The Court: I see it is almost 10 after 11:00.
Are your witnesses here and ready?
Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.
The Court: Suppose we take a 10-minute recess.

(Recess taken.)

[fol. 2250] The Clerk: I have marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 83, 84 and 85 for identification.

(The exhibits referred to were marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 83, 84 and 85 for identification.)

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor——
The Court: All right.
Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think as part of the defendant's case, we would like to offer the deposition of Ray King.
Mr. Alsup: Roy King.
Mr. Coyle: Roy King, who is one of the defendant's witnesses. We didn't offer the deposition at the time his affidavit was offered through inadvertence.
The Court: Now wait a minute. You are confusing me, you say one of the defendant's——
Mr. Coyle: One of the defendant's witnesses.
The Court: One of the defendant's witnesses.
Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. So we ask that that be recorded in the transcript.
The Court: Well, I will reopen the case.
Mr. Vaughn: We have no objection, your Honor, to the deposition of Mr. Roy King being copied after his affidavit.
The Court: All right. The reporter will do that.
The Clerk: I don't find the original.

AFFIDAVIT OF ROY KING

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

ROY KING, being first duly sworn, does hereby depose and state as follows:

I am a sales and marketing consultant to the food industry. Prior to October 1961, I was the Editor of Food Topics, the nation's largest supermarket trade journal, and the Editor of Food Field Reporter, the nation's leading grocery manufacturer business journal. I was also Vice President of Marketing of both Food Topics and Food Field Reporter.

For 12 years, I operated a supermarket of my own. I have also developed a shopping center and worked in the New York City produce market. I have performed consulting services for such organizations as:

H. C. Bohack Co. (large L. I. chain)
National American Wholesale Grocers Association
United States Wholesale Grocers Association
Grocers Wholesale Cooperative of Des Moines
National Association of Transportation Advertising
Flickinger & Company Wholesale Grocers

The Toledo Food Distributors Association in Toledo, Ohio
The Michigan Food Dealers Association
The Associated Grocers of Colorado
The Allied Food Club of St. Louis
American Association of Advertising Agencies
Packaging Institute
General Foods Packaging Clinics
American Marketing Association
Book Publishers Council

I have written extensively on problems of interest to retail grocery companies and their suppliers. Recently, I was awarded the Sylvania Electric Company's award for outstanding service to the food industry.

In 1957 and 1958, a group of qualified and trained research personnel of Food Topics, under my supervision and direction, conducted a survey and analysis of the retail grocery business in 17 metropolitan areas. They were New York; Long Island; Detroit; Pittsburgh; Charleston, South Carolina; Chicago; Minneapolis-St. Paul; Miami; St. Louis; Houston; Kansas City; Atlanta; Syracuse; Denver; Washington, D. C.; Montreal, and Los Angeles.

In the course of these surveys, extensive interviews of retailers, wholesalers, suppliers and representatives of food associations were conducted. Statistics were gathered from all sources deemed significant at the time. Ultimately, reports were made of the findings of the Food Topics staff. Those reports appeared in article form in various issues of Food Topics and were later reissued in a separate publication entitled, "Food Topics Visits Major Marketing Areas", (Exhibit —). The results of Food Topics' survey insofar as they relate to the Los Angeles metropolitan area may be summarized as follows:

1. The retail grocery business in Los Angeles is exceptionally healthy, dynamic, vigorous and growing.

2. No chain or group of chains can claim dominance of the market. In 1958, Safeway, the area leader, had only about 10% of the market in terms of sales. The leading 39 chains enjoyed only approximately 56%. Compare these statistics to Detroit, for example, where the five largest national chains have approximately 52% of the market; or Pittsburgh, where A & P alone has 25.6% of the market and the leading three chains claim approximately 50%; or Chicago, where in 1958, such national chains as National Tea Co. had 224 stores, Jewel Tea 173, A & P 191, and Kroger Co. 89; or Kansas City, where four chains do 57% of the grocery business; or Atlanta, where five national or regional chains control almost 70% of the market.

3. Independents and smaller chains are competing effectively and doing evry well in Los Angeles, primarily because of their affiliation with strong cooperative buying organizations. Food Topics' surveys across the country show that even in areas dominated by chains, the key to the success of independents seems to be the relative strength of cooperative buying organizations. Where such "co-ops" are strong, independents are strong. Where co-ops are relatively weak, so are the independents. For example, in Atlanta, where 5 chains control 70% of the market, independents are still competing quite successfully. The obvious reason is the independents' affiliation with Associated Grocers, a good retailer owned cooperative. Additional examples of independent strength through affiliation with cooperatives can be found in Kansas City, Chicago, Miami and other cities. Likewise, statistics show that in the past few years, the greater increase in grocery store volume and net profits (both indications of superior merchandising ability) has occurred in stores operated by independents affiliated with large, aggressive cooperative movements. In Los Angeles, we found Certified Grocers of California, a retailer owned wholesale grocery company which is the largest and possibly the most successful organization of its kind anywhere in the country. While cooperative buying is almost an innovation in many areas, Certified has been a strong factor in the Los Angeles market for 35 years. Most of the areas largest chains had their beginnings as members of Certified. In 1958, Certified had 967 members who in turn operated 1,468 stores, and Certified's subsidiary, Spartan Grocers, had a membership of 1,271, operating 1,306 stores. In addition, orange Empire Co-op, a large and growing voluntary cooperative doing business in four states and sponsored by A. M. Lewis, Inc., had 1,014 member stores in 1958. I estimate that 65% of all of the stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties are affiliated with a cooperative buying organization. As a result, independent grocers, concerns with 1, 2 or 3 stores, are successful in Los Angeles. In the words of one of them, "We've never had it so good." In addition to the advantages gained from cooperative buying, and the other services rendered by organizations such as Certified, the independent has other advantages, such as being able to cut out supervisory and other overhead expenses and the ability to move more quickly and easily to meet local competitive conditions than in the case of a chain. Also of considerable importance in an area such as Los Angeles where new communities are springing up and new residents coming in every day, and where by and large, people have no lifelong or immutable buying habits, is the independents' ability to deal with customers on a personal level, to become an active participant in community affairs and to gain thereby the friendship and loyalty of nearby consumers. But for whatever reason, it is obvious that independents have prospered in Los Angeles, and there is no reason to expect that they will not continue to do so.

Since Food Topics visited Los Angeles, Von's and Shopping Bag have merged. I have given considerable thought to the possible effect of that merger in the light of my knowledge of the grocery business in Los Angeles. I have reached the opinion that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger could not possibly affect the competitive situation in Los Angeles adversely. First of all, few Von's stores were located close enough to a Shopping Bag store to draw customers from the same area. Hence, there was very little competition between the two companies. Second, I cannot see how the merger of those two concerns could adversely affect the competitive opportunity of smaller concerns, particularly in view of the strength of the independents in the Los Angeles area. I know of no reason why an independent could not compete as effectively against Von's now as it did against either Von's or Shopping Bag before the merger. Finally, I am firmly of the view, in light of all the circumstances prevalent in the Los Angeles area, that the merger in question will not lessen the vigor of competition in grocery retailing or lead in any way to dominance of the market by any chain or group of chains.

Roy King.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

No. 336-60 CC

[Title omitted]

Deposition of ROY M. KING, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, at Room 806, Federal Building, Los Angeles, California, commencing at 2:15 P.M., Friday, May 24, 1963, before Harold M. Leibovitz, C.S.R., Notary Public, pursuant to oral stipulation.

* * * * * * *

[fol. 3] ROY M. KING, having been first duly sworn, deposed and testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. Mr. King, would you state your full name for the record, please.

A. Roy M. King.

Q. What is your home address?

A. 15 Calla Court, Rockville Center, Long Island, New York.

Q. What is your business address?

A. 100 East 42nd Street, New York City, New York. Roy King Associates.

Q. In what business are you engaged?

A. I am in the food marketing consulting business.

Q. What type of marketing consulting do you do?

A. We consult with food firms, suppliers to the trade, grocery retailers, discount houses, drug operations. Anybody that has a stake in the distribution of a product, packaged food products. Primarily through food stores or drugstores or discount operations where food store operations are involved.

Q. Do your clients come from any particular section of [fol. 4] the country?

A. No. They are reasonably national. I mean national in the broad sense of the word.

Q. What other background have you had in this marketing consulting field?

A. Ten years as editor in chief of Food Topics and Food Field Reporter, which circulationwise are the largest food trade papers in the food industry. And 12 years with my own markets, as a market operator in Long Island, Country Garden Supermarkets.

Q. That was prior to your going with Food Topics?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you still associated with Food Topics?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Is Roy King Associates associated with Food Topics?

A. No, they are not.

Q. What was the date that you left Food Topics?

A. Officially October 1, 1961.

Q. As Roy King Associates have you made any marketing research studies in the Los Angeles area?

A. No, we have not.

Q. Have you made any——

A. Excuse me. You are referring to now Roy King Associates?

Q. That's correct.

A. No.

[fol. 5] Q. Since October '61.

A. No, sir.

Would you please define what you mean by "marketing surveys of the Los Angeles area"? We have occasion for many clients to advise with respect to particular marketing practices in various areas of the country. What do you mean by "marketing research in the City of Los Angeles"?

Q. Have you been——

A. I want to answer this in full honesty. I am not trying to——

Q. Let me state it this way. Have you had any clients which were engaged in the marketing of groceries in the Los Angeles metropolitan area since October 1961?

A. Presently engaged.

Q. Since October '61.

A. Or who were engaged? No. Well, I would have to take that back. Yes, I do. I have a client who is engaged in marketing, the Coca,Cola Company.

Q. The Coca-Cola Company?

A. Yes. That is in the Los Angeles area.

Q. They are not engaged in the marketing of retail groceries.

A. No.

Q. What experience have you had in looking into the Los Angeles metropolitan area at the time you were with Food Topics magazine?

[fol. 6] A. Well, at that particular time—Again the question is rather broad, "experience." I have made numerous speeches concerning the distribution of food products in grocery stores in the Los Angeles territory. I have counseled with many suppliers directly located in the Los Angeles trade area.

For example, Carnation Milk Company comes to mind. Coca-Cola of Los Angeles, when it was owned by the Barbee Bros. here in the Los Angeles area. And, of course, we also did a rather thorough study on the Los Angeles market area with respect to food operations for the publication under the general title of "Food Topics Visits." Where Los Angeles, you know, was another market among many.

Q. Does your primary experience with the Los Angeles market, that is Los Angeles and Orange Counties, which is what we mean by the Los Angeles marketing area, consist of the data you obtained at the time you made this publication, "Food Topics Visits Major Marketing Areas"?

A. I am having a little bit of difficulty in hearing you, sir.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Alsup: On the record, just to clarify something, Mr. Hughes, the publication you have just referred to is a composite publication of articles which appeared in a series of issues of Food Topics magazine. You are aware of that fact?

Mr. Hughes: I am aware of it now if I wasn't before.

[fol. 7] Mr. Alsup: I think it is indicated in his affidavit, is it not?

Mr. Hughes: Yes, it is.

Mr. Alsup: Page 3 of his affidavit.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Mr. King, my question to you was: Has your primary experience in the Los Angeles marketing area consisted of the tabulation of the data and other information which appears in this Food Topics magazine entitled "Food Topics Visits Major Marketing Areas"?

A. Again I am sorry but I don't understand this question. What do you mean by "major marketing experience"? I just want to be sure that I answer this question correctly. I would like to know the full import and what this question means.

Mr. Hughes: Will you read the question back, please.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

The Witness: I would have to weight that question and say it is one of many experiences I have had in Los Angeles.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Is this one of the more thorough studies which you have made of the area?

A. Oh, yes; oh, yes. It is the most thorough study we have made of the area.

Q. Have you your statement before you, "Affidavit of Roy King"?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. On Page 3 you refer to "Food Topics Visits National [fol. 8] Marketing Areas." That is meant to be "Food Topics Visits Major Marketing Areas"; isn't it? Is this the same publication?

A. It should be "Major." Major marketing areas. I guess that is a misprint.

Mr. Knight: Rather than "National."

Mr. Alsup: While we are at it, Mr. King indicated to me that there was one other correction that he wished to make in this affidavit.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Would you like to make another correction on this affidavit for the record, Mr. King?

A. Yes, we would. I believe it's on Page 5 where it says, "In addition, Orange Empire Co-op, a large and growing voluntary co-operative doing business in four states and sponsored by A. M. Lewis, had 1,014 member stores in 1958." "Los Angeles and Orange Counties" should be struck out.

Q. I recall that on Page 4 you have already corrected, 11 lines from the bottom of the page, the word "association" to read "associated."

Mr. Alsup: That was corrected in the copy that was given to you.

The Witness: Associated Grocers.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Have you ever lived in the Los Angeles area, Mr. King?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Have you spent much time out here?

[fol. 9] A. Again, you see, Mr. Hughes, "much time" is a relative term. What do you mean by "much time"?

Q. How much time have you spent out here?

A. That would be hard to calculate. For a businessman in the East to come to Los Angeles six times a year, I would say that that is quite a bit of time, you know, where you would spend perhaps a week at a time, to me this would mean a lot or much. It may not mean much to you or somebody else.

Since 1952 I have visited for various business reasons the Los Angeles area, I would guess on an average of at least six times a year and I would say the entire West Coast would probably be more than that, maybe eight or ten times a year.

Q. On Page 34 of Food Topics——

Mr. Hughes: I might as well identify the article on Pages 34 and 35 of Food Topics magazine as King Exhibit No. 1 for Identification. I believe it is dated January 1, 1961.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as King Exhibit No. 1 for Identication and returned to counsel for the plaintiff.)

The Witness: May I just complete my statement?

As an afterthought, thinking about your term, "have I been here much, SAY IF I were here on an average of six times a year and I have been doing this since 1952, conservatively I would say that I had visited the Los Angeles [fol. 10] area approximately 60 times in the last ten years.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Did you personally come out to Los Angeles to make any part of the reporting which appeared in this particular article?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. When was this actual survey made?

A. Oh, dear, I don't have the exact dates. The actual survey was made, I believe—I want to be very careful about this. Can we go off the record for a second or not?

Q. Go ahead.

(Discussion off the record.)

The Witness: It probably either was November or December—To the best of my knowledge it is somewhere around December or November of '59. I don't have the exact date but we could obtain it for you.

Mr. Hughes: Q. That is the original article, not this publication.

A. No. You see, this particular publication was a compilation of all the articles we had done on various visits to markets around the country and was really—what appears here in this booklet is the exact text that appeared in the original article. And this was for the benefit of the trade, in order to make things easier, to give them a compiled book.

I do not, unfortunately, have the exact date that you are looking for.

Q. I was confused by the back page of this article which [fol. 11] has the date January 1, 1961 on it.

A. Well, that is—Where is that, sir?

Q. On the back cover.

A. Well, that refers to the date of this particular publication.

Mr. Alsup: I should state for the record, Mr. Hughes, that we know it was prior to March 25, 1960 because a copy of this article with reference to Los Angeles was introduced in evidence at the hearing held on March 25, 1960.

Mr. Knight: And this is a compilation of several articles which had been done; is that right?

Mr. Alsup: In various issues of Food Topics, which I have seen, in which there appeared articles relating to different marketing areas.

Mr. Knight: And here he has put them in one place.

Mr. Alsup: And the witness has testified that in January 1961 they culled out these articles from prior publications and put them into one book.

The Witness: For the benefit of the trade, that's all.

Mr. Knight: Thank you.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Mr. King, referring to this article on Page 34, who actually wrote the article for Food Topics?

A. The actual writing of the article?

Q. Who did the writing?

A. It was done by the editorial staff of Food Topics.

Q. Who did the writing? That is who accumulated the [fol. 12] information?

A. We had several reporters in the Los Angeles area reporting on this particular survey.

Q. Are these Food Topics reporters or newspaper reporters?

A. They are Food Topics reporters. They are employed and paid by us.

Q. What part did you play in the publication of this article?

A. I edited it. I performed the normal functions of the editor of a trade paper that any article would receive that would appear in the publication.

Q. I assume that you edited this entire edition of the Food Topics magazine.

A. When you say "edit," again we have a word, unfortunately, Mr. Hughes, that has a number of different connotations. We had an extremely large staff at Food Topics and Food Field Reporter. I had under my direct control and employ about 35 people, many of whom worked, you see, on this particular article in terms of writing, in terms of layout, in terms of artwork, in terms of other functions that would have to go into it in order to make it a readable article.

Q. Mr. King, what has your formal education consisted of?

A. I am a college graduate.

Q. Where did you graduate from?

[fol. 13] A. Penn State.

Q. When was that?

A. 1940.

Q. What degree did you get at that time?

A. Bachelor of Science.

Q. What did you major in?

A. Agriculture. Produce, specifically.

Q. Have you any other degrees?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any further technical training in the marketing consultant field?

A. Technical training? I think I have the best training in the world—experience.

Q. Are you familiar with the strike which occurred in the grocery industry in Los Angeles in January 1959?

A. Yes. We reported partly on that strike.

Q. How long did that strike last?

A. The exact time of that strike? The exact time escapes me. The exact timing escapes but I believe—The exact time escapes me.

Q. If I suggest it was January 1959 and that it lasted for a period of a month, would you recall what effect that had on the retail grocery industry in Los Angeles?

A. Yes. We reported on that in this particular article. I turn to Page 36 and it says here: "But, the biggest surprise to most chain operators was to come in the post-strike [fol. 14] period. Today, almost a year since the end of the strike and the reopening of the stores, some of the larger chains have not recovered their pre-strike sales volume."

Q. Was that a big surprise to you that they had not recovered, based upon your experience in the grocery industry?

A. No.

Q. How long would you say it takes the grocery industry to recover from such a strike?

A. Again, you see, it is very hard to apply yardsticks to something like this. There are so many factors that enter into a picture and can affect a given situation that to categorically state it is going to take three months to recover, six months to recover, or a year to recover would be rather difficult to state. But I would like, if I may, to read on to you about this. May I?

Q. Go right ahead.

A. "Executives of these chains agree that it is difficult to regain lost volume. Some of this volume has gone to the firms which, open during the strike, introduced their new customers to trading stamps. Some of the volume has been lost to home delivered milk and bakery products, which naturally enjoyed a huge increase in business.

"But even of more interest—and some surprise—to the operators of the huge 'chrome-plated' supermarkets is the amount of business retained by the medium-sized, well-managed stores that remained open during the strike period.

[fol. 15] "Some of the individual operators interviewed by Food Topics claimed that they are still ringing up as much as 7 per cent more business than before the strike, and they are getting it from customers who were pleased with their service and are continuing to shop in their stores.

"A fair estimate of the amount of business lost by the major chains during the strike, several executives agree, is 5 per cent. But, as one of the top chain executives said, 'Each dollar lost off the top hurts, and leaves a gap in net profits.'

"Many of the industry executives attribute the slow recovery of pre-strike volume to competition from new stores. However, hardly anyone complains of overbuilding."

But here is one of the most important things that I think should also be included. Walter Ralphs, one of the most important men in the food business in the United States, and certainly a leader in Los Angeles, said as follows, and may I quote this also?

Q. That goes beyond the strike part of this.

Mr. Alsup: It relates to the same thing.

The Witness: It is part of the contention, you know, and I think it is important. It is all under the same subject and it is very important. It casts a light on this whole thing.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Who are these people you are including?

Mr. Alsup: Let him finish his answer, please, Mr. Hughes.

[fol. 16] Mr. Hughes: He is reading someone else's quote, I believe.

Mr. Alsup: He has referred to Mr. Ralphs, he said.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Hughes: I object to your reading the testimony of someone else into the record.

Mr. Alsup: Now go ahead, Mr. King.

The Witness: "Walter Ralphs, Jr., one of the third generation Ralphs now guiding the area's oldest chain, told Food Topics:

> "'More fine stores are available to customers than ever before, both in absolute numbers and in ratio to customers. So the business is split up among more stores. But business, except for an individual store here and there, is very good.'"

Mr. Hughes: Q. You are quoting someone else?

A. I am quoting Walter Ralphs, Jr., who is one of the most respected men in this industry.

Q. In this article, then, Mr. King, Food Topic reports that over a year after the strike the chains were still feeling the aftereffects of the strike; is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the question on the ground that it states facts not in evidence, when you say "over a year." Let us quote it correctly.

Mr. Hughes: This apparently is a 1959 article originally. [fol. 17] Can you obtain the date of the original article for us, Mr. Alsup?

Mr. Alsup: I will be more than happy to.

Mr. Vaughan: It says, "nearly a year" in the article.

Mr. Alsup: It says "almost a year."

The Witness: Oh, boy, it is a good thing I am not a lawyer.

Mr. Hughes: Q. In your experience, Mr. King, is there anything about the Los Angeles metropolitan area which makes it different from other metropolitan areas throughout the country? For instance, is it more mobile?

A. Well, of course it is. Sure, there are differences.

Now, again, Mr. Hughes, I don't wish to net pick here but I would like to know: What do you mean by "more mobile"? More mobile than what or who or which?

Q. To your knowledge has the Los Angeles more people driving around in cars than most other parts of the country, from your own investigation?

A. To my knowledge—I have never made a study about how many people ride around in cars in Los Angeles. I am no expert on this. I can give you an impression.

It would seem to me that looking at your freeways you've got a helluva lot of people moving around in automobiles. But I don't know if this is more or less than in other areas of the country. I can't quote you any statistics or figures on this. I can say that it looks like this might be the case [fol. 18] but I couldn't be sure.

Please don't misunderstand my attempt to answer your question to be snide or in any way disrespectful. I don't mean it that way at all. But I am accustomed to precise terminology, and unless I can get it I cannot answer a question intelligently unless I know that we are both talking about the same thing.

Q. Would you call this a fragmented grocery industry, Mr. King, as opposed to being concentrated?

A. Mr. Hughes, will you describe to me what you mean by the word "fragmented"?

Q. I am not answering the questions. I will rephrase it.

Mr. Alsup: If you are going to use the term, Mr. Hughes, you better know what you mean.

The Witness: How can I answer a question, sir, if I don't know we are both referring to the same terminology? "Fragment" to me means pieces.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Is this a grocery industry which is in many pieces as opposed to one being concentrated?

Mr. Alsup: By "this" you are referring to the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

Mr. Knight: Yes, sir.

Mr. Alsup: You are referring to all tiny pieces, Mr. Hughes, or tiny pieces plus bigger pieces?

Mr. Knight: Pieces the way he uses it.

[fol. 19] The Witness: I didn't use it in any other way.

Mr. Alsup: We will find out what Mr. Hughes means.

Mr. Knight: He said "fragments" menas "pieces" to him.

The Witness: Are you talking about large pieces, small pieces, medium pieces or in-between pieces?

Mr. Hughes: Let us go off the record a second.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Hughes: Q. In your observation of the Los Angeles area have you observed that there is a trend towards concentration in the grocery industry, and by that I mean has the top ten grocery chains achieved the much larger share of the market than they had for several years back?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it is confusing and ambiguous. The time period is indefinite, the top ten is not identified and it assumes a trend in concentration.

Mr. Hughes: I will strike that question.

Q. Are you familiar with any mergers or acquisitions which have occurred in this market in the past ten years?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you name them for us?

A. Well, yes, I can name some of them. I am not sure I can name all of them. Von's-Shopping Bag merger was one. Let me see. I believe Alpha Beta-Raisin's was another within ten years. There were acquisitions of stores by Fox Markets, there were acquisition of store by—[fol. 20] Q. Do you know what markets Fox acquired?

A. Which ones?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Not offhand, no. There were some.

Q. What is the status of Fox Markets today?

A. Oh, they are bankrupt.

Q. Do you know any other acquisitions in the area in the past ten years?

A. Yes. It seemed to me that Greater American acquired stores in the last ten years.

Q. Who did they acquire?

A. Again I couldn't be specific as to which stores they were. They were individual stores. I know that they were acquired. Yor-Way, I believe, also acquired some stores. Again I couldn't be specific as to which ones without checking the record. That is about the size of it, I guess.

Q. Do you know if Food Giant has acquired any stores?

A. Acquired stores?

Q. Acquired or merged with.

A. It seems to me there have been some acquisitions there. Again I don't know specifically without checking our records which stores were acquired.

Q. You stated that Alpha Beta acquired Raising Markets a few years back. Do you know the status of Alpha Beta today?

A. Today? Yes. I believe Alpha Beta is controlled by [fol. 21] Acme.

Q. Do you know if Mayfair has made any acquisitions in the past ten years?

A. Offhand I don't know for sure.

Q. Do you know if McDaniels has made any acquisitions?

A. McDaniels has, I believe, acquired some stores.

Q. Do you know when Lucky Markets came into the area?

A. Yes. But that wasn't a merger. That was—I forget what the government terms this. It is an extension or something similar to this, or extension of market. That wouldn't be considered a merger. No more than, I would presume, that Food Fair acquiring some of the Fox markets would be considered a merger but rather an extension, you know, of an Eastern chain coming into the Western market.

Q. You mentioned that Fox Markets was bankrupt. Do you know the status of McDaniels Markets today?

A. They are also out.

Q. What happened to their stores, do you know?

A. As far as I know they—Well, I am not sure, you see. I am not certain as to what happened to them but all of this would seem to me to point up that there is a constant shifting and flow in this market. And what was big when we made this study, things change, times change.

Q. Mr. King, in your affidavit you state that 65 per cent of all stores in Los Angeles and Orange County are affiliated with a co-operative buying organization. To your [fol. 22] knowledge are the other 35 per cent of the independents affiliated with any similar type organization?

Mr. Alsup: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it is confusing and ambiguous. I don't know what you mean by "the other 35 per cent of the independents."

Mr. Hughes: Of the stores. Excuse me.

Would you read the question back, please.

(The reporter read the pending question.)

Mr. Hughes: Q. I would like to rephrase that question and ask you: To your knowledge to the remaining 35 per cent of the stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties belong to any similar type of buying group?

A. To my absolute knowledge on the balance of the 35 I would have no way of knowing. This could not be determined unless we surveyed all 35 per cent.

Q. You stated in your affidavit, Page 5, or you infer that there are some advantages to be obtained from belonging to a co-operative buying group. Do you know what lines of grocery products can be purchased through Certified?

A. Oh, yes. I am well acquainted with Certified.

Q. What lines do they sell?

A. Primarily grocery and non-foods.

Q. Do they carry dairy products?

A. Some dairy products but not—Again, you see, you have to define these terms, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Do they carry liquid milk products?

[fol. 23] A. No, they do not.

Q. Do they carry ice cream?

A. No, they do not. However, you see a statement like this begs an answer. The important thing is that the Certified Grocery Company, probably today the world's largest co-op——

Q. Mr. King, I believe you answered the question.

Mr. Alsup: I don't believe he has. The witness is entitled to complete his answer.

Mr. Hughes: All I asked is: Do they sell liquid milk?

The Witness: Yes. You see, sir, in order to clarify this picture it is important——

Mr. Hughes: Q. They either sell it or they don't.

A. Yes, I understand that they either sell them or they don't. But it isn't necessary for them to sell it.

Mr. Alsup: Complete your answer, please, Mr. King.

Mr. Knight: Does Certified sell ice cream?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Knight, there was a question pending and the witness started to answer it and he is not being permitted to answer it and I am not going to stand for harassment of the witness.

You may complete your answer, Mr. King.

The Witness: No, Certified does not sell ice cream per se as Certified. But this is no problem to the independent who belongs to a co-op like Certified or Spartan or Lewis Grocery Company, or something like that, because in many in[fol. 24] stances where perishables are concerned, whether it be ice cream or whether it be produce or whether it be meats or whether it be certain dairy products not carried by the Certified warehouse, which has to be obtained through outside sources, these independents can outcompete the chain six ways from Sunday.

Now, if you would like to know why they can do this I can answer that too.

I take it nobody wants to know why. Yes or no? No?

My mother told me never to volunteer.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Mr. King, I would like to show you an exhibit which I believe has previously been identified as Dick Exhibit No. 3.

Mr. Alsup: I have an objection to this before any question is asked about it.

Mr. Hughes: Make your objection.

Mr. Alsup: I object to asking questions of the witness concerning an exhibit which bears no identification, the source and foundation for the figures not having been laid and containing a misleading label entitled "Changes In Concentration," and so on.

I have made my objection and now if you wish to ask questions concerning it in view of that objection, you may.

Mr. Huges: Q. Mr. King, would you look at this exhibit, which is Dick No. 3, and look at the share of the top 20 chains in the Los Angeles market for 1948 and 1958. What [fol. 25] do you observe about their market share?

A. From——

Mr. Alsup: Just a minute.

I would like to ask a question on voir dire.

Mr. King, do you have any knowledge whether or not this exhibit is accurate?

The Witness: I wouldn't. You see, this is just the point that I was going to make here. It is amazing what you can do with charts, graphs, figures, et cetera. I would have to know—There are a few more pieces of information that I would have to know about this. Would you mind explaining what all this means?

Mr. Hughes: Q. Mr. King, I only asked you to look at the top 20.

A. Yes. Which are the top 20?

Q. The very top of the chart.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Hughes, would you explain to Mr. King who the top 20 were in 1948 and who the top 20 were in 1958?

Mr. Hughes: I am not answering the questions here.

Q. I would like to explain to you that these figures supplied by the Bureau of the Census——

Mr. Alsup: Are you testifying to that, Mr. Hughes?

Mr. Hughes: These figures are not yet in evidence.

Q. The government believes that the top 20 chains in this Los Angeles area had 43.8 per cent of the market share of the grocery business in this area in 1948 and they had 56.9 [fol. 26] per cent in 1958.

A. The top 20?

Q. The top 20.

A. The same 20?

Mr. Alsup: Are you so stating, Mr. Hughes, that they are the same 20?

Mr. Hughes: Q. These are just the top 20.

A. You see, this——

Q. I haven't asked a question yet.

A. I mean what is implied here is erroneous research, sir. We have got to get something more specific than that. Are we talking about bananas and bananas or are we talking about apples and bananas?

Q. Mr. King, I am going to ask you one question. In your observation of the Los Angeles market between 1948 and 1958 have you made any studies or have you observed on your own or through your marketing service or your Food Topics work the fact that the top 20 chains have gone from 43.8 per cent to 56.9 per cent?

A. We didn't say that. But we have made studies and they don't agree with those figures completely.

Q. What have your figures found?

A. It seems to me that we said here that 39 chains, at the time this study was made, and on the chains on which we reported, those 39 chains did 56.3 per cent of the business. That is what we show. Or we have estimated this.

[fol. 27] Q. What was your estimate based on?

A. These estimates are based on very, very competent sources. The sources used by every trade journal in the United States, business papers, and sources used by the Federal Trade Commission, for example, powerful local media. And in this particular instance these figures were supplied by the Los Angeles Herald Express.

Q. Have you any idea where the Herald Express got these figures?

A. Do I have an idea?

Q. Do you know where they got the figures?

A. Yes, we know where they get their information from. This is common knowledge. They get it by direct question and answer. And where they cannot get it by direct question it is estimated. There are various gauges that they use for this estimate.

Q. Do you know how many of these chains listed on Page 35 estimated their answers?

A. Sir?

Q. Do you know how many of these major chains or smaller firms listed on Page 35 estimated their answers?

A. Let me rephrase this, please, so I am sure I know what you are saying. Do I know how many of these chains listed on Page 35 estimated their answers to the Herald Express?

Q. Please.

A. No, I would have no way of knowing this. But this [fol. 28] would not be for me to question. This is an accepted source as is media in other cities around the country. We constantly use their figures and so do our competitors. So does the Federal Trade Commission, I might answer.

Q. On Page 5 of your affidavit, Mr. King, in the sentence where you previously made a correction referring to Orange Empire, you state that Orange Empire had 1,014 member stores in 1958.

A. Correct.

Q. To your knowledge how many of these stores were located in Los Angeles or Orange Counties?

A. No, we do not have an exact number of stores located in Los Angeles or Orange County. No, sir, we do not. But it is a goodly share, depending upon what you mean by the term "goodly."

Q. That is your term, Mr. King.

Mr. Hughes: I have no further questions.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr King, you testified that Fox made a number of acquisitions in the past ten years and then went into bankruptcy. You showed Fox Markets in 1958 as having the ninth largest share of the market; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

[fol. 29] Q. Do you know what happened to Fox Markets subsequent to that time?

A. Yes. They went into bankruptcy, as I said, and the stores were sold off.

Q. You saw McDaniels as No. 11 in terms of share of the market and you testified that McDaniels had made some acquisitions in the past ten years. What happened to McDaniels, if you know?

Mr. Hughes: That is No. 12.

Mr. Alsup: I stand corrected.

The Witness: Unfortunately they too overexpanded and as a result went bankrupt, stores disbanded and dispersed and bought up.

Mr. Alsup: Q. And you show Yor-Way as having the thirteenth largest share of the market in 1958 and you testified that it had made some acquisitions. Do you know what happened to Yor-Way?

A. Well, Yor-Way Markets unfortunately has the same similar history as both Fox Markets and McDaniels. To repeat, overexpansion, tried to get too much at one time and as a result went bankrupt and markets dispersed and bought up.

Q. You show Greater All-American having the twentieth largest share of the market in 1958 and you testified that Greater All-American had made some acquisitions in the past ten years. Do you know what happened to Greater All-American Markets?

[fol. 30] A. Yes. In the case of Greater All-American Markets I believe we showed in 1958 there were ten stores. Greater All-American, I believe, acquired some additional stores since that time and then retrenched. The exact numbers escape me.

Q. In response to a question by Mr. Hughes you testified that Acme Stores acquired the Alpha Beta chain. Do you know whether that was subsequent to the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag?

A. Yes, sir, I believe it was subsequent.

Q. Acme Stores is the nation's fourth largest chain?

A. Fourth largest chain.

Mr. Hughes: I object to your leading the witness.

The Witness: It is the fourth largest chain.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Do you have any knowledge as to whether the Department of Justice made any attack upon that acquisition of Alpha Beta by Acme Stores?

A. Made an attack?

Q. Yes. Challenged it in any way.

A. I believe it was questioned.

Mr. Alsup: Can we stipulate, Mr. Knight, that you were one of the persons who investigated that acquisition of Alpha Beta by Acme Stores and the decision was made by the Department of Justice not to attack that acquisition?

Mr. Knight: No, Mr. Alsup, we may not so stipulate.

Mr. Alsup: Q. You testified in response to questions by Mr. Hughes that Mayfair in you opinion had made some [fol. 31] acquisitions of stores in the past ten years. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any knowledge as to whether or not Mayfair has sold stores in the same period?

A. They very definitely have. And their method of doing it has been to sell to employees, former managers, et cetera, putting them in business.

Q. Mr. King, Mr. Hughes asked you about any differences as between the Los Angeles metropolitan area and other metropolitan areas which you have stuidied and I ask you to refer to Page 4 of your affidavit and to the statement there: "Independents and smaller chains are competing effectively and doing very well in Los Angeles, primarily because of their affiliation with strong co-operative buying organizations." I ask you whether you found strong co-operative buying organizations in other metropolitan areas which you have studied.

A. Yes. As a matter of fact the strong co-op and the strong voluntary, in my opinion and in the opinion of others who are authorieies within the food field, and I think you will find that this is without opposition by anyone in the food industry, that the co-op and the voluntary not only have been the salvation of the independent but the guiding light of the independent. Strong co-ops and voluntaries exist throughout the nation in varying degrees. From West to [fol. 32] East it unfortunately becomes progressively weaker.

We have a saying in the food industry, Mr. Alsup, that the Midwest—this is in reference to the independent—that the Midwest is 20 years behind the West Coast. Hoboken is 20 years behind the Midwest and New York City across the river from Hoboken is 20 years behind Hoboken. So the greatest growth and the greatest strength of the independent, any way you want to view this independent grocery picture, it is strongest here in the West.

Mr. Hughes: I move to strike the answer and object to the question because it is irrelevant to this case and deals with matters outside of the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

Mr. Alsup: You have made your motion and your objection.

I might add that the question which I asked was directly responsive to a question which you put to the witness, Mr. Hughes.

Q. Mr. King, you testified that among your many clients listed in your affidavit in the grocery business are various food firms.

A. That's correct.

Q. Are your consultant to any gas companies?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What gas companies?

A. Shell Oil Company.

Q. What service do you render to that company?

A. Well, the Shell Oil Company is undertaking as a [fol. 33] matter of policy——

Mr. Hughes: I object to this question, which is outside the scope of the case.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Complete your answer, Mr. King.

A. The Shell Oil Company feels that one of the ways to enhance the sale of gasoline and oil products is through the integration of gasoline and oil with certain kinds of food stores, basically the bantam type markets. And the Shell Oil Company will be in this type of an operation on a test basis very shortly and if the test is successful will expand this to other areas in the country.

Q. What role, if any, will you have in those markets?

A. We have been contracted to establish these stores, run them, staff them, manage them and affiliate them with the proper co-ops and voluntaries around the country because of our strong belief in their growth.

Q. What grocery items are planned to be sold in these bantam grocery stores?

A. Convenience items. Anything that would come under the term "convenience" we plan for our initial stores, some 3,000 to 3500 items and sizes of merchandise which will include such convenience items as milk and dairy products, as well as other grocery products. But we will also include a certain amount of prepackaged produce, frozen meat, ice cream. We expect to do a helluva job in ice cream.

Q. Dry groceries?

[fol. 34] A. Oh, yes.

Q. Bread?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Packaged meat?

A. Unquestionably. Frozen.

Q. Have you read of other oil companies which have announced similar plans?

A. Yes. There are several.

Mr. Hughes: I object to the whole line of questioning.

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show you, Mr. King, an article from the Supermarket News dated October 22, 1962, and ask you if you have previously seen this article.

Mr. Alsup: I ask that it be marked as King Exhibit No. 2 for Identification.

Mr. Hughes: I object to the introduction of the article on the ground that it refers to other sections of the country and is not relevant to this case.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as King Exhibit No. 2 for Identification, and is attached hereto.)

The Witness: Your question was am I familiar with this?

Mr. Alsup: Q. Yes.

A. May I see also Page 1, please?

Q. Page 1 is there.

A. Yes, that's right. I have seen this article.

Q. Do you know whether this is a subject matter of [fol. 35] general interest to the food industry or not?

A. The food industry, I can categorically state, is waiting with bated breath for these occurrences to happen and they are really going to make a big impact in the industry.

Mr. Alsup: I offer the exhibit.

The Witness: As a matter of fact Louis Fox that is mentioned in this particular article there, I am well acquainted with him personally, as well as businesswise, who is head of Associated Grocers of Kansas City.

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show you an article, Mr. King, from the Supermarket News for October 15, 1962 bearing the heading "Hear 3 Major Oil Firms Readying Plans to Invade Field of Food Retailing." The first sentence of which states, "Supermarket operators may soon get added competition from a new and powerful source." I ask if you can identify this article.

Mr. Hughes: I object to the article as being irrelevant to the case.

The Witness: Yes. As a matter of fact I was interviewed by Supermarket News concerning this particular article.

Mr. Alsup: Q. This articles says, Mr. King, in one portion, "A Shell spokesman declined to comment on any specific moves." Can you tell us who the Shell spokesman was, if you know?

A. Yes, sir, I do. That happened to be me.

Mr. Alsup: I ask that this article be marked King No. 3

[fol. 36] (The document referred to was marked by the notary public as King Exhibit No. 3 for Identification, and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. I show your another article, Mr. King, from Supermarket News for Monday, May 6, 1963, and ask if you can identify that article.

A. By the way, I would just like to add this for the record on that last exhibit, referring to "Hear 3 Major Oil Firms—"

Q. That is Exhibit 3.

A. That is the one I am talking about. Where the Shell spokesman refused comment. I did this, of course, after conferring with my client. I refused comment. I would just like to add that.

Mr. Hughes: I object to the introduction of this exhibit on the ground that it is irrelevant to the case and outside the metropolitan area.

The Witness: Do you want me to answer this?

Mr. Alsup: Q. Yes. Can you identify it?

A. Oh, yes, I can identify it. I saw it.

Q. Are these matters common knowledge or not in the food industry?

A. Supermarket News is the best read publication in the food industry. Therefore the movements by these various gas companies into the food field of course is common knowledge.

[fol. 37] Q. Based on your years of experience in the food industry, Mr. King, do you have any opinion as to whether or not successful innovations in the grocery business in one way are adopted in other areas of the country?

A. Well, you could almost state categorically, Mr. Alsup, that innovations, if they are successful anywhere in the country, or for that matter on the North American Continent, and that would include the North Pole, and show efficiency and show volume and show sales and show profits, that they are of interest to market operators anywhere else in the country or anywhere else on the continent, because the whole business of our food industry is efficient operation.

Mr. Alsup: I ask this be marked King No. 4.

(The document referred to was marked by the notary public as King Exhibit No. 4 for Identification, and is attached hereto.)

Mr. Alsup: Q. Mr. King, have you noticed any other changes and innovations occurring in the food industry, speaking of the retail end, in recent years?

Mr. Hughes: I object to the question as being vague.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Specifically do you have any knowledge about discount house operations?
A. Oh, yes.

Mr. Hughes: I object to the question as being leading.
The Witness: Do I have any knowledge of discounting?

Mr. Alsup: Q. Yes. Whether or not discount houses are [fol. 38] or are not moving into the supermarket end.
A. By leaps, bounds and giant steps.
Q. Have your noticed any chains——
A. May I just add something else?
Q. Yes, please.
A. Not only they are going in by leaps and bounds into the food industry, the discount house that is one side, that is the giant discount, and on the other coming in like the hordes out of China, the Tartars, is the invasion of the bantam store and the convenience market. This is a trend that is also sweeping the country. And no section of the country is going to be immune from this.
Q. Have you noticed any change in the type of items being sold in liquor stores generally?

Mr. Hughes: Where are we speaking of now?
Mr. Alsup: Based on his experience any place.
The Witness: Mr. Alsup, with due respect I would have to confine that answer that in the case of liquor stores you have controls that are not normally there in the case of other types of retail outlets. Liquor stores are generally controlled in their operation and in their merchandise as well as their merchandising methods by the various State liquor control boards and Alcoholic Beverage Control Boards that exist around the country. It would be very difficult for me to make a statement concerning liquor stores not being aware of all the rules and regulations that [fol. 39] concern that kind of a product from the standpoint of government regulations.
Q. Mr. King, in response to questions by Mr. Hughes you testified that any independent can outcompete any chain on items such as produce and meat which are not carried by Certified Grocers or Orange Empire. Would you state the basis for that conclusion?

A. Well, as any good operator in the country can tell you, the prime profit in both produce and meat is operational. In other words— You see, meat discounts generally speaking in the industry are so slight as to be negligible anyway, you know, in terms of the volume that a single store would buy or even a group of stores or a chain or anything else. This isn't where the profit is made, on the buying. It isn't even made so much on the selling. It is made on the cutting in the case of meat. This is an operational problem. This is a problem of inefficiency. That is No. 1.

The chain store cutter of meat cannot be classed in the same category as the independent who watches his meat operation. The indepndent is as much concerned with the quality and the operational efficiency of his meat department and produce department as he is in the realm of customer handling.

The independent has a chance here to outmerchandise the chain because by and large this is one of the big things, quality meats. Quality meats at really good competitive prices, because he knows how to cut, this is the bane of [fol. 40] existence of the chains in general and that is the reason for so damn meat clinics all over the country run by various organizations, such as Supermarket Institute and National Association of Food Chains and others, who do nothing but try to hold classes for regional operators to make them more efficient.

The same thing holds true in produce, the control of waste and the control of quality. This is where the profits are made operationally. And the independent who sits on top of his operation is in far better position to control these costs than the mammoth chain operator. And he can outmerchandise him producewise and meatwise.

This is the story across the country.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. Mr. King, do you know when this merger occurred between Von's and Shopping Bag?

A. The exact date?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, I don't

Q. Do you know approximately?

A. Yes. I believe it was in 1960, I think.

Mr. Alsup: I will stipulate with you as to the date, if [fol. 41] you want it, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. Hughes: Q. Do you know what the sales of Von's Grocery Company were in 1958, the year of your survey?

A. Yes. It is so stated on Page 35 of this article.

Q. Mr. King, have you received a fee for testifying for the defendants in this case?

A. Have I received a fee?

Q. Are you working on a fee basis?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Will you tell us what your fee is?

A. Gee, you know, I will tell you but this is going to strike you awfully funny. I have no idea but it's true. I haven't decided.

Q. Do you know how many stores Von's-Shopping Bag has today?

A. In total? The exact number, no.

Q. Approximately?

A. I wouldn't want to venture a guess. You know, I will tell you about these store buildings, they change from week to week.

Q. Do you know how many stores Safeway has in the Los Angeles area today?

A. Today? No. All of these figures, by the way, are readily available.

Q. Do you know how many stores Ralphs has in this area today?

[fol. 42] A. I wouldn't give an answer to the exact number of stores or an approximate number of stores at this minute if my life depended on it without recourse to the proper sources.

Q. You wouldn't know in the Thriftimart?

A. It isn't I don't know. I know where to get the information but I haven't got it available at this moment. I would be very happy to supply this information at any time. I haven't got it available right now. This is no secret.

Mr. Hughes: I have no further questions.

Recross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. King, you testified that you will be paid a fee for your services in this case.

A. That's right.

Q. Prior to the time that you left Food Topics had you expected to be a witness in this case?

A. Prior to the time? Yes, I did.

Q. Did you at that time state that you would testify without any fee and without any charge for your services?

A. That is correct. At the time, while I was employed by Food Topics, it was agreed by me and so stated, I believe in a letter to Mr. Von der Ahe, or to yourself, I don't recall which, that I would be most happy to testiby at no charge for my services since I was employed by the magazine.

[fol. 43] Q. Thereafter, since you went into business for yourself, you felt that if your time was to be taken up you necessarily had to be compensated; isn't that correct?

A. That is absolutely correct, Mr. Alsup. This is what we sell, is time.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions. Mr. Hughes: That is all.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Alsup: Mr. King, if it is agreeable to counsel for the government and counsel for the defendant that this deposition be filed without your signature, but be deemed to have been signed by you, would you be willing to waive signature?

The Witness: I certainly would.

Mr. Hughes: So stipulated.

Mr. Alsup: So stipulated.

their promotional program. The biggest of these are Fox Markets, McDaniel's Markets, and Yor-Way.

Now, in an unprecedented move, eight chains have announced that they will introduce Blue Chip Stamps on Jan. 4, 1960. According to Albert Watson, Market Basket executive and president of Blue Chip Stamps, the following chains will add stamps: Safeway, Ralphs, Von's, Market Basket, Thriftimart, Shopping Bag, Alexander's, and Lucky.

Reaction of individual operators to this blanketing of the area with stamps was mixed. One merchandiser said, "We'll all have stamps and no one will have the edge."

An operator of an eight-unit chain lamented the spread of stamps.

"Cost of the stamp program will be at least 1.6%," he said. "This will push up the cost of groceries from 1.5% to 2%."

Midwest Oil Firm Tests Food Sales

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Amid further reports of oil company interest in the retail food field, it was learned last week that a Midwest oil firm has been conducting food sales tests in several gas stations for the past three years.

City, Mo., which is supplying two of the stores, has, in addition, been approached by another large oil company, but has no plans to test any other food-service station combinations, according to Louis Fox, AG general manager. He declined to name the firm.

At the same time, there were strong reports last week that another major firm, Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, was seriously considering entering the food field. The firm could not be reached for comment. Other producers said to be preparing to sell food are Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, Socony Mobil Oil Co. and Shell Oil Co.

The Kansas City experiment was termed "not very successful" by George Dewell, director of retail operations for Associated Grocers. Of the three food operations supplied by the retailer-owned cooperative in the test, only two remain in existence. However, another test store, in Home, Kan., was termed "satisfactory" by an oil company official. It is serviced by Consolidated Foods, out of Manhattan, Kan., he said.

AG set up food operations in three service stations: One located in Raytown, a suburb here, operated by Imperial Central State Oil Co., St. Joseph, Mo.; one in Fulton, about 150 miles from here, and a third in Moberly, about 140 miles from here, both operated by North Missouri Oil Co., Clayton, Mo., a St. Louis suburb.

Both Imperial Central States and North Missouri Oil are subsidiaries of Imperial Refineries Corp., which also has its headquarters in Clayton, and operates in about 13 Midwest and Southern States.

The Raytown unit closed about a year ago, when Imperial sold the station. Mr. Dewell attributed the failure of the food operation to the same reasons that have kept bantam and superettes from flourishing in this area: The great number of larger, conventional supermarkets and their long hours, taking the edge off convenience type markets.

The two units still in operation in Fulton and Moberly have been doing a weekly food volume in the range of about $3,000-$5,000 retail, Mr. Dewell said, but recently their volumes have been slipping, with additional supermarket competition coming into their areas.

The food sections adjoin the offices of the service stations within the same structure, a checkstand acting as a partition, Mr. Dewell noted. About 1,000-1,200 square feet are devoted to food at each location. Shelving and frozen food cases are arranged for self-service.

Contacted in St. Joseph, Lloyd Dowden, district manager Imperial States, noted that the firm's food and gasoline combination in Home, Kan., has a separate building for the food store, while the gasoline station office is set on the pump island. The food store has about 1,200 square feet, and carries a "complete line of foods, except for fresh meats," he said.

Non-foods include health and beauty aids, and various impulse items, such as ammunition and some soft goods. The store has one check stand, and the layout is as in a conventional supermarket, but on a smaller scale, he noted.

The store tries to post supermarket prices whenever possible, he said, but sometimes a higher markup must be used. The store maintains the same hours as the gas station, from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., seven days a week.

Mr. Dowden said the operation has attracted more gasoline volume and food volume has been running in the range of $3,000-$5,000 a week.

Imperial Refineries has about 10 food and gas combinations throughout its entire operations.

Hear 3 Major Oil Firms Readying Plans to Invade Field of Food Retailing

By Steve Weinstein

NEW YORK.—Supermarket operators may soon get added competition from a new and powerful source. At least three major oil companies are in the process of moving into the retail food business, Supermarket News learned at the weekend.

Socony Mobil Oil Co. and Shell Oil Co. Standard and Socony could not be reached for comment. A Shell spokesman declined to comment on any specific moves.

He did say, in general terms, that the firm presently has many service stations adjacent to bantam food stores and supermarkets and has been studying the relationship of the two fields for some time.

The gasoline field, he pointed out is very competitive, and every company is seeking ways to improve its position.

It was not clear exactly what form the new food markets would take, and it is probable that each firm will end up with different operations, assumedly either franchised to current operators of gas stations or to food operators.

At least one of the firms plans

See Say Oil, Page 14

Say Oil Firms Plan to Move Into Food Field

to erect bantam markets, adjacent to its stations, it was learned. However, it is understood that another Socony, already has experimented with bantam stores and rejected the idea.

Instead it is planning to rearrange its stations, moving the pumps behind them, and selling about 100 food items in case lots.

Basically, it was understood that the oil company plans have progressed beyond the stage of merely studying possibilities. The firms have talked with food consultants and grocery manufacturers, and are now considering selection of merchandise and fixtures.

Trade observers called an invasion of the food field a natural move for the oil companies. It would provide plus volume from customers already in the service stations at little added cost. Tray packs probably would be used heavily.

Many service stations, of course, already sell food in limited ways, mostly through vending machines. And in the early days of the automobile, the same establishments frequently sold both food and gasoline.

The reverse also is true. Supermarkets today are in the service station business to a limited extent. A number of firms now operate stations. The most prominent chain in the field is Food Fair, which in addition to service stations also operates tire and auto accessory centers.

Food-Gas and Vice-Versa Movement Seen Spreading

By Steve Weinstein

NEW YORK.—Supermarket firms and oil companies continue to show a strong interest in each other's operations. All signs point to an increase in the next few months in the number of supermarkets selling gas and gas stations offering food.

The most recent move by supermarkets along these lines was made by Supermarkets Operating Co., 19-unit chain member of the New Jersey Shop-Rite cooperative.

SOC is testing a gas station across from one of its Shop-Rite supermarkets in Cranford, N. J. The station offers private label oil and gas, and plans include introduction of Shop-Rite tires and other auto accessories.

If the test is successful, SOC will open additional stations, with three to five more contemplated in the near future.

Meanwhile in Spokane, Wash., Buy-Well Foods is operating a service station leased from Richfield Oil Co. The station is 30 feet from a Buy-Well Food Store and, tie-in promotions are run linking the station to the unit as well as to the firm's three other supermarkets.

A number of other supermarket firms also are in the gas station business. Probably the most prominent is Food Fair, which also operates tire and accessory centers.

Mank service stations, of course, have been in the food business for years, but this generally has consisted of selling a limited line of groceries, often in or near small towns. The practice was even more pronounced in the early days of the automobile.

The modern trend to service station expansion into new fields has moved in three directions: 1. Vending machines, probably the most prevalent at present; 2. gift shops and restaurants, and 3. superettes.

The latest move was made late last month by Humble Oil & Refining Co., New York, chief domestic affiliate of Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

Humble, in its Eastern region, signed a contract with Frank G. Shattuck Co., New York, operator of Schrafft's foods and restaurants.

The contract calls for a food service center to serve vended frozen foods which can be heated in seconds in electronic ovens.

The center will be built by Esso and operated by Schrafft's. It will be in a separate building at an Esso travel center south of Baltimore on Maryland Route 3.

The building is designed to seat 60 persons, with additional seating capacity during the summer on a terrace fitted with outdoor furniture.

The accent will be on vending, but a staff also will be on hand to make sandwiches and salads. The restaurant will be open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

In a somewhat similar move in March, American Oil Co., subsidiary of Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, opened its first American Way gift shop and restaurant near Albion, Mich. The facility, on the site of a Standard station, is operated in conjunction with Food Facilities, Inc., Harvey, Ill.

The shop is to be the first of a chain. In addition to a 24-hour snack shop and dining room, it will sell cookware, wall accessories and other gift items. The firm also is testing food vending and is said to be considering entering the food field on a more direct basis.

Meanwhile Stouffer Foods Corp., Cleveland, is increasing its frozen food volume through self service heat-and-eat operations at service stations in Michigan, New York, Kentucky and Ohio. The food is in plasticized casseroles or throw-away plates with transparent covers.

Future moves by oil companies may involve supermarkets even more directly. There are strong but unconfirmed reports that a number of firms are readying tests of take-home food sales. Mentioned as possibilities are such companies as Shell Oil nad Socony Mobil Oil Co.

Other firms already are in the filed.

Imperial Refineries Corp., Clayton, Mo., operates about 10 food and gas station combinations in its 13-State Midwest and Southern operating area.

Two of the gas station stores are supplied by Associated Grocers of Kansas City. One is in Fulton and one in Moberly, Mo.; both stations are operated by Imperial subsidiaries. A third combined operation is in Home, Kan.

In Dallas, Humble Oil leases space adjacent to a station to an independent superette operator.

It is thought that the future sale of food by oil companies could take several paths. One is the bantam market approach. The other, said to be under consideration by one large firm, involves selling about 100 basic food items in case lots.

[fol. 2294] IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Transcript of Proceedings—June 14, 1963

The Court: They have it over here, I guess.

Mr. Alsup: I might say, your Honor, if I may, in all of these depositions, as a natural course there is a lot of hearsay testimony, as is bound to be in any deposition. That is one of the reasons I didn't object to hearsay in court the other day. It seems to me that both of us have elicited in depositions and the over-all picture has not changed, and we felt it would consume the time of the court to make specific objections.

The Court: Well, counsel, there are two types of cases that thrive on hearsay, a patent case and an antitrust case. They thrive on hearsay.

Mr. Alsup: I don't know about patent cases, and very little about the antitrust. But I know that that is very true there.

The Court: I think on one occasion Mr. Thurmond Arnold was arguing a case in the Supreme Court, and after he had traveled all over the land outside of the record for about forty minutes, the chief justice asked him a question and he said, "If I had to answer that I would have to go outside the record, your Honor."

Go ahead, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor please, may we call Dr. William Brown as our next witness.

[fol. 2295] WILLIAM F. BROWN, called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?

The Witness: William F. Brown.

Direct Examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Dr. Brown, would you state your residence address for the record?

A. 14018 Otsego, Sherman Oaks.

Q. Dr. Brown, what is your occupation?

A. I am a professor at the University of California.

Q. And would you state for the record your academic background?

A. I received my Bachelor's and Master's degrees in economics at UCLA in 1933 and 1934. And then went to Northwestern University and received my doctorate several years later.

I then returned to teaching at the University, UCLA, and have been in teaching and research since that time.

Q. Have you done any market research, other than work as a professor in teaching?

A. Well, beginning with my doctoral dissertation, which was concerned with market research and retailing, I have, [fol. 2296] I suppose for the last 23 years been primarily engaged in—or very frequently engaged in one or another type of market research projects.

The first study I worked on, this doctoral dissertation had to do with the measurement, from the consumer point of view, of shopping patterns—in the Los Angeles area, I might add.

Q. Were you engaged by the Government to undertake a study in connection with this case?

A. I was.

Q. What was the nature of that study?

A. Well, there were two aspects. One was to indicate the factors delimiting the market area for the retail grocery market in this general area—that is, in Southern California.

And the second aspect was to deal with the nature, the geographical nature, one might say, of competition within the markets so delimited.

Q. And did you——

A. I might say that these studies were based primarily, to be based primarily upon the material available in census reports and in the material available from the managers' answers to the interrogatories.

Q. Can you describe how you undertook the first part of the study?

[fol. 2297] A. Yes. I simply used the data available from the 1960, preliminary data available from the 1960 census of population, and with certain topographic maps, I had that were plotted by a cartographer in the geography department on maps.

I think that problem has been stipulated.

Q. Do you have a copy of Government's Exhibit 83 for identification?

The Clerk: You have the original. Do you want me to give it to him?

The Court: He can have this if he wants.

The Clerk: This is the original one.

Mr. Vaughn: May I inquire if you have another copy? We don't have a copy of that.

The Court: Here, use mine, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: Thank you.

(The exhibit was placed before the witness.)

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Dr. Brown, can you describe what this exhibit shows?

A. It shows simply that in the relevant area, that is Southern California, there is a high concentration of population in what might be termed the coastal plane, primarily the southern part of Los Angeles County and the northwestern part of Orange County, what is usually termed the [fol. 2298] metropolitan district.

Q. Does this exhibit relate the population density to the topography?

A. Yes, it shows the fact that the mountains in the region tend to act as barriers to the expansion of population.

Q. Now, referring to the second part——

The Court: You say that—if I understand you, that those mountains in 83, are those the mountains, the Sierra Madre mountains, or what mountains are they?

The Witness: Sierra Madre, the San Gabriel in general on the northern part, the Hollywood Hills along the coast and on the west, and then the range in Orange County to the south.

The Court: Well, they are scraping those off awfully fast, Doctor.

The Witness: Well, I think that still there is not much concentration of population in the mountains——

The Court: You mean at the present time. I understood you to say it was a bar to the explosion of the population in that direction. Of course, you can't stop explosion, that we can see, until we change some of our fundamental beliefs—but the thing I am talking about is the movement of the population, you are saying in effect that those mountains [fol. 2299] are a bar to the movement of the population.

The Witness: I should correct myself and say that they have been so far a considerable bar to that movement. It is certainly changing.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, Doctor, referring to the second part of your study and referring to Government's 84 for identification, what does this exhibit show?

A. This exhibit simply indicates the location—first you want the underpart?

Q. Refer to the underpart first.

A. Yes. It simply shows the locatioo of Von's or Shopping Bag stores, and the related location of all those competitors which were listed by the managers of Von's or Shopping Bag stores in the answer to the interrogatory.

Q. And what does the overlay show, Doctor?

A. The overlay shows simply the stores of other chains which were located within a two-mile radius of the competitors named by the Von's and Shopping Bag managers.

The Court: Are all these distances approximately two miles between these numbers?

The Witness: Two or less.

The Court: Two or less.

Mr. Coyle: And what is the purport of the entire exhibit, [fol. 2300] Dr. Brown?

The Witness: Simply that there is a sort of interlock in the competitive retail grocery market. One unit competes with another, which competes with another, and that this has a sort of a transmittal effect often in competition.

The Court: What do you mean by "transmittal effect"?

The Witness: That if one competitor adopts a practice or a policy which has certain advantages to him, and significant—I don't like the word—important disadvantages to a nearby competitor, that competitor, the second one, may feel forced to meet the first competitor by adopting the same policy.

The Court: In other words, like a communicable disease, it just spreads, is that what you are saying?

The Witness: Exactly.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Does the fact that the chains in the area generally follow identical prices, that is one chain will have identical prices throughout all its stores, does that play a part in this interlocking competition?

Mr. Vaughn: Object, your Honor, no proper foundation for what all the chains do.

Mr. Coyle: I think it has been developed in the rec- [fol. 2301] ord.

The Court: What is that?

Mr. Coyle: I think it has been developed in the record, that the chains utilize the same prices in all their stores.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, it has been stipulated, your Honor, in that regard that because of the California Unfair Practices Act a chain doesn't normally sell at a lesser price at one store than it does at other stores.

The Court: You mean that is illegal, for a chain to sell at a different price in different stores?

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor. Under the California Unfair Practices Act, however, if a chain should reduce its price in one particular store and maintain it in another, and the complaining party could show that that was done for the purpose of injuring him as a competitor——

The Court: Well, you are talking now about civil liability, aren't you, really?

Mr. Alsup: Oh, yes, that's right, your Honor.

The Court: It would have to be shown that it was done for the purpose of depriving him of his competitive status in that area, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: That is right, and of course, your Honor, I think as Mr. Von der Ahe testified generally the chains, a chain like Von's will have the same prices in all of its [fol. 2302] stores, for the most part. It doesn't——

The Court: Doctor, in your research what have you found? Have you found generally that the prices are the same, or they are not the same, or have you found it out at all?

The Witness: In the separate units of the same chain?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I have not researched that topic scientifically.

The Court: You just assumed, I take it?

The Witness: Well, from one fact, that is, I have drawn the conclusion that since these chains advertise prices in their store-wide—city-wide advertising, that one would expect that in general their units would observe these prices as advertised.

The Court: I think that is probably a reasonable assumption. Upon that basis I will allow the testimony, his opinion.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Doctor, does that play a part in this exhibit?

A. No, I don't think that has been a significant factor in deciding upon setting this opinion up.

This opinion simply shows that as a matter of fact if the chains departed from this sort of policy, to any very great [fol. 2303] extent, in an important way, that inevitably this would be transmitted through the metropolitan area.

Q. Dr. Brown, on the basis of your study and your general experience, can you draw any conclusion as to the geographical nature of competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. Yes, I think I can.

Q. What are those conclusions, Dr. Brown?

A. In the first place, competition is extremely complex and it takes place at many different levels.

In the first place, the so-called firing line level, which we talked about. The chain, the store unit, the store unit competition.

There is also the other extreme, the over-all chain competition. That is chain units against chain units. I think Mr. Von der Ahe's statement the other day—or yesterday indicated this sort of competition when he stated that his firm reduced the general shelf prices and discontinued the practice of extreme loss leaders. This policy, which I think was probably a very good one, was adopted by other chains in the area.

This in itself indicates, I think, that when a major policy is adopted by one chain, it must be recognized and adopted —not necessarily adopted, but recognized and considered by others, and often adopted.

[fol. 2304] There are other kinds of competition within the area, not only the unit-to-unit competition or competition at the top, but also the transmitted competition, which may or may not be very significant in particular instances.

For example, there are a few Shopping Bag stores which are so located that they do not, according to the store managers, compete directly with a Von's chain. They compete with the same—with a same store in sort of an interlock arrangement. I don't think this is very significant.

On the other hand, it indicates again the complexity of the kinds of competition which can occur in the market. And the action by one unit in this group of three stores might inevitably result in reactions by the others. I should not use the word "inevitable." It might result.

[fol. 2305] Q. Dr. Brown, are you familiar with the methods used by Dorothy Corey, Dr. Dorothy Corey, in making her various studies that have been introduced into evidence here?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't think she is a doctor.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry.

The Court: I don't mean to belittle your title, but "Doctor" doesn't necessarily mean anything, but only the person who speaks it means anything. Do you agree?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: The man is as big as the title.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Are you familiar with Mrs. Corey's studies?

A. Yes.

Q. What is your opinion as to them?

A. In general I would agree with the over-all statements about—not the over-all statements, pardon me—I would agree with the facts that she has emphasized in terms of the results that she has found in individual cases. I would quibble a little about her statistical sampling technique, but I don't think this would do any more than cause a little disagreement about percentages, which I think is unimportant here——

The Court: Isn't any sampling technique open to criticism in some phases?

The Witness: Yes; but some are worse than others by [fol. 2306] a great deal.

The Court: It is a matter of degree is what you mean to say; is that right?

The Witness: Exactly.

In her case, in that particular case she used what is sometimes called a modified haphazhard sampling technique, and I think I could quarrel a little with this, but I think my conclusions as to error would be very small, in terms of what she found with respect to the shopping patterns of the people involved. It is what she didn't state about them that I have some quarrel about.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What is this, Doctor?

A. Primarily two things. One, she used, in her questioning, the words "most" and then "next most." In my experience I have found that a significant number, a large number, as a matter of fact, of consumers, tend to shop not just one store, or two, but often three or four. They may do most of their shopping at one store, but they compare the offerings of a good many other stores, and given enough of an advantage at the other store they will go there.

I think your Honor understood this very clearly and stated it very clearly in talking about the Beverly Hills housewife who would go clear to the valley for cheese, for example.

[fol. 2307] The Court: Well, Doctor, I take it what you mean to say is, simply, that a customer may from day to day trade with a store, an independent or a chain store, but when she gets ready to go down, maybe, and buy a substantial amount of merchandise all at one time, she may go to an entirely different store; is that right?

The Witness: This is one very important aspect of the problem. It is not the only one, I think. There are some customers who will regularly check the specials, for example, of a number of stores, and then go from one to another picking up the specials, regardless of the cost in time and effort. I think Mr. Von der Ahe can check me on this, but I think the trade calls those people "cherry pickers," if I am not mistaken.

There are others who will shop at one store at one time and then move to another at a different time.

In this connection I might also say that while I agree with Mr. Von der Ahe's statement that perhaps the most important factor about store trade is convenience, there are two aspects to convenience. One, it may and is often interpreted to mean only nearness of the home to the store; and I think very often convenience can mean a lot of other things, too, such as the normal pattern of travel of a consumer. For example, there are a number of gasoline stations near my home, but since I normally go into Westwood [fol. 2308] to work I buy my gasoline generally in Westwood, because it is more convenient, although it is ten miles away from my home. And this is not too unusual in grocery shopping patterns. I say "too unusual"; I mean 10, 15 or 20 per cent of the customers of a particular store may fall into this bracket.

It helps to explain the peculiar situation, I think, in some of the defendant's exhibits in which—or Mrs. Corey's situation—in which a consumer who lives right next to one Von's store actually shops, says she does most of her shopping at a different Von's store.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions, your Honor.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Professor Brown, when did you receive your doctoral degree?

A. 1941.

Q. Did you say that your doctoral dissertation, if I am using the correct word, sir, was concerning shopping habits in the Los Angeles metropolitan area?

A. No. I said that as part of the dissertation I did some research on shopping patterns in the Los Angeles area.

Q. Shopping patterns in any particular type of store?

A. Well, I used two different situations. I used the Sears-Roebuck stores, and I used certain grocery stores [fol. 2309] only, a limited sample, Ralph's Grocery Store in Santa Monica, and in Westwood, and the Safeway Stores. There I found that there was what I called at that time a good deal, again 10 to 20 per cent, of cross-traffic or cross-travel, a man who lived near the Glendale Sears would actually be found shopping in the Olympic Sears or the Pico Sears; and the same thing occurred in connection with the Ralph's stores.

Q. You say you live in Sherman Oaks, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what intersection you live closest to, main intersection?

A. Riverside Drive and Woodman.

Q. Are you married, sir?

A. Yes.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think this is outside of the scope of direct.

The Court: I don't think whether he is married or unmarried would influence me.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree with that. I was merely going to ask him about his shopping habits.

The Court: I see. All right.

I thought we were going over on another tour of some kind.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. I just wanted to know whether you or your wife do [fol. 2310] most of the grocery shopping in your family.

A. I think my wife does most of it.

Q. You do some of it?

A. I do some of it.

The Court: Let me ask him a question, counsel.

Do you pay any attention to prices when you shop?

The Witness: Yes, I do.

The Court: Just to what degree? When you walk into a grocery store to purchase, if you want to buy some canned deviled ham, do you really pay any attention to it?

The Witness: Yes, I do. I think I may be a little extreme, because of my interest——

The Court: How do you know what the price should be?

The Witness: Canned deviled ham, it is a question really of whether the price is too high for the product, regardless of the competition. In other words, if it is a dollar and a half, for example, and I think it is too much, I can't afford it.

The Court: It will run about 22, 23, 24, 25 cents, I imagine, for a small can, that would be my guess. If you walked into a store and it would be two cents above that price, would you pay any attention to the price?

The Witness: No.

The Court: You would pick up the number of cans you [fol. 2311] wanted and that would be it?

The Witness: I think so. In that one case.

The Court: All right. But, Doctor, if you are going to shop and you like a particular store, unless there is something that calls your attention to an extravagant overcharge, are you really going to pay much attention to the price? Isn't it the condition of the store, the way the personnel treats you, the talking conditions, and all the things, that really invites you to that store?

The Witness: No; I think I would be influenced by price. In fact, I know I am, because I do consider on major items the price aspect. I would not go to a store which I felt did not have, in general, shelf prices that were competitive. For example, rightly or wrongly——

The Court: Let me interrupt you. As a matter of fact, don't you know that today in Los Angeles practically all stores are competitive on shelf prices?

The Witness: This may be true across the board, as an average——

The Court: That's what I mean, across the board.

The Witness: But that doesn't mean that in individual cases they are. Nor does not mean that there may not be some stores, some chains—my impression, for example, is that Fox before its change of ownership, bankruptcy, my impression of Fox Stores was that it seemed to be some-[fol. 2312] what higher-priced across the board than other chains in the area. Mr. Von der Ahe perhaps can correct me on that point. I don't know.

The Court: Go ahead.

The Witness: This is an impression that I have, and from my interviewing of consumers I know that consumers very often do get these impressions. Again, rightly or wrongly.

The Court: But, Doctor, I am not talking about a Jergenson store. Are you acquainted with Jergenson?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: They are higher in price, I take it, because they claim to be a premium store.

The Witness: And they give credit.

The Court: And credit and delivery and things of that kind. A great many people go there for those reasons and their prices, I assume, are higher. But, generally speaking, take an area like Beverly Hills, wouldn't you expect to find the shelf prices pretty much the same at Safeway, Ralph's, or whatever store you go to?

The Witness: I wouldn't expect to find them the same. I would expect to find the average about the same.

Perhaps I could answer this by saying I have done some research on the problem in the Westwood area——

The Court: That's good enough. Let's use that.

[fol. 2313] The Witness: (Continuing) —and I found that if one took the leading chains, excepting the Villa Mart and Jergenson's, and we could use as an average of all prices on a typical market basket——

The Court: Excluding loss-leaders.

The Witness: (Continuing) —excluding loss-leaders, this was a market basket, and we used an average of 100 per cent, or an index of 100 to indicate the average on each item, that the average for the chains would be in the 85 to 90 index, and Villa Mart would be 110, and Jergenson's 125, perhaps, but that on individual items in the market basket that there might be as much as a 20 per cent variation between stores.

The reason for this, I think——

The Court: Is that in hard groceries or produce?

The Witness: The canned goods, primarily; eggs of a given grade, for instance; and there was one item of produce, I think, in there, apples, which is a fairly standard item, not completely so. But this is a market basket.

The Court: Did you attribute this to a competitive situation, or the human equation, that one store manager doesn't know what is going on in the other area?

The Witness: I think the human equation. I think the stores try to stay as close to competitors as they can, but they have thousands of items to price, and this is an ex-[fol. 2314] tremely difficult thing to keep perfectly aligned.

The Court: Would you say on advertised items the shelf prices run about the same?

The Witness: A great many of the advertised items are specials.

The Court: Let's leave out the loss-leaders. I am talking about the general advertising listing prices. I guess most of those are leaders, though, aren't they?

The Witness: Most of them are. They are the advertising allowance items, which sometimes are quite numerous.

The Court: You and I talk as if we have been in the grocery business, and I was wondering. You have had no experience in the grocery business, have you?

The Witness: No. I have had some experience in retailing.

The Court: Were you a clerk in the store?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: What kind of store?

The Witness: Department store.

The Court: What kind of merchandise?

The Witness: Well, at that time it was in men's wear.

The Court: You hever got into women's wear?

The Witness: Never got into women's wear.

The Court: Go ahead.

[fol. 2315] By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Professor Brown, let me ask you something about the survey to which you were just referring in the Westwood area. Did you check Market Basket's price on the same day that you checked the competition?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think maybe the record should be clarified. I think the doctor was referring to a market basket being a basket of an assortment of items.

Mr. Vaughn: I misunderstood you.

The Court: I think that is correct, counsel.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Let me ask you this: Would you name some of the chains in the Westwood area whose stores you checked in the course of this survey?

A. I think I can name them all. Ralph's, Safeway—this was Ralph's before it left the Westwood area, because this has been several years—Ralph's, Safeway, Westward Ho, which is a small chain now, Villa Mart.

Q. Did you check the Food Giant on Westwood Boulevard, south?

A. South, no. This was outside the Westwood Village area, which I was primarily concerned in checking.

Q. Did you check all the stores on the same day?

A. They were checked in the same two-day period, early in the week.

[fol. 2316] Q. In other words, did you check Ralph's on one day and the Westward Ho on another day?

A. Yes.

Q. Suppose they had both had the same prices on a given item, let's say Tide 49 cents on the first day, and they had both reduced their price one cent on the second day, your survey would show that they were selling at different prices, when in fact they were selling at identical prices; isn't that correct?

A. If this occurs, it would be correct. But the days were chosen so these price changes would be minimized.

[fol. 2317] By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. By the way, tell me about that Ralphs store in Westwood Village, would you please? What happened to that store?

A. Ralphs abandoned the store, as I understand. This is hearsay, I presume.

The Court: This would not be the first hearsay in this case.

The Witness: I understood, because of the problem or difficulty in parking. It had no direct parking lot.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

The Witness: And parking is a very serious problem in Westwood.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Now, let's get back to the Riverside Drive and Woodman location, if we can.

A. Surely.

Q. Now, trying to divorce your academic pursuits from your normal chores around the house, buying groceries for yourself and your family now. What store do you shop at, where do you do most of your shopping?

A. Speaking for myself alone or myself and my wife?

Q. Speaking for yourself first.

A. In terms of the quantities that I have purchased I would say probably the Ralphs store at Ventura Boulevard.

[fol. 2318] Q. About how far from your house is that store?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I don't think that is relevant. I object to this line of questioning.

Mr. Vaughn: I think I can develop the relevancy to it, your Honor, because this witness has testified to the competitive picture and—— the Court: Well, first, counsel, without arguing it, what is the purpose of your question?

Mr. Vaughn: The purpose of the question is to determine what stores he shops.

The Court: Well, does it go to the credibility of his opinion?

Mr. Vaughn: I think it will, your Honor.

The Court: Well, if it does I will allow it.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Now, the Ralphs at Ventura Boulevard and what?

A. Hazeltine.

Q. Havenhurst?

A. Hazeltine.

Q. I beg your pardon. About how far is that from your house?

A. Approximately a mile, I think, a mile and a half.

Q. Now, what other stores do you——

The Court: Counsel, you are going to be some extra [fol. 2319] time, I assume?

Mr. Vaughn: I think it is going to be about 15 minutes, your Honor.

The Court: I think we had better take a recess.

By the way, Doctor, credibility doesn't mean that we think you are not telling the truth. It just means in these cases the weight of your opirion.

The Witness: I understand, your Honor.

The Court: We will recess until 2:00 o'clock.

(Whereupon at 12:00 o'clock noon, an adjournment was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m. of the same date.)

[fol. 2320] Los Angeles, California, Friday, June 14, 1963, 2:00 P.M.

The Court: Proceed.

William F. Brown, the witness on the stand at the time of the recess, having been heretofore duly sworn, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-examination. (Resumed)

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Professor Brown, you have told us that when you do most of your family shopping, or when you do your family shopping, you usually go to the Ralph's a mile and a half from your home; is that correct?

A. I frequently go there. I would say I go there more times than I go elsewhere.

Q. Fine. Do you ever go to any stores in Long Beach to do your shopping?

A. Not that I can recall.

Q. Do you ever go to any store in Anaheim to do your shopping?

A. I think once I did a little shopping there, coming home from Disneyland one time with a relative.

Q. Just that one occasion?

A. That's right.

[fol. 2321] Q. How about West Covina?

A. I don't think so. There may have been one occasion of the same sort, but it would be once in 10 years.

The Court: I will get you out of that travel area. How about La Crescenta?

The Witness: Never in La Crescenta.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. I take it that it is fair to say then, sir, that the stores, grocery stores in the communities or cities which his Honor and I have named, are really not in competition for your patronage; isn't that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Regardless of the fact—and this is true—regardless of the fact that the stores in those particular cities may have identical prices and merchandise policies to the Ralph's store a mile and a half from your home; isn't that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. I would like to show you—do you have a copy there——

The Court: I don't think counsel asked you the next question. I don't mean to run his case for him, but the next question is, the reason you stopped in those stores was because you were on the way traveling somewhere; is that right?

[fol. 2322] The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Vaughn: I thought that was clear from the record.

But that is correct?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: The Supreme Court might not see it as clearly as we do.

By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Because you happened to be in the vicinity in an isolated instance; is that right?

A. That's right.

The Court: They don't know these areas, counsel, the way we know them.

[fol. 2323] By Mr. Vaughn:

Q. Do you have Exhibit 84 before you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in that exhibit, as I understand it, you have located the various grocery stores. How did you establish the location of those stores, sir? Did you work from a street map, or did you have just this sort of map?

A. No, I had the street map prepared by the Times-Mirror Company, which spots all the stores of the leading chains in the area.

Q. How did you transpose that on to this map that doesn't have any streets?

A. Actually I transposed it on an overlay map, which was not this overlay. It was in terms of circles, and then this was prepared from that overlay.

Q. Copied from it?

A. I did not do the copying, so I cannot say.

Q. You don't know how this—how you located these particular stores on the map from the street map which was used as your source, is that correct?

A. On the overlay that I prepared, the overlay was placed over the street map and the stores were spotted, along with the outlines of the coast, were spotted on the overlay.

[fol. 2324] Q. Do you know if you were using maps made by the same company or the same map maker?

A. I used only the map of the Times-Mirror Company.

Q. All right, sir. During the course of your direct examination I thought I heard you say in making the overlay for Exhibit 84, that you plotted the stores of all competitors. It is a fact, is it not, that you plotted only the stores of what you regarded as the top eighteen chains, isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And that would not be all the competitors, is that right?

A. That is right. That was an error in my statement.

Q. When did you complete preparation of this map, sir?

A. I believe it would be in the spring of 1961, I think.

Q. Was that after you got back from South America?
A. No, that was before.
Q. You had completed it before you left for South America?
A. Before I left for South America.
Q. When did you leave for South America?
A. In August of 1961.
Q. You completed it shortly before August, say, July?
[fol. 2325] A. I think it was a little before that, as a matter of fact.
Q. In June?
A. It may have been June.
Q. In June.

Mr. Vaughn: No further questions.
Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I offer into evidence Government's Exhibits 83 and 84.
The Court: Admitted.
The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibits 83 and 84 in evidence.

(The exhibits heretofore marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 83 and 84 were received in evidence.)

Mr. Vaughn: I have no objection, your Honor. The witness has indicated, however, that this map was prepared after the pretrial order.
The Court: Counsel, I was waiting for an objection and heard none. They are already in.
Mr. Vaughn: I beg your pardon, your Honor.
The Court: Now I would like to ask one question. On Exhibit 84, I notice on the—what is it on top?
The Witness: Overlay.
The Court: On the overlay, I notice that the chains run between, it says, "interlocking competition between chain [fol. 2326] grocery stores in the Los Angeles area." I think counsel brought out the fact that you did not put in the other competition, independent competition?
The Witness: I think so. As a matter of fact, that would strengthen the general theory, had I done so, I think.
The Court: The theory of what?
The Witness: Showing that there is a substantial interlock between retail grocery units.
The Courts: Well, it may or it may not. I don't know. But what I was getting at is, have you any way of telling me now, from your surveys, generally what the independent situation is in these areas? For example, on 84, you have the—let's go down to the southeast portion. Have you any idea as to what the independent situation is there?

The Witness: No.

[fol. 2327] The Court: Let's go up to the northwest portion on Exhibit 84, the extreme top; do you know what the independent situation is there?

The Witness: Only on the basis of limited personal observation, which I don't think is complete enough to be reliable.

The Court: Can you tell me for example in the San Fernando Valley what the independent situation is there? You live out in that area?

The Witness: Yes, that's right. In the immediate area near which I live I can say that if I were to put links in there, I would add, of course, such stores as Gelson's, at least one or two other supermarkets in the immediate area.

The Court: Have you in your survey considered or determined whether any grocery stores, either chain or independents, have gone out of existence since 1960?

The Witness: Only, again, from the point of view of my knowledge of the immediate neighborhood.

The Court: Well, what would that be?

The Witness: I know that one or two independents have gone out of business, small stores.

The Court: How close is that to a Safeway, for example? Let's take one. Name one first, let's work on one.

[fol. 2328] The Witness: A little store not far from us called Ferrilli's, which has gone out in the last six months.

The Court: How big a store was it?

The Witness: It would be smaller than what is sometimes called a superette, I think. It is a rather small store, no parking, probably 20 by 50 in size.

The Court: Rather limited in inventory?

The Witness: Quite definitely limited in inventory. It had a small meat department.

The Court: Has any new store gone in in that vicinity in the last couple of years?

The Witness: Yes. When Bullock's completed their Fashion Park Shopping Center, the Westwood Ho opened a market in that center.

The Court: How about any of the chains?

The Witness: The Westwood Ho is a small chain.

The Court: Excuse me. What I should have said was, any of the well-known chains, Ralph's, Safeway, Von's, or Shopping Bag.

The Witness: Von's opened a store, I think, abov. 1954 or '55 at Riverside Drive——

The Court: I am talking now since 1960.

The Witness: The Hughes store I think opened a little before that on Van Nuys Boulevard.

[fol. 2329] The Court: Have there been any of these stores such as Safeway, Ralph's, Alpha Beta, Food Giant, Market Basket, Mayfair—any of those opened a store anywhere in that vicinity since 1960?

The Witness: Not that I know of.

The Court: Now, the other store, what was the other one you said they put out of business?

The Witness: Ferrilli's, the little one.

The Court: Is that the one we have just been talking about?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: What was the other store that went out of business?

The Witness: There was an Italian—a little grocery specializing in Italian food specialties, I think just off Van Nuys Boulevard on a side street.

The Court: I take it that is not to be classified in the sense of a grocery store, then, as we are talking about it here?

The Witness: Not in terms of a major grocery store.

The Court: That's all. Anything further, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I have one question.

Q. Dr. Brown, how did you arrive at the two-mile area [fol. 2330] that you used in plotting these stores?

A. Well, I believe in the answers to the interrogatories that there was a statement to the effect that a one and a half or two-mile limit was a maximum, and I used this as a more or less conservative estimate then, in my view a conservative estimate of the limit of a trading area.

I do not believe that a trading area can be defined mechanically in terms of miles or driving time. It is an average, and I think, as Mr. Von der Ahe said, in one area it is much smaller, in another area it may be much larger.

Furthermore, when we talk about trading area or draw about 60 or 70 per cent of the customers, it may be one area, the term really ought to be defined. If we are talking thing; if we are talking about 95 per cent of the customers, it may be another, a much larger area; and, if we are talking about all of them, obviously it is still larger.

Mr. Coyle: Those are all the questions.

The Court: I would like to ask a few questions.

I want it understood that I am merely trying to ascertain facts that perhaps may have some bearing insofar as I see the case.

Doctor, hasn't the over-all picture of the food market changed in the metropolitan area since 1940, haven't there been substantial changes in conditions?

[fol. 2331] The Witness: Yes, sir. There has been a rather decided decrease in the number of units per thousand population. This is, I think, a basic relationship between grocery stores and the area.

The Court: Have you taken into account in your consideration of these matters factors such as in the Los Angeles area people move more than they do in the eastern areas? This is a town on wheels, you know that, don't you?

The Witness: Yes. And, as a matter of fact, I am in the middle of a study now, I haven't quite completed it, in the change of this relationship between stores and population for all kinds of stores, from 1929 to 1958. My figures, completed from 1929 to 1948, show rather conclusively that this change is greater in the Los Angeles area compared to other areas, metropolitan cities, primarily I think because of the mobility of the population.

The Court: Well, the population—isn't it a fact, from your findings, that the population in this area—as a matter of fact, let's put it this way: It was a rare thing until recent years to have a lease on apartments?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Everybody was in one month and out the next, more or less, so to speak?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: So that you have a population moving hither [fol. 2332] and yon all over this area?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Now, since World War II there has been considerable change in financing of homes, as you know, and a person now can move into a house that costs $25,000 or $30,000 for just practically nothing down, as you know?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: And move in and pay less than rent?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: So these new neighborhoods blossom overnight, don't they?

The Witness: At a tremendous rate.

The Court: And I am wondering if in your study, whether you have determined that the large percentage of the people that were moving into those areas were leaving vacancies in the other parts of the city.

The Witness: In one study, as I say, completed only to '48, I took one section of Los Angeles, the area approximately bounded by Santa Barbara on the south, I think it was Pico on the north, Figueroa on the west—pardon me, on the east—and I believe the west boundary of that area was Western. It has been some time since I have looked at this particular aspect of the study——

The Court: What happened to that area?

[fol. 2333] The Witness: The area has declined, I think, slightly in population between 1929 and 1948, the figures are not up to date. During that period the number of stores per thousand population also declined, which meant stores actually went out of business at a rather rapid rate in that area, because even with the decline in population, the decline in number of stores related to population was even greater.

In other areas, I compared that with an area in the Valley, San Fernando Valley, which has been a rapidly growing area, and there the number of stores has increased, obviously, and up to 1954 the relationship between stores and population, however, had decreased.

[fol. 2334] The Court: What I am trying to ascertain, if it is ascertainable, is that much of the change in the location of stores has been brought about by the shifting population, hasn't it, a good part of it?

The Witness: Well, obviously stores follow population out.

The Court: Yes, that we concede.

The Witness: And of course——

The Court: But I am talking about shifting, not just growing, but shifting population.

The Witness: Most of the places from which people move are filled up, that is, the housing still stays there and new people move in from the East, typically. So that there are relatively few areas in a city where the population declines, and therefore—while there is a shift in the number of people living in a particular area—they still buy groceries and there is still a demand for food service.

The Court: But if you will recall, Los Angeles doubled in population every ten years up until when, 1930, was it?

The Witness: No, I guess 1940 was not quite double.

The Court: No, I don't think so. Up until 1930.

The Witness: 1930.

The Court: So the increase in stores was, I take it, going along with population increase.

[fol. 2335] The Witness: Up to 1930.

The Court: Then there became this more or less spread, as we call it, or to some extent a redistribution of population.

What I am trying to ascertain, if I can—I don't know whether it is ascertainable—is just what is the nub, what is the basic competition, the basic situation or basic competition in the metropolitan area?

You have got some chains showing that maybe, if one man gets an idea here it may chain react all the way through a certain group. But what is the basic day-to-day competition between—I can't say between, but I mean in this Los Angeles metropolitan area? What are we talking about when we say basic competition?

The Witness: Well, your Honor——

The Court: Or is that a bad word, maybe it is a bad word.

The Witness: I think there are so many forms of competition that it is hard to say that there is one basic competition.

Firms compete on many different levels, I think. They also compete in many different ways.

I think I mentioned that Von's moved in in Riverside, for example. They opened a newer store with automatic entrance doors and so on. Within a year or two at least [fol. 2336] Ralphs modernized its front and put in these kind of doors.

The Court: That is competition, isn't it?

The Witness: That is competition.

The Court: So the competition is increasing by this movement, isn't it?

The Witness: That move certainly indicates that there is competition between the two.

How often this occurs—well, let me put it this way: When you say increasing, your Honor, I think you are calling for a judgment on relative intensity. I don't feel qualified to really give an answer on relative intensity because I don't think—in the first place, I haven't made a study of relative intensity, and in the second place I don't think that there are any measures that anybody has ever developed that will give fine changes in relative intensity.

The Court: Well, what is happening then—or do you classify yourself as an economist?

The Witness: Oh, market specialist.

The Court: Well, that is an economist, isn't it?

The Witness: Partly. We try to say we are practical economists.

The Court: Well, practical, though, you mean——

[fol. 2337] The Witness: We try to explain things a little more——

The Court: A little more on facts?

The Witness: A little more on facts.

The Court: All right. We will accept that for the moment.

Now, let me ask you this, when you talk about competition in the metropolitan area, what do you mean?

The Witness: I mean the reaction of individual firms to a move by any other firm, and their attempt to attain business, to get business in the area and, if necessary, away from the other firms, or to get it back if they lose it.

The Court: Well, as you know, most of these concerns, Safeway, Ralphs—particularly those two, they are older here—they have been closing stores and opening new stores, is that right?

The Witness: Safeway certainly has, I think has been doing that.

The Court: Well, I think Ralphs has, too, hasn't it?

The Witness: Ralphs, too, yes.

The Court: So what is the economic impulse, as far as you know, as an expert, that causes this situation where a concern such as Safeway or Ralphs closes this store down and moves somewhere else, opens up another store?

[fol. 2338] The Witness: In the case of Safeway, I would hazard the guess in the sense that Safeway had a great many small stores which, by and large, are becoming less popular with customers, and that they preferred to concentrate their drawing power in modern, larger stores.

The Court: Why, if you know, are they becoming less popular? This is what I don't understand.

The Witness: Well, I don't know that. Except that if they were still as popular as they were before, I assume Safeway wouldn't close them. If they were making money, as much money as Safeway could make out of that capital, I think Safeway would keep them in business.

The Court: Well, now, another factor, I wonder if you have considered in Los Angeles in 1929, which was a glowing year up until October, there were many persons afoot in this town, did you know that?

The Witness: I was one of them.

The Court: Do you know what the per capita automobile population was in 1929?

The Witness: It was a lot less than it is today, I am sure of that. But I don't know what it was.

The Court: Well, wouldn't you think that that factor, wouldn't in your opinion that factor, the fact that many, many people now are riding automobiles instead of streetcars and buses, that would have changed the reason [fol. 2339] for making larger markets?

The Witness: I think that is the most important factor in explaining the shift in store size, for example.

The Court: Were you here in 1929?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: You remember we had a streetcar line on almost every street here, is that right?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: And we had bus lines to Hollywood and we had also the red lines which was the Pacific Electric?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: And thousands of people rode those cars on those lines.

The Witness: Yes, of course.

The Court: And we had—incidentally, we had automobiles on the street that I think were some of the first invented, you remember those? Some of them went back as early as 1903, as I remember it—the way they looked, anyway.

The Witness: I think I rode one to Lynwood when I was a boy, an H.M.S. Studebaker.

The Court: Well, you recall then that the traffic situation was more concentrated in the streetcars and buses at that time.

The Witness: Yes.

[fol. 2340] The Court: Whereas today the shift has been over to the automobile.

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: Now, in your opinion has that been one of the factors that has changed the grocery makeup, the distribution of groceries in this area?

The Witness: Unquestionably.

The Court: All right, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I have no questions.

The Court: I don't want you to think I am on either side. I am just trying to find the facts.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You know, if a judge asks quite a few questions the lawyer, whoever loses says, well, he tried the case for the other side. But I am only trying to ascertain the facts, because it is a difficult problem in this case, and that is: What is the competition that has been lessened. I am trying to find it.

I may ask you to pinpoint it for me at a later date.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: No questions.

The Court: One other thing before you go.

Can you pinpoint to me any change in the competitive situation since 1960 in this area, metropolitan Los Angeles [fol. 2341] area?

The Witness: I think there are several changes, your Honor. How important they are is another question.

The Court: But I would like to know what in your opinion they are.

The Witness: Well, one is the introduction of the discount house into the grocery business. Another is the tendency, I think this change in the pattern with respect to deep cut specials.

Another is the ——

The Court: Before you go on, may I interrupt you there? The deep cut specials, you remember that—you mean to some extent that has been eliminated or increased?

The Witness: I think the use of leaders is still very evident. I think that, as Mr. Von der Ahe testified, the extreme loss leader has disappeared, that is, as I believe he said the 19-cent a pound coffee. Now it is what, 49 cents a pound. Instead of that the regular prices are 69 and 79 and special is 49, rather than 19. That is a change.

The Court: May I just ask one further question? Have you at any time in your surveys made an effort to ascertain the effect of that type of advertising on the customer, or on the purchaser?

The Witness: I think the use of leader is very impor-[fol. 2342] tant in a section of the market.

The Court: What do you base that on?

The Witness: On interviews with consumers. I attempted, as I said, over a number of years to try to get the consumer's attitude with respect to shopping habits and so on.

I would say also that another factor that would lead me to that conclusion is the fact that all the major chains must spend millions of dollars in advertising, and this advertising is on specials, this is practically all the advertising is about. And I presume that the executives of the company don't throw their money away unless it brings people in.

The Court: Well, your presumption is wrong in some cases. Some of them have gone broke. For example, just as a way of inviting your attention, did you know that Safeway disbanded all of its stores in a certain part of New York?

The Witness: It was sort of an isolated operation, as I understand.

The Court: It cost them a fortune.

The Witness: Cost them a fortune.

The Court: That was run by high executives, some of the best in the country.

The Witness: I don't think anyone is infallible, your [fol. 2343] Honor. There are a lot of examples.

The Court: Well, you were giving me a list now and I interrupted. You remember, you had given two——

The Witness: Another factor of the tendency would be more elaborate facilities. I am sure that that is a change—I don't think I could base that as having started in 1960, because it has been apparent I think for quite a long time.

The Court: That has been in progress for a considerable number of years, hasn't it?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: As a matter of fact, haven't stores like Ralphs Stores almost changed in the last, let's say, well, the building program opened up again about 1947, after the war, 1948, is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: So haven't they, for example, changed most of their stores by putting in more beautiful fronts and more spacious shelving arrangements and all of those things?

The Witness: Yes. As a matter of fact, before the war, your Honor, I think many of the stores in supermarkets were open front stores, that is, with the produce department in front, displays and so on. So that this tendency is perhaps a long run tendency toward more elaborate fa-[fol. 2344] cilities.

The Court: Go ahead. You were giving me a list. Do you have any others?

The Witness: No, I don't think I can add any at the moment.

The Court: Well, from your surveys and checking of the industry, do I understand you to say in effect that the financing ability, the ability to finance is an important factor in the competition in this area?

The Witness: I don't believe I said that, your Honor.

The Court: How about it?

Te Witness: Because I simply don't know.

The Court: Well, Ralphs would be able to borrow money, at least quicker than the average independent, wouldn't they? Or Safeway, or Von's or Shopping Bag, or Food Giant?

The Witness: I can't answer that question accurately because I simply don't know, your Honor. I have not been in—this is a management problem and I have been primarily concerned with the consumer aspects and the price effects, so to speak.

[fol. 2345] The Court: Well, in other words, then—I don't mean to depreciate your testimony, but you haven't really considered the effect on the competitive market of financing?

The Witness: That's right.

The Court: On purchase of the store building, the property, parking space, and things of that kind?

The Witness: Certainly the financing, I have not.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: I have no more questions.

The Court: I thought I might stir you lawyers up to further questions.

Very well, you may step down, sir.

The Witness: Thank you.

COLLOQUY BETWEEN COURT AND COUNSEL

The Court: I notice neither one of you asked the question, gentlemen, maybe you were both afraid to, and normally I am not afraid to do it, but I didn't want to take over, just ask him the cold, blank question, if there had been any substantial lessening of competition. That's the question I have to decide, but I assume that he is qualified to testify to that.

Mr. Vaughn: The reason I didn't make any reference to that subject is that I thought his testimony on direct was so limited as to this particular exhibit that they didn't get into that.

Mr. Coyle: I think his testimony was limited.

[fol. 2346] The Court: It was limited, but the trouble with limited testimony is that inferentially it goes to predicate some kind of finding on competition, doesn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, but we make a practice of not calling economists in these cases to testify to ultimate facts.

The Court: I am not going to assume that he would have been against you or for you, counsel, but I just noticed that you didn't ask him that question. It is all right. It is your case.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I would like to read into the record a portion of the deposition of Mr. William Delbert Hayden, which was taken——

The Court: Incidentally, counsel, both of you could have objected, if you thought I was going outside the scope of the direct examination. The court is subject to the same objections as you lawyers are.

Mr. Coyle: I had no objection.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Vaughn: I thought the questions were quite helpful.

The Court: Any time I ask a question, if you think it is irrelevant or improper or immaterial, incompetent, or otherwise, I welcome that you object.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I take it Mr. Coyle is about [fol. 2347] to read into the record a portion of the deposition that is already in the record.

Mr. Coyle: That's correct.

Mr. Vaughn: It seems to me that is argumentative and ought to be reserved.

The Court: Why don't you reserve that to the time of argument?

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor.

The Court: We are about at that time now, aren't we?

Mr. Coyle: I would think so.

The Court: Are you finished?

Mr. Coyle: No. I have one more witness.

The Court: Call him.

Mr. Coyle: Dr. Ward Jenssen.

The Court: The reporter tells me that he is in confusion as to the copying of Mr. Hayden's either depositions or affidavits. He said he understood there were two. I thought they were affidavits rather than depositions.

Mr. Coyle: There are two Mr. Haydens, to begin with, and I think they each have a deposition.

The Court: That is where the confusion lies.

Mr. Coyle: I am wrong. There are two Mr. Haydens, but there is only a deposition for one Mr. Hayden. But there are two affidavits.

[fols. 2348-2362] The Court: That is what I remember, two affidavits. You asked that one, the prior affidavit, go in, be read into the record.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Court: So as to connect up with the deposition.

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: So the record is correct, there are two affidavits and one deposition of Mr. Hayden. Then Mr. Coyle came back and said, now since the deposition has gone in and since they put in a new affidavit, that the deposition would be meaningless without the first affidavit. Is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: That's correct.

[fol. 2363] WARD J. JENSSEN, called as a witness by and on behalf of the government in rebuttal, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?
The Witness: Ward J. Jenssen, J-e-n-s-s-e-n.

[fol. 2364] Direct examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, what is your residence, for the record?
A. Los Angeles, California, 6042 Second Avenue.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I am having difficulty hearing the witness.
The Court: Speak out.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What is your occupation, Dr. Jenssen?
A. I am a marketing consultant.
Q. What is your academic background?
A. Bachelor's Degree from Northwestern University, Master's from Northwestern University; my doctorate is from the University of Southern California. I formerly served on the graduate school faculties of both Northwestern University and the University of Southern California, entered the marketing consulting field in Chicago in 1946, have been continually active as a marketing consultant to this time.
Q. Have you done any marketing work in the retail grocery field?
A. Yes, sir, our firm and myself tend to specialize in the retail food industry, market research and marketing work for the retail food field. We have served such chains locally, for example, as Food Giant, Ralph's, Market Basket, [fol. 2365] Lucky Stores, Boys, Mayfair Markets, numerous others.

Q. Were you requested by the government to prepare certain exhibits?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. What type of exhibits were you requested to prepare?

A. May I refer to this, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: Let the record show that the witness is referring to Government's Exhibit 85 for identification.

The Witness: The exhibit to which you just referred is one that was prepared by our office, and what it indicates is this: There are six configurations outlined here on a map. The star stores represent a Von's market, the circles represent either an existing or a proposed Shopping Bag. Any person living within any portion of any of these circles would find both a Von's and a Shopping Bag store readily accessible to them in terms of current shopping patterns in Southern California.

Would you like me to elaborate on this "current shopping patterns"?

Q. Yes.

A. There are very few shoppers who ever patronize a single market. Consequently, homemakers tend to patron- [fol. 2366] ize, particularly in the Southern California area, where they are especially mobile, ease of transportation, large number of cars per family, ready access—there tends to be a number of factors that shoppers consider in determining which store or which stores at which they will shop. There has been, on the basis of our experience in consumer interviews, there seems to be only one delimiting factor, and this is how far is a market from a respondent's home in terms of driving time? Particularly as Southern California homemakers have become increasingly mobile they have tended to measure or assess the distance to a market in terms of how long will it take me to get there, rather than in terms of blocks or miles or other geographic measures. What we did, therefore, was to mark off a 10-minute, which seems to be a conservative average for Southern California shoppers in their shopping patterns, travel at least 10 minutes, any store within a 10-minute range of their home they will by and large consider to be a possible store at which they might trade. What we did, therefore, was to, through actual driving tests, measure a 10-minute drive from a number of Von's—as a matter of fact, 16 Von's stores, 21 proposed or existing Shopping Bag stores; then around each of these stores we plotted a circle—not necessarily a circle, but a configuration describing a 10-minute striking distance, let's call it. These cir-

[fol. 2367] cles in Exhibit 85 represent the overlap areas coming from these original driving time circles. Thus, both a Von's and Shopping Bag store could expect to draw customers from any person living within any of these six major configurations outlined in the exhibit.

[fol. 2368] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Did your study include ascertaining the population residing in these areas that were accessible to both Von's and Shopping Bag stores?

A. Yes, sir, it did. After we had established through empirical testimony—driving times—after we established the striking circles, call them, and from these developed the overlap area, which are the circles shown on this chart, we then ascertained, from 1960 census data, the approximate population living within each of these six configurations. That is shown on the lower left-hand portion of the chart by each of the specific areas and by totals. As of the 1960 census date we would estimate that approximately 1,058,000 persons lived within the six overlap areas shown.

Q. Did you also estimate their expenditures for groceries?

A. Yes, we did. In an effort to be conservative we used what is probably somewhat less than the annual Southern California expenditure for food. I at any rate arrived at the figure for these persons of approximately four hundred eighty-one and a half million dollars per year.

Q. Did you make any verification of this on this basic premise of ten minutes driving time?

[fol. 2369] A. Yes, we did. Our original estimate of approximately ten to twelve minutes driving time as being the normal range which a homemaker will travel to a food store was based on our previous studies which go back, at east in Southern California, to about 1949 or thereabouts, 949 or 1950.

In the course of that time we have conducted interviews ith, I would estimate at least a quarter of a million home- akers in the Southern California area regarding their ood-buying patterns. It was from these data that we orig- ally estimated the approximately ten to twelve-minute iving range.

However, after we had plotted these tentative circles, the uestion arose as to whether the individuals living in these articular specific areas might indeed, in some way, be non- pical, perhaps they habitually drove shorter distances, orter driving times than the typical Southern California erage of ten to twelve minutes. Consequently, we drew mples of homemakers residing within each of these rcles.

Our total sample was 1167 respondents. And essentially asked them to think of the food stores at which they gularly shop, and then having these food stores in mind, ked us to—or we asked them to describe the distance of at food store from their home, from which we got ol. 2370] their driving times.

Our results—I can give these to you area by area, or I n give you, I can give them to you for the total six areas mbined—there is relatively little variation from one area another, it is slight.

But by way of a total, 70 per cent of the persons whom interviewed in these six areas indicated that they either gularly, frequently or at least occasionally visited a food re which was at least ten minutes driving time from ir home, in many instances it was over ten minutes. But used ten minutes as an average of the original driving e used to plot the configuration.

f it is of interest area by area, that these are shown— a 1 and 2 we combined in our interviews. 70 per cent of persons in areas 1 and 2 frequently visited a food store ier regularly, frequently or occasionally at least ten utes from their home.

The Court: May I ask you, when you put the question to n, did you put it in that form?

The Witness: The form of the question, your Honor, was ally there were several questions. We first indicated to the respondent, "We are conducting a study on retail buying patterns and would like to ask you a few questions."

The Court: Was this done orally?

[fol. 2371] The Witness: Yes, sir, it was.

The Court: By——

The Witness: By personal interview.

The Court: In other words, you hired people to go out and do it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: What check did you have to be sure that they went out and talked to people? How did you check on it?

The Witness: Several ways, your Honor. First, the people who were hired for this job are interviewers who we have regularly used over a period of a number of years. We selected our best interviewers for this.

Additionally, the way the sample was chosen was in accord with the same sampling pattern that the United States Census used, which was we sent respondents through a randomly selected address rather than leaving the choice of who the interviewer was to interview, leaving this up to the field worker herself, we supplied interviews with a predetermined, with a random sample of addresses within the area.

Consequently——

The Court: What I am interested in, did they write down something on each one?

The Witness: The interviewer had a ballot from which [fol. 2372] she questioned the respondent. She questioned the respondent, "Think of the sotres at which you regularly, frequently, occasionally shop for food. Now, where are these stores?"

The Court: The trouble, I am asking you, you see you have compounded the question. The answer means nothing to that question. You say occasionally, frequently and often. And the man says yes. Now, what does that mean? If he says no, what does it mean? That is my problem.

It is like a lawyer when he compounds a question here, we sustain an objection to it because we don't know what the answer would mean.

The Witness: Let me develop it a little more clearly then, if I may.

We ask the respondent first, "Where do you shop for food?"

And the respondent would name the stores—excuse me, I am sorry—we ask first, "At what stores do you regularly shop for food, and by regularly we mean more than six times a month you are in the store shopping for food."

And the respondent would give us an answer.

And then we would say, "Now, how far in terms of driving time is that store from your home?"

And the respondent would give us some estimated driv-
[fol. 2373] ing time, based on her own experience.

We would then ask, "Are there any other stores at which you shop more than six times a month?"

If no, we then go to asking about frequent shopping, which is defined as four to six times a month, and occasional shopping as less than four times a month.

So we gave each respondent an opportunity to play themselves out in terms of stores at which they shop regularly—and in many instances these were two or three stores—then stores at which they shop frequently and then stores at which they shop occasionally.

And in each case, after the respondent had named the store, we asked, "How far is that from, how long does it take you to get there from home?"

Does this clarify it?

The Court: Well, it does, except you say most of them said ten or twelve minutes.

The Witness: The average time tended to be more like 12 to 15 minutes. Many of them, of course, said two or three minutes.

And at the other extreme are persons in the sample who would patronize stores 15 or 20 minutes from their home.

The Court: Let me ask you this, how long will it take you to drive from the Federal Building to your home this afternoon?

[fol. 2374] The Witness: To my home?

The Court: Yes, approximately.

The Witness: From the Federal Building to my home?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: Can I come the other way?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I did that this morning.

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: Fifteen minutes.

The Court: Well, how far is it, do you know in miles? It is about 70 blocks, isn't it?

The Witness: That would be a good estimate, yes. About ten miles—no, that would be too fast, wouldn't it.

The Court: You see what I am getting at is the frailty of the questions of this type. The average person, it is like smog, you say, "Where do you live?" and the fellow says, "I live out in such-and-such an area, we don't have any smog in my district."

The Witness: Could I point out a different——

The Court: What I am getting at, I am trying to find the trustworthiness of your questions and answers.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: The average human being has a tendency to flippantly say, oh, ten or fifteen minutes, they live in North [fol. 2375] Hollywood; how long does it take you to drive there; oh, fifteen or twenty minutes. Well, they must be taking a helicopter. Do you follow me?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Now, how do you get at it to find out how these answers are trustworthy? That is what I would like to know, because this could be important.

The Witness: All right. Let me, if I may, back track a little bit.

First, however, let me point out that we are talking about Southern California homemakers who tend to be considerably different, I think, in their over-all living patterns than I, for example.

We found years ago, a number of years ago when we used to do market research studies out here for the food industry, we used to ask respondents where they shop and how far this was from their home, in an effort to establish trading radii.

We used to ask how far was this from their home. Female respondents found it very difficult to express answers to us in terms of miles. Therefore, with no intent on our part we found we were getting answers such as, "Well, I don't know how far it is but it is about ten minutes this way, it is about fifteen minutes that, and it is about twenty [fol. 2376] minutes this way."

The Court: Now, those are female minutes we are talking about, female driving minutes?

The Witness: Yes, sir, perceived female driving minutes.

The Court: Did you find there was a difference between male and female in their answers on minutes?

The Witness: We have done very little questioning, your Honor, of men. An occasional study for the food industry where we may have reason to question men.

The Court: You understand what I am talking about, don't you?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I do.

The Court: The lady says she only has to run the comb through her hair and she will be right with you. Now that means about half an hour, doesn't it?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: That is what I am talking about.

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: These are all factors, aren't they?

[fol. 2377] The Court: These are perceived minutes. Although another element in here, because we were finding so many women—this now goes back a number of years, this goes back to the early 1950's or so—because we were finding so many women who were telling us where they shopped in terms of minutes, rather than miles, we thought this might be a handy device to use in some of our interviews, rather than asking them how far in miles, we just asked them how far in minutes.

Before we switched to that pattern of interviewing we did a great deal of internal work to insure that they reasonably well knew what they were talking about. They were not saying, they were not naming a market on the other side of town and saying about a 10-minute drive, nor were they naming a market just down the street and saying, oh, about a 10-minute drive.

Before we used this form of questioning—and this was considerably before the specific study here, we wanted to insure ourselves that they did reasonably know what they were talking about.

The Court: May I ask one other question, then, counsel, and you go ahead after this.

How far, generally speaking, on an average, is 10 minutes in miles?

The Witness: I think this can vary considerably, your [fol. 2378] Honor, from one community to another. In some communities it is—oh, take for example, in the heart of Long Beach, the heart of Long Beach a 10-minute drive would not be very far.

Take some of the open Valley areas——

The Court: How far would it be, how far could I get in Long Beach on a normal day—excluding Friday and Monday—let's just take Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and not bother about Saturday, Monday or Friday, which are all bad driving days.

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: How far in Long Beach would you estimate a car would get in 10 minutes? I mean just an approximation.

The Witness: I would guess under five miles.

The Court: In 10 minutes, how far?

The Witness: I don't know. I will tell you what my rough computation is.

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I am presuming something under, an average of something under 30 miles an hour, considering stop lights, traffic conditions, stop streets, and et cetera. At 30 miles an hour, 10 minutes would be about five miles.

Consequently in 10 minutes in the general Long Beach [fol. 2379] area I presume one could get not much further than four, perhaps four and a fraction miles.

The Court: Well, as I understand you, it would be—a good average would be four miles.

The Witness: A good average.

The Court: Taking in all conditions.

The Witness: Freeway traffic in Southern California.

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: Excluding freeway travel—I don't know, certainly, but——

The Court: As an approximation.

The Witness: I would guess it is a good average.

The Court: Well, as a matter of fact, counsel, hasn't all the testimony indicated heretofore that the draw area was about four miles on these stores?

Mr. Coyle: A good part of it has, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor. Mr Von der Ahe testified it varied with stores, some had a mile, some had a mile and a half, some two miles——

The Court: That was more or less as a tendency, though, wasn't it, counsel? I think Mr. Von der Ahe conceded that there would be some draw within the four-mile area, but [fol. 2380] that the heavy draw would be, say, the first mile.

Mr. Alsup: That is correct.

The Court: Am I correct about that?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, the great bulk from the closer area and some draw from farther areas.

The Court: But the draw area more or less has been designated pretty much, without saying how much and from what part of the area, as being about the four-mile area.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: Generally speaking.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: All right. Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, in the course of your interviews that you made, did you ascertain the address of the store in which the women said they shopped?

A. Yes, sir, we did. Actually there were several verifications involved here. First I mentioned the particular way in which we drew the sample, the interviewer had to interview a particular respondent at a particular address.

At the time the ballot was turned in, we verified 15 per cent of these by telephone calls with the respondents, merely asking, "Were you interviewed recently?"

[fol. 2381] The second verification that automatically was clamped into it is, in asking the respondent the approximate location or address of the store, respondent said, well, shop at least several times a week at Store A, and the interviewer would ask where was this store located. At the approximate intersection of—the respondent would in some way describe the location.

We then, in tabulating the times would attempt to verify that the respondent was not completely wrong in naming the approximate length of time it took her to reach a particular location, store location.

This, of course, was not a precise check, but within reason.

[fol. 2382] Q. With respect to your driving time study that you yourself did, or your organization did, in these various areas, did you have any control on those tests?

A. Here is how we handled those. We used a number of different drivers. For each of the locations involved here three different drivers ran each location.

The Court: Were they men or women?

The Witness: They were all women, sir.

The instructions to the driver were to start at the parking lot of the store, drive for ten minutes, moving with the normal flow of traffic, don't try to speed up your time, don't try to beat stoplights, don't try to pass other cars unless they, in turn, are not moving with the normal flow of traffic, obey all traffic rules, don't try to push, just a normal flow of traffic moving, start your stopwatch at the time you leave the parking lot, at ten minutes stop and record the intersection at which you are now. Then turn around and drive backwards. What we were looking for—return via the same route. What we were looking for here was the possibility of driving time in one direction taking the test driver farther than driving time in the other direction. As it turned out we found no significant differences in this regard. The driving tests were run at various days of the week, varying times of the day, and I believe I mentioned each driving run was performed by three separate drivers, [fol. 2383] unaware of the results of the other one.

We took the shortest distance of any of the three drivers. For the most part they arrived at about the same point, plus or minus a block or two.

Directions in which they drove. They drove for practical purposes eight points of the compass. Generally north, generally northeast, generally east, generally southeast, and so on. The way the streets are laid out, of course, they could not go directly northeast, say, but they were to head in a generally northeasterly direction, so on, for eight points of the compass.

Q. Dr. Jenssen, have you read or studied the affidavit or the exhibits prepared by Dorothy Corey and submitted as defendants' exhibits?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What is your evaluation of these studies?

The Court: Isn't that, in effect, asking the valuation of somebody else's testimony?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, expert testimony.

The Court: If they let you do it, all right.

Mr. Aslup: I object, your Honor. I would like to cross-examine on the point, but I will object to it. It would unduly prolong the trial.

The Court: Is that permissible, counsel?

This is a modern touch, as far as I am concerned. It [fol. 2384] sounds like the old days when they called character witnesses. They called A, and he would testify the defendant's character is good. They would call B, and he would say A's reputation was bad. And they called C, and he would testify they both had a bad reputation for truth and veracity, and so on and so on, until the court put a stop to it.

That was reputation testimony. What you are doing now is to have one expert testify that the other's testimony is not valid testimony, isn't that what you are doing?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, you Honor.

The Court: Is that proper?

Mr. Coyle: I will withdraw the question.

The Court: Tell me if it is proper. I want to learn something. I am trying to learn as I go along. Is it?

Mr. Coyle: I have seen it done in other cases.

The Court: Counsel, you have seen anything happen in a courtroom somewheres, but I don't try to emulate those courts.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: I try to conform to some standards and rules, as near as I can, as near as I know, so I am not going to permit you, unless you show me some law.

Mr. Coyle: I withdraw the question.

I offer into evidence Government's Exhibit 85, your Honor.

[fol. 2385] Mr. Alsup: May ruling be withheld until we have had an opportunity to examine the document?

The Court: I thought you had seen it. I am sorry, counsel.

I would like to ask one question or two before you do. I may be interfering with your cross examination. I will be glad to wait.

Mr. Alsup: No, sir.

The Court: Look at Exhibit 85, and let's look at Area 2. How far would you say it is from the star at 22 to, I guess you would call it the round black dot.

The Witness: From the star to the black dot—

The Court: In miles.

The Witness: In miles?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I can't tell, your Honor. I don't have a geographic scale.

The Court: You don't live in the valley?

The Witness: No.

The Court: Let's go over to where you live. You live out at 64 something Second, 6400?

The Witness: I don't think we have that area on here.

The Court: Are you fairly well familiar with the conditions—let's see. Where are you most familiar with traffic [fol. 2386] conditions outside of your own home area? It would be what part, would you say? How about the Downey area, are you familiar with that?

The Witness: Not too well. Let's go back to the valley, if we may.

The Court: The valley?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: All right. Let's go over here to Area 1, is that what your mean?

The Witness: I am on Area 2 coming off the Ventura Freeway at—how about Laurel Canyon? That should be on here, should it not?

The Court: Laurel Canyon is miles away from where we are talking about.

The Witness: Here is Laurel Canyon, down at Studio City, the lower portion down here.

The Court: Laurel Canyon is about how far from, would you say, from, well, Panorama City?

The Witness: I don't know. Milewise?

The Court: Yes. Do you know?

The Witness: No, sir. I could guess.

The Court: What would be your guess?

The Witness: As the crow flies I would estimate perhaps six to eight miles. Via streets—

The Court: You notice you have to go, if you go by [fol. 2387] Laurel Canyon, to get there——

The Witness: You have to go up to Roscoe, let's say.

The Court: All right. Now, are you familiar with the Chatsworth area?

The Witness: No, sir, I am not, especially.

The Court: Granada Hills?

The Witness: Slightly, Granada Hills.

The Court: I am sure you must be familiar with Vanowen, Sherman, Saticoy, and Roscoe, and Reseda, and that area, aren't you, Topanga?

The Witness: Reasonably.

The Court: Would you have any idea how far it would be in miles from Topanga Canyon to the star at point 22, let's say you went Sherman Way?

The Witness: I haven't found my starting point. Where am I, Topanga and Sherman?

The Court: Topanga and Sherman Way.

The Witness: I am sorry, I don't have a scale here, so I am only roughly estimating this, but I would guess—

The Court: Do we have a ruler here, Mr. Clerk?

The Witness: A ruler won't do any good, because we don't have a convergent scale, anyhow. But I would estimate, starting from Topanga Canyon to the star at 22 would be about four miles, perhaps, between four and five, I would estimate.

The Court: How far would you say it would be from [fol. 2388] Tarzana to this Von's Market at Sherman Way and Reseda?

The Witness: From Topanga to the Von's Market at Sherman Way and Reseda, that is the star at 22, the Von's Market?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: You said from Topanga and Sherman Way?

The Court: No. From Tarzana now.

The Witness: I am sorry. I don't see Tarzana here.

[fol. 2389] The Court: Tarzana is down at the very bottom.

The Witness: Oh, yes. Again, recognize, please, this is an estimate—

The Court: I understand it is an estimate. I am coming to something. I want to ask you a question.

The Witness: It would look to be two to three miles.

The Court: Now, do you know how many grocery stores are in the area of Reseda, Vanowen, Sherman Way, in that area—do you have any idea how many grocery stores are there?

The Witness: If you want me to guess a number, I have the impression that that area is pretty well loaded with supermarkets.

The Court: There are not only supermarkets, but you have a great many independents in there, don't you?

The Witness: Yes, that is a pretty heavily saturated area, as I recall.

The Court: Do you think you could go five blocks without running into a grocery store?

The Witness: Not on a main—well, possibly, but I doubt it. I do know there is a little stretch here on Ventura where you just hit one after the other.

The Court: So that particular area surrounding point 22, as you put it, is pretty much loaded with all types of [fol. 2390] grocery stores, both chains and independents?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: How about up in—you say you haven't been in the Chatsworth area?

The Witness: Only once or twice.

The Court: Have you been up in Alhambra, up in area No. 3, which is Alhambra, up in that area?

The Witness: Yes.

The Court: I will put this in sort of—this may sound a little tricky to you, but you clarify it. Have you been any place in all your life and seen as many grocery stores as you see in that area?

The Witness: It is, as I recall, pretty heavily loaded, also. I think there are other areas that are more saturated in Southern California, but it's heavy.

The Court: All right. Where would be the area that you recall that would be more saturated?

The Witness: I could be wrong on this by actual count, but I would say that the general Crenshaw—Crenshaw Shopping Center and within a five- or six-mile radius of that location is pretty heavily saturated with markets.

The Court: As a matter of fact, Dr. Jenssen, that Crenshaw area has mushroomed not only in population, but in new stores, hasn't it?

[fol. 2391] The Witness: In how long?

The Court: Crenshaw, say, to LaBrea, through there, the freeway, all that new development in there, in the last 10 years.

The Witness: Yes. I think the bulk of the markets might have been there 10 years ago. The area has grown vastly in terms of population.

The Court: From your knowledge, do you know whether or not—this may be going outside of the direct, counsel, so if you want to stop me, object.

Have you noticed the development of independent grocery stores in that area, or are there any there?

The Witness: There are always independent grocers everywhere.

The Court: All right.

The Witness: I don't think that the Crenshaw area has any more than its normal share.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, have you made any studies as to whether a shopper will pass grocery stores to get to one that she prefers to shop at?

A. Yes, we have, Mr. Coyle. I mentioned before that there are a number of factors that influence where a shopper will do her shopping. I don't know if you want me to begin developing a list of these, but we have identified [fol. 2392] in our studies at least eight or ten significant elements that determine where she would shop.

The Court: Can you just list them?

The Witness: Not in rank order, but just some of the considerations: Pricing, general appearance of the store, size of the store, variety of brands, parking space, whether or not the store is in a shopping center or is a free standing store, general familiarity with the store's name; trading stamps used to be a factor, except now by and large they are pretty well equalized; quality of meat, quality of produce, variety of produce, check stand service, cleanliness of the store. These are a few that come to my mind. I might be overlooking some. I am sure I am overlooking some. These would be some of the more significant.

In her quest to—to what? Put together the optimum combination of factors to best satisfy her home shopping needs, it is not all all uncommon for a shopper to pass one, two, three, four or five or more stores on her way to the particular store in which she is going to stop at that particular time.

There is, also, a great shifting in shopping behavior. A person who shops at a Alpha Beta, say this Friday, may next Thursday shop at a Ralph's, may split her shopping between a Ralph's and Food Giant. Multi-store shopping is very common.

[fol. 2393] The Court: What kind?

The Witness: Multi-store. If I may put actually the reverse of that. Very few homemakers in the Southern California area are loyal to a single store. Actually we arbitrarily for years have used the term 85 per cent of her shopping as being the break-off point. Anything beyond 85 per cent of her shopping—we call that shopper loyal to a single store. In terms of pure, pure loyalty, where she shops only in one store, even does 95 per cent of her shopping at a single store, these cases practically never exist. I would estimate—I would recall that at least 15 per cent of the shoppers in Southern California regularly, without fail, patronize as many as five, six, seven or more stores in a typical month.

The Court: Do they go to the other stores just because of the name of the store, or for some other reason?

The Witness: The name is one of the factors. They also, of course, read the advertising, they also have exposed themselves to the store, they have developed impressions of it. Name is an important factor.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. By "name" do you mean reputation or image?
A. If I may, I would like to use the term "image."
Q. Pardon?
A. Image of the store.

[fol. 2394] Mr. Coyle: I have no further questions, your Honor.

The Court: I think we had better take a recess.

How much cross do you think you will have, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: I would think 20 minutes, your Honor.

The Court: I am afraid that you gentlemen are going to ave little or no time left for any extemporaneous speaking nat you may have in mind.

Is this the last witness?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I take it this will conclude the case?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I would like to cross examine ne witness, and I would like to recall Mr. Von der Ahe ery briefly with respect to this witness' proposed exhibit.

The Court: What is this, surrebuttal, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, Your Honor.

I might say, your Honor, we weren't furnished with an fidavit of this witness.

The Court: You weren't?

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor?

The Court: Why not, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Because this is a rebuttal that we worked up, e decided to put on because of the ruling on paragraph 46.

'ol. 2395] The Court: I think probably technically you are ithin your rights. On rebuttal it may well be that that ould not be within the spirit of the court's ruling. So if ou desire to put on some surrebuttal, how much will it be, ounsel?

Mr. Alsup: It will be very limited, your Honor.

The Court: All right. We will take a recess of 10 minutes.

(Recess taken.)

'ol. 2396] Cross-examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, can you tell us when Exhibit 85 for iden- ification was prepared?

A. It would have been roughly March, April, May of 60.

Q. Of 19-what?

A. 1960.

Q. When did you begin work on this case for the Govern- ent?

A. As I recall——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think the witness ould be refreshed. I think it is '61.

The Court: Counsel, you are not testifying. He is the witness.

The Witness: I might——

The Court: Did you make this yourself, this 85?

The Witness: Not personally by myself, sir, no. Perhaps I now misunderstood the question.

We began working——

The Court: He asked you when you, as I understood the question, when this chart was made, Exhibit 85. Is that right, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your honor.

The Court, You said 1960.

The Witness: May I place the date this way: We began [fol. 2397] working with the Justice Department in this study beginning the driving times early in 1960. Our first contact was in March of 1960. We began work early in 1960.

The interviews that were done with people who resided in these areas were done very early in 1961.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. And if this map were furnished to us, this proposed exhibit, some time in December of 1961, would that refresh your recollection as to when it was prepared?

A. No, sir, this would not help. If it—if it is important to do so I can contact some of the people in my office who worked on the preparation of this exhibit and get their recollection of it.

The Court: Well, counsel, you were preparing for rebuttal awfully early, weren't you?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we were preparing prior to the entry of the pretrial conference order.

Mr. Alsup: And after, I believe, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, this witness finished his work prior to the pretrial conference order.

The Court: You know, I allowed this to go in on the theory it was rebuttal. And at the time I had a little question in my mind about it being rebuttal.

What does it rebut? Who?

Mr. Coyle: It rebuts this evidence that the defendant [fol. 2398] put in that only 13 of the stores were competing. It shows that substantially more than 13 were competing.

The Court: You mean this exhibit shows that?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Have you ever arrived at your understanding on this paragraph 46?

Mr. Alsup: I think we are very close to it, your Honor.

The Court: Well, time is moving on, you know, gentlemen.

Mr. Coyle: I think we have arrived at it, your Honor.

The Court: Because I will tell you this, this chart—while it is admissible in evidence,—it certainly creates some real problems when it comes to evaluating its weight.

You know the visual can create an impression that doesn't exist. It is like a mirage, you think you see something and you don't.

Now, these distances here by minutes, I don't know, I assume it has some value as evidence. But it is like trying to figure out what you would do if you were a woman going to a grocery store. That is pretty difficult for me to figure out.

Go ahead, counsel. I am going to let it stand in evidence, [fol. 2399] maybe it is rebuttal. It seems to me it was primary evidence.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I don't believe so, not with the pretrial conference order standing as it was originally written.

The Court: Now, let's just back up, counsel. You are contending that as the pretrial order existed there was no issue then as to competition between the Von's and Shopping Bag, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Then why would you need this as rebuttal in 1961?

Mr. Coyle: It was original evidence then.

Mr. Alsup: It was furnished to us, your Honor, after the pretrial conference order was entered. That is the point I was going to make.

The Court: Then it was furnished to you, you have seen it then.

Mr. Alsup: I have seen a different copy of this, but not their working papers or any affidavits. It was furnished to us after the pretrial order was agreed and signed.

Mr. Coyle: It was furnished with our exhibits, your Honor.

The Court: You say you have arrived at a stipulation [fol. 2400] on this paragraph 46 of the pretrial order?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: If you have, let's have it now before you go any further.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, the new version of paragraph 46 would read as follows:

> "Prior to the merger the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles metropolitan area were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and as such each of these chains competed with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and retail sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. As a part of the competition the major chains, as well as other grocers, frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one or the other major chains. But defendants contend that competition between individual Von's and Shopping Bag stores was limited to those instances where a store of each company was so located that both could compete for some of the same customers. And defendants admit that in such instances the competition was intensive."

[fol. 2401] The Court: Is that your stipulation?

Mr. Alsup: That is our stipulation, your Honor, with one additional matter in paragraph 8, subparagraph——section 8, subparagraph 6 of the pretrial order, your Honor, we made certain reservations as to interstate commerce, and particularly as to the relevant section of the country. And we would want that reservation as to the relevant section of the country to apply to this new paragraph 46.

The Court: Is that where Judge Mathes wrote in—is that the same place?

Mr. Coyle: I think it is, your Honor.

The Court: What page is it on?

Mr. Coyle: It was the amended one——

The Court: It is on page 11, paragraph 6?

Mr. Alsup: Paragraph 6 on page 11.

The Court: Well, Judge Mathes wrote in there, "and with respect to paragraph 17 and the past three above," is that the place you are talking about?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. And I would like to——

The Court: I think you had better prepare a written stipulation so that it will be a part of the record without any problem, and put that proviso in your stipulation for an order of the court.

[fol. 2402] Mr. Coyle: I would suggest, your Honor, that we retype this pretrial conference order with these various amendments.

The Court: No, I am going to—well, you can do that if you wish, that is all right.

Mr. Coyle: Because it has been amended a couple of other times, too.

The Court: I think it might be a good idea at that. Suppose you do that. Suppose you retype it completely and then it will be in the final condition that we now have arrived at, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: Very good, your Honor.

The Court: Now, what this means I am not sure. I know I have heard it, but——

Mr. Coyle: I have a copy of it here, your Honor.

The Court: Give me a copy of it, because after several days' study I may understand it.

Mr. Coyle: One word is stricken there, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: May I see a copy?

The Court: Well, what it goes all out to say is just about what I tried to say originally, there is general competition in the area.

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: That is about what it says, doesn't it?

[fol. 2403] Mr. Coyle: I would say that, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that is what I said at the very beginning. So we have now, after great, profound thinking, come back to the original proposition that there generally is competition throughout the metropolitan area.

Proceed, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, you have been referring to some notes while you were testifying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are those notes?
A. My definition of "regular, frequent——"

The Court: Whose notes are they, I guess is what he means.
The Witness: Oh. They are my own, on index cards.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Your definition of "regular"?
A. "Frequent, occasional shopping," as we defined it in our interviews with—which we conducted. Also a breakdown by areas of the data that we received.
I have a few other notes here, the fact that 16 Von's and 21 Shopping Bags were involved——
Q. May I see those notes, please?
A. Surely.

[fol. 2404] The Court: Step right up, counsel.

(Witness hands documents to counsel.)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. I will ask you to refer to those notes, Dr. Jenssen, and tell me how many persons were interviewed in area 1 shown on Exhibit 85.
A. May I refer to——

The Court: You can refer to anything.
The Witness: Thank you.
The Court: That will refresh your recollection.
The Witness: Areas 1 and 2 we interviewed together. Area 1 and 2, the total number of interviewees were 202, which probably——
The Court: Now let me ask you a question.
The Witness: Yes, sir.
The Court: Is this refreshing your recollection or are you reading from something?
The Witness: No, I am reading from my notes.
The Court: Well, first, do you have any independent recollection at this time, without looking at your notes?
The Witness: Yes. As a general rule the interviews were dealing with six sub-areas here. The interviews per subarea in no case were less than 100 and in a few cases were as much as 200.

[fol. 2405] The Court: But my point is this, simply, just to find out if you are actually refreshing your recollection and it is now refreshed from reviewing your notes, or whether or not you have no recollection and you are just reading your notes. There is a big distinction. Do you follow me?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I guess I do. Remember, we did these two years ago.

The Court: In other words, it is coming back to you now that you have looked at your notes?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Go ahead.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. That is, you interviewed approximately 200 out of the estimated total population in those areas of 200,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many persons did you interview in Area 3?

A. In Area 3, 232.

Q. 232 out of a total population of 380,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many persons did you interview in Area 4?

A. 373.

Q. 373 out of a population of 262,764?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any reason, Doctor, why you should interview more persons in Area 4 than you did in Area 3, when Area 3 has a greater population than Area 4?

[fol. 2406] A. Yes, sir, there is.

Q. Will you explain it, please?

A. Yes. Recall that the purpose of these interviews was to positively verify for us that the homemakers living in these particular areas, which we had outlined, were not an exception to the general rule we had found to exist over-all throughout the Southern California area——

Q. In other areas, Doctor, though, when you are making studies for grocery concerns, what are those for? To determine whether or not a store can improve its image, or whether it should build a new store, something like that?

A. Yes. In many areas, by way of a general answer, we are concerned with conveying to the retail food operator the shopping needs, desires, habit patterns of homemakers in his area.

Q. In those instances when you are employed by someone like Ralph's, for example, would you start out at the parking lot of some store in the area and drive for ten miles in each direction and come back and tell Ralph's they could either have a good store or not a good store—would you make a recommendation to them on that basis?

A. On that basis alone?

Q. On that basis alone.

A. No, sir.

[fol. 2407] Q. What other factors would you take into consideration?

A. To answer that thoroughly, I would have to describe for you the method we generally use in appraising a store site.

The Court: You can give the method later on, but what factors would you take into consideration?

The Witness: Consumer shopping behavior in the area.

The Court: Which includes what?

The Witness: It includes the stores at which persons in that area currently are shopping, and the degree of satisfaction or dissatisfaction that they are receiving from their shopping at these particular stores.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Isn't it true, Dr. Jenssen, that you have performed certain studies for Shoppers Markets?

A. Yes, as I recall, a number of years ago we did.

Q. In that case in determining the competitive effectiveness of the Shoppers Market—let's take the one in Norwalk—did you interview a percentage of homemakers within a one-mile radius of that Shoppers Market?

A. This could be. I don't recall.

Q. Hasn't that been your general practice in making these studies for your grocery store clients?

A. No, sir, it has not.

[fol. 2408] Q. How far out do you go——

A. This is what I started to answer.

Q. ——in making these interviews?

A. When we go into an area we are never too sure exactly how far—what the trading area of that particular location is going to be. Consequently, as a very early step we will go out a distance of 10, 15 minutes driving time, which normally might represent as far as three, four, and in some cases even farther miles from the site. Then we will begin interviewing persons around the periphery of this rough circle. As we move in toward the circle, normally at this point people in performing their shopping tend to be moving in other directions. At some point as we move into the circle we will find that people are in general trending in the direction, the general direction of the proposed site. This, then, becomes our outer boundary. In many instances a this has been as little as one mile; in other instances a mile and a half; in other instances it may have gone out as far as three or four miles.

Q. I show you a document, Dr. Jenssen——

Which I asked be marked Defendants' Exhibit next in order for identification.

The Court: What is it, Mr. Clerk?

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit BJ, your Honor.

[fol. 2409] (The exhibit referred to was marked as Defendants' Exhibit BJ for identification.)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Can you identify Defendants' Exhibit BJ for identification, Dr. Jenssen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state for the record what it is?

A. It looks to be what I would term an image study——

The Court: What kind of a study?

The Witness: An image study of the Shoppers Market in Norwalk.

By Mr Alsup:

Q. When was that made, Dr. Jenssen?

A. I don't see a date on here. I could roughly estimate from the cover. Let me think for just a moment, if I may, please.

I would guess about six or seven years ago.

Q. That was made by you or your organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you to turn to page 5 of that exhibit, Dr. Jenssen. Does that indicate that within a one-mile radius of that Shoppers Market in Norwalk there were then an All American, a Raisin's, an Arvo's, a Market Basket, a Ralph's, a Wong's, a mom-and-pop's?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2410] Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether or not there are now additional stores in that Norwalk area?

A. I couldn't name them specifically, but I am confident there are.

Q. Does page 5 of that Exhibit BJ, for identification, indicate that Shoppers at that time in competition with these other grocery concerns had 42.3 per cent of the business in that area within the mile radius?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Turn to page 7, please, Dr. Jenssen. Does that indicate that 67 per cent of the Shoppers Market customers of that store came from a one-mile radius, and a total of 93 per cent came from a radius of two miles?

A. This is where?

The Court: Page 7, he said.

The Witness: I have no page 7. Is it headed Statistical Data?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, it is. It is the page that follows 6. It is unnumbered.

The Witness: Right.

Would you repeat your question, please?

Mr. Alsup: Yes. Does that page indicate that 67 per cent of Shoppers Market's customers came from a radius of one mile?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

[fol. 2411] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. And does it indicate that 93 per cent of the Shoppers Market customers came from a radius of two miles? That takes a little adding.

A. I have six per cent of that store's volume at that time as coming from beyond two miles. 94 per cent of that Shoppers Market's volume at that time was coming from within two miles.

Q. I will accept that, Dr. Jenssen. And you assume that since that time other concerns have moved into the area. In your experience, Dr. Jenssen, as a marketing consultant and student of the industry, when new stores move into the area does that enlarge or decrease the draw area of a grocery store?

A. This would depend, frankly, upon the stores that moved into the area. It could happen either way. If a number of pretty good, well-operated stores, moved into an area, it tends to—going back before to our comment about a shopper passing three, four, five, six stores in order to arrive at the store at which she is going to shop—obviously the more of these she has to pass, the more freedom of choice she has, the more likely she might, indeed, be to peel off before reaching a store farther away. In a case like that it would, of course, tend to restrict the trading area.

In other instances, a store might be established in an area and be such a strong store, such a good store, well-[fol. 2412] known store, that it might, indeed, begin to draw persons from outside what was the normal trading area before.

Q. Are you thinking of a store like Gelson's?

A. Gelson's I know has had this effect, yes.

Q. Are you acquainted with W. H. Crawford at Five Points in El Monte?

A. Yes, at one time I think the Crawford store had that effect. I think this is no longer true.

Q. Are you thinking of the New Continental store of Piggly-Wiggly?

A. I would presume this store has had this type of effect.

Q. This is the type of store you are talking about?

A. This is an example of the type of store.

Let me answer the question this way: Yes, this type of store, the elegant, exotic, interesting kind of store most always would have this effect. It is not the only kind of a store that could have this effect.

The Court: By "this effect" you mean——

The Witness: Drawing persons from a farther distance than had been drawn previously.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. In the business it is generally recognized that there is a great distinction between the effective draw area of a store and draw area as such, isn't that true, Dr. Jenssen?

[fol. 2413] A. I don't know if I follow your terms precisely. If you want to tell me——

Q. Let's take this Shoppers Market example, you would say in that case where 94 per cent of the customers come from within a two-mile radius——

A. His effective draw area at that time for that store would be about two miles, yes.

[fol. 2414] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Now, you said you furnished these persons who went out to interview housewives in connection with this proposed Government's Exhibit 85 with a questionnaire?

A. Yes, sir, they had a printed questionnaire which they used.

Q. Do you have a copy of it with you?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Was there any reason why you did not bring it?

A. Yes, there is. We don't have—we don't have any of them, any more. Recognize we do vast amounts of interviewing——

Q. You will have to speak up, Dr. Jenssen, I am having trouble hearing you.

A. We do vast amounts of interviewing, running in the neighborhood of an average perhaps of two thousand interviews a month. This creates a storage problem for us. It is our general practice to keep our interviews for one year after they have been completed, at which time we check with the client to see if he has any further use for these, and if not we discard them.

The Court: All of them?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: You don't even keep one single one?

The Witness: No, sir, in that——

[fol. 2415] The Court: I mean just from the standpoint of good business, don't you go back over your past history sometimes to study your methods to see if you can improve them and review what you have done in the past?

The Witness: Certainly, I question the extent to which our old interview ballots become of value to us——

The Court: Well, as a matter of research, if you want to go back historically you would have the record—not all of them, but just one interview would show you the type of interview you made for the last 20 or 25 years, isn't that right?

The Witness: I think I know pretty well the type of interviews——

The Court: Well, is your concern just you, are you the whole concern?

The Witness: No, sir, I am not.

The Court: Well, how about posterity, the other people that are going to follow you? What advantage are they going to have?

Mr. Alsup: Don't you think it would have been helpful, since you were going to be a witness in this case, Dr. Jenssen, to have a copy, so that we might have an opportunity to determine whether or not, in our opinion, the questions were fair and called for fair answers?

The Court: Well, that is argumentative, counsel. You [fol. 2416] can ask him this, if he didn't think he should have preserved it, since the trial was imminent? The rest of it I think is argumentative.

The Witness: At any rate, after a year I did check with Mr. Coyle, asking did he have any particular need for us to preserve these. And Mr. Coyle indicated no, he did not.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. When was that, Dr. Jenssen?

A. It would have been a year after the interviews were done. And the interviews were undertaken, as I recall, before, some time early in 1961. So this would have been probably January of 1962 that we checked with Mr. Coyle.

Q. Now, to the best of your recollection then, Dr. Jenssen, what were the questions on this interview form?

A. The questions began with, first of all, an introductory statement from the interviewer to the respondent, to indicate—this is by and large our standard——

The Court: May I ask you a question?

The Witness: Sure.

The Court: Did you ever conduct one of these interviews yourself?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

[fol. 2417] By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Is that one of these referred to in the 1167 of the——

A. In almost all of our studies, before we go into a field of study I like to, if I can possibly manage to do it, conduct at least half a dozen interviews by myself to insure that we are going to get the kind of information that we were seeking.

The Court: That does not answer the question. The question was: Did you make any of these interviews yourself personally?

The Witness: Yes, I did.

The Court: You see how difficult it is now to get an answer to a question. In other words, that is the problem I had in mind awhile ago when I was asking you about the form of the question, because in this courtroom I have heard a man ask a person the way to Brooklyn and they tell them they own a yacht in Nova Scotia. The answers have no relation to the question. So that has been my problem to discern what the questions specifically were, if they were compounded, then you get one type of answer and if they were simple, direct questions seriatim 1, 2, 3, 4, then you get a different situation.

So I am sort of at a loss now to know what the questions were, how they were put and what the answers were.

[fol. 2418] The Witness: I could pretty well reconstruct the interview form, and the form of questioning as far as the data are concerned, I have a complete record of these.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Isn't it strange, Dr. Jenssen, that you would save the data but not the question form?

A. On the contrary. Why would this be strange?

The Court: He is asking you. If it isn't strange, you can say so.

Mr. Coyle: I object, your Honor, that is an argumentative question.

The Court: Well, I am afraid it is. But—is this the usual procedure—you anticipated being a witness in this case, didn't you?

The Witness: Yes, sir. But one point I think might explain this.

Recognizing doing a market research study for any client for any purpose, what we are after as an end result is the data.

In the case of shoppers, this report.

In the case of the Justice Department, the data that I have here regarding our findings.

The actual interview is a tool that we use to get the information. When the tool—when the information has been [fol. 2419] obtained and for our purposes there is no reason whatsoever to preserve the tools that are now out of date, once the data has been derived from them—particularly, as I say, in the case of interviewing—where we could easily accumulate 25 to 30,000 ballots usually which run 2, 3, 4 pages each, we have a difficult enough time preserving these for a year.

The Court: We are talking about one ballot, not preserving all of them, just one sample. That is what we are talking about.

What was the end result you were seeking?

The Witness: The end result we were seeking was the verification of what we knew to be true for Southern California as a whole.

The Court: And what is that?

The Witness: And this was that the bulk of shoppers regard any supermarket within an approximately ten to twelve-minute drive of their home as a logical place for them to consider shopping.

The Court: In other words, you were thinking to prove your point, is that right?

The Witness: No, sir, we had no point——

The Court: Well, your conclusion, as I understand it you say your conclusion was before you started this investigation was what you have just stated, is that right?

[fol. 2420] The Witness: We knew that persons in Southern California do this, namely——

The Court: That was your conclusion?

The Witness: That was our finding. The result of our finding.

The Court: And you were out to sustain that conclusion?

The Witness: We were out to assure ourselves that the findings which we had extended to specific areas, based on general Southern California data, that these findings did indeed prevail in specific isolated areas.

The Court: Do you think, in making an examination into any matter, or an investigation, that if you go into it to prove a certain thing that you have maybe a tendency to lead in that direction, sort of a predilection in a certain direction?

The Witness: I don't think, your Honor, that one in the business in which I am can afford to ever enter an assignment with a predetermined conclusion.

The Court: I don't mean that you are doing it deliberately necessarily, but don't you think that any expert, to some extent, might be influenced in the method of his investigation, if he has reached a predetermined conclusion? That is the point.

The Witness: You keep using the term "predetermined [fol. 2421] conclusion." Might I mention this, that had we —assume that our Southern California data applied—had we developed our configuration based on our general Southern California data, and let it go at that, probably everybody would have been happy.

To insure that what we were doing, that we were correct in what we were doing we sought merely to verify this by these additional interviews. The additional interviews really weren't even necessary.

The Court: Yes, but you overlook the fact, don't you, that I am the one who has to decide from your investigation how good your expert opinion is. And all this underlying data might be of great help to the court in making that determination.

You are coming into court on the theory that you are going to reach a conclusion, period. And the court accepts it. That is the trouble, isn't it? You might be mistaken in your conclusion. That is my job to determine, isn't that right?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: I am not saying you are mistaken, but every bit of evidence that one relies upon in arriving at an expert opinion may not necessarily help the judger of the facts, but it may help. That is the point. That is the problem.

[fol. 2422] Go ahead, counsel. I have interrupted several times, I am—I hope I am not throwing you off of your track.

Mr. Alsup: Not at all, your Honor.

The Court: But it presents a problem for the court.

Mr. Alsup: You were going to reconstruct the questionnaire. Can you briefly just state what the questions were?

The Witness: Yes. It started with a buffer introduction, "We are doing a study on retail foods—on shopping behavior."

Question No. 1: "At what stores do you shop regularly? At what stores do you shop regularly for food?" And by "regularly," we mean more than six times a month.

Respondent names the stores, they are written down.

"Where are these located?"

These are located—the respondent indicates either by an address or an intersection or other description, the location of these stores.

"At what store, do you shop at any additional stores for food frequently?" By this we mean anywhere from four to six times per month.

Respondent in those cases supplied additional stores.

[fol. 2423] Finally, "Were there stores, other stores at which you shop occasionally, in addition to these?" By "occasionally," we mean less than four times a month.

The respondent replies, supplies names and addresses of additional occasional stores.

Then the interviewer goes back and says, "Now, to help me locate these, could you tell me about how far these are, about how long it takes you to get to each of these stores at which you shop?"

The respondent supplies approximate times. The interviewer got the respondent's name, telephone number and I believe concluded the interview at that point.

The Court: May I ask, was there a report written up of all this?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: At some time?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Where is the report?

The Witness: I have a copy here.

Mr. Alsup: May I examine it?

The Court: Yes.

(Witness hands document to counsel.)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. May I ask, Dr. Jenssen, if this is the full summary of all the interviewed areas?

[fol. 2424] A. I believe so. May I check it over first, however, before——

Q. Yes, please do.

(Counsel hands document to witness.)

Mr. Alsup: I ask it be marked as defendant's next in order for identification, please.

The Court: May I see it after you mark it, please.

The Clerk: Defendant's Exhibit BK for identification.

(The exhibit referred to was marked Defendant's Exhibit BK for identification.)

Mr. Alsup: If your Honor please, we can arrange to get a photostat and return it.

The Court: May I see it a moment first?

(The exhibit was handed to the court.)

The Court: Very well.

The Witness: I believe this is complete.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, I am not sure I offered the prior one, which I marked for identification, I am not sure I offered it in evidence. I do offer that, and I offer this in evidence.

The Court: What prior one are you talking about?

Mr. Alsup: BJ, your Honor.

The Court: What is BJ?

Mr. Alsup: BJ was the study made by the witness con-

[fol. 2425] cerning—with respect to the Shopper's Market which he testified to.

The Court: May I see it, please?

(The exhibit was handed to the court.)

The Court: Yes, that will be admitted. I take it there is no objection?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Clerk: BJ in evidence.

(The exhibit heretofore marked Defendant's Exhibit BJ was received in evidence.)

The Court: It is admitted.
The Clerk: You say you also offer BK?
Mr. Alsup: Yes, we offer this.
The Court: Any objection?
Mr. Coyle: I haven't seen it but there is no objection.
The Court: It is admitted.
The Clerk: Defendant's BK.

(The exhibit heretofore marked Defendant's Exhibit BK was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Dr. Jenssen, you were asked by the Government attorney to determine the extent of overlap between the respective Von's and Shopping Bag stores that you checked, is that correct?

[fol. 2426] A. Yes. As I recall, the objective of the study we were asked to undertake was essentially this: To determine from how little or how small a geographic area both Von's and Shopping Bag stores could be expected—could reasonably be expected to draw customers.

The Court: Was this put in writing or just by conversation?

The Witness: I don't recall if we sent anything to the Justice Department in writing on that.

[fol. 2427] The Court: No. I mean did the request of what they wanted come in writing so you had a very specific matter before you as to what you were searching for, or did you just get it by conversation?

The Witness: The standard procedure on this is, and this is what happened in this case, I and several members of my staff met with Mr. Coyle and several other gentlemen from the Justice Department, discussed their objectives, and as I recall I think we then might have submitted a letter to the Justice Department saying, "This is how we propose going about what it is we discussed." So it would have come in writing, normally in writing from us to them.

I don't recall, frankly, if in this instance we put it in writing or not. I suspect we did.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. I ask you, Dr. Jenssen, wouldn't the $64 question, if you are going out to interview people to determine whether or not there was competition between stores—wouldn't the $64 question have been, "Before the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, what stores did you shop at?"

A. No, sir, it would not.

A primary basic, fundamental rule in market research is not to ask questions such as, "What did you used to do?" and not to ask questions, "What is it you propose to do in the future?" but ask questions regarding, "What are you [fol. 2428] doing right now?"

The Court: "What are you doing right now" involves yesterday and the day before and the week before that, which is in the past, doesn't it? What he is doing right now is sitting talking to your interviewer, isn't that right?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: So the question is how far back in period of time are you asking him to relate this question, the answer to this question? It is a matter of habit over a course of time, isn't it?

The Witness: (Shakes head.)

The Court: Your answer is "Yes"?

The Witness: Tell me again.

The Court: Read it to him.

(The record was read by the reporter.)

The Court: Meaning the customer, of course.

The Witness: Yes. And what I am saying is that market research people have relatively little confidence in a question in which we ask, "Where did you used to shop?" We have little confidence in a question such as, "Where do you think you will shop in the future?" The kind of question that is of interest to market research people is a question such as, "Where are you currently doing your shopping?"

[fol. 2429] The Court: All right. "Currently doing" means over a period of time, in other words?

The witness: Yes.

The Court: Go ahead, counsel.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Changing the subject, Dr. Jenssen, do you recall writing back in November 1959: "While I've never been particularly impressed with Shopping Bag, its union with heavyweight Von's nonetheless adds a little more strength to one of the Coast's outstanding operations"?

A. Food Mart News, I believe?

Q. Yes.

A. A column I wrote for Food Mart News at that time. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Do you recall writing on September 16, 1960——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object. This is outside the scope of the direct.

The Court: I thought this was proposed impeachment. Is that what you are doing, counsel?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You can impeach a witness, can't you?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. But I don't see how this is going to impeach this witness, your Honor.

The Court: Maybe you don't and maybe I don't, but until I get the answers I will have to wait and see. But if it is [fol. 2430] on a collateral matter, he is bound by the answer. If it is not a collateral matter, then it is something different.

Mr. Coyle: I understand.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Do you recall, Dr. Jenssen, writing for Food Mart News on September 16, 1960, an article in which you stated: "The most evident influence is the never before equal degree of supermarket saturation that now prevails in the Southern California community. There is scarcely a household in the entire area which does not have at least three class A supermarkets within ready striking distance, plus anywhere from five to eight additional markets of smaller and/or older vintage"—do you recall writing that, Mr. Jenssen?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2431] Q. This was an article dealing with why customers sometimes shop at different stores, do you recall that?

A. The one to which you just referred?

Q. Yes.

A. You said it was in Food Mart News?

Q. The whys and wherefors of multi-store shopping.

A. I don't recall it, specifically. I remember the thought.

Q. Do you recall that in this same article you stated that there had been a failure "in many communities of any single retail food outlet to crystallize the unchallenged leader. Although each of the major Southern California stores has developed a very distinct image all of its own, none has emerged with a so completely positive over-all image that it overshadows all competition. Perhaps the single chain that currently comes anywhere close to possessing the best all-around image in the minds of the area's homemakers is Ralph's. A year or so ago Von's was in the top spot in this regard, but the Shopping Bag merger seems, strangely, to have weakened this chain's image, rather than to have enhanced it"—do you recall writing that, Dr. Jenssen?

A. What would the date on that be?

Q. September 16, 1960.

A. This, I presume, would have been after my comment about the possible new—— [fol. 2432] The Court: The question is, did you make that statement?

The Witness: If he has copies of this it would be helpful if I just took a look.

The Court: Let him look at it.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I object, again. I don't see how this relates to his studies——

The Court: I certainly think it does. It goes to the weight of his testimony. Here is a man saying, in effect, that competition exists between stores of Von's and stores of Shopping Bag, and now counsel is bringing in a statement, if he made it, that seems to contradict this.

Do you remember it?

The Witness: Yes, it is my column. I wrote the column.

The Court: That is your statement?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Next question.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Do you recall, Dr. Jenssen, writing an article for the Food Mart News on July 17, 1959, in which you stated:

"Some of the historic antitrust actions in various industries have made a fair degree of sense. I'm quite hard put, though, to justify on a logical basis that bigness in the retail food industry is criminal. I doubt [fol. 2433] whether there is any other field of business in which the small entrepreneur holds a better competitive opportunity against the giant corporation. Against the burlesque statistics which the FTC and the House Small Business subcommittee have fished up, it should also be recognized that many small independents are doing a lot better, on a per store basis, than the biggies. In spite of advertising and buying deal advantages inherent to the mammoth chains, many small operators in their respective communities are whaling the daylights out of the A & P's, Safeways, National Teas, and Krogers. More than any other business, competition among supermarkets is strictly a community-level affair. Which explains the fact that every chain in the country—even the very best and biggest—has its share of individual stores that are 'dogs.' "

Do you recall writing that?
A. The date is what?
Q. July 17, 1959.
A. Yes.
Q. Do you recall in this same article writing:

"I doubt if it is possible today to scribe a one-mile radius circle into any populated area out of Southern California without finding it including at least good-[fol. 2434] sized, existing markets."

Do you recall writing that?
A. I think there was also more. I think "plus several smaller markets."
Q. That was in the prior article.
A. Right.

The Court: Do you want to offer these articles, or are you just using it for impeachment purposes?
Mr. Alsup: Just using it for impeachment purposes.

Q. Bringing to your attention Exhibit 85 for identification, in looking at Area No. 1, Dr. Jenssen, that lists a Shopping Bag Store 42 immediately adjacent to a Von's Store 37. Do you know whether that Shopping Bag store was ever built?

A. To my knowledge it was not.

Q. Do you know who occupies that site?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. Alsup: Can it be stipulated that is Food Giant, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions.

The Court: Is that all, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I offer this exhibit in evidence, your Honor.

The Court: It will be admitted.

[fol. 2435] The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 85 in evidence.

(The document referred to was received in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 85.)

The Court: Step down.

Do you still wish to call rebuttal testimony? I don't want to preclude you, counsel, but we are going to finish today.

Mr. Alsup: If I could have five minutes, your Honor, just with reference to this.

The Court: You can have more time than that. I am not trying to cut your time out, but I do have a full calendar Monday morning, a trial Monday afternoon, a judges' meeting Monday afternoon, and cases set for trial on Tuesday.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor has been very patient and I appreciate it. I am sorry I took so long.

The Court: That's all right, counsel. Everybody is entitled to cross-examine.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor pleases, there is one thing. On the first day of the trial we indicated—the court ruled that certain affidavits would be read into the record. I think they probably should also be marked as exhibits. They were never marked as exhibits. So I ask that the affidavit of Gerald Harrison be marked as the next exhibit.

The Court: Whose affidavit?

[fol. 2436] Mr. Coyle: Gerald Harrison, an FBI agent.

The Court: That was to be read into the record—not read, but copied?

Mr. Coyle: It is already arranged that it is to be copied into the record. But we didn't mark them as exhibits. Since then we have marked everything as exhibits.

The Court: All right. It will be marked.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 86.

The Court: That is, in evidence, you mean?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: In evidence.

The Clerk: In evidence.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 86.)

Mr. Coyle: The affidavit of Mr. Houghton as the next exhibit.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 87.

(The exhibit referred to was received in evidence and marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 87.)

The Courrt: You are listening, are you, Mr. Alsup? These are going in evidence. I hope you are hearing it.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. I understood counsel was going to do this.

I made my objection the other day with respect to a portion of Dr. Mueller's.

[fol. 2437] The Court: What was your objection?

Mr. Alsup: The conclusions in the last two sentences. And your Honor overruled my objection.

The Court: I told you—I don't know that I exactly overruled it; I told you if it was purely a conclusion, unless it was expert opinion based on some ground, I would disregard it. That's what I said.

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

The Court: I thought you sort of acquisced in that situation.

Mr. Alsup: I did, your Honor.

The Court: Very well. They will be admitted.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 86, an affidavit of Gerald Harrison; and the second exhibit admitted is Plaintiff's Exhibit 87, which is the affidavit of Harrison Houghton.

[fol. 2438] Mr. Alsup: That includes the certification also.

Mr. Coyle: And Mr. Alsup also referred to an affidavit you hadn't reached yet.

The Court: Well, reach it now, let's move.

Mr. Alsup: Let me list all of the affidavits, the affidavit of Thomas Linden will be the next affidavit.

The Court: Wait a minute, Let him mark them.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 88.

Mr. Alsup: Then the affidavit of John Marshall will be the next exhibit.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 89.

Mr. Alsup: And the affidavit of Dr. Mueller will be next.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 90.

Mr. Alsup: And the affidavit of Joseph DeSilva will be the following exhibit.

The Clerk: Plaintiff's Exhibit 91.

Mr. Alsup: Now I offer into evidence——

The Court: All of those are admitted, Mr. Clerk.

The Clerk: Admitted, 88 through 91.

(The exhibits referred to were marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 88, 89, 90 and 91 and received in evidence.)

The Court: Admitted.

The Clerk: Just to review them all, Plaintiff's Exhibits 86, 87, 88, 89, 90 and 91 in evidence.

[fol. 2439] Mr. Alsup: Now, with respect to Exhibit 87, to make it clear, there was a census certification attached to that exhibit. We ask that be admitted.

The Court: If it is attached to it it is already in evidence.

Mr. Alsup: Is it attached?

Mr. Coyle: It is attached, I believe Mr. Hughes mentioned that.

The Court: It is in evidence. Admitted.

Mr. Coyle: The original——

The Court: It is attached and admitted.

Mr. Alsup: That is all, your Honor.

The Court: Now, are these to be copied into the record?

Mr. Alsup: Copied into the record. That was arranged the other day, they would be copied in.

The Court: That is what I thought. Very well.

[fol. 2440] THEODORE A. VON DER AHE, recalled as a witness on behalf of the defendant, in surrebuttal, having been previously duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, have you examined Government's Exhibit 85?

A. I have to some degree, yes.

Q. Can you tell us whether in your years of experience as a grocery man you have ever selected a store location based upon driving time?

A. We consider driving time, but we do not give it very much importance when we consider a market location. We do not feel that a market area can be defined in terms of miles or driving time.

Q. Would you look at Exhibit 85 and state your opinion as to whether or not this presents a realistic picture of the overlapping trading area?

A. In my opinion this definitely does not——

Q. Would you state your reasons?

A. —show an accurate, true picture of the overlap, if any, between any Von's or Shopping Bag markets.

I would like to refer, No. 1, to the area shown on Plaintiff's Exhibit 85 as area 1 and area 2——

[fol. 2441] The Court: Let the record show, I take it—the reporter or the clerk calls my attention to the fact that you did not indicate that you had rested.

Mr. Coyle: We rest, your Honor.

The Court: So this is surrebuttal that we are now proceeding on, is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Proceed.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Will you continue, Mr. Von der Ahe.

A. Well, this is a very small map as depicted, it actually is the entire San Fernando Valley in which there are over a million people living there at this time.

Q. Can you give us some estimate of the number of stores in that area?

A. And it is heavily stored by markets of chains and independents alike. As a matter of fact, Dr. Jenssen, in his article, said you couldn't drive more than a mile without running across two or three very effective competitors and a lot of smaller ones.

But the point I wish to make here is that this map, while shown in small scale, covers very many square miles.

There is one Shopping Bag store at the corner of Tampa and Victory, which is at least a mile and a half from the nearest Von's at the corner of Reseda and Winnetka. There [fol. 2442] are many competing firms between those two stores.

The only other Shopping Bag store in the entire San Fernando Valley is in Sylmar, which is many miles away from any other Von's store.

So regardless of these configurations and things of that nature, Von's and Shopping Bag have never competed at all in the San Fernando Valley.

I think also, referring to this map, that area No. 3 shows there are nine Shopping Bag stores within that same area, or who are accessible to the customers in that area.

Now, I say that the management of Shopping Bag used a good judgment and prudence when they located those stores, and if they accepted the Doctor's theory, they would be putting stores——

The Court: Now, never mind, you are arguing now. Let's get back to the facts.

The Witness: I beg your pardon.

The Court: What I would like to know and what is going to help me is not the argument, but the distance between these stores and the relative competition. That is the thing that we are on, is that right, Mr. Alsup?

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

[fol. 2443] The Court: Now, I realize that you have to be a protagonist, this is your case. But I would like to get the facts.

Now tell me this, I would like to know in area No. 3—first, what is the closest two stores of Shopping Bag and Von's, in miles?

The Witness: Your Honor, the closest store would be about a mile and a half, in my opinion.

The Court: Is that the one in Monterey Park?

The Witness: That is the one at——

The Court: Wilma freeway?

The Witness: That we refer to, and you say it is bissected by the San Bernardino freeway, and there again are two distinct, separate shopping areas.

The Court: I was going to ask you, is there a throughway on any of those streets there?

The Witness: At Garfield there is a throughway, your Honor.

The Court: Now then, what is the next—do you mind, counsel, if I ask?

Mr. Alsup: No, I appreciate it, your Honor.

The Court: I am interested in these facts because I am not too clear.

Now, what is the next—let's see, in this area, in No. 3 on Exhibit 85, what is the next two markets, one of Von's and one of Shopping Bag, that are close together in miles? [fol. 2444] And how many miles?

The Witness: They are mentioning the West Covina district in area No. 6.

Mr. Alsup: He was referring to area 3.

The Court: Area 3, I am referring to area 3.

The Witness: Oh, I beg your pardon, sir.

The Court: Area 3, I want to find out what is the next closest two markets, one being Von's and one Shopping Bag.

The Witness: The only other market in that area is that star that is shown right here at Von's No. 4 (indicating).

The Court: That is over near where it says Pomona.

The Witness: Pomona Boulevard, yes.

The Court: That's right.

The Witness: Yes, your Honor. And that market is over the hill from the Shopping Bag No. 7. So there is a natural geographical barrier there.

The Court: Well, you can't get through, I take it, any of those streets except what?

The Witness: Garfield Avenue is one street and the other street is Atlantic Boulevard.

The Court: In other words——

The Witness: There is no other street.

[fol. 2445] The Court: This shop, where does it draw its customers from, Belvedere Gardens, in that area, or where?

The Witness: No, your Honor. There is a cluster of new homes being developed on both sides of Atlantic Boulevard, back to the east principally.

The Court: All right. Now, what is the distance between the Shopping Bag shop up in Monterey Park, I guess it is, and the one here at the Von's that we are talking about on Pomona Boulevard?

The Witness: The distance would be, I would say three or four miles. I am guessing. But I am saying that because of the geography, the fact that they come over the hill, get on the high speed highways, the people do not travel from one area to the other.

The Court: I will have to take about a three-minute recess, Mr. Alsup. We will adjourn for five minutes.

(Short recess.)

The Court: Proceed.

Mr. Alsup: Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, would you run hurriedly over the other areas, please?

The Witness: Your Honor, I will do this just as fast as I can.

The Court: Well, I don't want to hurry you, I am not in that much hurry. What I would like to suggest, if you do it by a process of elimination, tell me in the other areas what [fol. 2446] are the closest, what is the shortest distance between Von's and Shopping Bag, just take those.

The Witness: Take area No. 4, your Honor. The distance is approximately two miles, and the area which is served by the Von's store is definitely bound by barriers, a river to the west, a freeway to the north, a high speed boulevard, Lakewood, to the east, and Firestone to the south. Our pin studies show that that is all of the area we service there.

The Court: Now, you are talking about area what?

The Witness: Area No. 4.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I wonder if he would indicate which store he is talking about.

The Court: Well, I think that the record speaks for itself, but go ahead. You are speaking of the closest, are you, or the farthest?

The Witness: I am talking about the two closest stores, the Von's and the Shopping Bag.

The Court: In the area 4?

The Witness: In area 4, which is known as star No. 5 and Shopping Bag No. 34.

The Court: In other words, there are only two stores in that area, that is as far as Shopping Bag and Von's are concerned?

[fol. 2447] The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Coyle: On my copy, your Honor, there is a 27 and a 1 also.

Mr. Alsup: That is over near——

The Court: Where, counsel? I don't see it. Oh, I see, you mean over at——

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Where, I don't see it.

The Witness: He is referring to Lynwood.

The Court: Is that—Lynwood, is that in shopping area 4?

Mr. Coyle: On this exhibit that I have, maybe we have an old copy.

The Court: It is not in the circled area, it is not in area 4 here.

Mr. Alsup: It looks like it on my copy, your Honor, but area 4 looks closed there because we have got an arrow on there. Mine looks like a Rohrshach test or something.

The Court: Take a quick look at mine and see if they are the same.

Mr. Coyle: This is all one.

The Court: I see. It is all one.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 2448] The Court, Go ahead. Then what is the closest, you say, between the Shopping Bag store and a Von's store in area 4?

The Witness: The closest would be between the Shopping Bag No. 1, which is incorrectly marked on this map to give the illusion of being closer to Von's 27 than it actually is, the distance is about two miles.

The Court: What is the distance from 27, the star, rather, at 27, to the one marked 2?

The Witness: The distance there is about 2½ miles, your Honor.

And in that connection I would like to make this observation: That this is the store which we replaced with a new, larger unit, because we did not consider that that store was competing with the Von's No. 7 indicated by a star.

Mr. Alsup: 27.

The Court: 27.

The Witness: Von's No. 27, indicated by that star.

Also, in this connection, immediately south of that Von's No. 27 at Imperial Highway and Santa Gertrudes, we have put in another Von's store, because we, again, considered that it was another separate, distinct shopping area, which we could successfully service with a store, and we have [fol. 2449] done so. So in our opinion these stores are not competing with each other. We are competing with the customers in that neighborhood and we have felt that we needed that many stores to adequately service that area.

In area No. 6, if I may jump to there——

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: —there is a Shopping Bag store indicated at No. 12—32, I am sorry—and that is in a large shopping center right on the freeway. It has access to population north of the freeway, and also south of the freeway.

The Court: Which side of the freeway is it on?

The Witness: It is on the south side of the freeway. It competes to a degree with a Von's No. 31, but this map does not show all of the territory east of Von's No. 31, which is the major draw area for Von's No. 31. We attract customers principally from the east and that area.

The Court: What is the distance between those two stores, again?

The Witness: About a mile and a half or two miles driving.

The Court: What is the distance between 31 and 20? Is that what it is?

Mr. Vaughn: 28.

The Witness: 28, your Honor. That, again, is about two [fol. 2450] and a half miles.

Between those two stores are several chain stores and several independents, and the character of the neighborhood does change to where No. 28 is servicing the area principally south and to the east and west of it.

Q. By Mr. Alsup: Is this the area you testified a lot of discount houses entered?

A. This is the area which is overrun with discount houses. As a matter of fact, there are seven or eight discount houses operating out in this West Covina area.

Quickly jumping down to area No. 5, your Honor, Von's have a store, as indicated there at No. 26, and the Shopping Bag store is indicated one mile to the north at Cotilla and Brookhurst, but that store also indicates that it competes with a Food Giant, a Thriftimart, and a Safeway, all closer to it than the Von's No. 26.

The Court: That has become a rather populated area, hasn't it?

The Witness: It has become very populated. More stores all the time are continuing to move into that area, principally farther down into Fountain Valley and the rest of Orange County.

By Mr. Alsup:

Q. Shopping Bag 33 is the one you testified yesterday never got off the ground, or words to that effect?

[fol. 2451] A. That's correct.

The Court: What do you mean, it never came into existence?

The Witness: It is in existence, but it was contemplated as a shopping center, and the rest of the shopping center failed to materialize and it never was developed.

Mr. Alsup: No further questions, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: I have some questions, your Honor.

The Court: I hope that you gentlemen don't meet any of these clerks, bailiffs, reporters, or attaches of this court here in the hall, as here it is Friday evening after 5:00 o'clock and we are still in session. You may not get a smile.

I am not meaning to hurry you any, counsel. You go right ahead with your cross examination.

Mr. Coyle: I will.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Referring to area No. 6, Mr. Von der Ahe, what did you say the distance was between Von's 31 and Shopping Bag 28?

A. I believe I said about two miles.

Q. Between Von's 31 and Shopping Bag 32?

[fol. 2452] A. There, again, I think I said a mile and a half to two miles.

Q. You said two miles on the other one, didn't you?

The Court: Yes, he said two miles.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. How did you ascertain this distance?

A. I am making guesses from the map, sir.

Q. This professor that you sent out to interview the store managers when you prepared the answer to the interrogatory that was admitted in evidence yesterday as a defense exhibit, did he make driving time tests, or how did he test the distances that he put down?

A. I don't know.

Q. He didn't just guess, did he?

A. I don't know.

Q. He showed the distance between Von's 31 and Shopping Bag 28 was one mile.

Mr. Vaughn: Where is that, counsel?

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Between Shopping Bag 28 and Von's 31 is one mile, in Exhibit AV, defense Exhibit AV, the portion marked Exhibit 3, the sheet referring to Shopping Bag No. 28. He shows that the distance is one mile.

A. Mr. Coyle, I can't quarrel with that. I am making guesses from the distance here, but it is my feeling that it [fol. 2453] is more than one mile.

Mr. Alsup: Perhaps we can shorten it, your Honor. The exhibit referred to indicates that the manager of the Von's store thought it was a mile and a half, and the manager of the Shopping Bag store thought it was a mile. Obviously the professor was getting the opinion of the store manager as to the distance.

The Court: What did he do, split it in half?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: As long as I understand the evidence. I don't think it is of that great moment.

Mr. Coyle: I think that all of these distances we have been getting here, though, are different than the distances on the exhibit, and substantially different than the distances on the exhibit already submitted by the defendant.

The Court: Go ahead.

Q. By Mr. Coyle: Referring to Von's 28 and Shopping Bag 27, how far is the distance there—29, I am sorry?

A. I was going to say you have lost me.

The Court: Where are we now, in area 4?

Mr. Coyle: Area 3 now.

The Court: In area 3?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Witness: Will you repeat the question, please?

[fol. 2454] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. What is the distance between Von's 29 and Shopping Bag 27 in area 3?

A. Well, this is the one that was bissected by the freeway in Monterey Park——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, he is not answering my question.

The Court: He can't find it, and I can't either. The markings on here are such that I can't tell.

Mr. Coyle: You can't find area 3?

The Court: I can find area 3, but I can't find these numbers.

Mr. Coyle: The star on Wilma freeway is Von's No. 29.

The Witness: I believe I estimated the distance to be a mile and a half.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. And then between 27 and 29?

Mr. Alsup: 27 what?

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry. Shopping Bag No. 27 and Von's 29——

The Witness: I just estimated that.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. A mile and half. Then between Shopping Bag 27 and Von's No. 4?

A. I think I said three or four miles.

[fol. 2455] Q. Three miles or four miles?

A. I am venturing guesses by trying to estimate the distance as indicated on the map, Mr. Coyle.

Q. Then ——

A. Of my own knowledge I cannot give you a specific answer because I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I move that this witness' guesses be stricken.

The Court: How far is it to your office, counsel, how many steps to your office?

Mr. Coyle: It is 3,000 miles away, your Honor.

The Court: I mean upstairs. Can't you give me an estimate?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that's what he is doing.

Mr. Coyle: All right. They are guesses.

The Court: All it is is an estimate.

Mr. Coyle: They are guesses.

The Court: It is an estimate. I can tell you how far it is from here to New York by flight, can't you, by estimate? But it surely wouldn't be accurate.

Mr. Coyle: It certainly isn't, that's the problem.

The Court: If we eliminate all testimony in this case that is not accurate, where will we be? It goes to the weight, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor.

[fol. 2456] By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Then going down to Area No. 4, referring to Shopping Bag 35 and Von's No. 5, what did you estimate the distance there to be?

A. Two miles.

The Court: You see the problem, counsel—and I am not saying this to take sides with either one—the problem is that these dots are large, and in looking at the map they stand out in such perspective that they have a tendency to confuse. I am pretty good at distances, but the size of the markings have a tendency to dwarf the map to a certain extent.

Mr. Coyle: It is a problem you have in keeping the maps to a manageable size.

The Court: For example, that star, I would guess it to be a quarter of a mile across that star, at least.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Still in Area 4, Mr. Von der Ahe, referring to Shopping Bag No. 1, what would you estimate the distance between Shopping Bag No. 1 and Von's No. 27 to be?

A. About a mile and a half to two miles.

Q. Referring to Area 1, and referring to this Shopping Bag Store No. 42 up in Granada Hills, is that the store that was closed after the acquisition because it would have been in competition with the Von's store?

[fol. 2457] A. Mr. Coyle, that store was never built. We never closed it. This was proposed as a Shopping Bag store prior to the merger, and because of the merger, and because you can see that star and that dot are so closely together, that they would be serving the same area, we decided not to open that store as a Shopping Bag or Von's store, and we did arrange to have it go into the hands of Food Giant.

Q. But it was planned at the time of the acquisition?

A. That's correct.

Q. Referring to Area 2, could you tell us what the distance is between Shopping Bag 39 and Von's 22?

A. I believe I answered that by estimating the distance at a mile and a half to two miles.

Q. Mr. Von der Ahe, do you know whether these maps or this exhibit shows all the streets?

A. I did not prepare this exhibit. I can't answer that.

Q. From your knowledge of these areas, where you have stars does this map show all the streets?

The Court: Well, this is really not a map, is it, counsel? Is this a photographed map?

Mr. Coyle: This is superimposed upon a map, yes.

The Court: Is this actually a map of the San Fernando Valley? If it is I don't recognize it, because there are many more streets, I thought, than are shown on this map.

Mr. Coyle: That's the point I am trying to make.

[fol. 2458] The Court: What kind of a map is it when part of the streets are eliminated?

Mr. Coyle: The streets were eliminated for clarity. They were blacked out and only the main streets were shown.

The Court: Do you mean the darkness shall bring light? I see. All right.

Mr. Coyle: It would be even harder to read than it is now if we got every street in there.

The Court: It makes it very difficult, though, counsel, to estimate distances, because one experienced in measuring would know, with the streets in, how many blocks there are to a mile.

Mr. Coyle: That is true. It also doesn't indicate how much access there was——

The Court: That's right. And that is the reason I can't tell from the map what the access was. So you are relying upon what the witness answers.

Are you about finished?

Mr. Coyle: I have no further questions.

The Court: No more?

Mr. Coyle: No.

The Court: What are we talking about then?

Mr. Alsup: Defendant's rest.

The Court: You both rest?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

[fol. 2459] Colloquy Between Court and Counsel

The Court: Step down.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Alsup: Thank you for your courtesy in letting us go on.

The Court: Gentlemen, I don't want to linger on. I think we understand you have an order to prepare, and then I believe you both decided that you did want to file additional memoranda. Am I correct about that?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think we have ever decided formally, your Honor.

The Court: What do you wish to do?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, I do.

The Court: It is entirely up to you. How about it, Mr. Alsup, do you want to file an additional memorandum?

Mr. Alsup: I would like to file a reply memorandum. I have submitted my summary, and if they would like to answer that, I would like a chance to reply.

The Court: Have you summarized all of the affidavits?

Mr. Coyle: Not yet.

The Court: I didn't think so. That is what you wish to do?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: I think you have summarized all——

Mr. Alsup: All of them.

The Court: How do you want to arrange it? Do you want [fol. 2460] the Government to file first, and then you answer?

Mr. Alsup: I think that would be fair. They have had ours.

Mr. Coyle: I suppose we could reply, if necessary.

The Court: Of course.

I would like to tell you that I would like to get this case out of the way and have the findings signed in the early part of September, not later than the early part of September.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor mentioned that we would probably submit proposed findings, both sides.

The Court: Do you wish to?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: They will be welcomed. They could be of great assistance to me.

Mr. Alsup: When would your Honor like those?

The Court: As soon as you can do it.

I think I will start to read on this case as I go along with the other cases, and as quickly as you can get your findings in I would appreciate it.

How soon do you think that would be? Do you have any idea?

Mr. Coyle: I could get them in in three weeks.

The Court: That is ample time, I am sure.

Mr. Alsup: We can certainly do that.

[fol. 2461] The Court: You don't have to answer each other's findings.

Mr. Alsup: No, no. It depends on getting the transcript, as your Honor would like transcript references, I am sure.

Mr. Coyle: That might be a problem.

The Court: Do it in your earliest possible time, counsel. I want to tell you now that I will not be here in October and November, so I would like to get this case so that you gentlemen can be struggling with it while I am away, get it in such condition that you will be on your way to wherever you are going, if you are going.

Mr. Alsup: Perhaps I could suggest this, your Honor, to expedite the matter: Rather than making transcript references, as to these affidavits that are going to be copied into the transcript——

The Court: You don't need transcript for that.

Mr. Alsup: We can start now doing it and making reference to the affidavits and the pages.

The Court: I would suggest you do that. Because in the final analysis all I need is the reference, where it is to be found, and I have the affidavits, and that will do it. So I don't think you ought to wait on the record.

Mr. Alsup: We will get ours in in two weeks.

The Court: And I will remember the testimony well [fol. 2462] enough, the oral testimony, well enough to know whether you are in bounds on your findings on that. I think I will. That has been written up, anyway. I will go to work on this case, begin to read and work on it, in the meantime, as soon as you can get in your memoranda and proposed findings.

Mr. Coyle: Does the memoranda come in with the proposed findings?

The Court: The memoranda comes in as soon as you can get it in. How soon will that be? I should think you probably would want to bring them in at the same time.

Mr. Coyle: I would say the same time, your Honor. Three weeks. That will give us a chance to go to Washington and do it.

Mr. Alsup: I will get my findings in in three weeks, and I would like 10 days to reply to their memorandum.

The Court: Very well. Counsel, you don't mean you are going to have them make the findings in Washington; you are going to do the findings yourself?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. We live in Washington. We will go back home.

The Court: How far is it to Washington, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: All I can do is estimate.

The Court: Anything further?

The Clerk: I don't believe it is clear. Plaintiff is going [fol. 2463] to file a memo, and then the defendant respond?

The Court: I am not pinning them down to exact dates, but, counsel, I understand you are going to file within three weeks, soon, or within three weeks?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Both the findings and additional memoranda?

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: Then, counsel, you will have—of course you will file your findings within the three-week period?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: But you will have 10 days after the memoranda to answer it.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you.

The Court: Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. Then we will reply, if necessary, within five days.

The Court: In closing this case—the case will not stand under submission, however, until all of these additional memoranda are in.

And I want to say this, gentlemen: I thank you very much for the way that you have reduced this case down. Rather than having to sit down and read a record over again after hearing a long trial, it seems to me I am in position now to sit down and really read the record. I do [fol. 2464] appreciate the cooperation of both of you very much.

Mr. Alsup: We are very grateful to your Honor. I think your Honor's assistance has made this possible. I think it goes a great way to expedite it.

The Court: We can part at least on a friendly basis. Nobody has lost, at least up until now.

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

The Court: Do you want a closing time after reply?

Mr. Coyle: On the memorandum, I said, Mr. Alsup's memorandum, if necessary.

The Court: The way we are going, we will never close.

This, really, was nothing more than additional memoranda.

Mr. Coyle: That's why I don't see why he wants ro reply. We are only going to be summarizing the witnesses.

The Court: That's correct.

Mr. Coyle: The evidence, I suppose.

The Court: I will tell you what I am going to do. I am going to shorten the time. I think you ought to both file a memorandum at the same time.

Mr. Coyle: I think so.

[fol. 2465] The Court: Why not, Mr. Alsup?

Mr. Alsup: I am willing. They have had our memorandum, which is a digest of all of the affidavits and the testimony of the witnessses, and if theirs proposes to be——

The Court: You do have a point. You have not had a chance to come back at their analysis.

Mr. Alsup: They have had ours. it is going to be a reply to it, it seems to me if I don't feel their analysis or reply is fair, I should be entitled to comment.

The Court: We are going to have some trouble with findings, you know that. If you want these findings to go over to December, and I am sure you don't, this delay may cause it. So I would suggest this, that you try to get your memoranda in before the three weeks, if you can.

Mr. Coyle: Very well.

The Court: Then we will reduce your time to 10 days, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Very well.

The Court: To reply. And I would like, if you could, for you to get it in shorter than that.

Mr. Alsup: I am sure we can do it in a very few days.

The Court: And I will give you five days to reply to that if you deem it necessary.

[fol. 2466] Mr. Coyle: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: We will stand adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 5:20 o'clock p. m., court was adjourned.)

[fol. 2470] (Other court matters.)

The Clerk: Item No. 10 on the calendar, case No. 336-60-CC Civil, United States of America vs. Von's Grocery Company and others for further proceedings.

The Court: Gentlemen, I am going to have ample time to hear you out, and I have a lot of questions that I want to ask. So I hate to inconvenience you but I will have to ask you to remain. In due time we will reach you.

Mr. Coyle: Fine, thank you.

Mr. Vaughn: Thank you, your Honor.

The Court: We will probably continue over into the afternoon.

Mr. Vaughn: Thank you.

The Court: I would think you have no objection to arguing the case further, have you?

Mr. Vaughn: Not on behalf of the defendants.

The Court: All right.

(Other court matters.)

The Clerk: Item 10 on the calendar, case No. 336-60-CC Civil, United States vs. Von's Grocery Company for further proceedings.

The Court: All right. Now it's your turn, counsel. I want to ask you some questions when we get the [fol. 2471] appearances.

Mr. Coyle: James Coyle for the government.

Mr. Vaughn: William W. Vaughn and William W. Alsup for the defendants.

The Court: I believe Mr. Knight is also appearing.

Mr. Coyle: Mr. Knight also appearing for the government.

SUBMISSION VACATED

The Court: First of all, I have been over your—first, let's get the status. The status is now that the submission has been vacated for the purpose of hearing further from you and permitting stipulations, and also to hear argument.

Now, the next question that presents itself to me—before I bring that question to you—I have read the stipulation, studied it, I have read both of your briefs. And I would like first to know—I thought the issue in the pretrial order took out the issue of supplier in this case.

Mr. Vaughn: That is our understanding as well, your Honor.

The Court: How does the government now at this time start to argue that matter in the brief?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what provision in the pretrial order took out suppliers, your Honor.

[fol. 2472] The Court: Well, let's get it and see. I thought it did. Am I mistaken about it? There is no evidence offered, as I remember it, on suppliers at all, was there, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: Not to my recollection, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, on the evidence—all of these stipulations in the pretrial conference order related to the purchase, shipment and distribution of groceries and related products from outside the area into the area, and they raised those issues.

The Court: Well, first, let me say this. I had better first sign the stipulation. It is ready now for signing by the court, is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

STIPULATION SIGNED BY COURT

The Court: All right. I shall now sign it. The stipulation is signed. Now, I am keeping my copy, which I have already marked up.

Gentlemen, now in the pretrial order I thought I remembered some statement regarding the supplier issue.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, if I may, I think there is a statement on page 12, in the paragraph which commences on that page with the small letter (c).

The Court: Yes. Quoting on page 12, starting at line 1 of paragraph (c):

> "Defendants assert that the Los Angeles Metro-
> [fol. 2473] politan Area is not the relevant section of the country as to wholesale purchases in the sale of groceries and related products.
> "The government assumes no burden of proof as to the relevant section of the country, at the wholesale level since it intends to base its case on the proper effects of the merger in the relevant section of the country for grocery retailers, which is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. * * * "

Now, I don't remember, except incidentally in the testimony, where it may have come in sort of incidentally.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Any evidence as to the effect upon suppliers.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT RE ISSUES

Mr. Coyle: May I call your Honor's attention to page 5 of the pretrial conference order?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: Paragraph 16 therein.

The Court: Well, I am familiar with those things, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: They all relate to suppliers. This is a shipment of products into the area——

The Court: Well, I think you miss the point. The point is nobody is questioning that there is shipment of products into the area.

Mr. Coyle: Nobody is questioning, I don't be-[fol. 2474] lieve, that these two chains merged and instead of there being two buying organizations, you have one.

The Court: No question about that. But it doesn't follow that they stopped buying the products from these others.

Mr. Coyle: It certainly follows that the suppliers that were supplying both companies have only one company to supply now, because there is only one buying——

The Court: That certainly is true——

Mr. Coyle: That affects the suppliers, your Honor.

The Court: In what way?

Mr. Coyle: Because they have one possible conduit for their products instead of two. Some were thrown out.

The Court: Well, it is just the difference between one and two, but there is no evidence in the record to show any suppression of any suppliers.

Mr. Coyle: Certainly there was suppression of suppliers, their advertising was curtailed, railroad suppliers—you eliminated one railroad, that has an effect on suppliers.

The Court: It seems to me you have sort of backed in on that issue, haven't you, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so, your Honor, no. It [fol. 2475] is just an obvious fact, any time you have a merger between two large organizations like that, it is going to affect the suppliers, it is going to affect the consumers, it is going to affect——

The Court: In what way, counsel? In what way?

Mr. Coyle: Because now you have one organization instead of two to deal with.

The Court: Well, those are effects that are obvious, of course, insofar as——

Mr. Coyle: Sure, sure they are obvious, that is why the suppliers were never out——

The Court: All right. Is that your position?

Mr. Coyle: That is the government's position.

The Court: All right. All right. Then I am disposed to view that in the light of, this is a sort of a backing in on the issue of suppliers, because it seems to me that from your pretrial order you were relying here upon the substantial lessening of competition in the area as between the actual stores themselves.

Mr. Coyle: But that lessening of competition in the area affected the suppliers, it affected the consumers. This blanket statement that the defendants want to make that we abandon the suppliers question just isn't true, because we have all these paragraphs of the pretrial conference relating to shipment of product through these [fol. 2476] conduits. That is the——

The Court: Counsel, you are talking in generalities. I am talking about what does the evidence show in this case.

Mr. Coyle: This is evidence, this is evidence, your Honor. This is in the pretrial statement. The evidence shows that they both——

The Court: I am not talking now about the pretrial, I am talking about the evidence. What evidence did the government offer on the effect on suppliers?

Mr. Coyle: Well, the pretrial conference order is evidence and——

The Court: Counsel, I am aware of these generalities, these glittering generalities, I am aware of them. But what I am asking is, what evidence was offered by the government on the question of suppliers. That is all I am asking.

Mr. Coyle: Well, these are not generalities. We offered Government's Exhibit 10 which——

The Court: I take it then none was offered, none was offered.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, taking it from me because I am saying we offered specific evidence——

The Court: Where is it? Point the evidence out to me.

[fol. 2477] Mr. Coyle: Government's Exhibit 10——

The Court: Other than the pretrial order, point it out to me.

Mr. Coyle: I said Government's Exhibit 10, which is an answer to interrogatories which describes the shipment of groceries and related products from all over the country through the Von's and Shopping Bag organizations.

The Court: There isn't any question, counsel, that there are shipments in to grocers in this State from suppliers all over the country. There is no question about that. That isn't what we are talking about——

Mr. Coyle: And they are both——

The Court: How were they affected? What evidence is there as to how they were affected?

Mr. Coyle: They were affected because they only have one organization to deal with instead of two. That is not a bare generality, that is a fact. And it is in evidence just as strongly as any——

The Court: All right. Do you have anything further to say on that point?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: All right, fine.

Mr. Coyle: But it is not generalities, it is a specific fact in evidence in the most provable way possible in the pretrial conference order.

[fol. 2478] The Court: Counsel, nobody is disputing the general proposition that your pretrial order sets forth that the suppliers supplied these things and they came in to these purchasers, both of them. There is no disputing that.

Mr. Coyle: And also that the merger took place and the conduits were joined.

The Court: All right. I will hear from you. Do you want to argue the matter now?

Mr. Coyle: I am saying, what is there to argue? We do have suppliers in the case, we do have this paragraph in the pretrial conference order, we have the answers to the interrogatories, and suppliers are in this case. That is all.

But the lessening of competition is in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

The Court: I thought the whole case was predicated on the probability of substantially lessened competition in this area.

Mr. Coyle: That is right.

The Court: To-wit: The grocery business in Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. I thought that was the basis of your case.

Mr. Coyle: In the entire grocery business, the grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is the [fol. 2479] buying, the distribution, the merchandising and sale of products. You can't separate one from the other.

The Court: Why can't you tell me then why the pretrial order did not set up a relevant trade area as a supply area?

Mr. Coyle: Because that is—these are two retail chains that merged.

The Court: I see. Well, I don't follow you, counsel. I just can't follow you at all.

I tried this case all along on the theory that your position with the government was that you were depending upon a substantial lessening of competition in this area, the relevant area, to-wit:——

Mr. Coyle: Resulting from the joinder of these two chains. But we introduced plenty of evidence as to the nature of that competition.

The Court: Which competition are you talking about?

Mr. Coyle: The competition between these chains, as well as between other retail groceries.

The Court: We are jumping, we are skipping around all over the place——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, if your Honor will look at Government's Exhibit 12——

The Court: May I finish my statement, please, [fol. 2480] counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, yes.

The Court: Let's slow down. We have all afternoon. Now let's slow down just a little bit.

I am trying to determine whether or not this issue is in the case. And my offhand impression is that it is not in the case, except in a general way, to-wit: that there were suppliers.

Now, I don't remember any evidence as to the effect on suppliers. Were any suppliers eliminated, other than the pretrial stipulation, pretrial order, that one purchaser took the place of two purchasers? Other than that?

Mr. Coyle: Well, sure, suppliers were eliminated.

The Court: Which suppliers were eliminated?

Mr. Coyle: Well, metropolitan newspapers. They only have one chain advertising now instead of two. That is an elimination of suppliers.

The Court: I don't know whether it is or not. It may be that they took out more advertising from those same newspapers——

Mr. Coyle: Just one advertiser.

The Court: Counsel, I wish you would let me finish my statement. Go right ahead. I will just let you talk. Go on. [fol. 2481] Mr. Coyle: Well, if you look at Government's Exhibit 12, which is not the pretrial order, it is an answer to interrogatories that we submitted. It says the 20 leading chains of supermarkets referred to in paragraph 61 above competed in the following activities. And this is a quote:

> "(a) Competition in purchasing supplies and merchandising on better terms than their competitors, and to secure other purchasing advantages; competition to distribute products cheaper, and to secure advantages in the distribution of products in the retail outlets——"

That is an effect on suppliers, and it is in there in specific terms.

The Court: Well, counsel, I might make this observation: You would have had a very good brief in this case if you had not been so positive. I don't think positive statements are really in good taste in a brief where you just flatly say there isn't any doubt or question about a thing.

It seems to me that this is the problem I have to decide, and I have got a lot of doubts in this case. I haven't made up my mind yet. But all your introductory portions of your brief are just flat statements that there can't be any doubt. [fol. 2482] Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I can't read the cases and see that there is any doubt.

The Court: Well——

Mr. Coyle: I am sure—I didn't write this brief myself. This brief was prepared by the Department of Justice and——

The Court: I am sure it is. But it is written as if—I want to read you paragraph 5 at line——

Mr. Coyle: Which page is this, your Honor?

The Court: Page 1.

Is it your position that the court cannot consider the matters in this stipulation at this time?

Mr. Coyle: Which stipulation?

The Court: That has just been filed.

Mr. Coyle: Let me get the stipulation, your Honor. Paragraph 1 of the stipulation, are you referring to——

The Court: No, no, counsel. I am referring to page 1 of your statement.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: From your brief, which is at line 19. And I will read it:

"5. An attempt to adjudicate horizontal mergers on the basis of alleged changes in the vigor of competition [fol. 2483] occurring subsequent to the filing of suit would be inconsistent with the prospective nature of the Clayton Act and the practical administration of justice * * * "

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Why did you sign the stipulation?

Mr. Coyle: We reserve our right to object as to the materiality and relevancy of the stipulation. We don't think the facts in that stipulation were relevant, we think they are irrelevant and inconsequential facts.

The Court: In other words, you are taking the position, as a matter of law, that you have to determine as of the date of the filing of the complaint.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. And I would like to refer the court to——

The Court: I am not asking you to refer to anything. If you will just answer my questions for a few moments, I will give you ample time to argue, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: But I am asking questions and I want them answered.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir. I am sorry, your Honor.

The Court: So if you would only be patient and listen, I would like to ask several questions to clarify things in my mind. Then you can have several hours, if you wish, to argue.

[fol. 2484] Mr. Coyle: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: But give me, please, the courtesy of giving an answer.

Now, the first thing I want to know is: Do you have any authority that holds that you must determine it as of the date of the filing of the complaint?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. We cite the Dupont-General Motors case.

The Court: Other than that case do you have any?

Mr. Coyle: The Philadelphia Bank case, the Brown Shoe case, the court wouldn't look at changes in the vigor of competition subsequent to the merger.

The Court: In other words—may I ask you this—if it develops that after the complaint was filed, that the case was not tried within one year, that the vigor of the competition changed to such an extent that there could be no possibility whatsoever of substantially lessening competition, the court would have to disregard that, even though the injunction period would relate from the date the judgment was entered.

Mr. Coyle: The Supreme Court said in the Dupont-General Motors case, as of the time the suit—in every case you have to—now there may be something going to relief, that might be a different question. But the issue before the court is whether this acquisition was illegal as [fol. 2485] of the time it was made. Businessmen in the whole community would be in a horrible position if they could never tell whether a merger was legal or illegal unless they waited three or four or five or six years.

The Court: Well, I want to tell you this, it is no fault of mine that this case is so long getting to trial. Now this case came to me through at least three other judges.

Mr. Coyle: I appreciate that, your Honor.

The Court: And I suppose that it was because the calendars were crowded and we were short on judges and I certainly am not critizing any of the judges.

But when I come to assume that I should decide the case as of the time of filing there was a possibility of substantially lessening competition, but as of the date I begin to enter a decree, I find out that the whole situation is changed, do I still have to enter a decree?

Mr. Coyle: If the merger was illegal when it was consummated, the court should find it was illegal when it was consummated, yes, your Honor.

The Court: Then I should issue a decree restraining it?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what the decree should be, your Honor. You would have to look at the facts.

The Court: Suppose I find that as a result of that then [fol. 2486] it was illegal at the time, that it was substantially—but it is changed now and I will not issue a decree. Then what would be the situation?

Mr. Coyle: That is not the situation in this case, your Honor, because there is no probative evidence in this record showing——

The Court: Counsel, these are matters that I have to decide. There you go again with your positive assertions. With all due respect to you, I have to make these decisions myself.

Mr. Coyle: In my judgment there is no probative evidence, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that is a different proposition. Flat statements I don't think accomplish anything, because I frankly have not made up my mind in this case. And I would like to be persuaded by reasoning and not flat statements.

Well, I take it then your position is, first of all you must decide the case as of the date of the filing of the suit, is that correct?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, whether there is a reasonable probability as of the date the suit was filed.

The Court: All right. I would like to hear from the other side on this question of whether or not the issue—what is there in the case on this question of suppliers, other than what is in the pretrial order?

[fol. 2487] Mr. Vaughn: Absolutely nothing, your Honor, not one word of evidence, so far as we know.

In the brief recently filed by the government, they refer to an interrogatory that was answered having to do with suppliers when there was a possible answer before the pretrial order, before suppliers, according to our contention at least, were eliminated from the case entirely. They refer to an interrogatory——

The Court: Was there a discussion before the pretrial conference as to elimination of that?

Mr. Vaughn: There were discussions—we took the position that the relevant section of the country for suppliers, your Honor, was the United States as a whole, relying upon the decision in the Tampa Electric case which says that you have to determine the relevant section of the country by determining where the purchaser had to go to purchase supplies from the seller. In other words, where the seller is located. And that is the United States as a whole.

We took that position consistently in negotiations that lead to the pretrial conference order. The pretrial conference order contained provisions which are really the result of those negotiations. And we did not hear a word about suppliers in this case until the other day when we received this brief suggesting——

[fol. 2488] The Court: Well, that was prompted by my question, because in studying all of this record—and incidentally there is far more of this record than would appear on the surface when one comes to read over all of these documents and exhibits and check all of these things that are in this case—but in studying the case I more or less came to the conclusion that the issue as to suppliers was pretty much not directly involved in the case, except insofar as it was set up in the pretrial order, in that there were suppliers from out of the state, in that there was newspaper advertising purchased by these two concerns—those things, of course, are in the case.

Mr. Vaughn: I would like to say that the information with regard to shipment of supplies from outside of the State was inserted in the pretrial conference order for one reason, and that is to establish the jurisdiction of this court by showing interstate commerce. It had nothing to do with the effect of the merger on any suppliers.

The Court: That was my impression at the time, that this case had been boiled down to the issue of whether or not there was a probability of substantially lessening competition in the relevant trade area here by reason of this merger.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, your Honor. That is my understanding as well.

[fol. 2489] I might also point out that the line of commerce in this case is not newspaper advertising, and it is not railroad shipments. And moreover there is absolutely no proof that the merger has affected newspapers, railroaders, or any supplier of any product. Not a word of evidence was ever offered.

The Court: All right. Let me ask you on this other point. Now counsel has made the point here that the court must determine as of the date of the filing of the suit, the application of the claims. What is your position on that?

Mr. Vaughn: Our position is that the court can consider post acquisition evidence, and evidence after the filing of the suit. And we think we can demonstrate that.

The Court: What is your authority?

Mr. Vaughn: United States vs. Dupont.

The Court: That is the case he cites.

Mr. Vaughn: I realize that. That case had to do with a merger that occurred in 1929—1919, I beg your pardon. The action was filed in 1949.

The defendants in that case took the position that the court had to look at things as they were in 1919. The Supreme Court rejected that argument and said that it could look at things "as of the time of suit."

And it is clear from the court's record and the [fol. 2490] opinion that they considered evidence up to 1955. The suit was filed in 1949—there is a table on page 565 which shows there are percentages and elements up to 1955. And there are other indications in the opinion, which was rendered in 1956, that the court considered all evidence from the time of the acquisition in 1919 until the case was finally decided by the Supreme Court in 1955.

The Court: Well, the problem that strikes me is that, after all, you are acting as a court of equity, and let's assume for the purpose of discussion—and we are about to adjourn in a moment anyway and take up at 2:00 o'clock—but let's assume that plaintiffs came in and made a perfectly good equity case for granting of an injunction. But by the time the court was ready to issue the injunction, the decree, the facts had changed so completely that the court did not consider an injunction appropriate.

Now——

Mr. Vaughn: In that——

The Court: All right, go ahead.

Mr. Vaughn: I didn't mean to interrupt you. I thought perhaps you would want me to respond to that, your Honor.

The Court: No. I will in a moment. But I want to take the other phase of it.

The other phase is that, well, counsel says you [fol. 2491] must look to the filing of the complaint date to determine whether or not at that time there was substantial lessening of competition. I don't think you can pick one day in determining that issue. I think you have to, as the Supreme Court said—I don't agree that it should be, in the case of business, you have to be prospective, you are more or less clairvoyant as to the future. And furthermore I think it is a sad thing that judges who have so little experience in business have to be the clairvoyants. But if you have to be a clairvoyant, then it seems to me you have to look at what is going on in the future. And what is going on at the trial of this case has been in the future, and now it is in the past.

Mr. Vaughn: That's right.

The Court: And it seems to me that if the court were to say, well, all right, as of the date of the filing of the complaint there might be a possibility, substantial possibility of lessening competition, but after considering all that has happened since, there is no longer that possibility. So I grant you a judgment that it was illegal at the time but now I say I will not restrain.

That is what in effect I would like to hear some discussion on this question of the effect, if any, of these effects that have been stipulated to. And I would like also to hear from both sides, as I pointed out heretofore, [fol. 2492] one of the things that bothers me in this case is that, I think the government has disregarded it completely, I think that many men have left the chains to go in business in independent businesses. And in a relevant area where this is possible I wonder what that proves.

And I also have noted that the number of individual stores that have been opened are rather substantial.

Now, we don't have the facts as to how many stores have been closed by the chains, and I take it there must have been a considerable number. One only has to ride the streets of Los Angeles and see them disappear, to know that they have been disappearing. And I take it it is for modernization purposes, getting new locations, and various and sundry things. But that is not before the court that I can find. I have no facts on that.

So I am concerned now also with a comparison, while I am talking—you can take it up after lunch—the comparison between the Philadelphia Bank case. There in that case, as I remember it, there was a—and then I am finished, we will take a recess—after the merger the bank would have 38 per cent—36 per cent of the area's banking assets, 36 per cent of the deposits, 34 per cent of the net loans. And in that case the Philadelphia Bank and the second largest bank, these two combined, would have had [fol. 2493] 59 per cent of the total assets, 58 per cent of the deposits and 58 per cent of the net loans.

Now, the four largest banks would have had 78 per cent of the total assets. And I am wondering if, in our situation here how in the—well, as a general statement of authority, how there is a parallel between the Philadelphia Bank case and the case at bar.

We will adjourn until 2:00 o'clock and I will hear from you gentlemen. And as a matter of fact it may be necessary to continue over to tomorrow. I want to explore several things in the case.

Mr. Alsup: May we leave our materials here, your Honor?

The Court: Well, I have other counsel coming in on other matters. I think you had better sort of gather them up.

Mr. Alsup: Very good.

The Court: We may have a few moments on another matter to interrupt you. But just as a precaution I would say you had better put them in one stack, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: Very good, your Honor.

(Whereupon, at 12:05 p. m., court was in recess until 2:00 o'clock p. m. of the same day.)

[fol. 2494] Los Angeles, California, Monday, March 23, 1964, 2:00 P. M.

(Other court matters.)

The Court: All right, gentlemen, let's proceed with the Von's case.

The Clerk: The United States vs. Von's Grocery for further proceedings.

The Court: Now I will hear from the government. And you might start out with the preface, before you say anything, that I think that the pretrial order settles most of the matters in this case—in fact all but one, as far as I can see. And that is whether or not this merger would probably, under the Section 7 of the Clayton Act, would probably—I guess possibly is the word, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Or may, Your Honor.

The Court: What is the difference? All right. We will take probably or may—substantially lessen competition.

Now, I think the pretrial order, you have agreed as to the relevant area, as to the line of commerce and all of the things except as to that question. Do you agree or disagree, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: We agree as to the line of commerce and section of the country. We agree as to many other facts which go toward establishing that this merger may [fol. 2495] lessen competition, or tend to do so, your Honor.

The Court: You didn't agree on that.

Mr. Coyle: We did not agree on the ultimate, but we agree to many elements that go toward establishing unlawfulness under the statute.

The Court: What I am trying to do is resolve what issues we have to discuss. As I understand it, we only have one issue, and that is whether or not this merger would probably substantially diminish competition.

Mr. Coyle: I think the pretrial conference order states it in these terms, on page 13 of the pretrial conference order it states: What are the factual and legal tests which the government must meet in proving that the effect of this acquisition, or proposed acquisition may be to substantially lessen the competition in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

And then on paragraph 15 of the following page it says: What are the actual and legal tests which the government must meet to prove that the effect of this acquisition and/or proposed acquisition may be to tend to create a monopoly—I am not sure that "and/or proposed" goes in there.

The Court: That pretty well merges itself into the one question, does it substantially lessen competition.

Mr. Coyle: No, it is what is the tests the gov- [fol. 2496] ernment must meet.

The Court: Well, the test is a question of law, of course.

Mr. Coyle: That is the only issue that is unresolved, what is the test which the government must meet.

The Court: All right. I will hear from you. What is the test?

Mr. Coyle: Well, we state the test on page 1 of our memorandum:

> "* * * As a matter of law, the horizontal merger between two substantial competitive factors violates Section 7 where the line of commerce in the section of the country are affected substantially * * *"

The Court: You mean where it is affected, suppose it is affected to a point where it creates more competition?

Mr. Coyle: I say where the lines of commerce in the sections of the country affected are substantial—in other words, if you have a merger, a horizontal merger between two large organizations, competitive factors in the same line of commerce, the same section of the country, that violates amended Section 7, if that line of commerce in that section of the country is a substantial, economically significant line of commerce in that section of the country. [fol. 2497] The Court: Is that all?

Mr. Coyle: That is what we say. It is a matter of law, that is item 2 on our list here.

The Court: I read that. I was a little bit shocked to read it, frankly. You are saying in effect, that mergers, a fortiori, are illegal.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, we say horizontal mergers between two substantial, significant competitive factors is illegal if the line of commerce and section of the country affected by the merger is substantial.

The Court: Affected in what way, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: In which the merger occurs. In other words, the area in which this merger occurred was the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The line of commerce was groceries and related products. That is an economically significant, economically substantial part of the nation's economy.

The partners to the merger were two of the largest, strongest, most prominent grocery chains operating in that area. They merged. Instead of two operations you have one. That produces the effect which the statute requires to establish illegality.

The Court: That is rather drastic. Do you think the Supreme Court went that far?

Mr. Coyle: I think the Supreme Court—I think [fol. 2498] Congress went that far.

The Court: I don't see it. I don't think they went that far. You are saying there can be no mergers between two strong competitors.

Mr. Coyle: In an economically significant section of the country.

The Court: Well, let's resolve that now. The pretrial order, it seems to me, recognizes the fact that, at least for the purpose of discussion I will recognize it that the Metropolitan Area is legally a significant economic area.

Mr. Coyle: There is no question of that in my mind, your Honor.

The Court: I am glad you had it in your mind. At least I am getting the benefit of opinion rather than a flat statement.

But that is not the problem. You are saying that just merger alone, per se is illegal.

Mr. Coyle: That is the first point. The first point is that the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was economically significant and substantial.

The second point is that these two defendants were economically significant and substantial.

And we determine that by analyzing the market structure.

[fol. 2499] The Court: Well, let's assume for the purpose of your argument that they were both economically significant, they were both going concerns doing a substantial business, and were competing in the area.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, but——

The Court: Now, then, the mere merger alone you say is sufficient to violate the Section 7?

Mr. Coyle: To determine how substantial, how significant these firms are, you have to analyze them in terms of the relevant market structure. In other words, you have to take into consideration whether this is a market that was heading towards concentration. It was.

Whether it was a fragmented market that was headed toward concentration. It was a fragmented market heading towards concentration.

Whether there had been prior mergers in the area which had tended to increase the concentration. There were prior mergers in the area.

When you consider the importance of these firms in the context of this market structure, and in the context of this economically significant section of the country, that is the test of illegality under Section 7. And we have met it.

The Court: Well, if it is, we might as well—if that is the test, there can be no more mergers.

Mr. Coyle: Certainly there can be mergers if [fol. 2500] they are not mergers of substantially competitive factors in an economically significant section of the country. And if that section of the country is headed toward concentration. The Supreme Court says——

The Court: Of course "heading" is a word that bothers me considerably.

Mr. Coyle: Well, you have to look at the market prior to the merger. It was heading toward it prior to the merger.

The Court: Well, that is your statement. But whether the evidence supports it——

Mr. Coyle: Well, let's look at the evidence, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Let's hear what you contend prove that. Who is the burden on here, the government? Or is it on the defendant?

Mr. Coyle: The burden is on the government, your Honor. And we have had our burden, there is no doubt about that.

The Court: I see. Well, I am glad you are resolving these things for me.

Mr. Coyle: That is in the pretrial conference order, most of it, your Honor.

The Court: Counsel, it is just sort of hard for me to get used to counsel resolving all the points before I [fol. 2501] even——

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Now, the increase in concentration is this: In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 20 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 43.8 per cent.

In 1958 it was 56.9 per cent.

Now, that is a fact of record.

In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 16 leading grocers, grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, was 41.6 per cent.

In 1958 it was 53.4 per cent. That is an increase of concentration.

In 1948 the market share represented by the 12 leading grocery chains of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 38.8 per cent.

In 1958 it was 38.8 per cent.

In 1948 the market share represented by the 8 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 33.7 per cent.

In 1958 it was 40.9 per cent.

As a result of the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag the market share of the four largest concerns in the area, which was 25.9 per cent in 1948, increased to 28.6 per cent on the basis of 1958 figures.

[fol. 2502] Since 1940 there has been a decrease in the number of grocery stores in operation in the Los Angeles area.

The Court: What caused that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: They went out of business. I don't know, your Honor——

The Court: Well, the proof doesn't show, either.

Mr. Coyle: It certainly shows there were fewer stores in the area.

The Court: Well, suppose they burned down, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Well, there is absolutely no—that would certainly be an increase in concentration, when that happens at the same time that the leading chains in the area are increasing their market share, it certainly indicates that fewer firms are competing for a larger percentage of the business.

The Court: You are talking practically socialism. You are not talking law.

Mr. Coyle: I am talking——

The Court: I am talking about the legal effect. If you want to equalize everybody, that is one thing. But what I am talking about now is: Why did those stores disappear?

Mr. Coyle: Well, it is impossible to say that, they disappeared for a variety of reasons that are not rele-

[fol. 2503] vant or material. They went out of business.

The Court: Why wouldn't it be relevant?

Mr. Coyle: More of them went out of business than entered the market. That is all you can say about it. More went out than entered. And that is what the Supreme Court considered in the Brown Shoe and Philadelphia Bank. That is what the Supreme Court said. More went out than came in. The leading chains kept increasing their market shares with the result that——

The Court: How many more stores now does Ralphs have than they had five years ago, do you know?

Mr. Coyle: No, but the chains in the area, I have some figures on the chains.

The Court: How many more does Safeway have now than it had 20 years ago?

Mr. Coyle: Safeway has fewer stores. And it is the only chain that has decreased the number of stores.

The Court: How about Ralphs?

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure in the last 20, but in the last 10 years it has gone up.

The Court: Gone up?

Mr. Coyle: It hasn't gone up too much, it has held its own. There hasn't been too much change.

The Court: I don't believe there was any evidence as to Ralphs, as I remember it.

[fol. 2504] Mr. Coyle: I don't——

The Court: I thought there was some testimony, as I recollect, that one other company had decreased in the number of stores.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so.

The Court: One of the chains.

Mr. Coyle: There may be there was some testimony that Mayfair has sold off some stores. But they opened more new stores than they sold off, Mayfair and Thriftimart.

The Court: But, counsel, what you are saying to me is that I just take flat figures, and from those figures draw the inference that they are being put out of business.

Mr. Coyle: No, you look at the history of the market, how many firms were there so many years ago, how many have been added to the leading firms of so many years ago, how many do we have, and how big were these two defendants in terms of the relevant market? They were big, in terms of the relevant market.

The Court: Is size alone sufficient?

Mr. Coyle: No, size has to be considered in the framework of the given market structure.

The Court: Well, just for the purpose of discussion let's take the figures that you have set forth of the various stores—what page is that? I think it is in your more recent memorandum.

[fol. 2505] Mr. Coyle: It might be on page 4.

The Court: Yes. Here you have set forth—about what percentage do those stores represent?

Mr. Coyle: That is the 10 leading stores.

The Court: Less than 50 per cent, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: Oh, yes, about 40 per cent. Let me add it.

Mr. Vaughn: You have got Von's and Shopping Bag twice. You have got them added in here twice.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, I have them twice.

The Court: Yes, they are added twice, counsel. You have them first, total of Von's and Shopping Bag, 8.9, and then you have down below——

Mr. Coyle: We haven't added them, your Honor.

The Court: I see. Don't add them twice.

Mr. Coyle: I won't add them twice.

The Court: Is that 43.6?

Mr. Coyle: 42 I have got.

Mr. Vaughn: I get 43.3.

The Court: 43.6. I think that is correct.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So the markets that you are talking about have 43—practically 44 per cent of the relevant market.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

[fol. 2506] The Court: Whereas you have another 53 per cent represented by the mostly independent stores.

Mr. Coyle: I wouldn't say that, your Honor. If you look at all the other figures that are a little further on——

The Court: Well what do you call independent, counsel? Just one store?

Mr. Coyle: I would call it just one store, but if you look at the figures on page 20 you will see that in the year 1948 the 20 largest chains in the area had 43.8 per cent and the smaller chains and independents had 56.2 per cent.

The Court: What page is that?

The Court: Page 20.

The Court: You see, the thing that is bothering me, counsel, is, in the Brown Shoe case you had a double-barreled question involved there. You had both the vertical and horizontal problem there where a large shoe company was buying out the retail establishments, and was in a position to eliminate competition from suppliers. And it was a big manufacturer, one of the largest, which was in the position to absorb and take over the retail sales. So you had both the horizontal and the vertical situation that you don't have in this case.

Mr. Coyle: But, your Honor——

[fol. 2507] The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: But the Supreme Court said, both on the horizontal phase of the case and the vertical phase of the case, the burden of proof was on the government to prove. The horizontal phase of the case was really independent of the vertical phase of the case.

The Court: Well, I don't know that I understand it that way. But let's take it one step further.

Now in the Philadelphia Bank case, here was a situation where the two merging banks ended up with about—I think I read those figures this morning—they ended up with 59 per cent of the assets, 58 per cent of the deposits, and 58 per cent of the net loans.

Whereas in our instant case before the court, you end up with less than 9 per cent.

Mr. Coyle: There is no question but the percentages are different in this case than in the Philadelphia Bank case, and the Brown Shoe case, to get back to that case—the percentages of the four largest firms was smaller than the percentages to the four largest firms here, whether you take the manufacturing percentages or the retail percentages. When you get down to the largest vertical percent, the percentages were much larger in the Brown Shoe case, both vertically and horizontally than here. So there is really no standard percentage figures that the court [fol. 2508] can put its finger on.

The Court: Of course I am not sure that I understand some of the classic language in this opinion of the Supreme Court. It may be it is beyond my level, because some of the language is rather difficult for me to understand. I thought perhaps I did not have the intuitive understanding of these things to comprehend what is being said.

But I thought that it took more than just a—well, let's assume for the purpose of applying the Brown Shoe case that each one of these companies had 1 per cent of the business in the area. Would that be sufficient, under your contention, to bring it within the purview of Section 7?

Mr. Coyle: You are referring to this——

The Court: This case before us.

Mr. Coyle: This particular market structure.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: Certainly 1 per cent of this market structure is not nearly as substantial as 4 per cent, 4½ per cent.

The Court: Well, I am trying to mark off——

Mr. Coyle: I don't know where the Supreme Court is going to draw the line. But I am convinced myself that the Supreme Court, when it does draw the line as to what it takes to make a firm substantial, what it takes to make a [fol. 2509] market area substantial, is going to draw the line at a position where this market area, the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and firms of this size and this significance in this particular structure with this trend toward increased concentration, the Supreme Court is going to draw the line and hold that these firms are above the minimum and this market area is above the minimum and the concentration pattern in this market area is above the minimum and this merger is illegal.

The Court: Well, it will come to a point then to where the courts are going to be the ones to decide how much business is what in the grocery business, I guess. Is that what it is going to be?

Mr. Coyle: Well, your Honor——

The Court: I thought there had to be some rule which a judge had to follow——

Mr. Coyle: This is a rule, this is a rule that substantial competitive factors in an economically significant market area, that is the clearest rule I think that the court can draw.

The only other alternative is to go back to the Sherman Act——

The Court: No, we are not going back to the Sherman Act. What I am trying to find out is: What are you using to determine what is substantially lessening compe- [fol. 2510] tition? I can't get it from the Supreme Court decision and I haven't gotten it from you. Where is the substantial lessening of competition. Put your finger on it. Let's put our hands right on that and not talk in these generalities that you get in most of these statements.

I have read the Brown Shoe case a dozen times and I doubt if I understand it any more if I read it a dozen more times.

And as a matter of fact I read a couple of Law Journal articles by very erudite students and practitioners who are having the same difficulty that I am having.

One of them calls this opinion a schizoid opinion, you remember? In the Law Journal article written before the American Bar Association.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, he is one of the big practitioners on the other side, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I don't know——

Mr. Coyle: They don't like this Brown Shoe. I think it is a wonderful opinion but defense counsel don't like it. It is one of the landmark opinions——

The Court: Well, I am not concerned with the like or dislike. What I am trying to do is find out what the law is. I haven't found out yet.

I don't think the Supreme Court would like it being called a schizoid opinion, but I am merely quoting what I [fol. 2511] read in this—I believe it was in the Federal Bar Journal.

Did you read that article, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I read one in the Federal Bar Journal. I think that schizoid language came from another article.

The Court: That came from an appearance before a committee of the American Bar.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, that's right. I think that was Milton Hand, or somebody like that.

The Court: Well, put your hand, touch for me, show me what the—I am not saying it doesn't exist—but what is the substantial lessening of competition? Now the elimination of the competition between the two is not the test in this case. That you agree, don't you?

Mr. Coyle: Certainly the elimination of competition between the two was the test prior to the amendment. The amendment says that if it may substantially lessen competition—that doesn't mean you don't look at the fact that you do have the competitive factors in the area prior to the merger and the competition between them and the competition between them and everybody else in the area has been lessened. You look at that. Sure you look at that.

The Court: Well, the Congress in the report before Congress specifically point out that they thought the problem was that if they left that Section 7, that there could be no merger. So they were eliminating that test, is [fol. 2512] that correct?

Mr. Coyle: They wanted to make sure that the Act wasn't applied to small firms——

The Court: Did they say small firms?

Mr. Coyle: Small firms in little towns, yes, sir, your Honor.

The Court: I didn't find that in the hearing proceedings. Maybe I missed it. Let me see if I don't have it here.

Mr. Coyle: I have it here, your Honor.

The Court: I thought it said between acquiring and acquired companies. I didn't remember that language about small.

Mr. Coyle: It says in the Senate Report, page 4, your Honor.

The Court: That is Senate Report 1775, is that the one?

Mr. Coyle: 1777, yes—no, I am sorry. You are right, 1775.

The Court: All right. Read it, would you please, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Well, starting with paragraph 2, I guess:

> "While on the one hand it was desired that the test be [fol. 2513] more inclusive and stricter than that of the Sherman Act, and on the other hand it was not desired that the bill go to the extreme prohibiting all acquisition between competing companies."

However, in the course of the hearings on this bill in the House Judiciary Committee, the wording was objected to on the grounds that it might be so construed as to prevent all acquisitions between competitors. Accordingly, subsequent versions of the bill, including the present HR 2734, deleted any reference to the effect on competition between the acquired and acquiring firms.

The use of this word—the word "community," that is down in the second paragraph to the last:

> "The use of this word raised a strong controversy centering around the possibility that the Act so worded might go so far as to prevent any local enterprise in a small town from buying up another local enterprise in the same town. As a consequence the word 'community' was dropped in the subsequent version of the bill. * * *"

The Court: Well, I don't quite think that it says just what you say it says.

Mr. Coyle: Well——

The Court: In other words, it is saying, as it finally [fol. 2514] passed, the committee is saying, "Well, what we are doing here is to drop the Section 7 test, which was a test as between acquiring and acquired firms."

Mr. Coyle: I think we should also read into it the fact that between the acquiring and acquired firms, and also the word "community." These two things were considered at the same time. They dropped the word "community" from the statute at the same time.

The Court: Well, so in an area such as we are talking about, in a relevant area such as the Metropolitan Area here, the test does not relate between the acquired and the acquiring. It relates to the substantial effect on competition generally.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. But then it results from the fact that there was a concern that the Act might have applied to a merger between the two local firms in small communities, to make sure that——

The Court: Well, where does it say "small community and local firms"?

Mr. Coyle: That is just what I am saying.

The Court: That isn't what the report says. That is what the complaint was about. May I see that just a moment?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. Maybe I don't understand your question, your Honor.

[fol. 2515] The Court: Maybe I am not putting it clearly. Let me see if I can clarify it.

Mr. Coyle: The paragraph there, your Honor.

(The document was handed to the court.)

Mr. Coyle: I am referring to the second paragraph there, your Honor.

The Court: Let's start over again. Maybe we can work this out and then we will take a recess for a few moments.

> "These bills simply extended the present wording of the Clayton Act to cover acquisition of assets. The test of competition between the acquiring and the acquired firms was left in the bill and made applicable to assets as well as to stock. However, in the course of hearings on this bill in the House Judiciary Committee this wording was objected to on the grounds that it might be construed as to prevent all acquisitions between competitors."

Now, that was the objection, "all acquisitions," the word "all" meaning any kind of acquisition.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

> The Court: "Accordingly, subsequent versions of the bill, including the present H.R. 2734, deleted any [fol. 2516] reference to the effect on competition between the acquiring and acquired firms * * *"

So it deleted it.

Now, then, you point another step which had the same general effect, but which was also to be found in the legislative history of the present bill—what am I reading here? This is still from the Senate Report—"* * * as the bill originally stood, it was to be violated if, among other things, competition was substantially lessened * * * in any community * * *"

Well, "community" can be a metropolitan area, can't it?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think it can in the terms of that bill, your Honor.

The Court: Why doesn't it say "of the country" then?

Mr. Coyle: To make it more specific.

The Court: Then it says:

> "* * * The use of this word raised a storm of controversy centering around the possibility that the Act so worded might go so far as to prevent any local enterprise in a small town from buying up a local enterprise in the same town. As a consequence the word 'community' was dropped from the subsequent versions of the bill. * * *"

So when they dropped the word "community," what [fol. 2517] did they do?

Mr. Coyle: Sir, they wanted to make it clear that the amended Act did not apply to every merger between two competitors in a small town or community.

The Court: Well, you are leveling it to the small towns.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. Or small competitors in a small town.

The Court: What is a small town? Now, here we are in the realm of what is a small town. A businessman has got to figure out before he mergers whether he is in a small or a big town. This is pretty difficult for practical people. It may not be for you but for practical businessmen, how are they going to decide what is big and what is a small town?

Mr. Coyle: I know the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is big. I don't know where the Supreme Court is going to draw the line as it comes down the scale, but I am certain it is going to draw it below the Los Angeles Metropolitan area.

The Court: Well, the way I read the bill is that they have taken out the objections, taken out the Section 7 test that originally existed, that was the competition between the acquired and acquiring.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

[fol. 2518] The Court: And I think, as a matter of law, you can consider that, in connection with the general situation in the test.

Mr. Coyle: That is exactaly what I feel, too, your Honor. I didn't mean to say that it was the test. Obviously it is not the test now. But it is one of the considerations.

The Court: Well, let's take about a 15-minute recess. And I want you to put your finger on for me—you know, we people who are practical sometimes have great difficulty in understanding the high thinking. And I want you to put your hand, put to me wherein competition has been substantially lessened.

I want to think whether or not it might be argued that it has been increased. I would like to hear from you why can't it be said that the competition in the area has been materially increased during the very period we are talking about, that the competitive factors are greater today than they were 15 years ago, were greater than at the time maybe when the trial took place.

I would like to hear from you, go into those matters and clear them up for me. I need some help.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, before we adjourn, there are two things I think during recess that we would like to discuss.

[fol. 2519] The Court: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Coyle: The first thing is that I probably misspoke when I said that the only case dealing with this post-complaint, or post-trial evidence was the Dupont-General Motors case, because very recently, on March 2nd of 1964, in the Lexington Bank case, the Supreme Court dismissed a motion without opinion—dismissed a motion to remand for the purpose of bringing the record up to date to show changes in competitive conditions. This is reported in 32 Law Week, 3304.

The Court: 32 Law Week——

Mr. Coyle: 3304.

The Court: 3304.

Mr. Coyle: This was a Sherman Act case, but it does go into this same question of remanded——

The Court: This is not a remand here.

Mr. Coyle: No.

The Court: I haven't decided the case yet.

Mr. Coyle: That's right. The Supreme Court hasn't decided the case, either.

Mr. Alsup: Well, Mr. Coyle, I think you ought to point out in the Lexington Bank case the Supreme Court did not give a reason for refusing to grant——

Mr. Coyle: I said it was without reason. I just wanted to mention that.

[fol. 2520] The second point I want to mention is that at paragraph 5 of the pretrial stipulation on page 3 it reads as follows:

> "In a stipulation agreed to by the parties and approved by the court on February 3, 1961, it was provided that trial shall be confined to the issues of whether the merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act as amended. In the event the court determines that Section 7 has been violated, hearings will thereafter be held as to appropriate relief."

The Court: Well, that is the same issue right now. If I decide it does, then we will have hearings as to the relief.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor. But I think it relates to this business of post-trial evidence.

The Court: The problem here is that people who have no experience, judges who have no experience in this field at all just seem to be writing inclusive opinions on matters that are not so easily ascertained. It gives me great pause. What the Supreme Court does is none of my affair. All I do here is do the best of my ability and then they can do as they think. But while I am here I am going to do what, in my best judgment, what I think the law is, not what it should be.

[fol. 2521] Mr. Coyle: That's right. And all I can do is present cases which I think——

The Court: Of course, of course.

So we will take a recess until 3:30.

Here I return to your your Senate Report.

(A short recess.)

The Court: All right, counsel. Proceed.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, before I begin, defense counsel has brought one thing up that when I referred to this Lexington Bank case—I don't believe I did, but I didn't want to infer that that was for the purpose of bringing the record up to date to show post-complaint evidence, but it was for the purpose of showing post-trial evidence, but it was a remand to show post-trial evidence and the Supreme Court denied it without right of motion. Mr. Alsup was just mentioning that before recess.

The Court: Are you objecting to the use of the stipulation that you filed?

Mr. Coyle: Insofar as it shows post-complaint and post-trial evidence, I think it is clearly irrelevant, yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I will solve that right now. I will put you back on trial basis promptly, right now. We won't get into any of these technicalities, counsel. I have been around here too long for that.

[fol. 2522] I have vacated submission and you will now consider yourself in a continuation of trial.

Mr. Coyle: We closed our case, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I am taking the liberty of re-opening the case for both sides at this time. If you are going to contend now—I don't know why you ever filed this stipulation.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we filed our brief before we filed the stipulation. And we said clearly that the merger was to be judged as of the date of the complaint.

The Court: Are you taking the position now that the court should not consider the stipulation, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: We take the position the court should not consider post-complaint evidence. If there is any post-complaint evidence in the stipulation, we think it is irrelevant, yes, your Honor. The merger is to be judged as of the date of the complaint.

The Court: Well, how far back can I go from the date of the complaint?

Mr. Coyle: How far back can you bo?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know that there is any hard and fast rule on how far back you go.

The Court: Well, are we just to consider the evidence of what was occurring on that date, the date of [fol. 2523] the filing of the complaint?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. That is what we——

The Court: This is sort of an afterthought, isn't it, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, I don't think it is.

Mr. Alsup: May I respond, your Honor?

The Court: Yes, certainly. I would like to hear from you.

Mr. Coyle: We take the position that the very first brief we filed on this business of trying to object to the vigor of competition as of a given date—we took that in our brief before trial.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, all of our affidavits dealt with post-complaint matters.

The Court: That is what I thought.

Mr. Alsup: They went in without objection. If your Honor will permit me, I would like to hand you the opinion of Brown Shoe where the Supreme Court made it clear in Brown Shoe that post-complaint evidence is clearly irrelevant. And the Supreme Court considered——

The Court: What is the page? I have the decision here.

Mr. Alsup: I have the Law Edition, your Honor.

The Court: Well, let's see, I have a Law Edition, too, but I didn't bring it this time.

[fol. 2524] Mr. Coyle: I think you are referring to the section entitled Kinney—is that the one?

Mr. Alsup: That is the one that has got the discussion of jurisdiction, at the end of Section 1.

The Court: Well, let's see. What is the Law Edition citation? I will send and get my Law Edition.

Mr. Coyle: I have a copy.

Mr. Alsup: Page 523—I can hand this up to your Honor.

The Court: All right. Pass it up to me, please.
Mr. Alsup: The portions interlined.

(The document was handed to the court.)

Mr. Vaughn: It is page 303 and 304 of U.S.
The Court: Starting with—where do I start counsel?
Mr. Coyle: At the bottom of page 303, your Honor.
Mr. Alsup: Well, where I have underlined it in red, your Honor, the Supreme Court pointed out that the time of the merger Brown Shoe had not been a supplier of Kinney. At the time of the trial it had become a supplier of Kinney. Obviously post-trial data was received, post-complaint data.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, there is no question—I tried that Brown Shoe case—there is no question that [fol. 2525] post-trial evidence was submitted in trial. And this is the summary of the District Court's opinion made by the Supreme Court.

But the Supreme Court did not rely on this post-complaint evidence. When the Supreme Court got over to these subsequent pages where it set out the basis for granting the violation, it did rely on this post-complaint evidence.

The Court: It didn't consider it?
Mr. Coyle: It did not state it in its opinion as the evidence it considered.
The Court: What was the date of the—what was the date of the suit in this Brown case?
Mr. Coyle: 1955, filed in 1955, tried in 1958.
The Court: This says:

> "• • • At the time of the merger Kinney bought no shoes from Brown. However, in line with Brown's conceded reasons for acquiring Kinney, Brown had been, by 1957, become the largest outside supplier of Kinney shoes, supplying 7.9 of all Kinney's needs. • • •"

Mr. Coyle: Yes, that is true. That is in the portion of the opinion where the Supreme Court summarizes the District Court's opinion.

But you go over and then the Supreme Court dis- [fol. 2526] cusses jurisdiction and it discusses legislative history. Then it gets way over to the point 4, on page 323, and it discusses the vertical aspects of the merger. Then it gets over to page, over two pages, and there it discusses, that is where it gives the reasons for vertical aspects and then it gives the reasons for finding the vertical effects of the merger violated Section 7.

Then it gets over to point 5, on page 334, and it discusses the horizontal reasons for the violation of the Act by the merger.

But this paragraph that counsel refers to is only the Supreme Court's summary of the District Court's opinion.

The Court: You say the Supreme Court didn't consider this matter at all?

Mr. Coyle: I say the Supreme Court didn't list this matter as one of the bases for its decision.

The Court: Well, I thought the Supreme Court discussed at some length just what happened after the acquisition.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so, your Honor. I think this is the only reference in the whole opinion to post-complaint evidence, or post-complaint activity. And the rest of the case where the Supreme Court sets up its rationale of test, it does not discuss this post complaint aspect.

[fol. 2527] The Court: Well, I can't understand, to save my soul, how a court can close its eyes to everything after the day the trial begins. The Supreme Court has expressed itself, saying that this is a prospective thing, it you look in the future it is probable that competition will be substantially lessened.

And the Supreme Court keeps saying it is a prediction, pretty much. Now, if you are going to predict something and, you have got facts in front of you, can't you use those facts in connection with the prediction?

Mr. Coyle: No. The finding that the court has to make is whether or not there was a probability of lessening of competition when the merger took place.

Now, if the court gets into the position where it is going to say, four years have gone by and we don't see any lessening of competition, that is an artifficial test because 10 years from the time the acquisition took place you might infer it would occur.

For instance, in the Dupont-General Motors case the acquisition occurred 40 years prior to the time. The action was still prospective when the suit was filed. And the Supreme Court said it was still prospective. It looks now as if there may be a lessening of competition——

The Court: Looks now?

[fol. 2528] Mr. Coyle: As of the time the suit was filed, yes, even though the acquisition took place 40 years in advance.

The Court: Didn't they look at the time of the decision?

Mr. Coyle: No, at the time——

The Court: They didn't consider that at all?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know. No, your Honor. The language is clear—at the time of the suit there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in restraint. And then they say where it appears——

The Court: Well, this suit is in progress right now.

Mr. Coyle: At the time of suit means at the time the complaint was filed, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: That is their contention.

The Court: That is your contention.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, otherwise we would be on quicksand. We would have closed our discovery in 1961, we were ready to go to trial in August of 1961 some time. We can judge it as of that time, we can judge it as of the date the complaint was filed. Are we going to reopen the record, bring in something else to bring it up to date——

The Court: We might very well do that, counsel. That is what we are doing to some extent.

Mr. Coyle: Are we going to do it continually, [fol. 2529] is that——

The Court: We will decide that when the time comes.

Mr. Coyle: It certainly is——

The Court: It can't be any more ethereal than some of the things that you are advancing, counsel. In fact, not near so ethereal as some of them.

You are telling me now that as of the date of the filing of the case I have got to decide as of that very day. I can't look prospectively at all.

Yet the Supreme Court says that they are looking to the future to determine what the likelihood will be.

Mr. Coyle: From the specific transaction. The likelihood is that a merger between two substantial factors in a significant section of the country, when it tends toward concentration, will decrease competition. But that is the likelihood. That is all the court is called upon to determine. And that is the finding that this case should turn on, your Honor.

The Court: I see. Well, it may be too schoolmasterish for me, I don't know. Maybe it is too much for me, I don't comprehend, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: The Supreme Court opinions in the Brown Shoe and the Philadelphia cases, your Honor, make it so obvious—— [fol. 2530] The Court: Well, I am sure it must be. It is just unfortunate that I don't have the ability to see it so clearly, counsel.

I will hear from the other side.

Your assistants are pointing out to me the specific lessening of competition has not been what I had hoped for.

Mr. Coyle: I have a few things that I can point out to you, if you want, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. I came in this morning with my mind wholly undecided. I am afraid, if anything, you are convincing me the other way.

Mr. Coyle: The pretrial conference order established that this is a horizontal merger, that the defendants are competitive factors in the same line of commerce in the same section of the country. Undisputed facts establish that retail distribution of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area has resulted in lessening of a substantial market.

The market structure analysis presented by the government establishes that this merger took place in a fragmented industry with a pronounced trend toward increased concentration. And the history of prior acquisitions and consolidations and mergers plays a significant role in this increased concentration——

[fol. 2531] The Court: That is just the language of the Supreme Court you are reading, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: No, this is what happened in this——

The Court: Well that is what I am supposed to determine.

Mr. Coyle: This merger united under one control and management two of the largest and most important separate entities in the market, and it ended the independent existence of an expanding chain of 38 supermarkets with annual sales in excess of $84,000,000.00. It increased concentration and resulted in a single corporation controlling 8.9 per cent of all retail grocery distribution in the economically significant Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

This establishes a violation of the Act, sir.

The Court: Well, I will have to decide whether it does or does not.

Mr. Coyle: We think it does, under the Brown Shoe and Philadelphia Bank cases.

The Court: I am sure that you think so. But again I say that flat statements are not the best approach.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I would like to again point out that in the Dupont case the complaint was filed in 1949. There is reflected in the Supreme Court record evidence relating to the year 1955.

There is no question that in the Dupont case, [fol. 2532] over the defendants' objections—the court did consider evidence after the filing of the case.

That evidence in this case leaves no question that there has not been a lessening in competition in the four years since the merger.

The Court: Before you get to that, counsel, I am disposed to go along, but I can't believe that I am to shut off all evidence.

The case is still pending before me. I have not made a decision. I took this case under advisement and I have studied the record. I have studied it enough to decide that there were many things that the record did not reveal to me that I felt were important in determining what was going on in this area, effective as of the date of filing and thereafter and prior.

So I called you gentlemen together to ask you if you could supply the court, by some form of stipulation, these facts. And I therefore—you remember—vacated the order of submission. When you vacate an order of submission, the case is still pending before this court.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: For such further proceedings as I think are appropriate to try to reach justice. And that is the status we are in today.

Now, I hadn't considered that I was precluded [fol. 2533] from viewing these factors. If so, then I couldn't view anything as of the day after—what was the exact date of the filing of this complaint, Mr. Clerk?

Mr. Alsup: March 25, 1960, your Honor.

The Court: March 25, 1960.

Mr. Alsup: We are two days from our anniversary.

The Court: Well, I take it that if I am to carry the thinking of the government to the extreme, or reduce it to its lowest common denominator, or its absurdity, I can't look at anything after March 25, 1960, just put blinkers on.

Mr. Vaughn: I was going to say the government's blindfold approach would have you speculate and blindfold yourself to the actual facts which have occurred in the last four years, which I am sure would be of assistance to anyone in determining whether or not this merger is likely——

The Court: This is an equity action, is it not?

Mr. Vaughn: It is.

The Court: And it is asking for an injunction. And I though a court of equity had a broad discretion in determining whether or not it should use its arm of equity in restraining, or doing whatever is necessary to carry out the law to obtain justice in the case.

Now, the government seems to have come in with the proposition that I must not look to anything after March 25, 1960.

[fol. 2534] Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor——

The Court: Yet I am supposed to determine whether or not it was substantially lessened in the future.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, sir, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think the parties agree that this is a court of equity, but the parties have stipulated and agreed that the only issue to be tried right now was whether this merger violated the law.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree to that.

Mr. Coyle: That is paragraph 5, page 3.

The Court: Well, what other proposition is before the court then? You are asking for an injunction, aren't you?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. We will consider relief after the—after we establish illegality.

The Court: You mean to say I have got to close off consideration that I am sitting as a court of equity?

Mr. Coyle: We have stipulated that the first issue to be litigated is whether this is an illegal merger as of the date it took place. That is what the stipulation is, your Honor.

The Court: I see. In other words, you preclude me from giving any equity consideration to the case at this time.

Mr. Coyle: The stipulation says that the trial [fol. 2535] shall be confined to the issue of whether the merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act as amended. In the event the court determines that Section 7 has been violated, hearings will thereafter be held as to the appropriate relief.

The Court: Well, you may stipulate to that and I may decide in a different fashion, counsel. I may take a different approach.

Mr. Coyle: I am just pointing out that is what our pretrial order says.

The Court: Well, I considered this—I thought I was sitting as a court in equity, since you are asking for an injunction, that is what it amounts to.

Mr. Coyle: It is a special type of court of equity——

The Court: All right, whatever it is.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor.

The Court: Whatever it is. I am asking now—I am apparently, according to the government's view, compelled to view this case only as it existed on March 25, 1960. Nothing thereafter.

So we put in all this evidence—I would like to know, counsel, can you tell me, of all the affidavits that were filed, how much in general related to after 1960?

Mr. Vaughn: The affidavits we prepared tried to go into the whole picture from before the merger right up [fol. 2536] to the present time. We had affidavits of people who had acquired stores in October of 1962, we have affidavits of people right up to the present date.

The Court: Right up to the trial date.

Mr. Vaughn: And there was never an objection. Indeed, your Honor, I know of no Section 7 case in which the government has taken this position before.

The Court: Well, was there any objection at any time t[illegible] use of this testimony, bringing it up to the actual beginning of the trial?

Mr. Vaughn: None whatsoever in this case, or in any any other case that I know of, until the other day when this brief was filed.

The Court: I would like to hear. When did you first object, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we made this point in our pretrial brief prior to the beginning of trial. We objected to the procedure of trying to evaluate changes in the vigor of competition between the time of the filing of the complaint and the date of trial. We objected——

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, the government——

Mr. Coyle: We didn't jump and say we object on——

The Court: Well I should have thought that you would have called it to my attention.

[fol. 2537] Mr. Coyle: We called it to your attention in the brief, your Honor.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE DEFENDANTS

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, the government itself offered into evidence, and it was received, statistics showing the number of stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1961, in 1962, and in 1963—all after the merger.

The Court: Well, I don't remember hearing a single objection during the trial as to any of these affidavits.

Mr. Vaughn: There was none.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, whether there were objections or not, it is a matter of whether this is relevant and material and that is up——

The Court: Counsel, didn't you put in affidavits as to matters after March 25, 1960?

Mr. Coyle: We didn't put in very many affidavits. We put in some statements of industry witnesses. I don't think that they testified to anything that happened after 1960, 1961—1960.

We did bring up the Board of Equalization figures, yes, your Honor. That was the only thing we did.

Mr. Vaughn: They made reference in these affidavits to mergers which occurred after the Von's Shopping Bag merger. They indicated——

The Court: I distinctly recollect there was a [fol. 2538] mass of testimony—or rather a mass of evidence relating to transactions that occurred after the filing date of March 25, 1960. The record is replete, from both sides of the case.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. And the government, as far as these opinions show, did not raise any objection to the post-acquisition in the Panola case, in the Continental Can case, in the Alcoa case—which was filed three years after the acquisition, or in the Lever Bros. case tried by Mr. Coyle six years after the acquisition.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I posed my objection every time they mentioned post-filing——

The Court: Counsel, let him finish. He didn't interrupt you at any time. Let him finish.

Mr. Coyle: I am sorry, your Honor.

The Court: I will give you every opportunity to be heard again.

Mr. Vaughn: And it seems to me perfectly obvious that the government is taking this unique position because it knows that the actual facts with regard to the effect of his merger in the last four years are dead against them, that the evidence without contradiction shows that there has been an increase in competition, if anything.

And it likewise shows——

The Court: I would like to have you point out to me, counsel, where the increase has occurred. I have [fol. 2539] been trying to get the both of you now, and I want to get down to specifics. We have been talking in terms of generalities and general principles.

Now tell me, specify if you can, wherein the competition has increased.

Mr. Vaughn: I will address myself to that, your Honor.

First of all, in 1960 there were no discount houses in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area selling groceries. As of the trial there were 37.

I don't know if we still have a stipulation as to why they have opened up since that time or not——

The Court: I think there was some argument about that. But at any rate you have a stipulation that the discount houses are now in existence and have opened since that date.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. And these are discount houses, by the way, which the government's own witness, Dr. Ward J. Jenssen said were going to run the conventional supermarket out of business, they were all going to be eliminated by 1970.

The Court: That may well be.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. But it certainly is a new and important form of competition, which has increased competition.

[fol. 2540] Since 1960, three of the largest national concerns in the country, theretofore not doing any business in Los Angeles, have entered this market. They are the Kroeger Company, Acme and Food Fair.

Since 1960 we have seen the failure of three local chains and the dispersement of many of their stores to independents and smaller concerns.

In the year 1960 alone the government's evidence showed there were 127 newcomers to the grocery business in Los Angeles.

Many concerns have increased their number of stores, some of them small concerns. The Michael Markets, headed by a man named Joe Goodnight, from whom we have an affidavit, opened its first store after 1960. And as of the time of the trial it had seven stores in Orange County.

There has been growth in a number of other concerns, as all of our affidavits show.

And we also have the testimony of every single witness who was asked the question, every single one, whether he was a plaintiff's witness or defense witness, that competition has increased since 1960.

The Court: Well, of course, I take that statement the same as I take the government's witnesses' statements. That is nothing more than a conclusion, generally speaking. It is a pure speculative answer, and it is not [fol. 2541] any different from any expert opinion. And the court can either regard it or disregard it.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: As the trier of the facts. Because for a groceryman to say just, period, "There is no competition any more," or "There is competition," is a rather broad statement. If they will specify it, then their testimony might have a little more substantiality.

Mr. Vaughn: Of course these men, your Honor, were witnesses called by the government, for the most part, who were asked whether competition had increased. These were people who deal with it every day. And everyone of them said, "Yes, competition has increased, it is rougher and tougher every day." Competition has increased, they said.

The Court: Well, maybe that is not the kind of competition—it may well be that I may be discerning a theme or a trend throughout all this thinking that has come down from the Supreme Court that there is a type of competition that was meant to keep surviving. It was not a competition that might cause a bad businessman to go out of business, for example.

I can't believe that the Congress intended to protest a businessman who was a poor businessman, who went broke because he was lazy, didn't open up his store, or he [fol. 2542] didn't keep his lights on, or his shelves clean.

There are so many practical things to consider in these things. And the problem I am up against here is wherein does the evidence show the probability of a substantial lessening of competition, when all these affidavits, both government and defense affidavits, show that new stores are opening all the time, and they are not necessarily chain stores.

Mr. Vaughn: Quite right, your Honor. I don't think there is a word of evidence in the record to reflect that in these four years there has been any, actually been any lessening of competition, not a word.

On the contrary, we have seen the success stories of small concerns——

The Court: I am familiar, you don't have to review that, counsel, with these men. I remember the testimony. One of the witnesses who testified, I believe he was a chain store operator and they were having trouble keeping good managers because they were going out and opening stores on their own. Am I correct on that?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. I would like to point out that the following defendant's witnesses all had chain stores and went out and opened their own stores:

Reynold Elkin, former Von's employee.

[fol. 2543] Joe Goodnight, former Alpha Beta for many years, whom I have referred to previously; Ted Wood, formerly with Alpha Beta who went out and formed the Pantry markets.

Al Goldstein, formerly with Food Giant, who went out and opened up a store, took over an old Food Giant Store right across from a brand new Von's Store and is doing very well, better than Food Giant did before the Von's Store.

Joe Hughes, former Thriftimart employee, now operates Hughes Markets.

Jose Goldberg of King Cole Markets who took over one of them and is now competing with Food Giant and Safeway, within 100 yards of his store, and he is competing with them.

John Irwin, formerly at Mayfair, the president of the local trade association, who has opened up a store in Long Beach.

Of the plaintiff's witnesses, one of them, Stater Bros., who was formerly an employee of Thriftimart.

One of them Mr. Jacobs, was formerly at Market Basket, a Market Basket employee.

Mr. Irwin was a Crawford's employee.

Mr. Fleishman was a Shopper's employee.

Mr. Carpenter was a Highlands' employee.

In addition to those specific individuals, the affidavit——

[fol. 2544] The Court: Before you pass to that, counsel, most of these openings have been over a period of the last four or five or six years, haven't they? Am I incorrect about that?

Mr. Vaughn: There are many who have, yes, your Honor.

The Court: I say the most of them.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, I would say so. But the ones——

The Court: The reason I asked the question is to relate back to prior to the filing date on approximately how many, what percentage of those were opening those stores. And then bring it up past the filing date of the complaint and see how many, if that continuation was in effect. Do you follow me?

Mr. Vaughn: I think I can probably answer your question if you would like me to go over this list again.

The Court: If you would, I would like to know.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Elkin, as I remember, opened a store in 1958.

Mr. Goodnight opened the first of his Michaels Markets in 1960, after the merger.

Mr. Wood opened the first of his markets right after Mr.—I think it was 1955, '54 or '55.

Mr. Goldstein opened his first market in October 1962. [fol. 2545] Mr. Hughes opened his first market in about 1955, or '52.

Mr. Goldberg opened his first market in 1962, although he had been a chain executive with King Cole before that time.

Mr. Irwin opened his market in 1962.

As to the defendants' witnesses, Mr. Jenkins recently opened up a market. He has had a number of them, if I recall correctly.

Mr. Irwin—it was after 1950, I think it was 1954.

The Court: Well, what I was getting at, counsel, was to find out if there had been any sudden change in this trend. In other words, something that existed prior to the date of the complaint, and whether or not it was conuing up to the time of the filing and on after.

Mr. Vaughn: I see nothing in the record to indicate that. And, your Honor, I really believe that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has proved to be an insignificant event in the history of grocery retailing in Los Angeles. I do not know of one discernible change in competition, competitors, or anything else that is attributable to that merger. And I don't believe that the record shows that there is a single thing. It is like dropping a pebble into a roaring stream. It has had no effect whatsoever on [fol. 2546] competition.

The Court: Well, counsel, the question: What effect?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know whether the record shows any. There certainly has been no lessening of competition.

The Court: Well, the——

Mr. Alsup: Could I add to that, your Honor—I am sorry to interrupt.

The Court: That is all right. What I was about to say, I have before me here—I suppose you gentlemen have seen it—this is the Grocers' Journal. I wonder if I might pass it down to you and ask you if you gentlemen have seen that. Southern California Grocers' Journal, February 27, 1964.

And I am not going on the number of stores as much as I am the names, trying to remember the names from the record.

This gives the national chains and the regional chains. I don't think we got into too much testimony as to the regional chains.

Then there is something they call the county chains. You might take a look at that. As I remember it, the evidence didn't break it down as it is broken down in that Journal.

Mr. Alsup: Looking on pages 3 and 6 of that [fol. 2547] Southern California Grocers Journal, your Honor, there is also a further breakdown, in addition to that, that appears on the cover.

The Court: Is there any objection to using this document for the purpose of reference only?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: The Supreme Court goes out and reads documents and statements by economists and professors and what-not, and then refers to them in their footnotes. Maybe a District Court can do the same thing. So I will use this as a footnote.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what it proves, your Honor.

The Court: I am not saying it proves anything. I am merely trying to find out some things about this case.

You know, I spend quite some time while I am trying cases reading this record. During the process of trying patent cases and all kinds of cases, criminal cases, admiralty cases, I am trying to read this record. And while I have made a lot of notes, I want to go back and try to assimilate in my mind what I have read.

I was using this outline more or less as a classification method.

Pass it back to me, please.

I want to ask some questions.

[fol. 2548] We did not have any evidence at all regarding county chains, did we?

Mr. Vaughn: We had evidence regarding what we called local chains. I think they are the same thing, your Honor.

The Court: Was that intended to mean county chains, not including Orange County?

Mr. Vaughn: No, I don't believe that there was any evidence that was isolated as to a concern that might do business only in Los Angeles County. The local chains that we referred to were those that had most, if not all, of their stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

Mr. Alsup: I think if your Honor will read across that front page of that Journal——

The Court: Yes, I know it, counsel. But I was trying to get in my mind the competitive situation as it existed prior to the filing of the case, and after the case went into trial. And I was trying to see how we developed the facts as respecting national chains, regional chains, and what they refer to as county chains.

I think we merely talked about 10 or more stores, did we not?

Mr. Alsup: Basically, yes, your Honor. And what they referred to there as county chains actually go beyond Los Angeles and Orange County if you——

[fol. 2549] The Court: Yes, I know they go into the other counties.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. And I think the regional ones are those which operate actually in more than the State of California.

The Court: All right. Well, I suppose it would be of no use to try to use that as a reference.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I might say that Exhibit AF attempts to trace the history in terms of number of stores that served the market for the top 20 chains as of 1960, from 1948 to 1960.

So we do have information there which might be compared to this information. There are also—I might call to your Honor's attention a document entitled "Small Business Reporter" put out by the Bank of America, which has an additional distance.

This is recently published, copyrighted in 1964. Additional statistics, additional observations about the grocery business in general and in Los Angeles in particular.

The Court: Well, I guess we had better not consider that. I wasn't going to consider these matters from an evidentiary standpoint.

I was trying to find something from the evidence before the court—I guess we have to break these situa[fol. 2550] tions down into the chains and the size of the chains, really. And then down to the single store.

So I think we have to follow what you have already done, those where it is single operators, single store operators, those with one or more, two or more, and so on.

I don't think we can avoid using that method.

Now——

Mr. Vaughn: I would be happy to try and answer any questions I can.

The Court: Well, what I am concerned about, one of the things is: Is there any evidence as to what happens to any of these stores who went out of business?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. The affidavit of Edward F. Pasini seems to me to be about as complete a statement in that regard as we can possibly get.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: We got the names and addresses of every store that the Board of Equalization said went out of business in 1960. And every store that went in business in 1960, that they said went in business in 1960 but was out of business by November of 1961.

Langendorf Bread Company, whose route salesmen were under the direction of Mr. Pasini went to each one of those [fol. 2551] locations. And it is set forth in his affidavit.

The Court: Yes, I remember generally the affidavit. But give me the particulars of it, will you, as to how many went out, and the reasons for it?

Mr. Vaughn: As to how many, your Honor, I think the stipulation is about as close as we can come to that, that we have already entered into.

The record shows that as of January 1, 1961——

The Court: No. I mean from the affidavits, counsel. What was said in that affidavit?

Mr. Vaughn: In that affidavit it was indicated that there were a number of stores that went out of business because of freeway construction. About 20 per cent of those that actually went out of business went out because of freeway discussion or other conditions, where either the store property itself or the surrounding community which it served.

Others went out because of fire.

Others went out because of loss of the lease.

Others went out because of the retirement or death of the owner. In one instance I recall where it was said the store had been closed because the owner died and his wife was touring the world.

The Court: As I remember it, we did not get any evidence into the case as to the discontinuance of stores by [fol. 2552] chains, large chains.

Mr. Vaughn: We did our best on that, your Honor. We worked on it, particularly since the conference in chambers last month. And we have not come up with any reliable statistics in that regard.

We can tell you that Safeway had a thousand stores in this community in 1920. It has 140 as of 1960. This is a trend that has gone on throughout the industry. Smaller stores that used to be the predominant means by which groceries were sold in this area, smaller stores have given way in part to larger supermarkets.

The Court: Well, I was rather surprised that no one offered in evidence—I don't know whether I can take judicial notice of the fact—but you know the automobile ownership of this country has changed considerably in the last 30 years.

Mr. Vaughn: Indeed it has, your Honor. I think the difference can be that people didn't used to have automobiles, the only way the housewife could get to the store was to walk.

The Court: Well, there are those that went on streetcars.

Mr. Vaughn: But it certainly limited the drawing area of a particular store, and limited the area that any particular grocer had to be concerned about. He didn't have [fol. 2553] to be concerned about a store a mile away, because his customers came from a few blocks away.

But with the advent of the automobile and the advent of supermarkets which provided parking space for these automobiles, then the neighborhood monopoly which small corner grocery stores enjoyed disappeared. He was now faced with the necessity of competing with stores a mile or more from his store. He no longer could sit back and take life easy. He now had to fight for his existence.

The Court: However, there was another situation the record seemed to me to indicate, that cash and carry came into the program quite a bit, too. It used to be that the small store apparently had charge accounts, carried the neighborhood on credit.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that may have been true during the depression, your Honor.

The Court: I think probably it might have been the reason some of them went out of business.

Mr. Vaughn: Could be. But there has been a national trend.

The Court: Kind hearts may have caused the failure of the grocery business.

Mr. Vaughn: That is true. I think the increased competition that every grocer has to face as the vistas expand, and [fol. 2554] the area he has to worry about expands, some grocery stores may have gone out of business because they were no longer needed and he knew he was no longer patronized.

Others may have gone out of business because they could not meet the competition of the supermarket. They were used to this neighborhood monopoly and they could not adapt.

The Court: Well, what I am concerned about is, I want to know the trend here. What is the trend from these figures. What is this fact that the stipulation says we started out in—let me get the stipulation here—we started out in 1963, there were 3,590 stores.

Mr. Vaughn: Operated by people who owned them——

The Court: Single outlet stores.

Mr. Vaughn: Correct, your Honor.

The Court: There were 958 operated by multiple stores. Those are not necessarily large chains, they may be three stores, five stores, or 10 stores.

Now, the total was 4,548.

In 1962 there were 3,859 stores.

Mr. Vaughn: Now that is number of concerns, your Honor, not number of stores.

The Court: Concerns, yes, concerns.

Mr. Vaughn: That is not a comparable figure with the statistics in paragraph 2. Paragraphs 1 and 2 [fol. 2555] give you an exact comparison between 1961 and 1963.

The Court: Well, the number of concerns is 3,859. That includes large chains, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct. So Von's would be one concern. Safeway would be one concern. That does not reflect the number of stores.

The Court: I see. Paragraph 1 I should have referred to first. Paragraph 1 shows that in 1961 there were 3,818 of the single store operators, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And then there were 923 of the multiple outlet stores.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now the difference in 1963, January 1, would be approximately 100-odd stores, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: I believe 200.

The Court: Is there any evidence in the record as to what happened to those stores?

Mr. Coyle: It was about 200 instead of one.

The Court: All right, 200—200 or 300, whatever it is.

Is there any evidence in the record to indicate what happened to those stores?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't believe there is any specific evidence [fol. 2556] that would relate to those specific 200 or so stores. There is only the generalization that stores have gone out of business for the various reasons that we have cited. I don't know of any way to obtain that information.

The Court: Have they gone out of business?

Mr. Vaughn: Well, that is in doubt. You see, this Mr. Lehbar's affidavit shows that the Board of Equalization, at least as to the portion which he reviewed, is 45 per cent inaccurate about the closing of the stores.

There are many stores on that list there that they said the Board of Equalization submitted, from which these statistics were taken, which were being operated as grocery stores, despite the fact that they were shown specifically as closed. And sometimes they were being operated by the very same people who had operated them at the outset.

So then you see——

The Court: Well, I take it, gentlemen, there is nothing in the record to show what happened when there is a change in name on a store, or when they are two stores combined, or when it is purchased by some other concern.

Mr. Vaughn: There is this in the record, your Honor: Whenever there is a change in name, this will ordinarily result in the Board's records in the elimination of one entity. So down goes the count by one.

[fol. 2557] The Court: Yes, that is true. I understand that.

Mr. Vaughn: The new entity gets the new sales tax permit. And as a result there is an increase of one.

One misleading thing in this statistic, however, is the fact that if a single store operator opens up a second new store, that results in a decline of one, in a single store operator, and an increase of two in the multiple store operators.

We have shown through the affidavits that there has been over the last 10 years a specific increase in the number of concerns operating only two, three or four stores.

The Court: There has been what?

Mr. Vaughn: A significant increase in the number of concerns operating two or three stores, from '56—if my memory serves me rightly—in 1952, or 1953, to 104 such concerns in 1962.

I would certainly like to apologize to your Honor for not having better statistics.

The Court: Well, you can't help that, counsel. As a matter of fact, these cases—this case, part of it, is in the realm of speculation. I don't know how far a court should go in speculating—I never thought it was supposed to speculate at all, I thought you were supposed to base your conclusions upon proved facts. And I am afraid we are entering an area where we have come to the [fol. 2558] point at least to where speculation is just as important as the evidence.

I frankly am very much concerned—I can't seem to put my hands on where there has been a substantial lessening of competition.

Mr. Vaughn: Neither can I, your Honor.

The Court: And I will offer the government another chance to point out to me—I have offered this several times and I have not received any communication to enlighten me on the subject.

Mr. Vaughn: Thank you, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, the probability of the lessening competition arises from the fact that a growing, vigorous chain with 38 stores doing eighty-five million dollars worth of business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was acquired by one of its competitors, and therefore was eliminated from that market.

That is the test that Congress meant the courts to apply. And the reason we object to this post-complaint evaluation——

The Court: Now, wait a minute. You are going—a minute ago I thought you agreed with me that the acquiring and acquired was not the test.

Mr. Coyle: But the elimination of this substantial factor in the area is the test. The elimination of a [fol. 2559] substantial factor is the test. That is the test.

The Court: What substantial factor?

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag. You had Shopping Bag and Von's, both competitive factors——

The Court: That was the old Section 7 test.

Mr. Coyle: Oh, no, I haven't made myself clear, your Honor.

The new test is that competition is stronger when there are more important factors in a given area.

The Court: That is pure theory.

Mr. Coyle: That is the premise of the Philadelphia Bank case.

The Court: It is pure theory, that is all it is, pure academic theory.

Mr. Coyle: The premise of the Act, and the first point under that premise is that when one big competitor in the area acquires another big competitor in the area, competition in that area is reduced by the elimination of that factor. And that will probably lessen the competition.

That is the Philadelphia Bank, Brown Shoe, and the Committee Report.

The Court: Well, Philadelphia, though, in that case—and I was surprised, really, and I am like Justice Holland now, nobody could be greater surprised than I was when that case came down, except possibly the government.

[fol. 2560] Mr. Coyle: We weren't surprised, your Honor. We knew——

TheCourt: After the appearances that I was familiar with that they made before the Committee in Washington, and the position that they took in this decision was quite revealing, most revealing.

But at any rate, I am afraid where I have difficulty in crossing over this bridge is that everything is a major premise based on a syllogism, a major premise assumed to be true. That is the trouble in this case. All major premises are stated and then assumed to be true. Of course, with a major premise you can prove anything, if you assume it to be true. If all you see is the blackness of the bird, therefore it is black. That is the way you go about it.

Mr. Coyle: Here is the Philadelphia Bank case, your Honor, page 363. The court says that:

> "• • • competition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which have any significant market share, is common ground among most economists——"

The Court: That is a statement with a pure dictum——

Mr. Coyle: It was undoubtedly the premise of Congressional reasoning, your Honor, as applied to mergers.

[fol. 2561] The Court: That is pure dictum and I don't know if the gentleman, the distinguished gentleman who wrote that opinion, is right or not, but I don't think it necessarily follows:

The evidence in the case, there was no evidence in the case to support that as far as I could determine. And I think it is pure dictum in the case.

Mr. Coyle: I think that——

The Court: You are making the statement, and the statement is being made there that, in other words, you have a better competitive market if you have no—reduce it to its absurdity—if you have nothing but single store operators, then you have a better competitive market. That is what it amounts to, isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is the premise, in a fragmented industry, that is what Justice Warren talked about in the Brown Shoe case.

The Court: Well, with all due respect to the Chief Justice, I think maybe that was just dictum in the case. I can't believe that there was anything in the case to support any conclusion of that kind.

Mr. Coyle: If you don't take this position, then you really get into speculation and conclusion and conjecture. How does anyone prove whether competition is more vigorous and less vigorous as of—— [fol. 2562] The Court: By facts, by facts.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know any fact that proves it and I am sure it is not the government's burden to prove that in four years between the time the complaint was filed and the time it got around to trial, three and a half years, that somehow, some way, competition was actually lessened in this market. If we have to prove that, we are back to the Sherman Act, and this new Act means nothing, because that is an impossible burden for the government to ever assume.

The Court: Well, counsel, if I take your major postulate, that is, that the economy is better to have single store operators, then I suppose I have to go along with you.

Mr. Coyle: I didn't say that that is my major postulate. I said that the premise of the Act, as the Supreme Court said, is competition is——

The Court: Let me ask you a question in that regard.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: Let me ask you a question, one that relates to the practical things of life.

How many individual store owners are able to give a 25-year lease and build a market to the sum of five or six hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor. I haven't made a study of that.

[fol. 2563] The Court: Well, you wouldn't have to make a study, counsel. Just common sense ought to tell you that the average individual grocer would have great difficulty in getting that type of finance.

So now what you are saying in effect is that because the chains can get financing, it has an unfair advantage, therefore it ought to be stamped out.

Mr. Coyle: I am not saying that at all, your Honor. I am saying that when Congress passed the amendment to Section 7, it was concerned over growing concentration, and the fact that growing concentration resulted from mergers, at least in the judgment of the Congress, and that the Congress meant to stop mergers.

It didn't legislate against chains, it only meant to stop mergers of big competitive factors in a given market because it, in its experience, knew that when competitive factors merged in an important economic market, it did have a tendency toward increasing concentration, which would jeopardize——

The Court: There is a point, no doubt about it. But the question is did that point arise in this case at the time of the suit. That is the problem.

Mr. Coyle: That is the problem, your Honor. To answer the problem you look at the trend in the industry——

The Court: Yes, but you are making so many as- [fol. 2564] sumptions. You are asking me to make assumptions on the bare statistical information that I don't know that I can make, whether I am to assume that because the store went out of business it was forced out of business because of competition.

Mr. Coyle: I think the important thing is not why they went out, but the fact that more went out than came in, and the larger chains over the years have gotten a larger and larger share of the market. This is the kind of increase in concentration that Congress was alarmed at. And when a merger took place and contributed to that increase in concentration, Congress meant that that merger was to be halted. And there was a history of these mergers in this area, and they contributed to this increase in concentration. Mergers always contribute to increase in concentration, and if they are big mergers, they are illegal, if they are——

The Court: That is the trouble. What is big and what is small?

Mr. Coyle: We are right back to the market structure and the market share. When the two firms merge in a market share like the market we have, a market structure like the one we have here and the result, a result of having a share of 8.9 per cent, that is substantial in this market structure.

The Court: What does the record show, if you

[fol. 2565] recall—if it does show—how many single store operators were there in this area, in this relevant area, in 1950?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, it does show that. Excuse me just a second.

The Court: Now we are looking for trends.

Mr. Coyle: The record shows that on January 1, 1950, there were 5,365 single outlet grocery stores, and 856 multiple outlet grocery stores, for a total of 6,221 stores. That is in 1950.

The Court: Just one second, counsel. Singles—and the multiples were 856.

Mr. Coyle: Right.

The Court: All right. Now, let's compare that with 10 years later.

Mr. Coyle: That is for the total of 6,221, your Honor.

The Court: Of what?

Mr. Coyle: The total was 6,221.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Now, on your multiples, in 1961, which was in January 1961, there were 3,818——

Mr. Coyle: Singles.

The Court: Singles, that is correct, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

[fol. 2566] The Court: Now, you are asking me to assume that because of this difference here of about around—let's see, around fourteen or fifteen hundred stores, that I am to draw the conclusion that that came about by reason of the pressure of the chains.

Mr. Coyle: I am only asking the court to find that this happened, that more stores were going out of business than were coming into business during that period of time.

The Court: That is the thing that bothers me. What is the reason for it? Am I to just conclude that strictly because of the competitive situation——

Mr. Coyle: That is just one of the facts that demonstrates the increasing concentration in this area. It is part of the pattern of increase in concentration.

The Court: You completely disregard the fact that the supermarket—when did the supermarket come into being, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what the court would define as a supermarket.

The Court: You know what I mean by a supermarket.

Mr. Coyle: No, I don't.

The Court: Don't you know who originated the supermarkets in this area? Don't you know when it began? All those problems have something to do with it.

[fol. 2567] The Ralphs Stores were not supermarkets. The Safeway Stores were not supermarkets.

And did you know that of these 1500 stores that went out of business between 1950 and 1960, how many were Safeway Stores?

Mr. Coyle: I didn't know—I know that there were more chain stores in 1960 than there were in 1950.

The Court: How many Safeway Stores were there in 1950?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: Well, counsel, if you found out that a thousand of these stores that went out of business were Safeway Stores, were that change your impression of this competitive situation?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, for this reason: My impression of this—it is not an impression—my conclusion as to this market structure situation is that you don't look at the number of stores that went out of business without also looking at the increasing market share represented by the chains. When you have these two factors going along side by side, when you have fewer stores and the chains with increasing market shares, you have a position of increasing concentration, a trend toward concentration.

And this is also accompanied by a history of mer-
[fol. 2568] gers and acquisition in the area which have resulted in 73 per cent of the increase of the total market share of the big chains of the area.

You have all those things. You have a pattern of increasing concentration in the area.

The Court: But counsel, the thing I am trying to find out from the evidence is: What is the reason for this concentration? Is it just suppression of competition?

Mr. Coyle: One of the reasons is acquisition, acquisitions have increased this competition.

73 per cent of this increase in acquisitions, increase in concentration, results from acquisitions.

The Court: Where is the proof of that?

Mr. Coyle: In this testimony of these statistics submitted by Mr. Mueller of the FTC.

The Court: He says that these were acquisitions?

Mr. Coyle: He lists the acquisitions, yes, your Honor. Lists the acquisitions and shows the dollar sales of the acquired stores.

The Court: 73 per cent of what, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: 73 per cent of the increase in——

The Court: Oh, I see what you are talking about. You are talking about 73 per cent of the increase with the chains.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, your Honor.

[fol. 2569] The Court: That is a different thing. I misunderstood you.

Mr. Coyle: I am not——

The Court: Let's get back for a moment. How many Safeway Stores were in existence in 1950? I think the record shows that, doesn't it?

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure how many, your Honor——

Mr. Vaughn: I can get that for your Honor.

The Court: I would like to have it for the moment, as I remembered at one time the record shows that there were a thousand Safeway Stores in the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. Vaughn: It does show that in the '20s and the '30s——

Mr. Coyle: I think that was general testimony, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: We found that information unavailable for 1948, the earlier years. We have it in 1954.

The Court: What were there then?

Mr. Vaughn: 185, your Honor.

The Court: So from a thousand in 1920 they went down to what?

Mr. Vaughn: 185.

The Court: In 1950?

Mr. Vaughn: 1954.

The Court: 1954. So there you——

[fol. 2570] Mr. Coyle: This was long before we had any of these figures. I would doubt that the Safeway closing of these small stores and opening new stores contributed to this decline that we have shown since 1950, because I don't think Safeway declined very much, if at all, since 1954.

Mr. Vaughn: Mr. Coyle, you don't know and I don't know, because the FBI couldn't get that information.

The Court: Well, what I am getting at is the record, there is an indication in the record that Ralphs Stores were closing stores and opening new stores, and Safeway was closing stores and opening new stores, all of these concerns were closing stores and opening new stores.

Now, if I am going to wade through a maze of what was really a disappearance of the stores because Safeway got rid of a market or Ralphs got rid of a market, or somebody got rid of it——

Mr. Coyle: Well, your Honor, this record does show this. I will read from the defendants' exhibit—we have problems with the exhibit. The exhibit showed that Von's in 1948 had 14 stores. By 1958 they had 27.

It shows that Shopping Bag had 15 stores in 1948 and by 1958 they had 34.

It shows that Ralphs had 32 stores in 1948 and by 1958 they had 38.

The Court: Now give me that figure again.

[fol. 2570-a] Mr. Coyle: Ralphs had 32 stores in 1948. By 1958 they had 38 stores. In other words, they had an increase of six stores.

The Court: Do you know how many in the meantime they closed, or got rid of?

Mr. Coyle: There is no doubt but chains every day close stores and they open stores, there is no question of that. That is part of the every day occurrence.

But it doesn't affect the structure of increase in concentration. When the 20 leading chains keep getting a larger and larger percentage——

The Court: You see what is happening is that the eyes of realism are being closed. There has been a complete change in communications, a complete change in the Los Angeles area. Absolutely it is not anything like what it was in 1940 or even in 1950, the change was taking place then.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Court: But there was a time in Los Angeles County and environs when most everybody rode either a Yellow Street Car or a Red Street Car, by the thousands. And you don't see any of those cars on the streets now at all, do you?

Mr. Coyle: I haven't seen any.

The Court: That's right. The automobile has [fol. 2571] taken over. As a result of that, the supermarket, so-called, came into existence where they put in large parking areas—they didn't have a parking area at all for the small stores, people walked in usually, parked on the street if they had cars.

Now there has been a complete change in this community which overlooks the fact that we have developed into a community of small cities surrounding a large area which calls itself a city. And the greater population is not in Los Angeles City, but in the surroundings, all these areas.

People are traveling in automobiles to areas to shop. I think--what was the first supermarket that came about here, does anybody remember?

Mr. Alsup: I would say it was Piggly-Wiggly, your Honor.

The Court: Piggly-Wiggly was not a supermarket. It was a series of stores the same as——

Mr. Alsup: Richard Ralphs' affidavit, which we introduced into evidence, points out that his father and his uncle are generally credited with developing the supermarket.

The Court: I think Ben Servall might disagree with you on that.

Mr. Alsup: Well——

The Court: He might disagree with it because I [fol. 2572] think it is indicated in the record somewhere—I can't remember the name of the stores—but I remember the name Servall somewhere, who was one of the founders of a chain or a group of stores. Do you remember that?

Mr. Alsup: I don't recall from the record, but I do know, your Honor, that various people are given credit for it. But Richard Ralphs' affidavit refers to some book which generally credits his father and uncle with starting the supermarkets.

As I recall, that was in the late '30s, wasn't it?

The Court: I guess it doesn't make a lot of difference who started it. But I suppose most all of the grocers will be immodest enough to take credit.

Mr. Vaughn: Just like they all take credit for——

The Court: How much more time do you want, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: If the court has any more questions, I will try to answer them.

The Court: Well, I am gravely concerned about the government's proof in the case. I will tell you very frankly.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I think we made the proof on the evidence, we made the proof on the facts. These are the issues that are most generally in dispute——

The Court: Well, I think we had better stop. The reporter has had a long session of it today and so have [fol. 2573] I. This morning we had one matter after another all morning.

So I think we had better continue at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Here, counsel, is your Advance Sheet of the Lawyer's Edition.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you.

The Court: Is that satisfactory? Continued at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. We will stand in recess.

(Whereupon, at 4:40 o'clock p. m., Monday, March 23, 1964, court was in recess until 10:00 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, March 24, 1964.)

[fols. 2574-2576] IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Honorable CHARLES J. CARR, Judge Presiding

No. 336-60-CC Civil

[Title omitted]

Transcript of Proceedings—March 24, 1964

Place: Los Angeles, California.

[fol. 2577] The Clerk: Case No. 336-60 CC Civil, United States v. Von's Grocery and others, for further proceedings.

The Court: Now, Mr. Coyle: yesterday I set this argument for the purpose of getting help. The court desires argument for one purpose only, and that is assistance. I was very tried after many, many matters on the calendar yesterday. And all I kept getting from you was generalties.

Now, today I want you to get down to specifics. And I also want to ask these defense counsel some questions.

But I want to get away from the language of the Supreme Court. I think I can read that as well as you can. I may not understand it as well as you do, but I can read. Now I want to get down to the facts of the case, what the proof was.

And the question is whether or not the Government has failed to prove that there will be a substantial lessening of competition. Now that is the problem in this case, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now if you will just listen a few moments, I have put to you some specific questions, I [fol. 2578] have been through these records, I have spent hours on them over a long period of time. I have made a lot of notes.

Now, if you will just take a pencil and make a note, I would like to have you—as I say, the purpose of argument is to assist the court. Not to tell a court what to do. All right. Now we will start.

In reviewing the Government's—all the affidavits of the Government witnesses—I believe there were, as I remember it—I have notes here, I will get them in just one moment—the Government's summary of the facts I will mention first.

On page 8 there is a statement that from 1950 to 1963 the stores decreased by 1673.

Now, the multiple outlet concerns increased by 102.

In 1950 there was 1.4 stores per thousand. In 1961 there was 7/10ths stores per thousand.

I don't think this is of great materiality, but in the beginning there were—rather, in 1960 there were only six of the Shopping Bag stores actually at a competitive distance—I am not talking about now about the relevant area or anything of that kind—I am talking about competition in terms of three or four miles, the driving area that, you will recall the testimony was that [fol. 2579] the average person drove three or four miles, up to three or four miles to shop.

And then the Government says on page 30 of the summary of facts, that the—the Government says that the decline in individual grocery stores resulted "largely from the increasing size of supermarkets and their large continually expanding dollar sales."

I want some discussion on that as to how you reached that that is the sole reason for the decrease in individual grocers. It seems to me that wrapped up in that statement is a conclusion that is not necessarily supported by the evidence.

Now, the next point—did you get that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure what your Honor wants me to answer———

The Court: Well, you are making a flat statement that largely from the increased size of supermarkets and their expanding dollar sales, that this is the reason for the decline in individual grocery stores.

And I think the record indicates there are other things responsible. I'd like to have some discussion from you, how you contend that the evidence supports that conclusion.

The next point I would like some discussion on

—I don't think I need a whole lot, but I will be glad [fol. 2580] to hear from you—there is quite a strong statement made in the Government's contentions that single stores cannot get into the most desirable shopping centers "because of credit standing, et cetera, lessors want the big names."

Well, I think that is probably true. But what does that prove? It proves that because a man doesn't have as much money or credit rating that this is a lessening of competition? It may be a facet, I don't know. But I would like to have pointed out to me how you can expect anything different in a society where supposedly democracy was set up, not to equalize people, but to give people a chance to crawl above his neighbor, to outwit him—I don't mean in a crooked fashion, but outsmart him, overcome him, and become more successful. That is the reason this democracy was formed, not to equalize people.

But apparently our whole trend now is everybody has got to be equalized. Well, if we come to that, then I don't know what you are going to do about the bench. You are going to have an awful problem trying to equalize the judges. I suppose it will have to be downward, I don't know.

At any rate, now the next thing I want some discussion about, you make the statement on page 34 that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger will make the company [fol. 2581] more in demand by shopping centers to the detriment of small operators.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I don't have that document before me.

The Court: Well, you can make notes of the points. I am sure I didn't dream it up. It is in there, counsel, on page 34.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You make this assertion, which to me is rather strikingly questionable. In other words, just because a company can get a better credit rating that this is a—first of all, Von's apparently had a good enough credit rating, apparently in the beginning and so did Shopping Bag—to get in any shopping center. And I would like you to just touch upon that.

Now, then, the tenor of the Government witnesses, as I see it, is that the grocery industry is dominated by the chains. That is what I gather from your contention, that the prices are set by the chains.

I say the tenor now, I am not saying you make that positive assertion.

And then, of course, the point I have just made that the independents cannot get into the shopping centers. So I think that is probably true generally, unless they are large enough to have a financial standing.

[fol. 2582] If I were going to buy tomorrow a shopping center to get 7.8 per cent net-net-net, as these real estate people call it—which is nothing in the world but net—I would certainly prefer to have a Safeway on the lease than I would to have one individual out here who, when he dies, it goes into an estate and his wife—then you would have to deal with her. I certainly would prefer to have my money secured by some large concern. That is just common sense.

Now, I want to ask you, too, I have forgotten the exhibit number, it is the chart I think we were using yesterday which shows all of the numbers of stores. Do you remember the chart number, exhibit number?

Mr. Vaughn: Exhibit AN, if you are referring to the defendants' exhibit, your Honor.

The Court: Yes, that's right. AN. Later I want to ask you a question in regard to that.

Now, you have never said why you didn't cross examine any of the defendants' industry witnesses. I have never understood why you didn't.

Mr. Coyle: We discussed that in our memorandum I think, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. But you just passed them off as immaterial. Is that an answer?

Mr. Coyle: I think that is a good answer.

[fol. 2583] The Court: Well, I don't think it is at all, not at all.

Mr. Coyle: They didn't prove a thing, your Honor.

The Court: That is your opinion, counsel. If I take your conclusions of your individual people who said in the future that competition will be lessened, that is nothing but a conclusion of one witness, which has little or no effect. If you want to take that attitude.

Mr. Coyle: I think that is correct, your Honor. These conclusions of the witnesses as to the ultimate issues of fact have no effect——

The Court: All right. If that is the case then where is your evidence to sustain your proposition that there will probably be a substantial lessening of competition? That is what I would like to know. I want to have that evidence laid out for me, before me.

Now, before you start, there is one other thing, I want to give you a chance to atack some of the things that the defendant contends.

Now, you concede, of course, that the burden is upon the Government.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir.

The Court: To prove here that there is a probable sub-[fol. 2584] stantial lessening of competition in the relevant area, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Now, then,——

Mr. Coyle: I might say, your Honor, that overnight I prepared a statement here which I think sets forth our position on these various questions that the court seemed to be asking yesterday. And I think it might be helpful if I could read that to you first.

The Court: Well, I find generally reading statements is like a politician who is making a speech and does not want to reveal his position. That is usually what a written statement means to me.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor——

The Court: I prefer the Socratic discussion to try to learn something.

Mr. Coyle: Well, this statement——

The Court: I will let you read it, but just be patient a moment. I want to give you some things to shoot at. When I was practicing law I appreciated a judge letting me know what he was thinking so I could argue with him. You don't seem to want to do that. You seem to want to give me general statements.

Now, 18 of the Government's witnesses entered the grocery business since 1948. Yet these are the people who testified to a conclusion that the business is [fol. 2585] becoming more or less a monopoly, yet these very 18 people who testified all went into business and apparently succeeded.

Mr. Coyle: Well, your Honor, on that——

The Court: Now, the next thing—you can answer all of these if you will just make notes. I am going to listen to you.

Now, you might take as an example since 1954, I believe the witness' name was Wood, who built up a ten-store chain since 1954. And I think counsel mentioned yesterday there was a witness by the name of Goodnight, something of that kind. Was that the name?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, your Honor, yes.

The Court: He has built up seven since 1959.

Mr. Vaughn: 1961.

The Court: I have it 1959 from my notes.

Mr. Alsup: He actually left Alpha Beta, your Honor, in 1959. And opened his first store I think in March of 1960.

The Court: I see. All right. Now, then, I would like to have you answer the question, too, why these executives, the testimony clearly discloses that many executives have been leaving these chain stores and going out and opening individual stores and growing into 1, 2, 3 units.

And how it happens that a man with the experience [fol. 2586] of the manager of a chain organization will move out into a market that he feels is choked to such a point that there is no opportunity. This to me is just incomprehensible.

After all, I realize the courts are not too experienced in business. And I know that they forget sometimes that irrespective of all the ills and faults the businessman has brought on, he still did help build this country. And I am wondering why it is that these executives—and there are several—who moved out from those chain organizations to go into individual operations. To me it is astounding that a man with that experience would move into a monopolistic situation.

The next thing—and I think I am about finished—is the—oh, yes, there is another matter I would like to have you answer. Now, these matters I want specific answers, not generalities.

I would like to have you analyze for me why the president of Certified would testify that he doesn't anticipate any lessening of competition when he knows, counsel, that if his individual grocers were affected it would certainly affect Certified. Is that correct? Because Certified sells to the small grocers, as a general rule. That is the primary source of his business.

Now, another thing that strikes me is—and I got this somewhere in the record—there were 24 chains [fol. 2587] operating in 1963 that were not in business in 1953. Is that an erroneous statement?

Mr. Coyle: I am not familiar with the exhibit——

Mr. Vaughn: Perhaps I can correct that, your Honor. There were 24 chains, the figure 24——

The Court: I didn't get that in this argument. But I made these notes from something I saw on the record.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, it comes from the affidavit of Godfrey M. Lebhar.

As of 1952 there were ten chains in Los Angeles operating ten or more stores.

As of 1962 there were 24 chains operating ten or more stores.

The Court: Only an increase then of 14.

Mr. Vaughn: That's right, an increase of 14. Of those 14, seven had no stores, or only one store as of 1953.

The Court: I would like some comment on that, counsel for the Government.

These are things that you can be very helpful to me on.

Now, another thing that I got—I have 40, I don't know where I got this—it is note 40 of mine. But I have a statement here, the total market share of the top 3, 4, and 5— [fol. 2588] concerns—I don't know why I put it 3, 4 and 5—declined between 1952 and 1960.

I wonder if someone could enlighten me on my own notes there. I got that somewhere in the record.

Mr. Coyle: I think there is an exhibit that shows that, your Honor.

The Court: I wish you would please comment on that; will you make a note, please.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Now one other thing——

Mr. Coyle: Excuse me, your Honor.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: What does that note say, which year? Does it say?

The Court: That is between 1952 and 1960.

And I have one other note, and I believe that is it, counsel, except I want to add one thing about your contention as to the determination of the court as to the date of filing of the complaint.

The next note I have is that—I believe this was the witness Marshall. Was there a witness Marshall?

Mr. Coyle: The Board of Equalization——

The Court: Yes, that's right. And that was to the effect that the leading 20 chains opened 67 new stores—and I have 1960. Now, that is in that year, I take it, in the year 1960. [fol. 2589] Now, the single store operators opened in the same year 171 stores, according to that testimony. Now is that correct?

Mr. Alsup: I think the single store operators and the two, three-store chains operated 171——

The Court: Not only operated, I mean opened.

Mr. Alsup: Opened. I believe the figure for the single store operators, as such, as 119, your Honor.

The Court: All right, I see. Let me put that down. Single store, single would be 119. But the single, including the 171, would be the two, three and four stores, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: I am sorry, your Honor. I think my figures are incorrect. The single store operators operated——

The Court: Not operated——

Mr. Alsup: —opened 128.

The Court: 128.

Mr. Alsup: All chains, all chain stores together opened 119. The leading 20——

The Court: Well, I think I have enough for the point for Mr. Coyle to comment on. This is the point I want commented on.

Mr. Coyle: I wonder if counsel would indicate [fol. 2590] that exhibit number.

Mr. Alsup: That is Government's Exhibit 37.

The Court: No. 37.

Mr. Coyle: 37. Thank you. I am sending for these exhibits, your Honor.

Mr. Vaughn: 36.

Mr. Alsup: 36, I am sorry. I beg your pardon. Government's 36.

The Court: 36.

Mr. Alsup: I think it should also be pointed out that these 128 single store operators were people who apparently entered the business in 1960, because they were operating no other stores.

The Court: That is my understanding.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: But I want comment on that, on how, I want comment on how in a community, in a relevant trade area that is so depressed and crushed down by this anticompetitive thing, that can open 128 stores, can open single store operators—of course, I realize people are optimistic, some open up to go broke. But I would like comment.

Now one thing further and you may take over.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor——

The Court: Yes.

[fol. 2591] Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, on that point you might also like to know that Government's Exhibit 38 shows that of the 119 chain openings, 67 were by the top 20 chains.

The Court: Let me see if I understand you right. There were all told how many openings in 1960?

Mr. Vaughn: 246.

The Court: Let me put that down. 1960, two hundred—how many?

Mr. Vaughn: —forty-six; 246.

The Court: 246. Now, then, the chains, the leading 20 chains opened 67, is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct. The remaining multiple outlets opened 52.

The Court: "Multiple outlets" meaning ——

Mr. Alsup: Smaller chains.

The Court: Smaller chains, three, four, five—up to ten, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: That is right, anything that is not in the top 20.

The Court: And the number opened?

Mr. Alsup: 52.

The Court: 52. Now, then——

Mr. Alsup: And the single outlet concerns——

The Court: 128, right?

[fol. 2592] Mr. Alsup: 128.

The Court: All right. Now, counsel, I have re-read the DuPont case. Maybe we misunderstand each other yesterday. The Supreme Court just flatly, right in the opinion, considers facts as late as 1955, even in the footnote. It puts in a table—I don't know where the table came from, whether it came from the evidence or not, we have arrived at a time in this country when the courts just add, sometimes they add things by reaching out and getting statistics and facts.

And on page 595 the court, note 16, puts Moody's Industrial List of General Motors' proportion of the industry up through 1955. Now, this complaint was filed in 1949.

Now, I agree with you that the case says that the question before the court, as set out on page 589, is that the law was for the purpose "to arrest their incipient restraint or monopoly in the relevant market which as a reasonable probability appear at the time of suit likely to result from the acquisition by one corporation—" and so forth.

Now, at the time of suit I can't believe that a court would foreclose from considering evidence after the filing date of the suit in an aid determining the probability.

[fol. 2593] So do you disagree with that?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, I disagree with that to this extent——

The Court: Well, you will have to get the Supreme Court to change it, as far as this court is concerned.

Mr. Coyle: —to this extent, your Honor, and I was going to cover it in this statement I was prepared to give you.

The Court: All right, go ahead. You have the floor now.

Mr. Coyle: All right. If your Honor please, I think that there are four questions which were raised yesterday which go to the heart of this case. Those questions are:

1. On what does the Government base its proof that this merger violated Section 7?

The second question is: Is it part of the Government's burden to prove an actual lessening in the vigor of competition since the merger?

The Court: There never was any question of that kind posed in this case. Nobody said you had to prove an actual lessening.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: The cases all hold—and I understand [fol. 2594] them to hold—the Supreme Court says there must be a probability.

Mr. Coyle: All right. And then the third question is: What would be the effect of any evidence which the Government might have introduced to show that there had been actual lessening in the vigor of competition since the merger.

And the fourth question is: What about the defendants' evidence on the record relating to the period before and since the merger?

I think those are the four questions, the four basic questions, that will control this litigation.

Now, in answer to the first question: What does the Government base its proof that the merger violates amended Section 7? I would answer this question by saying we base our proof on four basic factual points which are uncontroverted. The first point is that retail grocery distributors in the Los Angeles metropolitan area constitutes the relevant line of commerce and relevant section of the country, and that this is a substantial market——

The Court: Nobody is disputing that, are they?

Mr. Coyle: That is the first point.

The Court: I don't think there is any dispute in the case about that.

[fol. 2595] Mr. Coyle: I don't think there is either.

The Court: All right. Let's move on to something that is disputed.

Mr. Coyle: All right. The second point is that over the years there has been an increase in concentration in the distribution of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. And this is demonstrated by the following facts:——

The Court: Well, now, you see, there is one of those what I call glittering generalities. But go ahead. I will listen to what supports it.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: It is so general—we have reached an age in this country where everything is done by semantics. And I just have a mind that likes to get down and reduce things to its lowest common denominator and put it in simple sixth grade English, if possible—not the high echelon English.

I think I have read probably as much of the good English as some others have read, but I don't attempt to duplicate it.

Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: The facts which establish this increased concentration are the increase in the percentage market shares represented by the large chains, the important [fol. 2596] part played by mergers in increasing the market share of the large chains, and the absorption of many independent stores resulting in fewer firms controlling a larger share of the market.

And the third basic point on which we base our charge of illegality is that prior to the merger Von's and Shopping Bag were each substantial and significant factors in the general competition in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

And the fourth point on which we would base our charge of illegality is that the merger produced the following effects:

Shopping Bag with its 38 supermarkets and annual sales in excess of $84,000,000.00 was eliminated as an independent factor in the general competition of the Los Angeles metropolitan area——

The Court: Now there we go with a general statement that I don't understand. That is a general statement. Will you please break it down for me and explain what that means, "factor."

Mr. Coyle: It means that prior to the merger Shopping Bag was operating as an independent corporation in the Los Angeles area.

The Court: That part I understand, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: They had 38 supermarkets and their [fol. 2597] sales were over $84,000,000.00 It was one of these firms which was playing a part in the competitive pattern of the Los Angeles metropolitan area. It was——

The Court: I understand that. What I am talking about is: Where was—what disappeared from the scene economically?

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag as an independent corporation.

The Court: Is that all?

Mr. Coyle: That is enough, your Honor, yes.

The Court: It is enough?

Mr. Coyle: That is enough, yes, your Honor.

The Court: It is enough?

Mr. Coyle: That is what disappeared in the Philadelphia Bank case. That is what disappeared in the Brown Shoe case when Brown acquired Kinney's Shoe Stores.

The Court: You don't think the percentages make any difference? The Philadelphia Bank case, you remember the percentages?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir. 30 per cent, or thereabouts.

The Court: Thereabouts, counsel? 30 per cent or thereabouts?

Mr. Coyle: The Supreme Court settled for 30 per cent. [fol. 2598] The Court: The Philadelphia Bank case? In the Philadelphia Bank case, they were the second and third largest, and when they combined they had 36 per cent—you say 30 or thereabouts, that is quite a difference.

Here you are talking about 4 per cent making the difference in the case.

Mr. Coyle: Talking about 8.9 per cent.

The Court: Combined, yes.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Combined. But now then, another thing you are overlooking is that the Philadelphia National Bank and the second largest bank would have had 59 per cent of the total assets. You don't have anything that comes anywhere near that in this case. That is the reason I asked you the question yesterday: Where does the degree take over? The statement says 9 per cent, 15 per cent, 30 per cent. When do we approach the apogee, I guess is the word, I don't know, where the thing starts to turn over.

Mr. Coyle: Certainly the Philadelphia Bank case says that 30 per cent is not controlling, it could be less than 30 per cent and you would still have a violation. It says that quite clearly in footnote 49.

The Court: I noticed in one of the footnotes in one of the cases not long ago they overruled all previous cases [fol. 2599] inconsistent with this opinion and they didn't name the case. I am wondering what cases they were.

Mr. Coyle: This is footnote 31, your Honor, it says:

"• • • Needless to say the fact that a merger results in a less than 30 per cent market share, or in a less substantial increase in concentration than in the instant case does not raise the inference that the merger is not violating * * *" and et cetera.

Then they cite the Brown Shoe case. Then you turn to the Brown Shoe and in Brown Shoe Brown was the manufacturer. They had about 5 per cent and Kinney had about a half of a percent. As retailers on a nationwide basis, I think Brown had about 1 per cent and Kinney had about 3 per cent.

The Court: Yes. But you had a combination there, counsel. You had both horizontal and vertical. You had a manufacturer coming in and taking over the, substituting itself in the place of suppliers. So you did have a combination of things there.

Mr. Coyle: But you have both horizontal and vertical cases. But in a horizontal case, in many cities, Minneapolis Kinney had 5 per cent and Brown had 3 per cent.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

[fol. 2600] Mr. Coyle: So that you had very small percentages in those cities in Brown Shoe, smaller than the percentages here.

All right. The second thing that makes this merger illegal, in our judgment, is the fact that as a result of it concentration in the area was further increased. And the third thing is that a single corporation controlling 8.9 per cent of all the retail grocery distribution in the Los Angeles metropolitan area——

The Court: In other words, that per cent is a determinative factor in your opinion?

Mr. Coyle: No, that per cent in—well, when considered in conjunction with the whole market structure, with the history of this market structure and the trend oward history of this market and the history of mergers in this market, you have to look at all of those factors to determine whether or not 8.9 per cent is substantial. The court has to look at the fact that this market was fragmented——

The Court: I don't know what you mean by "fragmented."

Mr. Coyle: It was made up of many firms, and it was moving towards the makeup of a few firms controlling more and more shares of the market.

The Court: Counsel, I wonder how much the [fol. 2601] economic structure of the country, what effect this had on this grocery chain.

You know, since—a lot of people don't realize it—but since about 1941, a man who never had any business experience at all, who had just a good, solid head, he doesn't have to be too intelligent, could jump—could have jumped, rather, into most any business and done all right. I guess you concede that, don't you?

Mr. Coyle: Well——

The Court: In the war economy.

Mr. Coyle: There were boom times, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. We have got people in business today that really, in normal times, probably wouldn't keep their doors open a week.

And I wonder what consideration should be given to the economic structure during these times. Is it to be completely disregarded?

Mr. Coyle: I think the economic structure clearly is here, once you look at it. The structure is changed, a lot of independents and a lot of entities to fewer entities and a larger market share being controlled by fewer and fewer corporations.

The Court: You completely disregard and overlook the fact that stores that have been opened by independents [fol. 2602] are usually much larger stores today than they used to be. It used to be the little corner grocery store. Today when an independent opens up, in many cases, it is as big as the chain store.

Now, if you can't have as many of the big stores, the supermarket stores, or large stores as you have small, one-room grocery stores back in times past. You completely disregard that fact.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, I don't disregard that fact. And when we get around to discussing these differences defense counsel mentioned, they show pretty definitely that most of the new openings of the large stores are by the chains, and the openings of the smaller stores are by the independents. But the chains represent the bulk of all sales by new stores.

The Court: What do you mean by "bulk?"

Mr. Coyle: Let me get the exhibit, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. What percentage in sales do the chains represent now, all told? I am talking about the ten leading chains.

Mr. Coyle: On the new openings——

The Court: No, the whole business.

Mr. Coyle: 43 per cent, we decided yesterday, your Honor.

The Court: The ten do?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, and 20 to 56 per cent.

[fol. 2603] The Court: That is correct. 43 per cent, I believe that is right.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. In 1956 the——

The Court: That was the case when the suit was in progress, but I think it is changed now.

Mr. Coyle: There is no evidence to that effect, your Honor.

The Court: You know, the Government is awfully technical about evidence when it is against it. But when it is for you you can drag in most anything. You can bring it in if it is just a shirt with somethng written on the cuff. It amazes me, the approach in these cases. I am really amazed. Your job, as the man representing the Government, is to do justice. Not just to win a case.

Mr. Coyle: That is what I am trying to do, your Honor. Right, your Honor.

Government's Exhibit 43, which is one of the same series of exhibits——

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: —shows that in 1960 the stores opened by the ten largest chains resulted in—or accounted for 46.6 per cent of all sales by newly opened stores.

That the stores opened by the next ten largest chains accounted for 21.2 per cent of all sales by newly [fol. 2604] opened stores.

The Court: Give me that figure again, please.

Mr. Coyle: 21.2.

The Court: 21.2.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Those are the next ten?

Mr. Coyle: The next ten.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. That the remaining chains, that is, the smaller chains, accounted for 20.4 per cent.

The Court: Now, there is where some confusion comes in. By smaller chains, you mean two, three, four stores?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Coyle: Chains of two or more stores, not part of the top 20 chains.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: So that the total sales by the 20 largest chains represented 67.8 per cent of all sales by newly opened stores.

The Court: There we go with that again. You can take adjectives and do anything with them. Adverbs and adjectives can hang anybody. The 20 largest chains, 30 largest chains, this two, three and four stores, is that [fol. 2605] a large chain?

Mr. Coyle: The 20 largest chains have more than two, three or four stores. There may be some of the top 20 that don't have ten stores, but most of them have ten or more stores.

The Court: Well, I thought the ten, the next ten chains had anywhere from five to ten stores.

Mr. Coyle: No, no, the next ten, the next ten would have, I would say, anywhere from seven to, I would hate to guess, but I would say from seven to fifteen stores.

The Court: All right. I just wonder, in Los Angeles and Orange Counties I think—well, let's take the county chains, I don't know whether you put evidence in, for expamle, as to the number of—I think there was evidence on Stater Bros., wasn't there?

Mr. Coyle: There may have been some.

The Court: I think Stater Bros. had about six stores in Los Angeles and about three in Orange, if I remember. Then there was the Michael Markets—were they mentioned in the reord?

Mr. Vaughn: That is Mr. Goodnight's organization.

The Court: Those are seven stores and they are all in Orange County, none of them in Los Angeles, [fol. 2606] are there?

Mr. Vaughn: No, not Los Angeles.

The Court: And then this Alexander is listed as a chain. I believe there were—I don't remember whether that was listed or how many.

The Big Bear Market is listed as a county chain, but I don't know whether you put in any evidence, as I remember it there were no stores in either Los Angeles or Orange Counties.

Mr. Alsup: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Yet it is listed as a chain.

Mr. Coyle: It is listed by whom as a chain, your Honor?

The Court: Somewhere in the record I got the impression that it was called a chain. It has no stores in the relevant area at all.

Mr. Coyle: There may be a Big Bear discount house, I am not certain——

The Court: I think Big Bear is right up here at Big Bear Lake in San Bernardino County. That is probably what it is, it is out of the relevant area.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know how it got into the case.

The Court: I don't know either, but I remember it is listed as a chain somewhere. And if it is a chain [fol. 2607] it is a chain zero. It has no stores in the relevant area.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure none of our exhibits mentioned Big Bear as a chain.

The Court: All right. I thought I got it——

Mr. Coyle: I am pretty sure that our exhibits were checked with the defendants, and I am sure——

The Court: It may have been in one of the affidavits.

Mr. Coyle: It may have been in one of the affidavits.

The Court: I think so.

Mr. Coyle: Or in one of the depositions, your Honor.

The Court: But the word "chain" is like all generalizations. It is difficult to take words of general meaning and understand what they actually mean.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I understand, when you say "chain," you get up to ten or more stores, yes, certainly, it means a chain. But how about a store like—I believe there was some testimony about Jurgensen's.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Jergenson has, as I remember from the record, about eight stores.

[fol. 2608] Mr. Coyle: Yes, I feel that it will be classed in this remaining multiple outlet. He will be below the top 20 chains, but he will be—anyhow, your Honor, this is the same terminology as counsel was using——

The Court: I am not criticizing you. The terminology is what makes these cases difficult.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: And it is in the opinion of the courts, general terminology.

Mr. Coyle: And does definitely show that the ten largest chains, the stores opened by the ten largest chains account for 46.6 per cent of all sales by newly opened stores.

The Court: That is quite a different situation from the Philadelphia Bank case.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think in the Philadelphia Bank case the percentage represented by—of all new openings by the ten largest banks.

The second question which I believe should be considered, and the court indicated there is no dispute on it, is whether the Government should be obliged to prove that there has been an actual lessening in the vigor of competition in this area since the merger.

The Court: Why waste time on that?

Mr. Coyle: Very well, your Honor.

[fol. 2609] Then it is taken for granted that there is no burden on the Government to——

The Court: Counsel, every case you have read, you have read it many times, I am sure, says the same thing.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: So there is no doubt about that. It has to be a reasonable probability, as I understand it.

Mr. Coyle: Then if the Government is not obliged to show that there has been an actual lessening in the vigor of competition since the merger, the next question is: What will be the effect of any evidence which the Government might have introduced to show that there had been an actual lessening in the vigor of competition?

The Court: To show that there was no reasonable probability.

Mr. Coyle: Of anything the Government may have introduced.

The Court: Either one, either side, any evidence that would come after 1960, the filing of the complaint.

Mr. Coyle: The Government's evidence would be to show that there had been an actual lessening of competition since the merger. And to that extent the [fol. 2610] Government would be going beyond its burden fo proof——

The Court: There is no rule of law that prevents a party from going beyond.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct.

The Court: The rule of proof, if he wants to make a real good case, a good lawyer will ofttimes prove much more than he has to prove to prove the case.

Mr. Coyle: But a lawyer is never required to prove more than just to go beyond——

The Court: I believe that is a correct statement of the law.

Mr. Coyle: And the function of the defendant is to rebut the Government's case. And if the Government is not required to prove that there has been an actual lessening of competition since the merger, and the defendant doesn't rebut that case by showing that the Government hasn't proven something that is not required to prove——

The Court: You can't, I am afraid, channel it down to that narrow a situation. I think any evidence during the pendency of the suit which may reflect upon the reasonable probability is admissible evidence, evidence to be considered.

Mr. Coyle: If that were so, then the Government would be forced back to the burden of proof of proving a natural [fol. 2611] lessening of competition.

The Court: I didn't say that at all. This evidence is only to reflect upon the reasonable probability, not that there has been a lessening, insofar as it reflects upon the reasonable probability.

Mr. Coyle: Then the Government can counter that evidence so we would have to show——

The Court: You had your privilege, all you had to do was to offer the proof.

Mr. Coyle: To go beyond our burden of proof, your Honor.

The Court: You can call it what you wish, but you had the full opportunity to present such proof as would help show what the reasonable probability was.

Mr. Coyle: I can't see how it is our position——

The Court: Well, if you don't see it, counsel, take up something else.

Mr. Coyle: That is our position anyhow, your Honor.

The Court: I understand your position and I am not going along with your position in that regard.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Well, then, our final position is in any event, what about the defendants' evidence in the record relating to the period both before and after the merger? I think that is [fol. 2612] what your Honor had reference to that he wants me to discuss.

Our answer to this question is that this evidence is not only irrelevant for the purpose——

The Court: Which evidence?

Mr. Coyle: Both the post-complaint evidence and——

The Court: About what, counsel? You mean none of the evidence of the defendants is to be considered? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: Well, we say that in any event it does not meet or rebut the Government's case as established.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: First, much of the evidence relates to new entrants before and since the merger. But there is no evidence that these new entrants either before or since the merger, have offset the trend toward concentration in the industry.

The Court: You say there is no evidence? That is a rather broad statement.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. The decline in the number of stores has gone on, the increase in the market share of the leading chains went on. That is what proves the increase in concentration.

The Court: Well, it may to you, counsel, but there are [fol. 2613] other factors——

Mr. Coyle: Well, your Honor——

The Court: For example, let us assume for the purpose of discussion that Los Angeles County had passed an ordinance that they would not allow more than one grocery store—assuming it is constitutional, let's not get off into any great, broad constitutional issues—assuming that they passed an ordinance that there could be only one grocery store to every five square miles. And that caused a great decrease in the number of stores in this area.

Now, don't you think that might be a relevant fact to show the decrease?

Mr. Coyle: It would show a decrease in concentration, a decrease—an increase in concentration and a decrease in the number of stores.

The Court: Yes, but the reason for it, the reason for it. What makes the thing tick? We have lost the era, I suppose, we sit down and look at television and we kind of jump to a rapid conclusion in this day and age without analyzing anything. I am trying to see what makes the Government's case tick.

Mr. Coyle: In the American Crystal Sugar case involving the sugar industry, you had exactly that situation.

The Government had legislation which would restrict [fol. 2614] new entrants into the sugar industry. And the Court of Appeals there found that this was one of the factors that made the merger more illegal and tended to establish the illegality of this——

The Court: Will you see if you can adjust this grinding instrument? Maybe we can get it in shape.

Go ahead, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Our position is that this evidence showing a change in the makeup of the chains or the firms in the area doesn't establish anything. There was no statistics introduced to show the sales by these new entrants, no attempt made, in most cases, to establish, to show whether they had large stores, small stores.

You heard about these Pantry Markets, a lot about the Pantry Markets but not a word about whether they were big stores or small stores. The record doesn't show that.

The Court: Well, you know, it may well be that in my effort to save time in the trial of the case—I realize that some of the higher courts in particular seem to feel that the District Courts have a plethora of time. But with the cases pressing you on the back of the neck all the time, both civil and criminal in this court, I thought I would be saving myself time by having the case presented in this fashion.

[fol. 2615] But I want to tell you something, to read this record and carry on the trial of the cases at the same time is a difficult job. I am wondering who gets punished in this situation. And it begins to appear to me that it is the judge.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I agree there are——

The Court: And I wish you would get down to those specific questions I asked you. Are you through with your statement?

Mr. Coyle: I was going to discuss some of these other matters.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: Well, the second point is that the defendants have introduced evidence, there has been some evidence that some employees, officials or otherwise, have left chains and opened up stores of their own.

The Court: Not employees or otherwise, the evidence is very clear some of the top personnel have left and opened stores——

Mr. Coyle: I don't think it was top personnel, not the very top——

The Court: Suppose there were only three, counsel——

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what top personnel is.

The Court: How about a general manager, assistant [fol. 2616] manager, is that top personnel?

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor says it is, I don't know.

The Court: Well, I would assume that a manager of a store might learn something in a ten-year period if he worked for a concern like that.

Mr. Coyle: I would assume so.

The Court: He might learn something about the business, I don't know. I realize the Supreme Court apparently says that lay testimony is of no value. I can't understand how that statement was ever made.

Mr. Coyle: Well, I just don't know whether a store manager of Safeway would be classed as top personnel by Safeway. I doubt if he would.

The Court: Well, whether he is top personnel or not, do you think a store manager would work ten years without learning something about the grocery business?

Mr. Coyle: I am sure that many of them do, and many of them have left the chains and opened up their own new stores.

The Court: Now, if he thought he was stepping out into a closed market, so to speak, don't you think he would be reluctant to leave a job and step out into something that was going to swallow him up and destroy him?

[fol. 2617] Mr. Coyle: I don't know why he would step out, your Honor. But it seems——

The Court: To make money, counsel, to make money. Economically to better himself.

Mr. Coyle: But the fact remains that some of these people that are going out of business were former employees of the chains, too. They stepped out and they couldn't make it so they closed up and went back to the chains. There is nothing in the record to indicate——

The Court: You say there is nothing in the record, then how can I consider that?

Mr. Coyle: This is one of the defendants' arguments. You don't have to——

The Court: It is not an argument at all, the evidence of record here, the evidence shows that some of these people who were in the top echelon of the chains, that is, managing, doing things of that kind, went out and opened stores and made a success of them.

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: In this area.

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: Before 1960.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, before and after.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: But still the trend is toward the chain [fol. 2618] having a larger market share in this area and the trend is toward fewer stores.

The Court: All right. I am afraid we are coming to the point in this country where one of these days there will be a law passed that you can't make money, it will be wrong to make money.

Mr. Coyle: Well, also we have heard about the discount stores, some of these were opened before the merger and some after the merger. The defendants entered this evidence as to discount stores, but they didn't introduce any dollar figures, any sales figures, any market share figures, make no attempt to establish the market shares of the discount stores, or how they have affected the grocery merchandising picture in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, other than some opinion testimony.

The Court: Well, the evidence respecting discount houses is not a conclusive form of evidence. It is merely a—it is an outcropping, such as a geologist might look at the soil to see just what the outcropping indicates. It is an indicia of something going on in an industry, that is all.

And when chain stores are competing with other chain stores and individuals are competing, and then a discount house opens up, as I understand it, a discount [fol. 2619] house is a pretty big organization. It works on the theory of volume. And I understand some of them now even say as long as you can get volume you don't need to worry about profits. Of course, this is the new theory of economics, and one of these days the law of economics will assert itself, and they will find themselves in this court in the bankruptcy section.

Mr. Coyle: That may be so, your Honor. But discount houses, as merchandisers of food and groceries are not a big factor in this market as of today.

The Court: Counsel, it isn't a question of being a big factor, it is a question of what the indications are. In other words, what the competitive—the Supreme Court talks about anti-competitive forces. Here is a competitive force that is developing right here in front of us. And apparently a strong development, because discount houses, as a general rule—as you know—are large concerns with huge floor spaces, huge parking spaces, and they draw thousands of customers each day. And they are open at night.

Mr. Coyle: Generally they don't have grocery departments in this area and——

The Court: That has been the case, I believe, up to now. But I am merely pointing out that the indication is that [fol. 2620] the discount situation is growing in this market that is supposed to be stagnant for anti-competitive forces.

Mr. Coyle: And the second consideration is a discount store is nothing more than a big shopping center under one roof. It offers bargains. And the food departments that are going into these discount centers are generally operated by the same 20 large chains that have been increasing their market shares.

The Court: I didn't know that. Is there evidence to that effect in the record?

Mr. Coyle: Of course, Mr. Von der Ahe—yes, your Honor, Mr. Von der Ahe testified that the discount store is merely another type of shopping center, the grocery department——

The Court: That isn't what I am talking about. You are saying that the discount houses are operated by the chains.

Mr. Coyle: By the chains, yes, there is evidence in the record that all but five of the complete discount food operations in the metropolitan area, as of the time of trial, were operated by firms which were also operating supermarkets in shopping centers in some other location.

The Court: Well, I don't think that is inconsistent—I think that is a bit inconsistent with the statement—you [fol. 2621] gave me the impression that the chains were operating in the discount houses.

Mr. Coyle: Many of them are the 20 largest chains. I don't think there is evidence to show what percentage of these operations are chain——

Mr. Vaughn: There is precise evidence, your Honor, as to exactly who operates each grocery department in each discount house. And there are some that are operated by, or are adjuncts to large chains, and some are not.

The Court: I understood that, I understood that.

Mr. Coyle: I think many, your Honor, Lucky Stores operate many of them.

Mr. Vaughn: "Many" is not——

The Court: What is "many"? I don't know, I don't understand.

Mr. Coyle: Well, there are not too many all together.

The Court: Is "many" three or 55?

Mr. Coyle: I would say 7 out of 37, but that is a guess.

And then we have the fact that three large eastern chains have acquired large local chains. Two of these acquisitions are under investigation right now.

The Court: Well, I assume that the law still is in [fol. 2622] America until something is done, I must treat it as a fact existing, until some court rules it is illegal I can't jump to the conclusion it is illegal, can I?

Mr. Coyle: I agree. I don't see how these additional acquisitions in any way offer a defense to these people in this case.

The Court: Maybe it might prove the necessity of fortification on the home front to repel the invader.

Mr. Coyle: Von's and Shopping Bag, it was stipulated, they were able to compete effectively against Safeway prior to the acquisition. And Safeway is larger than any of these firms.

The Court: But Safeway, did you know it, closed quite a number of stores in Long Island, through New York, they were losing a fortune.

Mr. Coyle: They got out of Long Island.

The Court: Yes. Why? Why? Did they close it because of the anti-competitive forces?

Mr. Coyle: I think it was just too far away from the rest of their operations.

The Court: They just didn't get enough business to make ends meet, that is what I understand, from the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. Coyle: Somebody else was operating those stores all right. They sold them out, your Honor.

[fol. 2623] The Court: You know, sometimes stockholders have an effect on companies, too, counsel. If you don't get any dividends for a few years you might have some complaints, why carry on this business if you can't make money? Maybe Safeway got some of those complaints.

Mr. Coyle: And then you have the opinion testimony, the opinion of these retailers that this merger will lessen competition, it won't lessen competition——

The Court: That on the whole is just a conclusion.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I suppose I know as much about it as they do.

Mr. Coyle: About the legal issues involved, I hope you do, your Honor.

The Court: I hope so. And I might even know as much about the grocery business as some of them know, from the way their testimony is. At least I have had the experience of working in a grocery store—and in a hardware store and in a lot of types of stores. And I realize that experience today is marked in the lower grades, but experience is still of some value.

And experience in this area, as a trier of the facts, I don't think a jury has to put blinkers on to try a case factually. And I don't think a judge ought to have to, [fol. 2624] either. So I am assuming that I don't have to put blinkers on, what I have seen around me for the last 35 years here I just can't completely disregard, can I?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: You say you don't know?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what you have seen, your Honor.

The Court: What is it? I mean, do I have to disregard the obvious facts in this area, as a trier of the facts?

What is the law? You are the chief counsel for the Government, tell me what the law is. I am willing to be educated.

Mr. Coyle: Well, I think that the record sets forth the obvious facts in this case, your Honor.

The Court: Well, that is a State Department answer. So take up the next matter.

Mr. Coyle: I think your first point that you mentioned, your Honor, what is the decline in the number of stores between 1950 and 1960, I am not too sure what your Honor wants——

The Court: I was trying to find out, counsel, whether or not I was foreclosed of the public knowledge of this relevant trade area. If a person, a trier of facts on a jury, were to be compelled to exclude all of his knowl- [fol. 2625] edge, he probably could not serve on a jury.

Mr. Coyle: If people who sat on juries were grocery men, your Honor——

The Court: Well, that is a little different situation. It may well be it is perfectly proper.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: But I am talking about this court is in this position: I have lived in this community, practiced law here for about 35 years. And I have seen some of the things that go on in this community. And one who is trained from childhood to observe, keep his ears open and his eyes open, and see and hear, has to see and hear some of the things that have happened.

Now, I am wondering if I have to completely disregard some of the obvious happenings in this community in the grocery business, in the real estate business—in other words, the economic upsurge in the community, the change in patterns.

For example, the city used to bring people downtown in streetcars. Many of them would shop on Broadway at a large grocery store, or they would shop on Hill Street, or Main Street.

But all of a sudden markets started to go out to the building communities, isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 2626] The Court: And, of course, they have built in the crowded communities as well. But each time a new community goes up there is a race to put in markets. And there is a race by the real estate operator to get the big markets to come in and take the leases because they can get a lease with a corporation that has an A rating financially, and they can get a 25 or 30-year lease.

So it is those things that I am talking about. Am I to disregard those things entirely in this case?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. But I don't think that the decision in this case will turn on those things.

The Court: Well, let's say then that you admit they are admissible, but you say they have no weight.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, that is a good answer.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: Now, you have referred to this statement on page—I don't know what page it is—but largely the reduction in the number of stores in the area has resulted from the increase in the dollar sales of stores, or something like that——

The Court: "Largely from the increasing size of supermarkets and the large continually expanding dollar sales." That is an exact quote.

Mr. Coyle: Certainly I don't know whether we put [fol. 2627] the horse before the cart, but the two things seem to go hand in glove, as you have a decline in number of stores you are going to have an increase in size of the stores, and an increase in the dollar sales of the stores.

The Court: Well, I think that is——

Mr. Coyle: I mean it is obvious people are eating as much food, or more food than they ever did.

The Court: I think they are probably eating more. But you have overlooked the fact that prices—for example, in 1932 in Los Angeles you could buy a good ground round steak for ten cents a pound. Today you can buy it for—what, I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I haven't bought any steak.

The Court: Well, I will tell you one thing, it is far above ten cents a pound. So the increase in dollar sales has been largely—a good part, not largely—but in a good part to the decrease in the value of the good American dollar which has gradually been destroyed, being destroyed.

Mr. Coyle: I think that the pertinence of this fact, and the fact that the total number of stores have declined in the area, regardless of whether it is because of the mobility of people, the fact that people have moved out into communities, regardless of that, when you put the things [fol. 2628] together, the decrease in the number of stores in the area and the increase in the market share of the 20 largest chains of the area, when you put those two things together you do have a definite pattern in this area where you have fewer firms accounting for an increasing percentage of the total grocery and related products sales.

The Court: What was the share, do you know, or does the record show what was the share of Safeway and Ralphs, and the ten—how many leading chains did we have in, say, 1940? We don't have that in the record, do we?

Mr. Coyle: I think the record doesn't go beyond 1950, your Honor, 1948. Our first record goes back to 1948, I think, and the defendants' does, too.

There was some testimony that Safeway had a big share back in 1920.

The Court: I think Safeway had how much, how many stores was it, a thousand stores?

Mr. Coyle: A thousand stores. I don't think there is any evidence as to what market share that represents.

Mr. Alsup: There is evidence in the affidavit of Charles Von der Ahe and also of Theodore Von der Ahe that Safeway in 1930—it was 1930 when Safeway was put together, [fol. 2629] your Honor—and the great bulk of the grocery stores sales in this area, and many people were afraid they would have a monopoly. As a matter of fact, their number of stores and their percentage of the market steadily declined.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, that "great bulk" doesn't tell us——

Mr. Alsup: No, we do not have the exact——

The Court: We don't know what market share they had. As a matter of fact, it would be a good guess that they had a far greater market share dollar-wise, percentage-wise—not dollars—percentagewise than they have today.

Mr. Coyle: Well, their market share went down between 1948 and 1958.

The Court: I can remember the time when there was a Safeway in about every neighborhood in this city, about every car stop there was a small Safeway store.

Mr. Coyle: But other than Safeway, I think all the other chains, with the possible exception of Ralphs, which has held about even since 1948, all the other chains have gone up. Your Honor mentioned the decline——

The Court: How about Piggly-Wiggly? What happened to it? Did it go up?

Mr. Coyle: We don't have any figures on Piggly-Wiggly. [fol. 2630] The Court: They started out with a big flourish here at one time.

Mr. Coyle: I know about Piggly-Wiggly, but Piggly-Wiggly—they did go out of business.

The Court: I don't assume they went out of business because they made too much money.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know when it was even. It is possible that——

The Court: They are back in business again, aren't they? Piggly-Wiggly, I believe the record so shows.

Mr. Coyle: The name is back, I think the name is back.

The Court: Yes. I believe Piggly-Wiggly was the first self-help store, wasn't it?

Mr. Coyle: I believe so, your Honor.

The Court: Clarence Saunders of Memphis, Tennessee, I believe was the founder. And I think the courts took his name away from him, wouldn't let him use his own name in the grocery business because he was associated with Piggly-Wiggly. I think he was the founder of that system, if I remember correctly.

But they are in business, I believe, according to the record, back in business again after having gone out into bankruptcy.

[fol. 2631] Mr. Coyle: There is something in the record about Piggly-Wiggly, I am not sure just what it is, whether it is the same Piggly-Wiggly, or whether it is a Piggly-Wiggly franchise now.

The Court: Probably, but, counsel, the thing is, apparently one of the things which concern me, obviously from this record there were a number of concerns that went into the grocery business that didn't know a piece of side pork from a lawnmower. And they went broke. Fox Markets is an example.

Mr. Coyle: They got into trouble and sold out to Food Fair.

The Court: Yes, that is just one of them. But there must have been a number of concerns that were opened during this flush period during the war particularly; for example, from 1941 to 1946, if you could have opened up a liquor store and sold liquor you would have had to have a police guard there to keep people away from your place if you could have sold just plain ordinary Scotch and ordinary bourbon.

Mr. Coyle: That happens in the——

The Court: In the grocery business it happened. Now after the war, despite the increase in population there must have been many of those people that had to go out of business.

[fol. 2632] Mr. Coyle: That happened in the shoe industry, your Honor. That happens in most of these industries.

The Court: In the automobile industry it happened.

Mr. Coyle: And certainly we have increasing concentration in the automobile industry. And that is one of the things that cause the increase in concentration.

But when you have increase in concentration, then you have two of these strong chains, two of these strong firms in that market where you have an increase in concentration, and those two strong firms merge, that certainly makes the merger of the firms more significant than it would be if you did not have this increased concentration.

The Court: Well, it is too bad we can't have regulated monopolies. But I don't know who would regulate it. If the Government regulated it, then it would be a monopoly on top of monopoly.

So we will take a recess for about fifteen minutes.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 2633] The Court: All right. Let's proceed.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor has been discussing or we have been discussing a fact that there have been changes in the make-up of the market here, firms have gone out of business, firms have come into business; that there have been developments in the form of shopping centers, discount stores, all of these factors. But regardless of all that, you still have this pattern of increasing market shares of these leading chains. We were referring to this Defendants' Exhibit AN, I think it was, that shows the market share of the three leading chains in the area. That includes Safeway that had the decline over the years. In 1950, which is the first year that defendants cover, I think, on this exhibit—in 1950 the three leading chains had 21.4 per cent, in 1960—and we don't accept their 1959 or 1960 figures, because there was a strike in '59, and in 1960 they only had partial figures, and they made a lot of estimates, or their economists made a lot of estimates. We don't accept those figures, but the exhibit shows in 1950 the three leading chains had 21.4 per cent. In 1960, after the merger, the three leading chains had 21.5 per cent. In 1958 the three leading chains had 19 per cent. So there was a decline largely due to Safeway's losing its market share between 1950 and 1958 of 2.4 per cent in the market share of the three leading chains.

Then you come up to the four leading chains, and [fol. 2634] the Safeway decline carried over, so in 1950 the four leading chains had 24.2 per cent, and by 1958 they had 23.4 per cent. So you had a decline of about .8 per cent.

Then you get up to the five leading chains, and you find in the defendants' exhibit that the five leading chains in 1950 had 26.7 per cent; in 1958 they had 27.8 per cent. So the five leading chains—among the five leading chains the gains of the four other than Safeway offset Safeway's declining market share, so the five leading chains had 27.8 per cent.

Then you get up to the eight leading chains, and you find that they went from 32 per cent, 32.6 per cent in 1950 to 39 per cent in 1958.

Nine leading chains went from 33.6 per cent in 1950 to 41.7 per cent in 1958.

So the record is clear on the defendants' own exhibit as to that increase in the market share of the leading chains in the area.

Now, we have talked about the number of stores operated by the chains and we find that in 1948 on the defendants' exhibit Safeway Stores are not shown. In 1954 Safeway had 185 stores; in 1958 they had 154; in 1960 they had 140. But all the other chains in the area, Von's in 1948 had 14, in 1954 they had 16——

The Court: Counsel, are you overlooking the fact that [fol. 2635] the population has been growing by leaps and bounds in this area?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. The population has been growing by leaps and bounds, the number of stores has been declining, but the number of stores operated by the chains has been increasing.

The Court: So a fortiori it is illegal?

Mr. Coyle: A fortiori you have increased concentration when you consider the increasing market share of the chains.

Then we have two of these leading chains in this market where you have increasing concentration—two of these leading chains have merged and added to this increasing concentration.

The Court: I was interested in your remark yesterday that we would be better off if we had just individual stores.

Mr. Coyle: I didn't say that, your Honor.

The Court: I understood you to.

Mr. Coyle: No. I said that a premise of the Act as stated in the Philadelphia case was that competition is likely to be more vigorous if you had many entities, many separate entities, instead of a few large entities in a business.

As I understand the Act, the Act carrying out this [fol. 2636] concept prohibits mergers which are going to result in a large number or a significant share of the total market falling under the control of one corporation.

The Court: The Act doesn't say that.

Mr. Coyle: The Act as interpreted by the courts and the Congressional Reports say that.

The Court: I think there has come a time—they will be anyway—every one of these cases will have to be decided by the Supreme Court. I wish Congress would pass a law and give them original jurisdiction in these matters. It would save us the trouble of deciding them and being reversed. About every case that goes up, if a District Court decides it, they reverse it anyway. It would be really better if Congress gave them original jurisdiction.

May I see that exhibit, please? I assume it is proper and appropriate for a lower court to mention the higher court in a way, with respect, but still with critical respect, but it is getting to where a District Court doesn't know what to do. We have come to the myth in America that all the learnedness is in the higher courts.

I am happy to say that Judge Frank, who was on the Second Circuit, once said—I am sure it doesn't apply to this court—that it takes more knowledge to be a District Judge than it does to be on the appellate court.

I wonder if he is right.

[fol. 2637] On this exhibit the increase in the 20 chains has been from 40 per cent to 53 per cent.

Mr. Coyle: Is that 1960, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: There was that strike in 1959——

The Court: Yet the chains you have listed in your memorandum on page 4 only account for 43.6 per cent.

Mr. Coyle: That is 10 of the 20.

The Court: Yes, I understand. But the number of stores, for example—let me ask you a question. How many stores does Market Basket have?

Mr. Coyle: I couldn't answer unless I looked at the exhibit, your Honor.

The Court: I can't, either, without looking.

Mr. Coyle: You have the exhibit.

Mr. Vaughn: 55, your Honor.

The Court: Is it in this exhibit here?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I see. Yes. I thought it was on the other exhibit. Let's see the stores, the number of stores. I see we have Alexander Markets. I thought I had seen this mentioned, three stores. That is a terrific chain.

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure that they are on our top 20, your Honor. That's the defendants' top 20.

[fol. 2638] The Court: Who are your top 20? I would like to know?

Mr. Coyle: May I see the exhibit, your Honor? This is a defendants' exhibit.

The Court: All right. I will let you see it. But there we go again, we talk about big chains, and there is one with three markets.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, that was in 1948, of course. In 1960, according to that exhibit, Alexander's had nine stores.

The Court: I am coming to that. So it has developed into a huge chain of nine stores.

This is why I say, when you use the word "chain," it is like the words today where we are using so many words, talk about rights and privileges. We have lost the art of being specific.

How about—we take the number of stores for Safeway, they now have 154; at least in 1958. Von's we will skip. Ralphs Grocery has 34. I wonder if this is less than Ralphs Grocery had at one time.

Mr. Coyle: It may be, your Honor, but the exhibit does not show that.

The Court: Does the evidence show?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so, your Honor.

The Court: I have a feeling that it is fewer stores [fol. 2639] than they had at one time.

Mr. Alsup: I have no doubt that it is substantially fewer, but we do not have specific evidence on that.

At the time of the organization of Certified in 1924, Ralphs and Safeway, and one other store I can't recall, were about the only—McMarr's and Humpty-Dumpty—direct buying chains, they were large enough to buy direct from the manufacturer.

The Court: That's what makes it so difficult. Here is a good chance to use the word—what is it, fragmented?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: It is fragmented, believe me, the evidence. So Ralphs here, we have no showing at all in the record of how many stores they have decreased. I assume it is quite a number.

Food Giant has 18 stores. Wait a minute. Maybe I am reading this wrong. I will have to get a piece of paper across it.

Market Basket, 39 stores. Food Giant, 18. Fox Markets —which has now been purchased by whom?

Mr. Coyle: Food Fair, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: They were first organized after 1948, your Honor. I think about 1954.

[fol. 2640] The Court: The Alpha Beta Food Markets, does the evidence show when they came into this area? It is a recent date, I am sure.

Mr. Coyle: They were acquired recently, in 1961, I think.

The Court: Acquired. But they were here before they were acquired?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. I don't know how long they were here.

The Court: It is a more recent date, isn't it? Does the evidence show how recent?

Mr. Coyle: I don't think so, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: We have the affidavit of Claude Edwards that we offered in evidence without objection, who describes the history of Alpha Beta. Alpha Beta has been here, I think, since the early thirties. About 1930, didn't he say, it was organized?

Mr. Vaughn: I think that's correct.

The Court: It may have been organized, but it wasn't——

Mr. Alsup: It was very small.

The Court: It was very small.

Mr. Coyle: I don't recollect any evidence showing it.

The Court: I don't think there was any evidence.

[fol. 2641] The Lucky Stores, 7. Hughes Markets, there are about 8 markets. Shoppers Markets, 10. Greater All American Markets, 16. Alexander's Markets, 9. The Great Atlantic & Pacific, 14. McCoy's Markets, 12. And Yor-Way Markets, 15.

I realize the dollar volume is important in these things, but also the number of stores is important. I can't believe that all these stores running 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and even 15 stores, have any great lock on this market.

Mr. Coyle: We know the top 20 chains—and the parties agree to this, I think—the top 20 chains in the area in 1958 were operating 598 stores. Under our statistics, they accounted for 56.9 per cent of all grocery sales. So you have——

The Court: You say the 20 chains. But the top 10, the really large organizations, account for 43 per cent?

Mr. Coyle: 43 per cent. Which is a significant concentration.

The Court: The word "significant" is a word I don't understand, except in a poetic sense.

Mr. Coyle: They accounted for a lot more in '58 than they did in '48, that's certain.

The Court: In other words, when something becomes significant, then it becomes proscribed by the Act?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

[fol. 2642] The Court: I am trying to find in this case where there has been a reduction or the strong possibility, or even a possibility of a subsidence of this competition as it has existed in this area.

You see, the thing that bothers me is that this area has been i na changing process ever since it has begun to grow, about 1920, I guess, 1915. The grocery business has gone through many changes; the types of stores, the way to get to the stores, the transportation facilities. You watch, counsel, if you are here, there will be a big change, if this city ever grows up, becomes big enough and responsible enough to have a rapid transit, you will see another big change.

So we have gone through in the last 35, 40 years here, several changes in the grocery business. It seems to me it is difficult to just say that because the stores are fewer, that that in itself leads to the conclusion that the competitive situation has become what Congress has inhibited or proscribed. That's the problem.

Mr. Coyle: It is not just the reduction in the number of stores; it is the reduction in the number of stores, plus the growth of the chains and the increased market share of the chains, and the history of mergers, that have resulted in the growth of these chains. You have those three factors. All of them tend to prove, or combined do [fol. 2643] prove the increasing concentration which Congress meant to halt if it resulted from mergers.

The Court: Congress certainly didn't intend to stop the big store, did they?

Mr. Coyle: No. They wanted the big store to grow by natural growth, instead——

The Court: Do you know what the relative volume would be between the stores, say, of Safeway, that used to exist, and one of the so-called large markets today?

Mr. Coyle: It would be substantial. The difference would be substantial. I don't want to use the word "substantial" but it would be a great difference.

The Court: I would make a wild guess and say that the average Safeway store would have been lucky to do—this is a pure speculative guess, I would just make a wild guess—let's say a couple of hundred thousand a year at the top.

Mr. Coyle: In what year, your Honor?

The Court: Back in the years when they had the small stores. I doubt if they would have run that high.

Mr. Coyle: Groceries were cheaper then, too.

I would say Safeway, we do have some figures, but I would say that Safeway averages slightly less than two million, I think, in their stores today.

The Court: The square footage has increased considerably, and the number of items sold.

[fol. 2644] The grocery business, like the drug business, is moving into other areas. I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see them selling automobiles in grocery stores one of these days.

We already have that coming up in the General Motors case, the selling of automobiles in the discount houses.

You may not know it, but the drug stores put a lot of hardware stores out of business. Did you know that?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: These are things that people learn as they pass by the trees and see them. If you sell alarm clocks and screwdrivers, and locks and files, and everything under the sun that the little merchant and the hardware concern sells, he soon can't compete against the drug store.

I daresay if you go into the average drug store, you would be surprised how much hardware you can find. Haven't you noticed it?

Mr. Coyle: Not particularly.

The Court: So I assume the government would say, because a lot of these little hardware concerns have gone out of business, that the big hardware concerns put them out of business. But that isn't necessarily true. The grocery store, the dry goods store, all of the stores now—you see, at one time in America we had the general store. We are moving back toward the general store in many areas today, [fol. 2645] the discount house. They are selling everything.

I don't know whether they have prescription drugs yet or not, but I assume that will go in soon. They are putting in groceries, everything from carpets to furniture. It may be that they are moving back toward the general store again. I don't know. These are things that people who are not familiar with industry—and I certainly am not, I am a little better famiilar than some of the courts, I think—that just don't know what goes on.

When we get to these generalities and don't probe beneath the surface, we don't reach the crux of the problem, in my opinion.

I here am wondering how you would answer this question. Would the combination of Von's and Shopping Bag not increase its ability to compete against these other big chains?

Mr. Coyle: Von's and Shopping Bag were both able to compete against the other large chains prior to the acquisition. They had grown in competition with Safeway. A. &. P. has been in here. They were growing and were operating successfully in competition with both A. & P. and Safeway.

The Court: That's true, I think. But when they combine now into the present number of stores, has it increased or decreased their competitive situation?

Mr. Coyle: It has given them competitive advantages. [fol. 2646] The Court: What are they? I would like to know.

Mr. Coyle: The advantages of better buying——

The Court: You keep saying "better buying." In what way?

Mr. Coyle: Buying in larger quantities.

The Court: Is there any evidence to show what that better buying is?

Mr. Coyle: There is testimony to the effect that as your volume of buying gets larger, you get better prices on meat and produce and you are better able to secure advantages in buying meat and produce.

The Court: Well, I thought the testimony was that there was a limit, a point where you reach a limit.

Mr. Coyle: I believe there is conflicting testimony in that regard.

The Court: I think there probably is. One of the items, for example, that put Safeway back in the public mind was its meats. Did you know that?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: They had a man who worked for Safeway, as I understand, who found out that the meat that he bought from his own store wasn't so good, so he went out and saw to it that Safeway got good meat, and today Safeway still has the reputation for having good meats. [fol. 2647] Many people go to Safeway because of the meats.

Now, I am wondering if Safeway is able to go out and buy meat much cheaper because of buying in volume.

There is no evidence in the record that that is so.

Mr. Coyle: The only evidence is that Von's and Shopping Bag were able to compete against Safeway prior to the acquisition, and to grow in competition with Safeway.

The Court: Some of these single stores have been able to compete, apparently.

Mr. Coyle: Some have and some haven't. Some testified that they are under great handicaps in competing against Safeway and the other chains. Others testified that they are not under handicaps in competing.

The Court: What is the problem, then? If a person feels—on groceries, certainly he can go to Certified, or join Orange Empire, go to those and get the same prices that everyone else gets, can't he?

Mr. Coyle: He can get a discount price on the items that Certified or Orange Empire handle, which does not include meat or produce.

The Court: I understand it doesn't include meat or produce. But you know if a grocer wants to send somebody down to this market early in the morning down here he can compete with anybody else.

[fol. 2648] Mr. Coyle: There is conflicting testimony on that, too. Many of the retailers said that they couldn't do as well by going down to the wholesale area or the market area and buying early in the morning, but some of these larger purchasers could, because they could go in and buy up larger quantities, and quantities do enter into the price.

The Court: You mean by having direct delivery? There is no evidence to that effect.

Mr. Coyle: What?

The Court: On vegetables or produce.

Mr. Coyle: There is evidence, there is testimony to the effect that chains do have an advantage in buying.

The Court: The word "advantage" is a conclusion. What is the evidence?

Mr. Coyle: They can buy cheaper.

The Court: Is any particular product mentioned at all?

Mr. Coyle: Produce. Produce and meats.

The Court: I see. That's the trouble, there are too many generalizations.

Take, for example, papaya, I suppose, for example, any store in town, even a single store, can buy papaya as cheap, or grapefruit, California or Arizona grapefruit, or the vegetables that come from the Valley, strawberries, or carrots, or those things——

[fol. 2649] Mr. Coyle: Again, there was conflicting testimony, but there was testimony as to specific types of vegetables. I don't have the citations to it.

The Court: Does the record show that the vegetables sold in the chain stores are cheaper than those sold in the single stores? I don't believe it does.

Mr. Coyle: I think there is some testimony on both sides of that issue, your Honor.

The Court: Well, go ahead, counsel. I have interrupted you. I interrupt you to try to learn. It is not to heckle you but to try to learn. I am trying to find out on what you predicate your case.

How much more time would you like?

Mr. Coyle: As much time as your Honor wants me to answer questions.

The Court: Counsel, I am here to listen and to discuss with you, and I want to give you ample time. If you want additional time this afternoon—we will conclude this this afternoon. We will conclude it this afternoon. I will be glad to hear you further.

Mr. Coyle: I think there are some of these questions——

The Court: That's what I thought. How much would you anticipate? Another hour?

Mr. Coyle: Another hour to answer you.

[fol. 2650] The Court: May I inquire of defense counsel approximately how much time you would desire? I have other matters pressing me.

Mr. Alsup: I think it would depend on the questions your Honor has to ask. Thus far, frankly, I haven't seen much to answer.

The Court: Don't get presumptuous.

Mr. Alsup: Obviously not, your Honor. I am prepared to answer anything, your Honor.

The Court: I don't mean that in the wrong way. But now sometimes lawyers get their hat and their brief case and leave too soon. I haven't made up my mind in this case. Many of my questions are put in a fashion to try to stimulate answers. It doesn't necessarily mean that that's my opinion.

Mr. Alsup: We have comments on the questions which your Honor has put to government counsel.

The Court: It is like Meet The Press. I ask questions to bring out the points. They don't necessarily reflect my attitude sometimes. I find that you almost have to gig some lawyers to get them around to answer what you want to learn about the case.

Mr. Alsup: We feel this type of question and answer session is very helpful.

The Court: It is sort of an arbitration, but more of a Socratic form.

[fol. 2651] Mr. Alsup: It is helpful to know what the court is thinking and discussing.

The Court: Usually, nowadays, if you go into a discussion, at least socially, they say, "Get off of that and let's get to something else. Where is your bartender?"

We will recess to 2:00 o'clock, and we will complete this by I hope 4:00 this afternoon, or earlier, if possible.

Mr. Coyle: Fine, your Honor.

The Court: I want to leave one thought with you, Mr. Coyle. That I, at the present time, am of the opinion that I may consider evidence relating to the industry after the filing of the Complaint, up until the date of my decision. I think it is a question of weight, rather than a question of relevancy. I think it is relevant to reflect upon the contemplation of whether or not there was a probability of substantial decrease in competition. In other words, just as the Supreme Court in the Dupont case put in its notes up to 1955. Then I noticed at the very beginning of the discussion it says—I thought I remembered them saying something about 1955. Just one moment.

Yes, it starts on page 596. The court says:

> [fol. 2652] "In 1955 General Motors ranked first in sales and second in assets among all United States industrial corporations, and became the first corporation to earn over a billion dollars in annual net income."

Then it cites a note 18. New York Times, February 3, 1956.

Well, if the Supreme Court can consider things of that fashion, it seems to me that perhaps the lower court can, too. So I am considering this evidence to reflect upon whether or not there was a probability of a substantial lessening of competition.

Mr. Coyle: I can well appreciate your Honor's position. The only problem that I see with this is that you do get into this position where one might get into the position where the government has to more or less show an actual lessening of competition between——

The Court: No, I don't think that is required at all. For example, let's assume, just assume, that after 1960 the government would have been able to show that Safeway had jumped to 80 percent of all dollar sales in the Los Angeles area, do you mean to tell me that you wouldn't have offered that in evidence?

Mr. Coyle: We wouldn't have been able to show it. I don't know what we would have done. I think the government can go beyond its burden. But to permit the [fol. 2653] defendants to go beyond the government's burden, then you get to a point where they are trying to rebut something we didn't attempt to prove.

The Court: Counsel, you do at times make answers that do sound a little bit like the State Department. That answer doesn't give me any information to speak of at all.

What I am asking you is, wouldn't you have, if you had been prosecuting this case, introduced into evidence, if the court had allowed you, the fact that by 1964, say January 31st, say up to the date of the trial—let's forget after the trial—that it suddenly developed that several of these companies had faded out, gone, and Safeway was left with 85 per cent or 80 per cent of all dollar sales—do you mean to tell me you wouldn't have tried to put that in evidence?

Mr. Coyle: If I put that into evidence I would be assuming a burden that I wouldn't have to meet.

The Court: That isn't what I asked you, what you would be assuming. Wouldn't you have tried to put that in evidence?

Mr. Coyle: I might have, your Honor.

The Court: The probability would be that you would have.

We will stand recessed.

(Whereupon at 12:00 o'clock noon a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m. of the same day.)

[fol. 2654] Los Angeles, California, Tuesday, March 24, 1964; 2:10 P.M.

The Court: All right, Mr. Coyle.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I have gone through this list of questions that you asked and have found only a few that we didn't touch on this morning, and I will go through those as quickly as I can.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Coyle: The court mentioned that the government presented 18 witnesses who entered the business since 1948. My observation on that is that during the same period many more left the industry than those who entered. Also, many or a number of these entrances by the 18 witnesses amounted to one of the witnesses taking over an existing store, it was not a complete entrance as if he opened up a new store, he just took over an existing store, and somebody else left the business at the same time.

Also, some of these chain store officials who have been referred to as men who entered the business as private businessmen, actually took over an existing store and somebody left the business at the same time as they entered the business.

The Court: I think that's probably true. I think the evidence indicates in some cases that was true. As a matter of fact, I think, if I remember correctly, in one [fol. 2655] instance they took over a place that wasn't doing so well, and it turned out it did very well.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, the chain sponsored them to go in there and gave them financing, and so forth.

The Court: I don't remember that.

Mr. Coyle: One of them did. I don't know which of these witnesses——

The Court: I didn't remember the financing part.

Mr. Coyle: I think one of them did, yes.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Coyle: Now, there is no question that single stores have a harder time getting into the shopping centers than chains.

The Court: No question at all. That just follows as day follows the night. If a man has enough credit and can make a lease—let's assume that you want to open a store in a new shopping center; now, first of all, what draw do you have to sell other tenants? Wouldn't you think it would be better to have a Kresge or one of the Five and Tens? Or let's think of some of the other stores that are well known throughout the country. When you go—let's face the facts. When a shopping center is put up, it is put up by a person who is promoting that shopping center. He goes out and buys the land, and then he goes and usually often gets the government or someone to [fol. 2656] finance him, and he builds a shopping center.

Now the first thing he wants to do is to make it desirable for tenants to move in there and take a long-term lease. Isn't that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Would he rather have Mr. Coyle or Judge Carr in there, who is not known at all in the grocery business, or would he rather have Von's or Safeway or somebody who has a name, and who, furthermore, has pretty good financial standing? I think this is just an economic fact that you can't avoid. So what happens? They go around and say, "We have one place left out here, we have got Safeway, Kresge, we have this, we have that, we have the Bank of America, so we have got a great shopping center."

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: So I think it is conceded that the clains have a better opportunity to get into the new shopping centers than, generally speaking, the individual would have.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

Then Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger both had the financial stability to get into a shopping center, they both had the trade names, and the consumer acceptance in the area, which is one of the things——

The Court: I don't know that there is any evidence on that score. Is there?

[fol. 2657] Mr. Coyle: I think there is, yes, as to the consumer acceptance.

The Court: May I interrupt a moment?

Mr. Alsup: There was evidence that prior to the merger both Von's and Shopping Bag were able to and did get into shopping centers, yes.

The Court: Yes, I believe I remember that. That was by Mr. Von der Ahe?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Von der Ahe and Mr. Hayden.

The Court: Yes, I do recall it now.

Mr. Coyle: Various of the industry witnesses mentioned that, too.

The Court: I don't think it would be subject to doubt, anyway. They would certainly be able to get in. Although I can say this, that it may well be that someone might prefer some other chain.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor, It might also be that someone might prefer a chain with a trade name or a reputation whom that particular tenant felt was more desirable.

The Court: I think the building promoter likes the stability of the 25 or 30-year lease, where he can get, as they call it, net business, net-net-net, and not bother about anything, be sure it will be paid every year come high water or else.

[fol. 2658] Mr. Coyle: That's right. I think it is also true, as we stated in one of our briefs, that the combined Von's and Shopping Bag will even have more financial resources, and even have more——

The Court: I think that follows, too.

Mr. Coyle: They would have even a better opportunity to get in.

The Court: I think you are right about that.

Mr. Coyle: Now, the court asked why did the president of Certified testify that he doesn't anticipate any lessening of competition——

The Court: Not why he testified. I didn't ask you why he testified. I asked you how you meet that?

Mr. Coyle: I meet it just like I meet all this other testimony as to a legal issue. He is not competent to testify as to legal issues.

The Court: He isn't testifying to a legal issue. He is testifying to the fact that people can purchase, if they want to purchase groceries, they can join his organization——

Mr. Coyle: I didn't understand that question, then.

The Court: I am talking now about the anti-competitive features. In other words, suppose I open up a store out here and put in it—which would be an awfully [fol. 2659] big inventory—say a hundred thousand dollar inventory, I imagine that would be a pretty substantial inventory, and I wanted then to buy my groceries from Certified, I could do so by joining up with them, couldn't I?

Mr. Coyle: If you were a member of Certified.

The Court: All I have to do is to join up.

Mr. Coyle: You have to deposit money. And I suppose the Board has to approve your joining.

The Court: I assume so. But I don't think there would be any problem about it if you make the deposit and apply. They want the business.

As a matter of fact, I think at one time Certified would sell to other than members during this period, wouldn't they?

Mr. Coyle: It might be. I don't know, your Honor.

The Court: One of them did at one time sell to other than members. Was that Orange Empire?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

Mr. Coyle: One of them had a cash and carry business.

Mr. Vaughn: Orange Empire had and still does have a cash and carry.

The Court: There is no evidence in this record that there is any discrimination in price between the members, the people who purchase from Orange Empire, there [fol. 2660] is no discrimination as to price, there is no evidence, is there?

Mr. Vaughn: There is no evidence and I know of no information.

Mr. Coyle: I know of no evidence either way.

The Court: What I am getting at is the freeness of the market.

Mr. Coyle: Orange Empire—this may be a side issue—Orange Empire, I think, also is a wholesale grocer, or A. M. Lewis is also a wholesale grocer. I think there may be evidence in the record, or it may be a fact, that the members purchase as members and they get a rebate on their purchases, and non-members do not.

The Court: I don't know whether it is a rebate or not, but I imagine they may get a slight discount.

Mr. Coyle: I think it may be in terms of a premium at the end of the year. I am not sure.

The Court: There is a big difference between a rebate and a discount. One of them might be legal and the other might be illegal.

Mr. Coyle: I was thinking of a premium on the products.

The Court: That's what I understand, they might as participants participate in some way, as the Automobile Club, you don't get the profits in cash, but you get a [fol. 2661] reduction in your policy of a certain amount by driving in this traffic here without an accident for a few years, which is remarkable if you do it.

Mr. Coyle: Getting to the discount, your Honor, and the cooperatives——

The Court: Counsel, what I am getting at—pardon the interruption—what I am inquiring to find out is how unfree, to put it ungrammatically, is this market or was this market at the time we are talking about, during the pendency of this suit? How unfree was the grocery market? What restraints were there?

I am not talking about anti-Sherman or Sherman Act restraints. I am talking about what economic restraints were there on this grocery business?

Mr. Coyle: The approach I would take to this question is that the continual growth of the chains and the decline in the market share enjoyed by the smaller chains, the growth of the larger chains and the decline of the market share of the smaller chains and the independents, the decline in the number of stores operated by these smaller chains and independents, and the increase in the number of stores and the market share of the chains, when you consider these at the same time, indicate that the smaller grocer is having a harder time getting by, and the chains are accounting for a larger and larger percent-[fol. 2662] age of the total business in the area, and this results from the advantages of the chain operation.

The Court: Of course if we are going to level everything off and make everything equal, you might just as well close shop and everybody go back to the days of the sticks and stones, because you can't level everybody off. One man works longer hours, he is more proficient, he is a better advertiser, he senses public relations, many thing enter into these factors.

Furthermore, counsel, don't overlook the fact that many of these small businesses that closed, closed to open larger stores.

Mr. Coyle: But they all didn't, or there would be just as many stores. That would be a closing and an opening.

The Court: Supposing he closed three stores and opened one big one?

Mr. Coyle: That would be a decline in the number of stores.

The Court: But suppose the volume of that store outranked the volume of the three stores ten for one.

Mr. Coyle: If that were generally happening, then the market share of the independents would have gone up instead of down over this period.

The Court: I think that the market share is important, but I think you place too much emphasis on [fol. 2663] market share, that is, in the relevant line of industry here in the commerce, because we are only dealing with 43 per cent of the commerce here.

Mr. Coyle: In the ten largest chains.

The Court: 43 per cent.

Mr. Coyle: But 43 per cent compared to the percentages in Brown, for ten firms to have 43 percent, compared to the percentages——

The Court: What per cent would be considered reasonable? Give me some idea.

Mr. Coyle: It is not a question of what per cent would be considered reasonable. When you have 43 per cent and that per cent has been growing, you do have a trend toward increasing concentration. I don't think the word "reasonable" should get into it, though.

The Court: There ought to be some yardstick or some lines of demarcation somewhere. I feel sorry for the lawyers that have to advise clients nowadays. They are up against a real problem. Because whoever is in the antitrust department in Washington at the particular moment may disagree with them. Then the next 6 years from now or 6 months another man might say, "Well, it is a different situation."

There must be some elasticity, but where is the norm here, where is the standard to guide men in their [fol. 2664] business affairs? That's a problem.

Mr. Coyle: We just have the two cases, Brown and Philadelphia, and we have to try to gauge our norms from them right now.

The Court: That's what we are trying to do and we are having a rather difficult time as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Coyle: It is a hard job, I would agree. But I think when you have the third and the sixth largest firms in an area such as this, and when you have this movement toward increasing concentration in terms of market share, and when you have this prior history of mergers in this market, then I think that the third and the sixth, representing combined 8.9 per cent, and the ten largest having 43 per cent, and the 20 largest having 56 per cent, I think that's on the side of the norm that establishes an illegal merger.

The Court: You see, another thing, counsel, completely overlooked by the courts, generally speaking, they never give any thought to management. And believe me, management is an important thing in any business.

You can take the finest business in the world and let a father run it for 40 years and make it a huge success, and then turn it over to a ne'er-do-well son and he can break it in 2 or 3 years. Management is so important in [fol. 2665] these things, and finding management today is much more difficult than people realize.

I might give you an incident. About 7 years ago, 8 years ago, I had a call from a gentleman who said, if I could find him an executive in a certain line between the ages of 38 and 43 he would start him off at 50,000 a year, and after 3 weeks we found none available.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So there is a problem. Management does enter into these circumstances.

I don't know who managed the stores for Safeway up in New York, but whoever he was if I were the Chairman of the Board he wouldn't have stayed as long as he did. Not because he may not be a fine fellow, but the results were pretty bad from the standpoint of the stockholders. And that's why you are supposed to be in business, to earn money for the capital investor.

Mr. Coyle: Yes. The problem with that, of course, in terms of this Act, is that you couldn't possibly enforce an Act like this on the basis of business motives, which is what this amounts to.

The Court: I am not talking about business motives; I am talking about the equation. One of the problems in these cases is the effect of management, whether this increase—how much of this increase is the result of [fol. 2666] management. I suppose you might think that's irrelevant.

Mr. Coyle: I would probably think that's irrelevant. Certainly you have the increase, you have the trend towards concentration. It might be that we would get the best management in the United States if we had one company controlling the automobile business. Maybe if we could combine Ford and General Motors it would be a better management.

The Court: Well, they did one good thing, apparently. They did take one man out of the automotive industry that apparently has been doing a rather sensational job with the government. They need more of them. So maybe the experience that he had has been rather helpful in government. We could use more of it.

I am just pointing out to you one of the problems. All of these problems come to me, because I can't help but approach it from some practical point of view. I can't eliminate the practical viewpoint entirely. And the trouble with all these formulated rules coming down from the higher courts is that there is nobody wise enough to formulate all the rules to cover man's activity from now on out. You have to sort of meet them as they appear on the scene. It is like going hunting. If you went hunting with a gun and you met an Indian, in those days in the wild west, who has a gun, you stop hunting and fight the [fol. 2667] Indian. It is the circumstances that you have to meet.

I am wondering in this case if the picture is as clear as you think it is. Why this change in the circumstances or in this area, why has this change come about? I am wondering if it is as simple as you think it is. In other words, there are so many factors that come into play that I am wondering if we haven't overlooked some of those factors.

Mr. Coyle: I don't believe that the criteria are the factors—are all the factors that may have contributed to this increase in concentration. The thing we look at is there has been this increase in——

The Court: Now I have finally gotten you pinned down, I think. In other words, you are now at the point that I think you have been contending all along, that it is mere concentration alone that is the whole thing.

Mr. Coyle: No. It is the increasing concentration, the history of mergers, which have contributed——

The Court: That is concentration. I am not talking about lack of concentration. More concentration is the thesis of your case, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: And the fact that we have a merger between two significant competitive factors in this general competitive market, namely, the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and that they have merged, and as a result of that [fol. 2668] merging, concentration has further increased, Shopping Bag has been eliminated as an independent firm, the purchasing and the conduits and the whole operation, the distribution, the warehousing, the advertising of the two firms has been combined into one, and that one firm has 8.9 per cent of the total business.

The Court: Now I think you have finally laid it on the line. I think your case now has been summed up rather clearly in your last statement. In other words, what you are saying, in effect, as I understand you, is that in this area, in this relevant area, which is the Metropolitan Area, there has been an increase by the more substantial—you call them significant companies—in the dollar volume, in the percentage, and thus now in order now in this early incipient stage to be sure it doesn't happen in the future, stop it now.

Mr. Coyle: Between these two firms. One factor you left out, your Honor, is that there have been prior acquisitions in the area which have contributed to this increase.

The Court: I think that is inherent in the case. Some of it, at least, is attributable to that.

Mr. Coyle: I think we said 73 per cent, your Honor, of the increase in concentration.

The Court: In other words, this is an effort—[fol. 2669] the Supreme Court says, if I remember correctly—let me see my notes on the Brown Shoe case just a moment. This really is where I run into trouble. The court says: "Section 7 requires a prognosis of the probable future effect."

This is like having a doctor listen to your heart now and tell you how long you are going to live. That's about what that amounts to.

It may be ticking beautifully for the moment, and 30 minutes later after an e.k.g. you walk out on the street and drop cold dead.

This is what the court is saying. It requires a prognosis of the probable future effect.

You agree with that, don't you?

Mr. Coyle: That's what the Supreme Court said, yes.

The Court: Well, it makes it rather difficult for a man who is as earthy as I am, to look into the future, the crystal ball, and see what it is going to be, from the facts before this court.

Mr. Coyle: I think the facts before this court are the facts that were before the court in Brown Shoe, and the facts before the court in Brown Shoe as it related to the horizontal phase of the case, the facts that were before the Supreme Court, or the court, in the Philadelphia Bank case.

The Court: You may well be right, counsel, because [fol. 2670] in the final analysis the Supreme Court has the final say on this matter.

Without saying that I have decided yet, I may decide contrary to your views and I may well be not upheld by the Supreme Court, but that isn't bothering me in the slightest, not the slightest, as long as I do what I think I should do here.

Frankly, I have a difficult time with this case, and with the Philadelphia Bank case, in discriminating—if that's a bad word I am sorry I used it—in discriminating between dicta and holding. That is the great problem I have in those two cases.

I assume things said in the Supreme Court decision can be dicta, as well as what is said in the District Court decisions. I have great difficulty in trying to arrive at what is dicta and what is not in these two cases.

Don't you have that problem somewhat, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I mean no disrespect to any particular gentleman of the Supreme Court, but I say it because I have studied these cases and studied them, and you would think with long study that somewhere on the clear blue horizon would come a light. But up to now the light hasn't completely hit me, and I am concerned about the case, still [fol. 2671] concerned about it, about the proof in the case.

I say these things to let you know that with all the study that I put into it, it is like reading a book that you don't know who is the hero, and you join the hero for a while, the man you think is the hero, and it turns out to be the villain, and you change over, and the first thing you know you have to change back again.

In reading these cases I have that problem. I am surprised that you lawyers haven't that problem. I try to lay these things on the line so that you can take my thinking, analyze it, and maybe throw it back to me and maybe change my thinking, or maybe enlighten me.

I think your statement is rather clear-cut now, and I think I rather fully understand your position. And I think it could be that that's the theory of the Supreme Court decision. Whether it is the holding, I am not too sure.

Do you follow me?

Mr. Coyle: I don't follow the distinction between the theory and the holding——

The Court: The theory can be nothing but conversation and dicta. For example, I can mention one case, without naming it, in which the Supreme Court laid down the rules [fol. 2672] to follow in the future. To me that is pure dicta, because there was nothing pending before the court as to what would happen in the future in those particular matters. And I don't know how you can lay down the law on something that is not pending before you.

Mr. Coyle: I think that case probably laid down the rules that the Supreme Court has been following ever since, though.

The Court: I am talking about a criminal case in which they enunciated the rules that the District Courts would follow in the next 20, 30, 40 years, until a new change came along. That's what I mean. I think that's probably dicta.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: But I want to say this thing to you. I think this afternoon we have come to grips, that I now understand your position much better than I have heretofore.
